It is contended by the appellant that by the passage of the resolution of intention on the 22d of March, and the publication and posting thereof, the board acquired jurisdiction to order the work, and that its subsequent resolution ordering the work was within the jurisdiction thus acquired; that the filing of the protest had the effect to merely suspend the exercise of this jurisdiction for the period of six months; and that after this period it could order the work the same as if no protest had been filed. Section 3 of the street-improvement act, as it existed prior to the amendment in 1891, contained the following provision immediately after the clause above quoted: "At or after the end of said six months, if said work so barred for six months shall not have been done, the city council may order said work to be done after re-publication and posting of a resolution of intention, by virtue of the proceedings already had and taken, but within like time like objections may again be filed with like effect, and so on at the expiration of each six months until the work is done." And the appellant urges in support of his contention that the omission of this provision in the section, as amended in 1891, indicates that the legislature intended that the work might be ordered without again passing a resolution of intention therefor. We are of the opinion, however, that a contrary inference is to be drawn from the amendment. The provision in the act as it stood prior to the amendment of 1891, that after the expiration of six months the board might order the work to be done "after republication and posting of a resolution of intention," clearly shows that under that act it was not necessary to again pass a resolution of intention; that it was sufficient to republish and repost the original resolution of intention; but by the omission of this provision in the amendment of 1891 the legislature intended that such republication and reposting should not be sufficient to authorize the board to order the work to be done, but that the matter of the improvement should be again submitted to the legislative discretion and judgment of the board to determine whether, upon further consideration, and in view of the objections that had been made, it was still for the public interest that the improvement should be made, and, if so, that it should be initiated by a new resolution of intention. By filing their protest, the owners of a majority of the frontage placed a veto upon "any further proceedings in relation to the doing of the work," which was absolute for six months, but at the expiration of that period the board could exercise its power to order the improvement in the same manner, and by the same proceedings, as it could order any other improvement. If it had been the intention of the legislature that the power of the board to order the work was merely suspended for six months, and that at the expiration of that period it might order the work without any other proceedings, it is reasonable to believe that it would have expressed its intention in direct language to that effect; but its use of the term "bar," and its declaration that the board should not take any further proceedings "in relation to the doing of the said work," indicates that it intended more than a suspension of action, and that the further proceedings in relation to the work should be such as were required in the first instance for effecting the improvement. The provision of the section is that the protest shall be not merely a "bar" to ordering the work, but a bar to any further proceedings "in relation to" the doing of the work,—language which must include every step which is necessary to give to the board the power to order the work to be done; and it is further to be noticed that it is not a bar to further proceedings "under said resolution," but further proceedings "in relation to doing said work." The provision for terminating the six-months veto by a petition from the owners of one-half or more of the frontage is to be read in connection with section 4 of the act, which provides that, even though the work be petitioned for by the owners of a majority of the frontage, a resolution of intention must be passed by the board; thus corroborating the conclusion that, after a sufficient protest has been filed, the work cannot be ordered without again passing a resolution of intention therefor.

The construction thus given to the act is further corroborated by the following provision in the same section: "At the expiration of ten days after the expiration of the time of said publication of said street superintendent, and at the expiration of fifteen days after the advertising and posting as aforesaid of any resolution of intention, if no written objection to the work therein described has been delivered as aforesaid by the owners of a majority of the property liable to be assessed for the expense of said work or improvement, the city council shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order any work to be done or improvement to be made which is authorized by this act." The declaration that the board shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order the work, "if no written objection to the work therein described has been delivered," necessarily imports that, if such protest has been filed, jurisdiction shall not be deemed to have been acquired. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

CORBETT et al. v. WIDBER, County
Treasurer. (S. F. 798.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO—DEMANDS—PRESENTATION—SET-OFF—PUBLIC FUNDS—JUDICIAL AND EXECUTIVE OFFICERS—PARTISAN JUDGES.

1. By Pol. Code, §§ 3640, 3714, 3820-3830, the assessor of the city and county of San Francisco is required to collect and turn over to the treasurer taxes on personal property unsecured by real estate, in advance of the fixing of the rate by the supervisors, the collection being made at the rate established for the preceding year; and, if the amount so collected exceeds the amount finally determined to be due, the excess "must be repaid by the county treasurer to the person from whom the collection is made * * * on demand." Section 3824 provides that the excess shall not be apportioned to the state. Held, that this excess is not a public fund of the city and county, and hence a demand therefor is not within Consolidation Act, §§ 82, 84 (St. 1856, pp. 169, 170), providing that no demand on the treasury or on the public funds shall be paid until allowed by the auditor, and that such demands shall be subject to set-off on account of debts due from claimant to the treasury.

2. A demand for such excess need not be presented to the auditor, for the further reason that it is not for one of the enumerated objects which Consolidation Act, § 95 (St. 1856, p. 172), declares are the only ones for which demand may be made on the treasury.

3. Consolidation Act, § 82 (St. 1856, p. 169), provides that no demand on the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco shall be allowed by the auditor without first deducting any debt due from claimant to the treasury. Held, nevertheless, that the city and county's right of set-off may be urged only in court.

4. To permit a county auditor to exercise in behalf of the treasury the right of set-off against a claim presented to him for allowance would invest him with judicial functions.

5. A county auditor would be a partisan judge in exercising, in behalf of the treasury, the right to set-off against a claim presented to him for allowance.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by one Corbett and others against A. C. Widber, treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. A writ of mandate was awarded, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. T. Cresswell, for appellant. Haven & Haven, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This appeal is from a judgment awarding a writ of mandate to the plaintiffs against the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. The assessor of the city and county of San Francisco is required to collect taxes upon personal property unsecured by real estate some months in advance of the fixing of the rate by the supervisors. He is, therefore, directed by law to collect at the rate established for the preceding year. These moneys he turns over to the treasurer. In the event that the taxes so collected for the current year shall exceed the amount finally determined to be due, the excess "must be repaid by the county treasurer to the person from whom the collection is made, or to his assignee, on demand therefor." Pol. Code, §§ 3640, 3714, 3820-3830. It is admitted that there was an excess of $40.05 in the treasury paid by plaintiffs' assignors in accordance with these laws. Plaintiffs made verbal demand upon the treasurer for the payment back to them of the money, and upon his refusal applied for and obtained a writ of mandate. In support of this appeal reliance is had upon the provisions of the consolidation act (St. 1856, p. 170), section 84 of which declares that "every demand upon the treasury * * * must, before it can be paid, be presented to the auditor of the city and county, to be allowed," etc. Section 82 of the same act declares: "No payment can be made from the treasury, or out of the public funds of said city and county, unless the same be specifically authorized by this act, nor unless the demand which is paid be duly audited, as in this act provided." Notwithstanding these provisions, we think that the demand made by plaintiffs in this case was legally sufficient, and that to this character of demand the sections of the consolidation act above cited do not apply. The excess moneys so received by the treasurer are no part of the moneys of the city and county, and, if the aggregate of them be denominated a fund, it is in no sense a public fund of the city and county. As to these moneys the treasurer is but a bailee, holding them subject to the demand of the rightful owners. The revenue laws expressly declare that these moneys shall not be apportioned to the state, but shall be held in the treasury, and repaid to the rightful owner upon his demand. Pol. Code, § 3824. Moneys so held constitute no part of the public funds. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. San Diego Co., 112 Cal. 314, 41 Pac. 423, and 44 Pac. 571; Elberg v. San Luis Obispo Co., 112 Cal. 316, 41 Pac. 475, and 44 Pac. 572. A demand upon the treasury for the repayment of moneys so held is not "a demand upon the treasury," or a demand upon any "public fund" in the treasury, within the meaning of the consolidation act. Section 95 of the consolidation act declares that "demands on the treasury may be made for the following objects, and none others." Under 15 subdivisions of the section are enumerated the kinds and characters of such demands, and the objects for which the public moneys of the city and county may be expended. The section will be read in vain to discover therein any authority whatsoever for the payment of a demand such as the one in question. It is not within the contemplation of the consolidation act, yet clearly it is within the contemplation of the law, and, indeed, within its express declaration, that such moneys should be repaid upon demand. In Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 233, 30 Pac. 806, notwithstanding the reliance placed by the treasurer of the city and county upon these very provisions of the consolidation act, he was adjudged guilty of contempt in refusing to pay a demand for the fees of a stenographic reporter, though the demand had not been made in compliance with the charter provisions. In Ex parte Widber, 91 Cal. 367, 27 Pac. 733, it was held that a demand ordered paid by the judge for the necessary expenses of providing him with a suitable court room was not within the limitations of the consolidation act. In brief, the fact is, as clearly pointed out by Justice Thornton in his concurring opinion in Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 240, 30 Pac. 807, namely, that the demands referred to in the consolidation act are only those mentioned in and authorized by it. The demand in question is not such a one. It is not even a demand upon the moneys of the city and county, as were those in the Reis and Widber Cases. It is simply a demand by the absolute owner of moneys upon its custodian, who chances to be an officer of the city.

Appellant next urges the sufficiency of a special defense which was pleaded on behalf of the treasurer. Section 82 of the consolidation act provides that "no demand upon the treasury shall be allowed by the auditor in favor of any person or officer in any manner indebted thereto, without first deducting the amount of such indebtedness." Plaintiff's assignors, it was averred, were indebted to the city for delinquent taxes of a preceding year. The right to reduce plaintiffs' demand by setting off the amount of such delinquent taxes was insisted upon. The court properly sustained a demurrer to this defense, for, in the first place, plaintiffs' demand, as we have said, was in no sense a demand upon the treasury. It was a demand for the return of moneys owned by the plaintiffs; and, in the second place, while the right to urge a counterclaim or insist upon a set-off is as available to a municipal corporation as it is to a natural person, that right must be invoked before the judicial department of the state. This provision of the consolidation act is an attempt, not only to impose judicial functions upon an executive officer, but also to constitute him sole judge in a manner affecting the interests of the city and county which he represents. It is sought, therefore, not alone to make an executive officer a judge, but to make him a partisan judge. The assignment proved by plaintiffs was sufficient to support their claim. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

I concur: McFARLAND, J.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the judgment. I think the money, while in the treasury, does constitute a part of the county funds. A special method is provided for the payment of this class of demands, which relieves the claimant from the delay, expense, and trouble of the usual mode. If the taxpayer does not call for it, the treasurer—in my opinion—must account therefor to the county, and cannot retain it. The provision that such money shall not be distributed to the state means only that the county shall retain it, and be liable to the taxpayer therefor.

PEOPLE v. SMITH et al. (Sac. 466.)

TAXATION—ASSESSORS—FAILURE TO COLLECT—ACTION ON BOND—EVIDENCE.

1. Pol. Code, § 3820, providing that the assessor must collect taxes on all personal property when, in his opinion, such taxes are not a lien on real estate sufficient to secure their payment, makes it imperative on the assessor to collect the personal property taxes if there is no real estate on which they are a lien, and allows an exercise of discretion only where the taxes are a lien on real estate, and the question arises whether the real estate is sufficient to secure their payment.

2. Where a bond requires the faithful exercise of all official duties, the neglect to perform a duty which is ministerial, and does not involve an exercise of discretion, is a breach of the obligation.

3. Pol. Code, § 3840, provides that poll taxes must be collected by the assessor between the first Monday in March and the second Monday in January of the ensuing year. Section 3846 provides that the assessor must demand payment of the poll tax of every person liable therefor, and, on a neglect or refusal to pay the same, he must collect by sale of personal property. Section 3858 provides that, on the third Monday in January of each year, the assessor must deliver the tax roll to the auditor, who must deliver same to the tax collector, and charge him therewith. Held, that the assessor is liable on his bond for failure to collect the poll taxes.

4. An assessor's list which shows that persons assessed for poll taxes were also assessed for personal property taxes makes a prima facie case against the assessor for failure to collect the poll taxes, since Pol. Code, § 3846, provides that, if any person fails to pay his poll tax, the assessor must collect by seizure of personal property.

5. Where an assessor's return shows that no real estate was assessed to the persons named in his list, and that the personal property tax was not collected, a prima facie case is made against him for such failure to collect, since, under Pol. Code, § 3820, the assessor must collect the personal property taxes, if there is no real estate on which they are a lien.

6. Pol. Code, § 3820, provides that the assessor must collect taxes on all personal property when, in his opinion, they are not a lien on real estate sufficient to secure their payment. Section 3617 defines real estate as including improvements. Section 3717 declares that every tax due on personal property is a lien on real estate. Held, that taxes assessed to the owner of improvements on his personal property are a lien on the improvements.

7. An assessor is responsible on his bond for failure to collect poll taxes, since Pol. Code, § 3840, makes it a part of his official duty to collect such taxes, and his bond covers all official duties.

8. Where an assessor fails to collect taxes which it is his ministerial duty to collect, it is immaterial whether his failure to collect is from neglect or from motives of personal popularity.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county.

Action by the people against A. A. Smith and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald and J. E. Raker, for the People. D. W. Jenks and G. F. Harris, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. This action is upon the official bond of A. A. Smith, assessor of Modoc county, to collect from his sureties the amount of certain personal property taxes and poll taxes for the years 1892, 1893, and 1894, which it is alleged he failed and neglected to collect. The respondents answered the complaint, a trial was had, and, at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, the defendants moved for a nonsuit; the motion was granted; and from the judgment of dismissal entered thereon the plaintiff appeals. The proceedings are shown by a bill of exceptions. Smith, the assessor, was not served, and did not appear. The motion for a nonsuit contains nine specifications of grounds for the motion, but the last three only need be noticed. These are as follows: "(7) That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against these defendants, or any of them. (8) That it has neither been alleged nor proven that there has been any breach of the obligations of said bond by or on the part of these defendants, or either or any of them. (9) That it has not been alleged or proven that there was ever any willful or intentional or corrupt or unlawful failure or neglect, or either, on the part of said assessor, to do any official act whatever required of him by law." The court, in granting the motion, filed a written opinion, from which it appears that he based his decision upon the ground that no breach of the conditions of the bond had been alleged or proved; that the law as it stood during the years covered by the complaint vested in the assessor a discretion in regard to the collection of personal property taxes; that, while it appears from plaintiff's proofs that the county had sustained a financial loss by reason of the failure and neglect of the assessor to collect certain taxes, neither the assessor nor his sureties are liable for the improper exercise of his discretion, unless such discretion was unlawfully or fraudulently exercised, and that is not alleged. The sufficiency of the complaint is therefore the first and principal question to be considered.

The condition of the bond in suit is "that if the said A. A. Smith shall well and faithfully perform all the duties now required of him by law, and shall well and faithfully execute and perform all the duties of such office of assessor, required by any law to be enacted subsequently to the execution of this bond, then this obligation is to be void." The complaint alleges that the personal property of certain persons was assessed as required by law, that the taxes were duly levied, "and that the taxes due thereon for state and county purposes were not a lien upon any real estate of the various parties assessed for such taxes as aforesaid." It then proceeds to allege that certain poll taxes were duly levied, and after stating the amount of the personal property taxes which were not a lien on real estate, and which were not collected, and the amount of the poll taxes not collected, further alleged: "That the said assessor failed and neglected to collect the said personal property tax, the said hospital poll tax, and the said state poll tax, as above specified, and every part thereof, and the whole thereof is now due and unpaid," and was not collected or paid over to the county treasurer. The like allegations were made as to the unpaid personal property and poll taxes for the succeeding years 1893 and 1894, and a list or schedule of such taxes for each year, with the names of the persons assessed both for personal property unsecured by lien on real estate, and whose poll tax had not been paid, were attached as exhibits, and made part of the complaint, and for the years 1893 and 1894 a road poll tax was included.

It is contended by defendants, and held by the court below, that the statute gave the assessor a discretion as to whether he would collect these taxes, and hence a mere "failure or neglect" to collect them is not a breach of his bond, and that it must be alleged that he "unlawfully, fraudulently, or corruptly exercised his discretion, since the law presumes that his official duty was properly performed." This discretion with which the assessor is supposed to be clothed is based upon section 3820 of the Political Code as it stood prior to the amendment of 1895, which added a new provision. That section read as follows: "The assessor must collect the taxes on all personal property when, in his opinion, said taxes are not a lien upon real estate sufficient to secure the payment of the taxes." (The remainder of the section applies only to San Francisco.) Section 3821, Pol. Code, provides: "In the case provided for in the preceding section at the time of making the assessment, or at any time before the first Monday of July, the assessor may collect the taxes by seizure and sale of any personal property owned by the person against whom the tax is assessed." Under the first of these sections, it is imperative upon the assessor to collect the personal property tax where there is no real estate upon which it can be a lien, and the discretion there given can be exercised only where the taxes are a lien on real estate; and the question arises whether the real estate upon which they are a lien is "sufficient to secure the payment of the taxes." The complaint does not touch the cases where the personal property tax is a lien on real estate, except as hereinafter noticed, whether sufficient or insufficient to secure its payment, but only those cases where—in the view of the pleader—there is no lien on real estate, and where there is, for that reason, no discretion on the part of the assessor. In such case, after the assessment is made, the duty of the assessor to collect the tax is merely ministerial, and gives no room for opinion or discretion, and the neglect to discharge that duty is a breach of the obligation of the bond. In People v. Gardner, 55 Cal. 304, 307, it was said. "It is the duty of an officer to do what the law requires to be done in his office, for the law is to him a command which he must obey. If it prescribes the course which shall be taken, and the thing which must be done by any one in office, the officer cannot disregard it. A failure to obey the law, or a disregard of duty, is a nonperformance of duty, and a breach of the official bond of the officer, for which he and the sureties thereon are liable. When, therefore, the plaintiff had proved that the defendant Gardner, during his term of office, had failed to collect the fees on one thousand two hundred and eighty-one applications to purchase land from the state, and to account for the same as required by law, that proof should have been considered by the court, and the court erred in granting a nonsuit." In Amy v. Supervisors, 11 Wall. 136, 138, it was said: "The rule is well settled that where the law requires absolutely a ministerial act to be done by a public officer, and he neglects or refuses to do such act, he may be compelled to respond in damages to the extent of the injury arising from his conduct. There is an unbroken current of authorities to this effect." Of course, there may be a failure to perform a ministerial official duty resulting from an impossibility of performance, which would not create a liability; but a nonperformance arising from neglect implies an ability to perform the act, and to such nonperformance liability attaches.

As to the poll taxes, respondents contend that it was not intended the assessor should be responsible, inasmuch as the tax collector is required to collect the poll taxes that are delinquent on the third Monday in January. Pol. Code, § 3858. But section 3840, Pol. Code, provides: "Poll tax must be collected by the assessors between the first Monday in March and the second Monday in January of the ensuing year." And section 3846, Pol. Code, provides: "The assessor must demand payment of poll tax of every person liable therefor, and, on the neglect or refusal of such person to pay the same, he must collect by seizure and sale of any personal property owned by such person." Doubtless, there are cases, perhaps many of them, where the person owing the poll tax has no property, and where no debtor of the delinquent can be found by the assessor after using reasonable diligence, and hence there may be delinquent poll taxes to be turned over to the tax collector; but the evidence shows that a large number of persons who were assessed for poll taxes were also assessed upon personal property, and in such case it would appear that it was in his power to make the collection, the assessors' lists themselves making a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and shifting the burden to defendants. And so in relation to the personal property tax; if the assessor's returns show that no real estate was assessed to the persons named in the schedules or lists attached to the complaint, and that the personal property tax was not paid, a prima facie case is made for the plaintiff, since in such case it must be assumed that, if the person whose personal property was assessed owned real estate upon which such tax might be a lien, it also would be assessed and appear upon his assessment book; and, as the tax was levied by the assessor upon personal property, he must have known of property which he could seize to collect the tax.

Leaving out of view for the present those cases where improvements upon government land and improvements on homestead and pre-emption claims were assessed, there was sufficient evidence to have sustained a judgment for the plaintiff. As to the improvements above mentioned, subdivision 12, § 3650, of the Political Code, provides that they shall be assessed "as other real estate upon the assessment roll." But it further provides: "No value shall, however, be assessed against the exempt land, nor under any circumstances shall the land be charged with or become responsible for the assessment made against any taxable improvements located thereon." Section 3617 of the Political Code defines the terms used in the assessment of property for the purposes of taxation, and these definitions must control in matters relating to taxation, whether they conform to the definitions used in the law for other purposes or not. That section, prior to the amendment of 1895, among other things, provided: "Second. The term real estate includes: (1) The possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to the possession of land; * * * (4) improvements. Third. The term improvement includes: (1) All buildings, structures, fixtures, fences, and improvements erected upon or affixed to the land. (2) All fruit, nut bearing, or ornamental trees and vines not of natural growth." "Improvements," for the purposes of taxation, are therefore real estate; and section 3650, Id., requires them to be assessed as such, but the land, if exempt from taxation, cannot be charged with the tax or made responsible for it; and section 3717, Id., declares that "every tax due upon personal property is a lien upon the real property of the owner thereof"; and the next section (3718) provides that "every tax due upon real property is a lien against the property assessed; and every tax due upon improvements upon real estate assessed to others than the owner of the real estate is a lien upon the land and improvements; which several liens attach as of the first Monday of March, in each year." The taxes assessed upon improvements made upon public non-assessable land are therefore taxes upon real estate, and a lien upon the improvements; and taxes assessed to the owner of the improvements upon his personal property are also a lien upon his improvements, and as to such personal property taxes the question is presented to the assessor whether such improvements are sufficient to secure the payment of the personal property tax. For an error of judgment in such case the assessor is not liable upon his official bond. Poll taxes, however, are not made a lien upon real estate; and it is the imperative duty of the assessor to collect them wherever he can, by reasonable diligence, find the means of enforcing payment. It follows that, as to the poll taxes and personal property taxes assessed to persons not assessed upon land or improvements, the complaint states a cause of action, and the evidence would have sustained a judgment.

It is said by respondents that there is no provision in the codes or statutes making the assessor responsible for a failure to collect a poll tax. But the Code makes it part of the official duties of the assessor to collect these taxes, and his bond covers and extends to all his official duties.

Upon the trial, plaintiff attempted to prove that the assessor instructed his deputies "not to press the collection of these taxes, as he did not want the parties mad at him." An objection to the question was sustained. Under the allegations of the complaint, it was immaterial as to whether his failure to collect taxes which it was his duty as a ministerial officer to collect was from mere neglect or from motives of personal popularity. If the complaint had charged malfeasance in office, the unlawful and corrupt failure and neglect to collect taxes, as where his discretion was exercised, not as a matter of judgment where there was room for a difference of opinion, but for a corrupt or unlawful purpose where there was no reasonable ground for the exercise of discretion, the evidence would have been material and competent.

Whether the court erred in denying plaintiff's motion to set aside the nonsuit, and permit an amendment to the complaint, need not be considered.

Some other questions were made in the motion for a nonsuit, but none of them are noticed in the briefs, and it is therefore assumed that they are not relied upon by respondents. We see nothing in any of them, however, which would avail defendants, and we shall not therefore state or discuss them. We advise that the judgment appealed from be reversed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

KNIGHT v. CITY OF EUREKA. (S. F. 892.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — DELEGATION OF POWERS.

A municipal corporation cannot delegate discretion to its attorney to employ an assistant, if he think it necessary, and to fix the assistant's compensation.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Action by George A. Knight against the city of Eureka. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Cutler, for appellant. A. J. Monroe, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action upon an express contract to recover for services as attorney at law. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court gave judgment of nonsuit, from which plaintiff appeals.

It appears that an action was brought against defendant in the circuit court of the United States, at San Francisco, on January 21, 1886, by certain Chinamen, who sued for damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the destruction of their property by a mob in defendant city on February 27, 1885. These claims aggregated the sum of $132,820. Defendant employed S. M. Buck, Esq., by ordinance of its council, to take charge of the suit. The ordinance recited the pendency of the action against the city, and the necessity to retain counsel to defend it, and concluded as follows: "Therefore it is ordered that S. M. Buck, Esq., be and he is hereby, retained and authorized to act for the city of Eureka as its attorney in defense of said action; and he is also authorized to retain and associate with himself in defense of said action some able attorney and counselor residing in San Francisco, Cal., if, in his judgment, it becomes necessary. And said S. M. Buck, Esq., is instructed to conduct said defense as economically as it can be done consistent with vigorous and successful defense thereof." Acting under this authority, and not otherwise, Mr. Buck retained plaintiff, and entered into an agreement with him on March 2, 1889, by which he employed plaintiff as an attorney on behalf of defendant, to assist in the defense of said action, and, "on behalf of defendant, agreed to and with said Knight that said city of Eureka would pay him the sum of five thousand dollars for such retainer and services." Plaintiff "accepted said employment, and rendered such services for defendant from time to time in said action during its pendency as were required of him, such services consisting of consultations with S. M. Buck"; and the defendant in that action prevailed. It appeared that the council were not informed of Mr. Knight's employment until after Mr. Buck presented his claim for payment in May, 1889, and not until in 1890, as Mr. Knight testified, at which time he presented his bill to the council. The reason for not sooner informing the council was stated to be that it was thought Mr. Knight could be more serviceable if his employment were kept a secret. He did not appear in court, but did talk with the attorney of the Chinamen about the case in addition to consulting with Mr. Buck. The extent or nature of plaintiff's services, however, does not seem to be material, as he does not sue for their value but upon the contract.

It is also immaterial that Mr. Buck had become the city attorney of defendant when he contracted with plaintiff, for the only claim of authority to make the contract rests upon the ordinance above quoted. The single question in the case is, was defendant bound by the contract? The legality of Mr. Buck's employment is admitted. It is also admitted that the council could have legally employed plaintiff to assist Mr. Buck. It is admitted, too, that the council could have authorized and directed Mr. Buck to employ appellant, for in that case the council would have exercised its judgment and discretion in determining that an assistant attorney was necessary, and that appellant was the choice of the council to perform the service. The point of objection to the ordinance seems to be that it substituted the judgment of Mr. Buck for that of the council. It is quite clear that the council did not determine that an additional attorney was necessary. That function was delegated to the employed attorney, Mr. Buck. He was to pass upon the question and to act upon his own judgment as to the expediency or necessity for retaining another attorney. Conceding the legality of Mr. Buck's appointment, we think it did not carry with it the authority to appoint an assistant attorney, nor could the council delegate its power to make such an appointment. Practically, the authority here delegated left with the agent of the council the discretion to determine the necessity for employing an assistant, and to fix his compensation. These were powers which, in our opinion, the council alone could exercise, and therefore could not be delegated. We find nothing in any of the cases decided by this court where the power of a municipal corporation to employ counsel was involved, from Smith v. Mayor, etc., 13 Cal. 531, to Merriam v. Barnum, 116 Cal. 619, 48 Pac. 727, contrary to this view. The power of boards of county supervisors and of the legislative bodies of cities and towns to employ counsel in certain cases has been frequently passed upon here; but no case has been called to our attention, and we think none can be found, holding that such bodies may appoint an attorney, and delegate to him the discretion to employ other attorneys; as in his judgment he may deem necessary or expedient, and fix their compensation. The correct principle is stated in Scollay v. Butte Co., 67 Cal. 249, 7 Pac. 661, where it was held that the powers conferred upon a municipal corporation involving the exercise of judgment or discretion are in the nature of public trusts, and cannot be delegated to others. There are numerous cases where it has been held that the county boards of supervisors may authorize the employment of an attorney other than the district attorney under certain circumstances, as in Scollay v. Butte Co., supra; Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 664; Lassen Co. v. Shinn, 88 Cal. 510, 26 Pac. 365; Kelley v. Sersanous (Cal.) 46 Pac. 299, and some other cases; but in all of them the boards determined the necessity, made the selection, and fixed the compensation. In the case before us the council performed these functions as to Mr. Buck, but no further. The necessity for and the employment of plaintiff or some other able attorney were left entirely to the judgment and discretion of the attorney employed by the council. That it exceeded its authority in doing this is, we think, beyond doubt.

We are cited by appellant to section 90 of Mr. Dillon's Municipal Corporations, where it is said that corporations may exercise all the powers within the fair intent and purposes of their creation which are reasonably proper to give effect to powers expressly granted; and in doing this they have a choice of means adapted to ends. This is true, and it is upon some such principle that the appointment of an attorney by a municipal corporation may be made in certain cases, although the body is already provided by law with a legal adviser. But no authority can be derived from such an implied power to authorize its delegation. This power to appoint an attorney is one of those incidental powers which, of necessity, reside in the council, in order that its granted powers may be fully exercised, but is one of that class of powers devolved upon the council which, in their very nature, should be exercised by it, and could not with safety to the public, whose servants the members of the council are, be conferred upon an agent to exercise. No exigency or emergency is likely to arise where full opportunity would not be given the council to act directly in selecting its own attorney or his assistant; and there is every reason why the power to do so should be lodged in the governing body itself. We think the true doctrine is correctly stated by Mr. Dillon, at section 96: "The principle is a plain one that the public powers or trusts devolved by law or charter upon the council or governing body, to be exercised by it when and in such manner as it shall judge best, cannot be delegated to others." See, also, Cooley, Const. Lim. 248. The case In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 562, 38 Pac. 981, is cited by appellant, where a city ordinance prohibited the beating of a drum in the public street without the permit of the president of the board of trustees, which permit he was authorized to issue whenever in his judgment it was deemed expedient. The ordinance was held valid by a majority of the court, mainly, as we understand the prevailing opinion, as an exercise of the police power. We do not think that case is authority for appellant's contention here. The two cases rest upon wholly different reasons. The case now here is also quite unlike that of street superintendents, chiefs of police, and other municipal officers, whose daily duties make it not only reasonable and proper, but necessary, that they should exercise certain delegated powers, such as may be administrative or ministerial in their character. The case of City of Huron v. Campbell, 3 S. D. 309, 53 N. W. 182, is closely analogous to this. In that case the council authorized the city attorney to "appoint as many assistant attorneys as the mayor of the city may deem necessary to protect and defend in the various courts" certain suits. The ordinance placed the full control and management of all these suits with the mayor. The ordinance was held invalid, while holding that the council had authority itself to employ one or more assistant attorneys. The court said: "In fixing this compensation [i. e. of the city attorney] the city council must exercise its judgment upon that particular question; and, in determining the necessity for an assistant or assistants, the city council must equally exercise its judgment as to the necessity for an assistant or assistants, and the compensation to be allowed him or them." The judgment is affirmed.

In re CARVER'S ESTATE. (Sac. 365.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1898.)

ADMINISTRATORS—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—WAIVER—BASIS OF COMPUTATION—APPEAL—ESTOPPEL TO ASSIGN OBJECTION.

1. In the absence of a statute so providing, an administratrix cannot be deprived of commissions because of neglect or default in management of the estate, but may be charged with loss thereby resulting.

2. A waiver of commissions in a petition for letters of administration does not deprive the administratrix of the right to commissions, where the waiver was without objection, and by leave of court withdrawn before she was appointed.

3. The reasonable value of decedent's mortgaged realty, which was charged to the administratrix as assets, and was taken, under foreclosure, into immediate possession of the mortgagee on a compromise, in consideration of a waiver of a deficiency judgment against the estate, is properly included in the value of property administered as a basis of computing commissions.

4. An administratrix who was directed to charge herself in her first account with a certain sum as money on hand, the order showing that in fact it was in another's hands, is concluded, by her omission to appeal, from disputing the correctness of the charge.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

In the matter of the estate of A. G. Carver, deceased, Ann A. Carver, administratrix, appealed from an order settling her final account. Modified.

Maddux & Stonesifer, for appellant. C. W. Eastin and P. J. Hazen, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The administratrix appeals from an order settling her final account, in which the court denied her right to any commissions, and charged her with the sum of $535.72, as cash on hand; "said sum being the amount found due said estate from Ann A. Carver in the settlement of the action of McHenry against Carver et al." No other items are involved in this appeal.

1. Is appellant entitled to commissions in the sum charged or in any sum? The value of the property, as shown by the inventory and appraisal, was $33,248.03, and the commissions charged were based upon that sum, computed at the statutory rate, and amount to $1,317.44. The findings of the court are those recited in the preliminary part of the order or decree, and, so far as they affect appellant's right to commissions, are, in substance, that the administratrix failed and neglected for an unreasonable length of time to render a proper or legal account, that she neglected for an unreasonable time to pay debts and claims while she had sufficient money in her hands to pay them, "and has been negligent in other particulars without sufficient cause or excuse, and that she is not entitled to any commissions as claimed in her final account." It was also found "that she had not used any of the property or money of said estate for her own benefit, nor has she mingled the funds of said estate with her own funds; that the sales of the personal property of said estate made by said administratrix were fairly made, and the fair market price was obtained therefor." I think the court erred in refusing to allow commissions to appellant. Section 1618, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "When no compensation is provided by the will, or the executor renounces all claim thereto, he must be allowed commissions upon the amount of estate accounted for by him, as follows: * * * The same commission shall be allowed to administrators. * * *" The statute imposes no conditions as to the allowance of the commissions at the rate stated in said section, though it permits the court, in its discretion, to make a further allowance for extraordinary services. The administrator is chargeable with debts which remain uncollected through his fault or neglect (section 1615, Code Civ. Proc.); and if he has been guilty of neglect, or has wasted, embezzled, or mismanaged the estate, his letters may be revoked (section 1626); but it is nowhere provided that, for any fault, mismanagement, neglect, or loss resulting therefrom, he shall be deprived of the compensation provided by law, though in such cases the administrator will be charged with the loss and credited with his commissions; so that, so far as necessary, his commissions will be applied to the payment of such losses. In Osborn's Estate, 87 Cal. 4, 25 Pac. 157, one of the executors was held liable for a loss occurring through the default and insolvency of his co-executor, and the court charged him with the loss, less the amount of his commissions. In Re Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584, the administrator was charged with various sums lost to the estate through his neglect, but he was allowed full commissions, and charged with the losses. In 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 526, the author says: "It is held in numerous cases that compensation must be refused if the administrator has been guilty of willful default or gross negligence in the management of the estate, whereby the same has suffered loss: * * * But it would seem that the language of the statute in most states fixing the compensation of executors and administrators precludes all discretion in this respect. The court can neither add to, nor detract from, nor in any wise vary, the compensation directed to be allowed by the statute. It can neither allow nor disallow commissions scaled by the degree of skill or of vigilance, of good or bad faith, displayed in the management of the estate, unless such discretion is vested in the court by statute." It is conceded that in other jurisdictions, where the compensation is fixed by statute, the decisions are not uniform; that in some the principle upon which compensation is refused is that, where the estate has suffered loss by the dereliction of the administrator, the loss will not be enhanced by the allowance of commissions, but where the loss is made up to the estate full commissions are allowed. I think the true rule, and one that is sustained by our own decisions, is that an administrator should be charged with losses resulting from his default or neglect, and allowed his commissions.

It is argued by respondent, however, that appellant, in her application for letters, waived commissions, and for that reason, if no other, compensation should not be allowed. This was not made a ground of objection in the court below, though about four printed pages of the record are devoted to the statement of the grounds of exception to this item in appellant's account; nor was any finding made thereon, or other notice taken thereof, in the court below. It appears, however, from appellant's testimony, that at the time of the compromise of the contests over the probate of the two wills left by the deceased, and before her appointment, her waiver of compensation was withdrawn, with the consent of the court, and that no objection was made to the withdrawal.

It is further contended that, if appellant is entitled to any compensation, the amount upon which commissions are computed is too large. The inventory and appraisement showed the total value to be: Personal property, $4,448.03; and real estate, $28,800; total, $33,248.03; and the commissions charged by appellant are computed upon that sum at statutory rates. Respondent, in his exceptions to appellant's account, says that "she [appellant] has not administered the property of said estate of the value of more than $3,954.21." It is not suggested that the appraisement placed too high a value upon either the real or personal property, but it is contended that $3,954.21 is the whole amount administered, and this amount, as the exceptions indicate, includes no part of the real estate. The deceased, A. G. Carver, died (in September, 1891) seised of 963 acres of land. Prior to his death he and his wife executed to one McHenry a mortgage upon said real estate, and another parcel belonging to Mrs. Carver, to secure the sum of $32,700, and a suit to foreclose said mortgage was brought in December, 1892. The land belonging to the estate was cultivated after Mr. Carver's death, Mrs. Carver furnishing the money to pay the expense of putting in the crop. A receiver was appointed by the court to take charge of and harvest the crop, which afterwards went to the mortgagee. The foreclosure suit was eventually compromised, the mortgagee waiving a deficiency judgment, and paying $2,500, which was claimed by Mrs. Carver to be the amount expended by her in putting in the crop, and she and the estate giving to the mortgagee the immediate possession of both tracts. It is true the valuation in the inventory is not conclusive (Hinckley's Estate, 58 Cal. 516; Fernandez's Estate, 119 Cal. 579, 51 Pac. 851), but it is prima facie evidence of its value (Simmons' Estate, 43 Cal. 549). In the petition of Mr. Ward for the probate of one of the wills he estimated the value of the land at $45 per acre, while the appraisement fixes its value at $30 per acre. Not only, therefore, is no question made as to the value of the land, but there are no circumstances tending to induce even a suspicion that the appraised value was not fair and reasonable. The appraised value of the land was charged to appellant in her account, and the fact that it was taken under a decree foreclosing the mortgage, and applied to the payment of a debt against the estate, was shown by the account. Appellant should, therefore, be allowed commissions in the amount stated in her account.

2. As to the sum of $535.72, which the court directed to be charged as moneys in the hands of appellant, its history is somewhat obscure, but need not be traced to its origin. Upon the settlement of appellant's first account, she was directed by the court to charge herself with that sum as moneys in her hands, though it appeared upon the face of the order that the money was in fact in her mother's hands. In her final account she did not charge herself with it, but in her report said she had not done so because she had been unable, after using all reasonable efforts, to collect it. She thus treated it as money due the estate, but not as money that she should be responsible for whether collected or not. But if the court erred in its first order, which made her liable for the money in any event, she should have appealed from that order, and, not having done so, she is concluded.

Besides, in her said report, after explaining that she had been unable to collect said sum, she said: "That she is willing that said sum may be deducted from her commissions for administering upon said estate in so far as the same may be necessary for the payment of claims of creditors herein." As it appears that the whole of said sum is necessary for the payment of creditors, the offer should have been accepted.

As the order appealed from rightly charges her with said sum of $535.72, but is erroneous in not allowing commissions, the cause should be remanded to the court below, with directions to modify its order by allowing appellant commissions in the sum of $1,317.44, and that respondent pay the costs of this appeal, and as so modified the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the cause is remanded, with directions to modify the order appealed from by allowing appellant commissions in the sum of $1,317.44, and that the costs of this appeal be taxed to respondent, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CITY OF OAKLAND. (S. F. 1,589.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)

NEW TRIALS—WHEN ALLOWED.

A new trial is allowable in actions for usurpation of a franchise brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 803.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by the people against the city of Oakland. From a judgment and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denying a new trial. Denied.

W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., and Fitzgerald & Abbott, for the People. W. A. Dow, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A motion is made herein to dismiss the appeal from the order denying a new trial. The question involved in the appeal is the sufficiency of the proceedings for changing the boundaries of the city of Oakland, and the present motion is made upon the ground that under the statute by virtue of which those proceedings were taken there is no provision for a new trial. The action herein is for the usurpation of a franchise, and is brought under the provisions of section 803, Code Civ. Proc., and the proceedings for changing the boundaries of the city were only evidence in support of the action. Section 803 is found in chapter 5 of part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the sections under which new trials are authorized are in the same part of the Code, and contain no limitations respecting the character of the action in which they are to be granted. Other questions of fact than those relating to proceedings for changing the boundaries of the city may have been involved, and errors of law may also have occurred at the trial. New trials have frequently been granted in actions under this section. People v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 117 Cal. 604, 49 Pac. 736; People v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 Pac. 740, and 50 Pac. 668. The motion is denied.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)

APPEAL—DEATH OF APPELLANT AFTER SUBMISSION—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Where an appellant dies after argument and submission of the appeal, but before decision thereon, the judgment will be entered as of the day before his death.

Order entering judgment on appeal. For former opinion, see 55 Pac. 388.

PER CURIAM. It appearing by the affidavit of J. P. Langhorne, filed herein, that the appellant, William Ede, died on the 25th day of October, 1898, after the argument and submission of the appeal, it is ordered that the judgment of affirmance heretofore given herein (55 Pac. 388) be entered as of the 24th day of October, 1898.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF MADERA v. REDFIELD et al. (Sac. 451.)

Modification of opinion. For former opinion, see 55 Pac. 160.

PER CURIAM. The opinion heretofore rendered herein (55 Pac. 160) is modified by striking from the paragraph preceding the last one in the opinion all thereof commencing with the words, "It was competent for the parties," etc., and inserting in lieu thereof, "We are of the opinion, however, that the consideration of the promise was sufficiently presented by the pleadings in the case as an issue for determination by the court."

FRASSI v. McDONALD. (S. F. 851.)

Modification of opinion. For former opinion, see 55 Pac. 139.

PER CURIAM. The opinion in this case, filed November 22, 1898 (55 Pac. 139), is hereby modified by striking therefrom all of that paragraph relating to the excavation being a nuisance by reason of having been made without a permit from the city authorities.

GARTHWAITE et al. v. BANK OF TULARE. (Sac. 455.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1898.)

BANKS—DRAFTS—FORGERY—DILIGENCE—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. On a question of want of diligence in suing a bank for the amount of a draft on which the payee's indorsement had been forged, it was irrelevant that the payee had previously sued the bank for possession of the draft and recovered judgment.

2. Where irrelevant evidence is admitted over objection, it is presumed on appeal that the court considered it material, and the error is reversible.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by W. W. Garthwaite and Elizabeth M. Smith, executors of the will of B. F. Smith, deceased, against the Bank of Tulare. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

John Yule, W. W. Cross, and D. C. Martin, for appellants. Davis & Allen and Bradley & Farnsworth, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from the judgment of the court below dismissing the action upon the ground of want of prosecution. The appellants contend, among other things, that the court below erroneously admitted in evidence the judgment roll in a former action entitled B. F. Smith, Plaintiff, vs. Bank of Tulare, a Corporation, and Pacific Bank, a Corporation, Defendants, No. 2,340; and this contention must be sustained. The latter action was commenced in the same court in which the case at bar is pending, on August 25, 1890, and its purpose was to recover possession of a certain check or draft drawn by the Bank of Tulare on the Pacific Bank for $750, payable to the order of the plaintiff therein, B. F. Smith, which check or draft was alleged in the complaint to be unlawfully in the possession of the defendants in said case. It appears that the check was sent by one Lovejoy, who resided at Tulare, in Tulare county, to Smith, who resided at Oakland, in Alameda county, through the United States mail, and that it was taken from the post office by some person other than Smith; that Smith's name was forged on the back of the check, and that the Pacific Bank paid the amount of the check to the person who presented it, and upon demand refused to deliver the check to Smith. These facts were averred in the complaint in said case No. 2,340, which contained a prayer for the recovery of the possession of the check, or for its value in case a delivery thereof could not be had. That case was pending for about four years, but five days before the commencement of the present action the defendants in the former case delivered up possession of the check to the plaintiffs herein, who are the executors of said Smith, he having died in February, 1893. That action was dismissed by consent of the parties on the day on which this present action was commenced. The plaintiffs, having recovered possession of the check, brought this action to recover the amount of money expressed on the face of the check, with legal interest. Under these circumstances the judgment roll in the former case had no relevancy as evidence to the issue presented in the case at bar as to lack of diligence in prosecuting the present action, and it was error to admit it. As objection to the admission of this judgment roll was specifically made by the appellants and overruled, it must be assumed that the court below considered it material, and attached importance to it. The error must therefore be considered as material and prejudicial (Storch v. McCain, 85 Cal. 304, 24 Pac. 639), and for this error the judgment must be reversed.

The above view makes it unnecessary to consider the point made by respondent that, as the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the judgment, and there was no specification in the bill of exceptions as to the insufficiency of the evidence, therefore the point cannot be considered here that the evidence was not sufficient to support the judgment. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1898.)

NOTES—PLEADING—EVIDENCE—CONTRACT—PUBLIC POLICY.

1. Where, in an action on a note, one defense is a general denial, and another sets out the circumstances under which the note was made, but fails to put in issue the amount alleged in the complaint to have been paid thereon, proof of other payments is competent under the general denial.

2. Where plaintiff, suing on a note, testified that no other payment than the one credited had been made, it was proper on cross-examination to ask him who made the payment, and to whom, and when, and whether more had not been paid, and whether he had not at the time and place, and to the person stated, admitted receipt of further payments.

3. Neither the silence nor consent of the parties justifies a court in retaining jurisdiction of an action on a contract void as against public policy.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by J. C. Ball and J. R. Troxel against J. E. Putnam and others. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Cannon & Freeman and Ben. F. Geis, for appellants. F. C. Lusk and S. Millington, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action upon a promissory note. The cause was tried without a jury, findings were waived, and judgment entered for plaintiffs. Said appellants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The complaint alleges that on March 6,

1889, the defendants made their promissory note "in words and figures following: "Sacramento, Cal., March 6, 1889. For value received, we, and each of us, promise to pay to J. C. Ball and J. R. Troxel the sum of six thousand dollars ($6,000) on or before the 15th day of March, 1889, with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from date. [Signed] August Henning. K. E. Kelley. J. E. Putnam. F. G. Crawford. W. H. Kelley. Joseph Muller." It is also alleged that plaintiffs are the owners and holders of said note, and that no part of it has been paid except the sum of $2,892.50, which was paid on March 8, 1889. The complaint was not verified. The defendants, for a first defense, denied each and every allegation of the complaint; and, for a second and separate defense, set out a detailed history of the circumstances under which the note was made, and, with much less perspicuity, the purposes for which the money represented thereby was intended, and was in fact used. The substance of said second defense is that all the parties to the note were in the city of Sacramento on March 6th; that plaintiffs represented to defendants that they had promised to pay to "certain persons" in said city the sum of $6,000, and were in immediate need of the money, which was to be paid to said persons at 10 o'clock the next morning; that they did not have the money, but would receive that sum from the Bank of Willows, in Colusa county, at 4 o'clock the next day; that, if the defendants would make said note, the plaintiffs would indorse it, and raise the money at a bank in Sacramento, and, when the money should arrive from Willows in the afternoon, they would take up said note, and destroy it; that such was the only purpose for which they would use the note, and that in no event would any of the defendants ever be required to pay it, or any part of it; that, relying on these representations, they made the note; that defendants received no consideration for it, and the facts set out was the only consideration; that plaintiffs never used said note for the purposes for which they said it was intended, and now hold said note without paying any consideration therefor. The statement on motion for a new trial contains nearly 200 specifications of errors of law occurring at the trial, and also specifies several particulars wherein it is claimed the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision. Findings having been waived, we look to the evidence for the circumstances surrounding the execution of the note upon which this action is based.

At the time this note was made, a certain bill was pending in the legislature for the division of Colusa county and the creation of the county of Glenn. Prior to the meeting of the legislature, meetings of people interested in the creation of the new county were held, and a committee was appointed for the purpose of raising money in aid of its creation. The town of Willows seemed to be the center of activity. At the time the note here in suit was executed the bill for the creation of Glenn county had passed, and was then pending on a motion to reconsider it. The promoters of the bill had a "headquarters" in the city of Sacramento, and on the evening of March 6, 1889, at the time the note in suit was executed, all the parties to the note, and many others interested in the new county, were present in the rooms occupied as the Glenn county headquarters. The finance committee above mentioned, consisting of Mr. O'Brien, Mr. French, and another, were not present at Sacramento. J. C. Ball, one of the plaintiffs, was the disbursing agent, to see that the money was properly expended. At the time the note was executed, it was stated and understood that an obligation had been entered into with a person not named, but who was then in Sacramento, by which there was to be paid to said person, on the following morning at 10 o'clock, a sum roundly stated at $15,000, and in order to meet that payment the sum of $6,000, in addition to the money on hand, would have to be raised. The defendants testified, in substance, that the plaintiffs represented that said sum of $6,000 was then on deposit in the Bank of Willows, but that it could not reach Sacramento until 4 o'clock the next day, but that, if defendants would execute said note, the plaintiffs would indorse it, and raise the money thereon at a bank in Sacramento, and when the money arrived in the afternoon they would take up the note, and destroy it. The note was accordingly executed. Plaintiffs testified, in substance, that they did not represent that said or any sum was in the Bank of Willows; that they did not represent that they would raise said sum of $6,000 on said note, but, if defendants would make said note, that they would raise or furnish the money; and that they did not use the note, but raised said sum on their own sight draft on the Bank of Willows. $14,500 was drawn from the bank at Sacramento on the morning of the 7th, and paid over to the "person" with or to whom the obligation was contracted. The particulars of this part of the transaction will be more fully stated in another connection.

The differences between the note set out in the complaint and the note put in evidence did not constitute a material variance. The objection having been made that they were not the same, good practice required that the variance be explained, and, if the errors were found to be in the copy set out in the complaint, an amendment should have been made. J. C. Ball, one of the plaintiffs, was called on their behalf, and testified that no payments had been made on said note other than the sum of $2,892.50, indorsed thereon March 8, 1889. On cross-examination he was asked several questions in relation to said credit, and as to whether the payments were made to him, when it was paid, whether it was paid by the defendants, whether it was not a fact that more money had been paid that should be credited, whether $1,000 had not been paid that was not credited, whether he had not stated at a time and place, and to a person named, that he had received or would receive and credit upon said note the sum of about $1,500. These questions were each objected to upon the ground that they were immaterial, and not within the issues; that it is not denied by the answer that a certain sum was paid; and that it was not cross-examination. The objections to each of said questions were sustained, and exceptions taken. These rulings were erroneous. There were two defenses, the first being a general denial, which put in issue every material allegation of the complaint. The second defense alleged the circumstances, purpose, and consideration of the note, but did not put in issue the amount alleged in the complaint to have been paid thereon, or the amount remaining unpaid; and, because issues upon these allegations of the complaint were not taken by the second defense, the court and counsel for the plaintiffs treated the allegation of the complaint that no part of said note had been paid other than the sum credited as undenied, and therefore admitted. But this conclusion nullifies the denials contained in the first defense, which put in issue all the material allegations of the complaint. It is well settled that an admission in one answer or defense is not available by the plaintiff in proof of issues raised by another answer or defense pleaded in the same case. Siter v. Jewett, 33 Cal. 93; Nudd v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 39, 47; Miller v. Chandler, 59 Cal. 541; Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 332, 7 Pac. 753. These questions were also proper cross-examination. Mr. Ball testified that no other payment than the one credited had been made, and thus the door for cross-examination was thrown wide open.

At the time plaintiffs raised said sum of $6,000 on their sight draft upon the Bank of Willows they had no funds to their credit in said bank. Afterwards the note here in suit appears to have been deposited to the credit of plaintiffs in said bank, or as collateral to their own obligation. It further appears that said bank was the depository of contributions to the Glenn county fund collected by the finance committee, and that the credit indorsed upon said note was paid from funds so collected, and was credited on March 8th,—the second day after the note was made, and before its maturity. Mr. Burton, the cashier of said bank, was called by the defendants, and shown the note in suit, and recognized pencil memoranda thereon made by him. He was then asked by counsel for defendants: "Is it not a fact that there has been paid into the Bank of Willows, since the time the note was given to the bank and held by the bank as collateral security, the sum of one thousand dollars as a credit upon the note, for which this note was held as collateral security to you, and which sum would release this note to that extent?" An objection was sustained. Thereupon defendants offered to prove by said witness that there was paid $1,000 into the bank, and that the parties making the payment requested at the time the payment was made that it be applied to the payment of the note in suit. Plaintiffs objected that it was not competent or material, in that there is no answer setting forth a defense of payment, and the objection was sustained. The evidence was clearly admissible under the general denial which put in issue the averment of the complaint that no other payment had been made than the one credited.

Other erroneous rulings were made, some of which were prejudicial, but, as the matters involved will not necessarily arise upon another trial, they need not be noticed. Enough has been shown to require a reversal of the judgment. But, since the judgment is to be reversed, this should be added: There is evidence in the record tending to show that the contract which lay at the bottom of all the transactions between these parties was a contract void as against public policy. Not enough appears to justify this court in saying that such is the fact, but enough appears to call for rigid inquiry by the trial judge; and if, after such inquiry, the evidence elicited leads him to believe that such is the fact, he will withhold all relief in this action, for a contract which is against public policy, good morals, or the express mandate of the law cannot be made the basis of any action, legal or equitable. Neither the silence nor the consent of the parties to it justifies the court in retaining jurisdiction of such an action. Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 45 Pac. 1015. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

GEORGE v. PIERCE et al. (S. F. 883.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.)

ASSIGNMENTS FOR CREDITORS—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE AND OF CREDITORS—PLEDGES—CHANGE OF POSSESSION—LIEN—EXECUTION—SALE—CONVERSION—TITLE—DAMAGES.

1. An assignee for creditors stands in his assignor's shoes, and hence he cannot attack a pledge of the assignor's property because the change of possession was not sufficient.

2. Creditors for whose benefit an assignment has been made may nevertheless prosecute their claims to judgment and levy execution.

3. The pledgor of cattle owned the ranch where they grazed. M. lived there, and cared for and milked them, and gave the milk to the pledgor, who sold it, the profits being divided. By direction of the pledgor, M. drove the cattle into a corral, the pledgor and pledge holder counting them, and the cattle then passed back into the pasture, and the pledge holder saw them but once afterwards. A bill of sale was then given by the pledgor to the pledge holder, who gave a lease of the cattle to M. The relations between the pledgor and M. remained the same, except that M. thereafter refused to give the pledgor any of the cattle for beef, as had been the custom. Held that, in spite of the writings, there was no actual or visible change of possession as to creditors.

4. A debtor pledged property, without, however, surrendering possession, and then assigned for creditors. The property was sold under execution by creditors, and the purchaser conveyed to the assignee. Held, that the assignee acquired title free from the pledge.

5. An assignee for creditors took possession of property pledged by the assignor. The taking was a conversion, because, standing in his assignor's shoes, the assignee had no right to attack the pledge. Held, in an action for the conversion, that the assignee might show, at least in mitigation of damages, that he had acquired title through a judgment creditor, who levied on and sold the property pendente lite.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Henry C. George against Henry Pierce and another. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying a new trial, defendant Pierce appeals. Reversed.

T. M. Osmont, for appellant. Warren Olney, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff, claiming to be pledge holder, brings this action for conversion of the pledged property. Some of the facts presented by the record are as follows: De Long owned a large tract of land in Marin county, upon which land he kept a great number of dairy cows. He borrowed $25,000 from Cowell, and gave these dairy cows into the possession of George, the plaintiff herein, as pledge holder, to secure the lien. During the life of the pledge De Long, under the provisions of the Civil Code, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and Pierce, the defendant, became the assignee under such assignment. Thereafter, deeming the proceedings pertaining to the pledge void, he took possession of the cows. The pledge holder thereupon brought the present action in conversion for damages. One herd of these cows is involved in the present case. Other cases are pending, resting largely upon similar facts, as to the remaining herds. In Francisco v. Aguirre, 94 Cal. 180, 29 Pac. 495, it was held that an assignee, such as this defendant Pierce, stood in the shoes of his assignor. Hence, if De Long had no right to take the possession of these cows from the pledge holder, then Pierce had no right to do so, and his taking would be wrongful and a conversion. Pierce, in taking possession of the cattle, appears to have acted upon the theory that the possession of George as pledge holder was not such a possession as the Civil Code contemplated, and therefore no lien rested upon the cattle, as against the assignee for the benefit of creditors. This position is untenable, for the reason that the sufficiency of George's possession was a matter that De Long, the pledgor, could not attack. Measuring and testing the case from this standpoint, the judgment against Pierce finds full justification in the law. But at this point complications present themselves by reason of the following facts: While this action was pending certain creditors of De Long secured a judgment against him, levied upon these cows by execution, and sold them. The title under this sale thereafter vested in Pierce for the benefit of the creditors, by reason of a transfer from the purchaser. By supplemental answer Pierce set out these facts as a defense to the action. The trial court refused to admit evidence tending to establish them, and this refusal is assigned as error.

An important question meets us at the threshold of the investigation. Did Pierce, by the action of the creditors, get title to the property? There is no question but that the creditors, after the assignment of De Long, had the right to prosecute their respective claims against him and levy executions upon this property to satisfy judgments recovered. Francisco v. Aguirre, supra, is directly to this point. It follows that title to the property passed to Pierce as a result of the action if the property was subject to execution and sale at the hands of the creditors. It certainly was so subject if the transfer by De Long of the possession of the cattle to the pledge holder, George, plaintiff in this action, was not accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession; for any other kind or character of transfer to the pledge holder would leave the property subject to the satisfaction of the debts of De Long's creditors, regardless of Cowell's lien. We have examined the record with extreme care, and have failed to find evidence supporting a finding of fact to the effect that there was an actual and continued change of possession from De Long to George. To sustain the validity of a pledge, as against creditors of the pledgor, there must be an open and visible change of custody of the property. Secret liens of all kinds are abhorrent to the law, and for these reasons are not supported. Let us look at the facts surrounding this transfer.

When George went upon the De Long ranch to take possession of the cattle he found matters in this condition: De Long owned the ranch and the cattle. Matoni, the co-defendant, lived upon that particular part of the ranch where these cattle grazed. He cared for them and milked them. The milk was given to De Long, who sold it, and divided the net proceeds with Matoni. Such was the present situation at the time of the delivery of the cows to George. Upon that day the following events took place: Matoni, under orders from De Long, drove the stock into the corral from the pasture land. Then George stood upon one side of the gate and De Long upon the other, and, as the cows slowly passed from the corral through the gate back to the same pasture land from which they had been driven, they counted them. A bill of sale of the stock was given by De Long to George, and George thereupon gave a written lease to Matoni of the cows for the rental of $30 per month. These things having taken place, George rode away, and never saw the cows but once again. The relations between De Long and Matoni as to the cows continued exactly the same after this eventful day as before, with the single exception that Matoni thereafter refused to give De Long on demand any of the cows for beef, which had been the past custom. We believe we have stated all the material facts bearing upon the transfer of the possession of the cows from De Long to George, and, weighing and measuring these facts, they entirely fail to disclose that actual and continued change of possession demanded by the statute in cases of pledge in order that creditors of the pledgor may not successfully attack the transaction.

The transaction pertaining to this transfer was enveloped in writings, which was well enough for the purpose of evidencing the rights of the respective parties to it; but the statute which deals with the change of possession sufficient to defeat creditors does not contemplate writings, but acts. No writings pertaining to a transfer of personal property, regardless of their number or character, can create an actual and continued change of possession as to creditors of the pledgor. Acts only can do it. A visible, actual, continued change of possession must be had, and the law will be satisfied with nothing else. Writings can never accomplish these results. In the investigation of the question now before us, the bill of sale from De Long to George goes for naught. The lease from De Long to Matoni of the land upon which these cows had previously pastured, and upon which they were subsequently to pasture, is an unimportant circumstance. The lease of the cattle by George to Matoni at a rental of $30 per month in no way tends to prove either an actual or a continued change of possession to George. Let us, then, see the surrounding conditions after George, the pledge holder, mounted his horse and rode away. The cows still fed on the same pasture lands, and were still cared for and milked by the same man. The increase was still divided between De Long and Matoni, the dairyman. The milk was turned over by Matoni to De Long, and disposed of by him the same as before, the net profits being divided as in the past. There was not only no real change of the possession of the cattle, but absolutely no apparent change. Everything went on exactly as it had gone on in the past. Under these circumstances, the transfer to the pledge holder was void as to creditors, and the sale under execution carried good title; which title was in Pierce, the defendant, at the date of the trial.

It is claimed upon the part of plaintiff that Pierce's title to the cattle under the execution sale is only such title as De Long had, and therefore he stands as De Long stands. But there is this material difference: De Long had title to the cattle subject to the pledge holder's lien; Pierce has title relieved of such lien, and this resulted from the levy and sale of the cattle by the creditors.

The title to the property alleged to have been converted being in Pierce at the date of the trial, was that fact a defense to the action in conversion? In other words, plaintiff having a perfect cause of action for conversion when his complaint was filed, has that cause of action been abated by a subsequent acquirement of legal title of the property by the party guilty of the conversion? Without going into this question in extenso, it is sufficient to say that, if the facts set out by the supplemental answer in this case are not a complete bar to the action, they are, at least, material and relevant, as tending in mitigation of damages. At least, it must be that, under such conditions, the damages claimed by plaintiff should be mitigated to the extent of the value of the cattle at the time of the trial. For these reasons the judgment roll in the action of the creditors against De Long should have been admitted in evidence.

The contention of appellant that the complaint does not state a cause of action has no merit. We are also satisfied with the trial court's position as to the splitting of the various causes of action. The objection to the prosecution of the motion for a new trial, based upon laches, is not well taken. For the foregoing reasons it is ordered that the order denying a new trial be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: VAN FLEET, J.; HARRISON, J.

THOMSON-HOUSTON ELECTRIC CO. v.
CENTRAL ELECTRIC RY.
CO. (Sac. 389.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—SALES—PAYMENT—CONTRACTS—CONSIDERATION.

Plaintiff was to act as purchasing agent for defendant, but was to assume no responsibility for the satisfactory working of the apparatus purchased. The contract contemplated that plaintiff should pay for the apparatus, and be repaid by defendant in a lump sum, which was to include all supplies. The apparatus proved defective, and defendant notified plaintiff not to pay therefor until an adjustment was reached, stating that it had claims on other purchases against the seller almost equaling the entire cost, to which plaintiff's agent agreed, and unsuccessful attempts were made to adjust defendant's claims extending over several months, and until after the insolvency of the seller. In an action for the price, plaintiff's treasurer and the seller testified that plaintiff paid for the apparatus soon after delivery, and before the notice of defect. Held, that the agreement to withhold payment by plaintiff's agent, who did not know payment had already been made, did not prevent recovery, since it was without consideration.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by the Thomson-Houston Electric Company against the Central Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover the sum of $1,100, the contract price of four so-called Tripp trucks, furnished by plaintiff to defendant under written contract executed March 19, 1892. The cause was tried by a jury, and defendant had the verdict and judgment thereon. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying motion for new trial. The pleadings are verified.

Plaintiff is a Connecticut corporation, transacting business in San Francisco and other places through branch agencies. The manager of the San Francisco branch was Thomas Addison, with authority to make the contract. Plaintiff proposed that defendant purchase quite a large lot of electrical and other supplies suitable for defendant's use, and the proposal was accepted. The part of the contract now in question was as follows: "We propose to furnish four (4) latest improved roller-bearing Tripp trucks, you to guaranty that the above trucks shall not cost us to exceed two hundred and seventy-five dollars each f. o. b. cars Boston, Mass. In furnishing said trucks, however, it is agreed and understood that we act only as your agent in the matter, assuming no responsibility for their proper or satisfactory working, or for any delays in delivery of same, nor for any costs or expenses growing out of suits for alleged infringements of patents." The clause as to payment was for a gross sum ($10,000) for all the supplies "thirty days after the same has been delivered to you as above agreed upon, ready for successful operation." The complaint alleges that plaintiff fully performed all the conditions of the contract, including the purchase from the Tripp Manufacturing Company of, and payment to it for, the trucks in question. Defendant denies the purchase by plaintiff as alleged, and the payment by it to Tripp Company; avers as a separate defense that plaintiff, as special agent of defendant, received the trucks from the Tripp Company, and that plaintiff was authorized to do nothing else in connection with said trucks; that upon receipt of the trucks by defendant it notified plaintiff of a claim defendant had against said Tripp Company which defendant desired to offset against said Tripp Company for the purchase price of said trucks, all of which plaintiff knew before it paid said Tripp Company as alleged in the complaint, and, if such payment was made by plaintiff, it was in violation of its authority; that said Tripp Company at the time of said alleged payment was, and ever since has been, insolvent; and by reason of said payment, if made, defendant has been damaged $1,187. A second separate defense by way of counterclaim and offset is pleaded, alleging an indebtedness of Tripp Company to defendant of $1,187 for money paid and expended by defendant in the repair and alteration of Tripp trucks purchased by defendant from said Tripp Company within two years last past, of which claim plaintiff, at all times mentioned in the complaint, had knowledge; that plaintiff was acting only as special agent of defendant, and was instructed by defendant not to pay $1,100, or any part of it, to the Tripp Company, and that any payment made by it was without authority, and in violation of the agency and its instructions; avers that defendant has been prevented from collecting its said claim of $1,187, or offsetting the same by plaintiff's payment of said $1,100, and to defendant's damage.

1. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. By the terms of the contract, plaintiff became the agent of defendant to purchase the trucks, but no responsibility was to attach to the agent for the proper and satisfactory working of the trucks, nor for delays in the delivery. The cost was included in the gross sum to be paid for the entire equipment, which was $10,000; and defendant agreed to pay this sum "thirty days after the same has been delivered * * * ready for successful operation." The words "successful operation" had reference to the other equipment, and not to the trucks, for it was specially agreed that plaintiff assumed no responsibility for their proper working. These trucks were to be purchased by plaintiff and paid for by plaintiff, for it agreed to furnish them; and defendant was to pay plaintiff, and not the Tripp Company. The agency feature of this part of the contract was introduced to relieve plaintiff from liability as to the proper working of the trucks and as to delay in delivery, and properly so, because plaintiff had no interest or profit in these items. The evidence is uncontradicted that plaintiff gave the order to the Chicago branch, and the trucks were ordered by the Boston branch, and were delivered to that branch June 29, 1892. The bill reached plaintiff's Boston branch July 6th, and August 4th a statement of account of plaintiff was rendered by the Tripp Company, and on August 5th the trucks were paid for by the Boston branch. Notice of this payment was not sent to the San Francisco branch. When the trucks were shipped to Sacramento does not appear, but it does appear that they were first used or examined about September 1st. Some repairs were found to be necessary upon them, and on September 7th defendant wrote the San Francisco branch not to pay the Tripp Company in full until defendant made settlement with plaintiff. September 8th Dr. Addison wrote: "We cheerfully comply with your request, at the same time asking you to complete the repairs as promptly as possible, and give us a full account of the same, together with costs." September 30th defendant sent account of charges "in perfection of trucks purchased from you for our use and account," charging plaintiff $134.34. On October 1st Dr. Addison replied, and, among other things, said: "While we should be glad to continue to act as your agent in this matter, if you so desire, and forward this [the account] to the Tripp people, yet we should prefer to have you take it up yourselves, and fight it out. You will note by our contract, dated March 19, 1892, that we simply act as your agent in this, and do not assume any responsibility whatever for these trucks. For this reason we return these bills to you, and ask you to take the matter up directly with the Tripp people." October 3d defendant replied: "We will do as requested; therefore do not pay the Tripp Manufacturing Company anything on these trucks until we can get this adjusted." On the same day (October 3d) Dr. Addison wrote to the Boston house, calling attention to the claim of defendant of $134.34 for repairs of these trucks, and, at the request of defendant, suggesting "that you defer settlement for these trucks until the same is adjusted with the Central Electric Railway Co.," and disclaiming responsibility for the trucks not working. October 11th the San Francisco house received a reply to its letter of October 3d, from the Boston branch, stating: "We will defer settling with the Tripp Company until this matter is arranged. We suppose you will secure a claim from the railway people covering the expense incurred by them, which we will submit to the Tripp Company before making settlement." The evidence of defendant was that there was no claim against the Tripp Company on account of these four trucks except the $134.34. But it appears that defendant had purchased other trucks directly from the Tripp Company, the satisfactory working of which that company had guaranteed. Defendant made certain necessary repairs on these latter trucks, and on October 10th defendant wrote the San Francisco branch, again asking that the Tripp Company be not paid for the four trucks, as the Tripp Company owed defendant "nearly enough to balance the account," but sending no items of account. Several other letters were exchanged between defendant and Dr. Addison on the subject, showing that defendant was endeavoring to effect a settlement with the Tripp Company without much success, and asking that plaintiff do not pay the Tripp Company for the trucks; and on November 7th Dr. Addison wrote to defendant: "If you feel that you cannot settle it, send the account to me, and I will see what can be done, but of course cannot take any responsibility for such settlement." Defendant continued its efforts to settle with the Tripp Company direct. February 17, 1893, Dr. Addison asked defendant if it could not, in making its settlement with the Tripp Company, collect a claim of his company against the Tripp Company for $228. It does not appear that defendant ever notified the plaintiff of its claims against the Tripp Company other than those on the four trucks, except in the letter of October 10th, as already stated. Finally, February 20, 1893, Dr. Addison wrote the defendant that he was advised by the Boston office that the Tripp Company had made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and that, unless a certain proposed compromise was accepted, his company would not get over 10 or 20 per cent. of its claim, and adds: "I give you this information in case you should desire to take advantage of the same." This brought the matter to a focus, and defendant wrote to plaintiff, March 4th, inclosing balance as settlement of account to February 1, 1893, and added: "The eleven hundred dollar item, as shown in your statement February 28th, is wholly incorrect, as the T. H. [Thomson-Houston] contract is settled so far as you are concerned, we having (by your own suggestion) taken up the matter of settlement with the Tripp Manufacturing Company for the trucks. We hope you will save us further correspondence over this matter," etc. March 6th, Dr. Addison replies, and for the first time informs defendant that plaintiff had already paid the Tripp Company for the trucks, claiming that defendant owed plaintiff for them, and stating that, "if the Tripp Company had not failed, this matter would be easier of adjustment than it is." The remaining correspondence consists of restatements of former letters, and the writers' construction of their meaning. It will be observed that all this correspondence occurred after the Tripp people had been paid. That they were paid by the Boston house on August 6, 1892, is undisputed, except as it may be otherwise inferred from this correspondence. We think the sworn testimony of the treasurer of the Boston branch of plaintiff, and also that of the manager of the Tripp Company, may be consistently accepted as true, notwithstanding the ignorance of the fact of the San Francisco house and of the person in charge of the correspondence at Boston. We see no necessary conflict between the fact of payment sworn to and the subsequent correspondence.

The repairs upon trucks purchased directly by defendant from the Tripp Company, or other items of charge of defendant against that company, with which plaintiff had nothing to do, and which items were never furnished plaintiff, had no connection with the defendant's contract with the plaintiff. When defendant asked plaintiff to withhold payment for the four trucks until defendant could adjust its differences with the Tripp Company as to matters of no concern to plaintiff, it was asking something it had no right to ask under the contract. What plaintiff did in respect of those claims was voluntary, and without consideration. Even as to the four trucks, plaintiff, by the terms of the contract, was to assume "no responsibility for their proper and satisfactory working, or for any delays in delivering the same." The contract required plaintiff to make the purchase of four trucks, and contemplated that plaintiff should, in the first instance, pay for them; and there was no restriction upon plaintiff as to when it should pay for them. The very matter as to which repairs became necessary was in terms taken out of plain-tiff's responsibility. It was guarantied by defendant that the trucks should not cost plaintiff "to exceed two hundred and seventy-five dollars each, f. o. b. cars Boston, Mass.," which was the price paid by plaintiff; and this price was included in the gross sum of $10,000 to be paid for the entire equipment by defendant.

As to the knowledge of the insolvency of the Tripp Company, there is no evidence that plaintiff knew it until after the assignment for the benefit of the creditors in February, 1893, which fact was promptly communicated to defendant; and there is no evidence that the Tripp Company was insolvent at the times alleged in the answer.

2. We do not feel called upon to examine the alleged errors of law occurring at the trial in giving instructions and refusing or admitting evidence. Many, if not all these, are connected with the question of plaintiff's liability for the claim of defendant for $1,187 arising out of repairs to trucks not purchased through plaintiff, as to which we have held that plaintiff incurred no liability. The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

CHICO BRIDGE CO. v. SACRAMENTO
TRANSP. CO. (Sac. 425.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.)

STATUTES — REPEAL — BRIDGES — SUPERVISORS — NAVIGABLE STREAMS — STEAMBOATS — NEGLIGENCE
— PLEADING — EVIDENCE — EXPERTS — APPEAL — REVIEW.

1. Act March 24, 1874 (Pol. Code, § 2872), prohibiting supervisors from licensing bridges across certain named streams, was, by necessary implication, repealed by Acts 1881, p. 76, § 1, authorizing them to erect bridges on public highways across navigable streams, or to grant franchises for the same.

2. An action for damages inflicted to a bridge by a steamboat is not one of trespass, but negligence must be proved.

3. In an action for damages to a bridge inflicted by a steamer, the evidence showed that for several years the river had been navigable at all stages, boats passing the bridge once a week, with but a single slight injury to the bridge before the one in suit, and a few slight touches since. The injury was not caused by any defect in the draw, or in opening it. There was expert evidence that the river could at all times be navigated safely. Held to make a prima facie case of negligence.

4. A finding cannot be set aside on the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses.

5. Where, in an action for damage to a bridge inflicted by a steamer, there was no averment of faulty construction of the bridge, evidence that, if there had been a fender or cluster of piles above the bridge, the collision would not have happened, was properly excluded.

6. A civil engineer, with eight years of experience in charge of a government snag boat, and of observation and study of river currents, and with knowledge of the locality in question, is qualified to give an opinion as to whether a river can be safely navigated at all times at a point where a steamer collided with a bridge.

7. Where supervisors gave to a bridge company the use of parts of an old bridge and the right to attach a draw thereto, provided it would put and keep in repair the approaches, the company was not prevented from recovering the whole damage caused to the bridge by a collision, by the fact that the supervisors could at any time resume control and possession of the bridge, the company having repaired the injury.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action by the Chico Bridge Company against the Sacramento Transportation Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reardon & White, for appellant. F. C. Lusk, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff through injury to its bridge across the Sacramento river, at or near Chico, by a collision therewith by defendant's barge while navigating said river. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order of the court denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Plaintiff and defendant are both corporations organized and existing under and pursuant to the laws of the state of California. At a point near Chico, on the Sacramento river, between the counties of Butte and Glenn, is a bridge connecting highways in those respective counties. A drawbridge was originally constructed at this point in 1882, by the county of Butte. The greater portion of this bridge, including the draw, was carried away by a flood in the Sacramento river in the winter of 1889-90. Neither of the counties of Butte or Glenn being desirous of reconstructing the bridge, the supervisors of the county of Butte (the county lying on the left-hand side of the Sacramento river), upon the application of one T. H. Barnard, on the 22d day of July, 1890, granted him a franchise to construct a tollbridge across said Sacramento river at the site of the former free bridge. The order also permitted Barnard "to use the parts of said bridge now remaining, and to attach the drawbridge thereto, provided said party shall put and keep in good repair said approaches, and, whenever Butte county may deem it for the best interests of the county so to do, purchase said bridge so erected, they may do so, in the form and manner provided by law, paying only for the new part that may be built," etc. Barnard assigned his franchise to the Chico Bridge Company, a corporation, the plaintiff herein; and it constructed the bridge in consonance with a previous order of the state engineer, except that the draw was made 101½ feet wide, while the order only required it to be 90 feet. This draw turned upon a pier in the center. The bridge was completed and opened for traffic as a tollbridge on the 11th of December, 1890, and has ever since been owned, possessed, and operated as such by the plaintiff. The Sacramento river, at the point where said bridge is constructed across it, is a navigable stream. On the 9th day of March, 1893, and for a long time prior thereto, defendant (appellant here) was the owner of sundry steamers and barges, and was engaged in the business of navigating with them the said Sacramento river. On said last-mentioned day, defendant's steamer Jacinto, with its barge Utah in tow, was descending said river. Plaintiff, in due time and in a proper manner, opened the draw of its bridge for the passage of said steamer and barge, to pass down and through. The court finds that said defendant negligently and carelessly, and without any fault or neglect of plaintiff, caused and suffered its said barge to run into and collide with that portion of said bridge which was east of the draw, and in said Butte county, and injured and destroyed the said bridge to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $750.

The first point made by appellant for reversal is that the motion of defendant for a nonsuit should have been granted, for the reason that the bridge was shown to have been constructed across a navigable river, and in violation of law. The Sacramento river is a public way. Pol. Code, § 2349. The contention is that, by section 2872 of the Political Code, the board of supervisors had no authority to grant a franchise for the construction of the tollbridge. But it will be noticed that the power which was taken from boards of supervisors to license tollbridges over navigable streams by section 2872 of the Political Code is expressly conferred upon them by the later act of 1881. The latter act clearly repeals by implication so much of the Code as deprived the boards of supervisors of this power. It follows that the board of supervisors had jurisdiction to grant the franchise to plaintiff's assignor. Section 2874 of the Political Code authorized the plaintiff to use, and the board of supervisors to prescribe the manner of use of, so much of the public road or approach to the bridge as was necessary in the construction and maintenance of the bridge.

Another point was also made on the motion for a nonsuit, viz. that there is no evidence showing or tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant in the navigation of the Sacramento river. The complaint alleges that the "defendant negligently and carelessly, and without any fault or neglect of plaintiff, caused and suffered its said barge to run into and collide with that portion of said bridge," etc. Respondent contends that the action is in reality one of trespass; that whether the defendant was negligent is immaterial; and that plaintiff's allegations of negligence may be treated as surplusage, and therefore proof of negligence would not be necessary. The respondent is manifestly in error in this contention, and the court below improperly adopted that theory. In this case negligence was sufficiently alleged; but it is contended by appellant that the plaintiff offered no evidence to sustain that allegation, and that its motion for a nonsuit should have been sustained upon that ground. The evidence on the part of the plaintiff, in chief, was, in brief, a description of the bridge, the width of the draw, the stage of the water, which was 10 feet above low water, the extreme being 20 feet; that the river was navigated by steamers with and without barges, trips being usually made once a week; that in 1889 and 1890 the west bank of the river above the bridge had been washed out to the extent of 300 or 400 feet, which produced a cross-current towards the east side when the water was 10 feet or more above low water; that it required more care in navigating during high than at low water; that the injury was not caused by any defect in the draw, or in opening it; that in different stages of water there is a great deal of difference in the velocity of the currents; "that it was perfectly safe to navigate at any stage of water"; that the steamer passed through without colliding, but, when the barge came along, it struck the upper side of the east pier of the bridge,—that is, the pier which supports the east end of the bridge,—and broke five or six piles; that there were no dolphins or fenders or cluster of piles above the bridge, though "such things would have a tendency to protect the bridge from collisions"; that the bridge was opened for travel December 11, 1890; that this accident occurred March 9, 1893; that prior to this accident the bridge had been hit but once so as to require repairs, on which occasion the repairs cost but $30; that it was not true that on numerous occasions steamers and barges would rub against the pier going down the river; that they would sometimes rub against it going up; that, up to the time of the injury complained of, they had not hit the bridge, but "since that time they have hit against it a little, without damaging it materially." Upon this state of the evidence the plaintiff rested, and defendant moved for a nonsuit. No criticism was made by any witness of the manner in which the steamer and barge were handled, nor any suggestion made as to how the collision might have been avoided, or that those in charge of the vessels were incompetent. The burden of proof being upon the plaintiff to show that the injury was either intentionally or negligently committed, and there being no pretense that it was intentional, the question is presented whether the evidence made a prima facie case of negligence.

There is no absolute rule applicable to all cases as to what constitutes due or reasonable care, on the one hand, or negligence, on the other. The circumstances under which accidents occur are well-nigh infinite, and liability or nonliability therefor must depend upon the circumstances under which they occur. There are, however, some general rules applicable in all cases as aids in determining the question of liability. One of these is stated in the Nitro-Glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 524, as follows: "The measure of care against accidents which one must take to avoid responsibility is that which a person of ordinary prudence and caution would use if his own interests were to be affected and the whole risk were his own." In this case it is clear that the navigation of the river by steamboats and barges was necessarily a source of some danger to the bridge, and the existence of the bridge, while not, in the eye of the law, an unreasonable obstruction to the navigation of the river, nevertheless increased its difficulties, and was a source of some danger to navigation. The bridge, however, was an immovable object. It could not be moved out of the course which the boat was taking, while the boat is supposed to be under the control of those navigating it, and capable of being controlled and guided in its movements. In Shearm. & R. Neg. § 60, it is said: "When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care." This rule was quoted and approved in Judson v. Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 556, 40 Pac. 1020. In that case every one who could have known the cause of the explosion was killed; but, in addition to the presumption arising from the fact that the business of manufacturing explosives is carried on for indefinite periods without accident,—that explosions are therefore the result of negligence,—there was expert evidence to the effect "that if the factory was properly conducted, and the employés careful during the process of manufacturing, an explosion would not occur." So, here, the evidence showed that for several years the river was navigated at all stages of water, passing the bridge once a week, with but a single slight injury to the bridge prior to the one in question, and a few times afterwards touching or rubbing it slightly; and, in addition, there was expert evidence that it could at all times be navigated safely. This, we think, was quite sufficient to justify the court in denying the motion for a nonsuit, and to throw the burden of showing due care upon the defendant.

The court found that the injury was caused by defendant's negligence, and appellant contends that said finding is not justified by the evidence. It is true the defendant's agents in charge of the boats, while showing that they had been for many years engaged in navigating the river, and regularly passing the bridge at all stages of water, testified that on the occasion in question they encountered a cross-current that they had never met before or since, and attributed the accident to that current, and denied negligence. The credibility to be given these witnesses, and the weight to which their testimony was entitled, it was the province of the trial court to determine; and the finding, as well as the opinion of the court to which we have referred, shows that the court gave it no credence whatever. We cannot therefore set aside said finding.

Upon cross-examination the bridge tender was asked: "If there had been a dolphin or fender or cluster of piles placed above the bridge, the barge would not have collided with the bridge, would it?" It was objected that the question was irrelevant, immaterial, and not cross-examination. The objection was rightly sustained. There was no allegation in the answer that the bridge was improperly constructed, or left without proper protection of the character indicated; and there was nothing in the examination in chief which opened a door for the question. Whether it was the duty of the plaintiff to have thus protected its bridge is a question not presented by the record.

It is also contended that the court erred in permitting plaintiff's witness H. L. Demerit to give his opinion as an expert. Without consuming space to rehearse the testimony of this witness tending to show his qualifications, we think the profession of the witness,—that of a civil engineer,—taken in connection with his experience of eight years in charge of the government snag boat, and his observation and study of the currents of the river at similar places, as well as his knowledge of the locality in question, acquired by frequently passing it, though at a lower stage of water, qualified him to speak, and that the court did not err in overruling the objection.

In one of the reply briefs for appellant, the point is made that the plaintiff is not entitled to the whole of the damages, as it has only a temporary interest in the bridge, and the injury is to the inheritance, as Butte county may at any time resume possession and control. There is no merit in this contention. Butte county, through its board of supervisors, gave the use of the remaining parts of the old bridge to plaintiff's assignor, and the right to attach the draw thereto, "provided said party shall put and keep in good repair said approaches." Plaintiff, being bound to repair, and having repaired, the injury caused by the collision, is the only party entitled to recover.

Finding no error in the record which would justify a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from, we advise that they be affirmed.

PORTER v. LEWIN. (L. A. 547.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)

ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS—PRESENTATION.

A claim for funeral expenses need not be presented to the administrator for his approval; and hence, if it be submitted to him, suit may be brought thereon more than three months after he rejects it.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by H. C. Porter against M. Lewin, as administrator of the estate of John M. Hughes, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Dorn, for appellant. Graves & Graves and Louis Lamy, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the value of material and services furnished in the matter of the burial of one Hughes. He presented a claim for the amount to the administrator, which claim was allowed in part. Thereafter he brought this action against the administrator of the estate for the entire amount. It is first insisted that the action was not brought within three months after the claim was rejected, and that, therefore, it is barred. Sufficient answer to this contention is found in the fact that a claim for funeral expenses is not one of those claims which the statute requires to be presented to the administrator for his approval. Hence the presentation to the administrator in this case was useless labor, and accomplished nothing. Under the evidence, there is neither an accord and satisfaction nor an account stated. We find no merit in the appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

QUAN WYE v. CHIN LIN HEE. (S. F. 821.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.)

ASSIGNMENTS—PARTNERSHIP—FILING OF CERTIFICATE—RIGHT OF ASSIGNEE TO SUE—APPEAL—WAIVER.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, providing that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, an assignee can sue in his own name on an instrument assigned to him.

2. That an assignor of a claim could not maintain an action thereon does not preclude an action by his assignee.

3. An objection that plaintiff is incapacitated from maintaining the action cannot be urged for the first time on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Quan Wye against Chin Lin Hee. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Baggett and D. J. Tuohy, for appellant. Lyman I. Mowry, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action upon an instrument in writing given by defendant to Quan On Wing in payment for certain goods, wares, and merchandise, and assigned to plaintiff before the commencement of the action. The trial was by a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. The judgment does not appear in the transcript, although the verdict does. No point is made upon this omission, and we will treat the record as containing the judgment appealed from.

1. The only error of law assigned as occurring at the trial is that the instrument sued upon was not shown to have been properly assigned, and that it was error to admit it in evidence over defendant's objection. We think the evidence was sufficient to establish the fact of assignment, and, that being so, the action was brought in the name of the party in interest, within the meaning of section 367, Code Civ. Proc.

2. It is objected that Quan On Wing was a fictitious name, not showing the persons interested as partners, and that Quan On Wing could not maintain an action upon the document set forth in the complaint, and therefore the assignee could not. There is nothing in the point. Cheney v. Newberry, 67 Cal. 126, 7 Pac. 445; Wing Ho v. Baldwin, 70 Cal. 194, 11 Pac. 565. Furthermore, defendant did not demur to the complaint on any ground, nor did he in his answer present the objection now urged, nor object at the trial to any of the evidence on the ground that plaintiff's assignor was incapacitated to sue on the obligation. The objection was therefore waived, and cannot now for the first time be urged. Phillips v. Goldtree, 74 Cal. 151, 13 Pac. 313, and 15 Pac. 451; Cook v. Fowler, 101 Cal. 89, 35 Pac. 431. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

MINOR v. BALDRIDGE et al. (S. F. 853.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.)

ASSUMPSIT—RECOVERY—PLEADING—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—CONTRACT—RESCISSION.

1. In the absence of evidence showing that a corporation's agent received money which plaintiff was fraudulently induced to pay to the corporation, a judgment in assumpsit for money had and received against the agent is erroneous.

2. While, under the Code, the facts constituting a cause of action must be pleaded, yet, in assumpsit for money had and received, evidence of plaintiff's claim may be admitted under a complaint containing the money counts only.

3. In assumpsit to recover money paid, evidence that plaintiff was induced to make the payment by reason of defendant's fraudulent representations is admissible under the money counts, though the facts constituting the fraud were not pleaded, in the absence of a special demurrer to the complaint to compel plaintiff to make it more definite.

4. Where plaintiff, having contracted to pay certain money to a railroad company on its procuring a terminal at a certain place, was induced to pay it on the company's fraudulent representation that the terminal had been secured, he may recover the money in assumpsit under the money counts, without rescinding the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Assumpsit by Isaac Minor against Cyrus Baldridge and the California, Oregon & Idaho Railway Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed as to William Baldridge and affirmed as to the railroad company.

S. M. Buck and F. A. Cutler, for appellants. L. F. Puter and J. N. Gillett, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action is for money had and received. The only facts alleged in the complaint are that on the 2d day of November, 1895, defendants were indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,000 for money had and received by them for the use of plaintiff, no part of which has been paid. The defendants did not demur, and their answer consists only of a general denial. At the trial the plaintiff introduced evidence which tended to prove that plaintiff and the corporation defendant entered into an agreement, in writing, by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to pay to the corporation $20,000 in six installments, all dependent, as to the time of payment, upon the progress of the work in the construction of a railroad which the corporation was proposing to build. The first installment was to be paid as follows: "Five per cent. of said amount on call and after the terminal is secured on Humboldt Bay." The written contract was signed only by the plaintiff, but there was an indorsement upon it as follows: "This is secured on condition that the California, Oregon and Idaho Railway Company build up Mad river, and take material at market price for use of construction in said railroad for all we can use. California, Oregon and Idaho Railway Co. Cyrus Baldridge." All this evidence was received subject to the objection on the part of defendants that it was not relevant to any issue made in the proceedings. Plaintiff owned a sawmill near Mad river, and the agreement on the part of the corporation was understood to mean that the corporation would buy lumber from plaintiff, and this, he contends, was the consideration for his contract. Some time after the contract had been signed, Baldridge, acting for the corporation, represented to plaintiff that a terminal had been secured on Humboldt Bay, and therefore the first installment was due. Baldridge also promised plaintiff that if he would make the payment the corporation would at once order from him a large amount of lumber. Believing these representations, and trusting in the promise, plaintiff paid to the Randall Banking Company at Eureka the sum of $1,000 as and for the first installment due upon the contract. Evidence was introduced which tends to prove, and the jury found, that no terminal had been procured on Humboldt Bay, and the corporation has never purchased or offered to purchase lumber from plaintiff. The court charged the jury that, if Baldridge falsely represented that a suitable terminal had been secured on Humboldt Bay, and falsely promised that, if he paid the first installment, an order for a large amount of lumber would be immediately made, they must find for plaintiff. At the close of plaintiff's evidence defendants, and each of them, moved for a nonsuit. The motion was denied, and the refusal was duly excepted to, and the ruling is assigned as error on the appeal.

As to Baldridge, I think the motion should have been granted. There was no evidence which even tended to prove that Baldridge ever received the money, or any portion thereof. The bank was the agent of the corporation, and it was stipulated in the written agreement that the money was to be paid to the bank for it. If the action were for damages, the rule would be different, as both principal and agent are responsible for a tort committed by an agent within his authority, and adopted by the principal. But the basis of this action is that the defendant has money which, in equity and good conscience, it ought to pay to plaintiff. There was no evidence showing, or tending to show, that Baldridge had any money which he ought to pay to plaintiff. On behalf of the corporate defendant it is contended that the evidence, all of which was received over the objections of the defendants, was inadmissible under the complaint.

(1) No evidence could be received under such complaint, because, as required in the code system of pleading, it does not state a cause of action. It does not state the real facts which constitute the cause of action, but only certain conclusions of law which might result from various actual conditions. Implications of law from various circumstances which are not stated do not constitute the facts which, under our system, must be pleaded.

(2) Admitting that the common counts can be used in code pleading, yet where the reliance, as here, is upon proof of fraudulent representations, the facts constituting the fraud should be set out with some particularity; and where that is not done no proof of fraud can be received; and,

(3) This action is based upon an alleged breach of an express contract, and the question is whether, by the terms of the contract, the money was due when it was paid. It is contended that under such circumstances a complaint in the form of a common count for money had and received cannot be maintained.'

1. That the common counts in assumpsit may be used in this state is too well established to be now called in question. The matter was discussed in Abadie v. Carrillo, 32 Cal. 172. Two justices expressed the opinion that the use of the common counts was inconsistent with the code provisions which require a party in his pleading to state the facts constituting his cause of action, but they were of the opinion that the practice was too well established to be then held improper. In several cases since then the use of the common counts has been upheld. In Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 23 Pac. 127, a discussion is had as to the circumstances which will justify its use for the recovery of money due upon express contracts; and section 1042, Greenl. Ev., is cited, as applicable to our system. In Pleasant v. Samuels, 114 Cal. 34, 45 Pac. 998, it is said that the common count is good against a general demurrer. In Shade v. Lumber Co., 115 Cal. 357, 47 Pac. 135, the same ruling is made, but it seems to be implied that such a pleading might be held insufficient as against a special demurrer that the pleading is ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible. There was no demurrer here, and the first point must be overruled.

2. In the absence of a special demurrer, is the common count sufficient to justify the court in receiving evidence, when the objection is made that the facts constituting the alleged fraud are not set out? In answer I think it must be held, under the authorities, that such a pleading is sufficient. At common law the common count for money had and received could be used to recover money obtained by false and fraudulent representations. 1 Chit. Pl. p. 364. In Moses v. Macferlan, 2 Burrows, 1005, Lord Mansfield said: "One great benefit which arises to suitors from the nature of this action is that plaintiff need not state the special circumstances from which he concludes that, ex æquo et bono, the money received by the defendant ought to be deemed to belong to him. He may declare generally that the money was received to his use, and make out his case at the trial. This kind of action to recover back money which ought not in justice to be kept is very beneficial, and therefore much encouraged. It lies for money paid by mistake, or upon a consideration which happens to fail, or extortion, or oppression, or an undue advantage of the plaintiff's situation contrary to the laws made for the protection of persons under those circumstances." The mode of pleading is inconsistent with our Code, and it may be a matter of regret that it was ever tolerated, but the innovation is not so great if it must fall before a special demurrer, which is like a motion to require a pleader to make his pleading more definite, which practice prevails in some states.

3. The action is not based upon a breach of a contract, nor is it necessary to have a rescission of the contract to enable plaintiff to maintain his action. The theory is that the money was obtained upon a false representation that it had become due under the contract by the performance of the condition precedent by the corporation. This might all be, and the contract still remain in force. In such event the corporation may yet perform and become entitled to demand and enforce payment from plaintiff. I think the evidence was properly received, and that it was sufficient to sustain the judgment. As to the California, Oregon & Idaho Railway Company, the judgment is affirmed. As to the other defendant, the judgment is reversed.

SLEVIN v. BOARD OF POLICE PENSION FUND COM'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 843.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — POLICE PENSIONS — DEATH BENEFITS—NATURAL CAUSES—COMPLEMENTARY STATUTES—SUICIDE.

1. Act March 4, 1889, § 7, providing that the widow or children of a police officer who shall "die from natural causes" after having served 10 years shall be entitled to $1,000 from the police pension fund, does not apply to a death caused by a railroad accident.

2. Act March 4, 1889, § 7, providing that the widow or children of a police officer who shall die from natural causes after having served 10 years shall be entitled to the sum of $1,000 from the police pension fund, is not the complement of section 6, which provides for a pension to the widow of an officer killed in discharge of his duty; for it superadds the requirement of 10 years' service.

3. Act March 4, 1889, § 7, providing a death benefit for a widow of a policeman who, after serving 10 years, dies from natural causes, is not a provision against suicide only, for that is no more an unnatural death than any other death resulting from external violence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Mandamus by Catherine Slevin against the board of police pension fund commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

H. T. Cresswell, for appellants. W. W. Foote, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The superior court, by its judgment, awarded to plaintiff a writ of mandate to compel the defendant to audit and allow the claim of respondent, as the widow of Patrick Slevin, for $1,000, as insurance upon the life of said Patrick Slevin. It is contended that the findings do not support the judgment. By the findings it is shown that Slevin became a member of the police department April 1, 1868, and served until September 23, 1889, when, at his own request, he was retired upon a pension under an act of the legislature passed March 4, 1889. The act provides that a member of the department, after 20 years' service, and he has reached the age of 60 years, and his services in the police department shall have ceased, may be retired on a pension. It is found that Patrick Slevin died on the 6th day of March, 1895, and "that said death was the result of injuries received in a railroad accident two days previous thereto." Section 7 of the act under which the claim is made reads as follows: "Whenever any member of the police department of such county, city and county, city or town shall, after ten years of service, die from natural causes, then his widow or children, or, if there be no widow or children, then his mother or unmarried sisters, shall be entitled to the sum of one thousand dollars from such fund."

It is contended that Slevin did not die from natural causes, and therefore, under the terms of the act, his widow is not entitled to the insurance. What is meant by the phrase "shall die from natural causes"? It is not an uncommon colloquial expression, and I think uniformly means that the person who died from natural causes was not killed. To say that one died from natural causes is to say that he was not killed; that is, he did not die through external violence or through human agency. I do not think any persons who are proficient in the use of the English language would understand the expression differently. If, in response to the question, "Was he killed?" the reply was, "He died from natural causes," we would be at no loss for the meaning of the reply. So, if the statement were made in a military report that a certain number died from natural causes, the meaning would be clear. Nor are we without authority. In Bouvier's Dictionary (Rowles' Revision, verb "Death") it is said: "Natural death is the cessation of life. It is also used to denote a death which occurs by the unassisted operation of natural causes, as distinguished from a violent death, one caused or accelerated by the interference of human agency." Black's Law Dictionary (phrase "Natural Death"): "Death resulting from disease, or from natural forces, without the concurrence of man's agency, as distinguished from violent death." See, also, Webster's Dictionary, verb "Natural." But it is said that the usual and ordinary meaning of the words leads to absurd results, and the limitation is unreasonable. I confess it is difficult to understand why this particular limitation was imposed; but to give the language its ordinary meaning does not lead to absurd results, and I do not see how, without doing violence to the language, any other meaning than that well established by usage can be given it.

An attempt might be made to make this provision in section 7 the complement of section 6, which provides for a pension to the widow of the officer who loses his life while in the performance of his duty as an officer. This is, undoubtedly, a provision provided for the case of a violent death. But one provision cannot be the complement of the other, for there is an additional requirement in section 7,—the officer must have served 10 years.

Nor can it be held to provide against the case of suicide. There is nothing in the law to indicate such intention, and it is absurd to say that one who dies from wounds inflicted by an assassin dies from natural causes, while, if the same fatal injuries had been inflicted by himself, his death would not have resulted from natural causes. Although unable to understand the reasons which induced the legislature to dispose of the funds in this mode, I see no way to avoid the conclusion that such is the law. The judgment is reversed.

HASKINS v. JORDAN (two cases; S. F. 862, 863).

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1898.)

COMPLAINT FOR SLANDER—SUFFICIENCY—SET-OFF OF JUDGMENTS—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEES—WHEN SET-OFF MAY BE EXERCISED—MOTION TO SET OFF PENDING APPEAL.

1. An averment in a complaint for slander that defendant spoke "the false and scandalous words," setting them out, sufficiently charges the words used to be false, where the objection is by general demurrer.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 368, providing that assignments of things in action shall be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing at the time of, or before notice of, the assignment, an assignment of judgment to the judgment creditor's attorneys, in payment of services, is subject to the judgment debtor's right to set off against it a judgment against the creditor acquired by him before notice of the assignment to the attorneys.

3. A judgment by consent being unappealable, it may be set off against another judgment between the parties before the time for appealing from the former has expired.

4. A judgment on which execution has been issued, without being stayed, and from which no appeal has been taken, though the time therefor has not yet expired, may be set off against another judgment between the parties.

5. The pendency of an appeal from a judgment attempted to be set off against another does not warrant the court in refusing the set-off, but it should retain the motion until determination of the appeal.

Department 2. Appeals from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Alfonzo Haskins against James C. Jordan. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order refusing to set off such judgment against another judgment against the plaintiff owned by defendant, defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed, and order denying set-off reversed.

Chas. F. Hanlon, for appellant. John R. Aitken and W. H. L. Barnes, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The action was for slander, and plaintiff recovered. Two appeals are before this court, the one (S. F. No. 863) from the judgment, the other (S. F. No. 862) from an order given after judgment.

1. Upon appeal from the judgment the only contention argued is that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that it nowhere avers that the words uttered and published of plaintiff by defendant were false. The complaint alleged: "That heretofore, on the 26th day of December, A. D. 1894, the defendant spoke, in the hearing of C. C. Loomis, J. P. McElroy, Thomas Crossman, and sundry other persons, of and concerning the plaintiff, the false and scandalous words following, to wit: 'Did you know that Haskins was an embezzler?' 'Why, he is. He was arrested at San Diego, and tried by jury, and only escaped because the jury disagreed. The jury stood eight for conviction to four for acquittal.' 'He was arrested for stealing tools.' 'Haskins is a thief, and I will put him where he belongs,'"

"Slander is a false and unprivileged publication, other than libel, which charges any person with a crime," etc. Civ. Code, § 46. That the words the publication of which was charged against defendant were slanderous, if false, there can be no doubt. The averment that defendant spoke "the false and scandalous words following" was a sufficient allegation of their falsity to pass a general demurrer. Amestoy v. Transit Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550; Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 41 Pac. 24.

2. Judgment for plaintiff in this action was given upon May 15, 1896. Defendant moved for a new trial, and the court granted the motion, provided plaintiff did not within 10 days consent to a reduction of the judgment to $300 and costs. Defendant accepted the reduction, and judgment was entered accordingly upon December 4, 1896. Meanwhile one Crossman had obtained a judgment against this plaintiff upon January 13, 1896, for the sum of $730 and costs, and upon June 1, 1896, had assigned this judgment to the defendant, Jordan. Upon June 9, 1896, Jordan gave notice of the assignment to John R. Aitken, who was the attorney for Haskins in the Crossman suit, and one of his attorneys in the present action, and he likewise moved the substitution of himself as plaintiff in the place of Crossman in that litigation. On December 8, 1896, four days after the entry of the judgment in this action, Jordan served notice upon plaintiff's attorneys of his motion to set off the judgment in the Crossman suit against the judgment adverse to him in the present action. Upon the hearing of the motion, Haskins' attorneys showed that their client had assigned to them his judgment in payment of professional services rendered; that the formal assignments were executed, one upon December 4, 1896, the day of the entry of the judgment, and the other upon December 11, 1896, the day of the hearing of the motion. On behalf of Jordan were shown the facts above set forth, and in addition proof was made that no notice until the hearing of his motion was given to him of the fact that Haskins had assigned his judgment to his attorneys. It was further shown that the Crossman judgment was unsatisfied; that an execution upon it had been returned nulla bona; and that Haskins was insolvent. The court denied the motion to offset.

Jordan having acquired the Crossman judgment, there can be no doubt that the procedure which he adopted—that of going into the court which had rendered a judgment against him, and there seeking to offset the judgment assigned to him against the judgment adverse to him—was a regular and well-authorized course to pursue. The power to set off one judgment against another exists independent of statute, and rests upon the general jurisdiction of courts over their suitors and processes. Porter v. Liscom, 22 Cal. 430. The regularity of such a proceeding was recognized in Jones v. Chalfant, 55 Cal. 505; and to the same proposition may be cited Freem. Judgm. (4th Ed.) § 467, et seq.; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 445; and Chandler v. Drew, 6 N. H. 469. While the right to adjust the conflicting claims of its suitors in the mode indicated was originally exercised only by equity as an incident to its powers, courts of law later came to adopt the same procedure, and in this state, where, in the same forum, the litigant is entitled to such relief, legal or equitable, as his showing justifies, the particular distinction between the powers of courts of equity in this regard and courts of law ceases to be important. In every case the suitor has the right to ask for the set-off, and in every proper case, as of right, the motion should be granted.

Aside from the question of the sufficiency and finality of the Crossman judgment,—a matter hereafter to be considered,—appellant's right to urge that judgment as an offset in this action cannot be successfully combatted. The whole matter is in this state definitely set at rest by the requirements of the Code. Section 368, Code Civ. Proc., is as follows: "In case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee is without prejudice to any set off, or other defense existing at the time of or before notice of the assignment." A thing in action is a right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding. Civ. Code, § 953. Inherent in an unsatisfied judgment is this right. An action may be brought upon it, or, if it be satisfied by execution levy and sale, the recovery of the money is still by a judicial proceeding. When the attorneys for Haskins accepted the assignment of his judgment, they took it cum onere, subject to all the rights affecting that judgment which Jordan had, or which he might acquire, before notice to him of the assignment. Of these rights is the valuable and universally recognized one,—the right to acquire an existing judgment against the judgment creditor, and to urge it by motion in reduction or extinguishment of the judgment debt. This was precisely what Jordan did. He acquired the Crossman judgment long before he knew that Haskins had assigned the judgment against him. More than that, his motion to set off was served upon Haskins' attorneys before knowledge of any such assignment made. In Porter v. Liscom, 22 Cal. 430, it is said: "A purchaser and assignee of a judgment, even for a valuable consideration and without notice, takes subject to a right of set-off existing at the time of the assignment; for an assignee takes subject to all equitable as well as legal defenses which can be urged against the assignor. And the fifth section of the practice act recognizes the same principle." The fifth section of the practice act, to which reference is here made, is substantially identical with the present section of the Code of Civil Procedure, and both sections declare that the assignment shall be without prejudice to the right of set-off until notice of the assignment is given. In McCabe v. Grey, 20 Cal. 516, the same section is considered, and it is said to be merely an expression of the rule which has always prevailed in equity. In Bank v. Gay, 101 Cal. 286, 35 Pac. 876, the construction given is again approved. Whatever may be the rule as to notice in other states, however much or little the courts may have permitted themselves to be influenced by equitable considerations in favor of the assignee, the fact remains that in this state there is no room for the exercise of discretion upon the question. The rule is one rigidly fixed by statute, and under it the right of the assignees of the Haskins judgment was subject to the right of the appellant to set off the Crossman judgment against it.

All this presupposes that the Crossman judgment was one of a nature so to be presented by way of set-off, but respondent insists that neither the judgment in Crossman against Haskins nor the judgment in Haskins against Jordan was final; that the time for appeal in either case had not expired; that both actions were pending; and that, therefore, the court could not set off one judgment against another, nor satisfy one judgment so as to cut off the right of appeal. That the right of appeal could not be cut off by any such satisfaction is true. Marble Co. v. Black (S. F. 1,207, decided Dec. 19, 1898) 55 Pac. 599. But it does not follow that because of this fact the motion for a set-off should have been denied. As to Haskins, the judgment in this case was entered with his consent. His right to appeal from it was therefore gone, nor could he be heard to complain because his judgment debtor sought to pay it, and to this extent treated it as a finality and binding upon him.

From the Crossman judgment no appeal was pending, nor had the execution of it been stayed. It was not even urged at the hearing that an appeal from this judgment was contemplated. Execution could have been issued upon it, and in fact had been issued. Under these circumstances, it was a judgment which could properly be presented for set-off upon this motion. "Ordinarily, judgments may be set off whenever the executions issued upon such judgments could be legally set off one against the other by the officer who may have them in his hands for service" (Wat. Set-Off, § 339); and, even if an appeal had actually been taken from the Crossman judgment, and was pending at the time of the motion, it would not be ground for denial of the same, but would be cause for the court's retaining the motion until final decision upon the appeal (Irvine v. Myers, 6 Minn. 562 [Gil. 398]; Terry v. Roberts, 15 How. Prac. 65).

The judgment appealed from is affirmed. The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the trial court to grant the motion to set off.

JACKSON v. PUGET SOUND LUMBER CO.
et al. (S. F. 928.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1898.)

ACCOUNT—COURT COMMISSIONERS' POWERS—REFERENCE—ORDER—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 259, subd. 2, providing that a cause may be transferred to a court commissioner to inform the court on any issue other than that made by the pleadings, a court commissioner has no authority to settle an account, where that was the sole issue tendered by the pleadings.

2. An order, following the terms of an agreement between parties that the action be transferred to a named person, "court commissioner," for an accounting, said "court commissioner to report back * * * the evidence taken and the balance found due on said accounting,"—the sole issue being a settlement of the account,—is an order for a reference to the person named, and not an assignment to a commissioner, who, under Code Civ. Proc. § 259, subd. 2, has no power to hear issues raised by the pleadings.

3. A referee's findings based on conflicting evidence will not be deemed unsupported, though the evidence be confused and unsatisfactory.

4. On a settlement by a referee of an account which had been running a long time, it was not error to admit evidence of transactions occurring more than two years before the commencement of the action, where defendant received more than the amount claimed within the two years.

For opinion in department, see 52 Pac. 838.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action for money had and received to the use of plaintiff. Defendants denied the allegations of the complaint, and pleaded a counterclaim for goods sold and delivered. Such being the issue, and the whole issue, made by the pleadings, the superior court, upon and in accordance with a stipulation of the parties, made and entered the following order in the case: "It is ordered that this action be, and it is hereby, transferred to Stuart S. Wright, court commissioner, for an accounting; said court commissioner to report back to this court the evidence taken and the balance found due on said accounting." In pursuance of this order, the parties appeared before Mr. Wright, and submitted evidence as to their mutual demands. Various objections were made to offered evidence, but none were ruled upon by the commissioner, the evidence being admitted subject to the objections which were reserved for consideration of the court upon the final hearing. After the matters in controversy before the commissioner were submitted for decision, he resigned the office of court commissioner, and subsequently reported findings of fact and conclusions of law to the effect that the defendants had received to the use of plaintiff the sum of $1,300, no part of which had been paid, and that plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for that sum, together with interest and costs. The superior court adopted this report, and, without notice to defendants, rendered and entered a judgment accordingly. The defendants thereupon filed exceptions to the report, upon the grounds that it was against the evidence, that errors had been committed by the commissioner in his rulings at the trial, and that he had ceased to be commissioner before he made or filed his findings. The defendants at the same time gave notice of a motion to set aside and annul the report and judgment, upon the grounds that Wright had ceased to be court commissioner before he made his report, and that the judgment had been prematurely and improvidently entered, without notice to them, and before they had any opportunity to file their objections or be heard in their support. At the hearing of this motion the principal controversy seems to have been upon the question as to the capacity in which Wright had dealt with the case,—whether as court commissioner, with only the powers conferred by section 259, Code Civ. Proc., or as a referee, appointed under section 638 of the same Code. The court held that he had acted as referee, and that his resignation of the office of court commissioner left his power to report upon the matters referred to him unaffected. But the court at the same time held that he had exceeded his powers in reporting findings and conclusions, and therefore vacated the judgment as being without findings to support it, and also set aside the report as to all matters except the finding of a balance due to plaintiff on the accounting of $1,300 and interest, with a direction to the parties to take such further steps in the case as they might be advised. Thereupon plaintiff gave notice of a motion for a further hearing of the cause before the court, for the adoption of the findings of the referee, and for further findings covering all the issues in the case. This motion was regularly brought to a hearing upon the report of the referee, and upon all the papers, files, minutes, and proceedings in the action; and, neither party having any further testimony to offer, the court made and filed its findings and conclusions of law, covering all the issues in the case, and, in accordance therewith, rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1,300 and costs, which was duly entered. From the judgment so entered, the defendants, within 60 days after its rendition, took this appeal.

The principal contention of the appellants here, as in the superior court, is that Mr. Wright acted in the case, not as referee, but simply as court commissioner, and consequently that his authority ceased on his resignation of that office. The mere language of the order of reference may give some countenance to this proposition; but the consequence of holding that no authority was conferred upon Mr. Wright by such order beyond that which he could exercise by virtue of his office of court commissioner is not that his authority to report ceased upon his resignation, but that it never existed,—in other words, that the order was from the beginning absolutely void, and the agreement of the parties upon which it was founded utterly vain and futile; for the settlement of the account of the parties in this case covered the entire issue made by the pleadings, and a court commissioner, as such, has no power to try any issue of fact raised by the pleadings. Code Civ. Proc. § 259, subd. 2. Therefore the order transferring this case to Mr. Wright for an accounting had the effect of constituting him a referee, or it had no effect at all; and since the order was made in the terms of the agreement of the parties, with a view to carry out the purpose of that agreement, and must consequently be construed as the agreement itself would be construed, the contention of appellants amounts simply to this: that the court must hold that they deliberately entered into a contract without meaning or effect. But such a construction of a contract is forbidden by fundamental rules. "A contract must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties." Civ. Code, § 1643.

The intention of these parties clearly was to have their mutual claims determined and the balance ascertained by Mr. Wright. This is shown, not only by the terms of their agreement, but by their action under it. They introduced evidence covering the whole issue, and based their objections to evidence upon their construction of the pleadings as to the nature of the issue. In other words, they tried the case before Mr. Wright precisely as it should have been tried before a referee. It certainly is not doing violence to the intention of the parties, therefore, to hold that they intended a reference. The only argument by which the appellants seek to uphold a different conclusion is founded upon the literal terms of the order. It is conceded that the words "court commissioner," where they first occur in the order, may be regarded as merely descriptio personæ, but the direction to "said court commissioner" to report, etc., is supposed to indicate an intention on the part of the court and parties to limit his powers to those conferred by the statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 259. But the language of a contract governs its interpretation only so far as it is clear and explicit and does not involve an absurdity. Civ. Code, § 1638. Language involving an absurdity is rejected, and so is any phrase or clause which is inconsistent with the object and intention of the parties. Id. §§ 1650, 1652, 1653. The cases in which repugnant and inconsistent clauses have been rejected in the construction of contracts and statutes are innumerable, and in many instances words have been supplied which were obviously necessary to give effect to the intention of parties or the legislature. There is no different rule for the interpretation of a court order, especially where it is made in pursuance of a stipulation; for in such case it would be absurd to construe the stipulation in one sense, and the order in another and inconsistent sense. Our conclusion is that in this case Mr. Wright acted as a referee, under section 638 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that his authority being derived from the order appointing him, and not from the statute defining the duties and powers of court commissioner, his resignation of that office did not impair in any degree his authority to make a valid finding upon the issue referred to him. This conclusion renders it necessary that we should consider the errors assigned upon the rulings and findings of the referee.

As to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of a balance of $1,300 due from the defendants to the plaintiff, it appears very clearly that the defendants collected for plaintiff many thousands of dollars on account of certain building contracts performed by him. Against these collections, they offered evidence—much of it undisputed—of large payments to subcontractors, employes, and other creditors of plaintiff, as well as the sale and delivery of a large quantity of lumber used by him in fulfilling his contracts. These were disputed, however, as to the amount of lumber delivered, and the price at which it was contracted, and also as to certain cash payments. The evidence is certainly not very satisfactory, for it is conflicting, confused, and uncertain, but we cannot say that it is insufficient to support the finding.

The only other point made by appellants is upon the alleged error of the referee in allowing evidence of transactions occurring more than two years prior to the commencement of the action. There was no error in this. The account between the parties had been running a long time. The defendants were shown to have received to the use of the plaintiff much more than the amount claimed within two years prior to the commencement of the action, and some account of the earlier dealings between them may have been necessary to an adjustment of the counter charges. It does not appear that the evidence objected to could have done any injury or resulted in any error in the statement of the account. The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

In re RALEY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 921.)

INSOLVENCY—ACCOUNT OF ASSIGNEE—MISTAKE—COMMISSIONS—REFERENCE.

1. An insolvent made an arrangement with another person whereby the latter took his accounts to collect for the benefit of creditors, and paid certain attorney's fees in making such collections, and turned over the balance to an assignee in insolvency afterwards appointed. The assignee erroneously charged himself with the full face value of the accounts, and credited himself with the items expended in collecting them. Held, that the mistake did not render him liable for the amount of the attorney's fees.

2. Under Insolvent Act 1895, § 32, allowing receivers "to charge and receive for their services commissions upon all sums of money coming into their hands and accounted for by them," an assignee in insolvency is entitled to his commissions before the funds are used to pay creditors.

3. The court may require the assignee of an insolvent to more specifically itemize his account.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 639, authorizing a referee to try issues requiring the examination of a long account, the court may refer an account of the assignee of an insolvent.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

In the matter of the estate of Wilbur Raley, an insolvent debtor, an order was made settling the account of the assignee and directing a dividend to creditors, and the assignee appeals. Reversed.

W. C. Kennedy, for appellant. C. D. Wright, for respondent.

VAN FLEET, J. Appeal by the assignee of the insolvent from an order settling his first quarterly account, and directing a dividend to the creditors.

1. Error is predicated of the action of the court below in disallowing a number of the items of the account. Among those disallowed were three charged by the assignee as having been paid out for attorney's fees,—$200 to Jackson Hatch, $25 to W. C. Kennedy, and $50 to the Ratto collection agency. As to these items it appears that prior to going into insolvency Raley made an arrangement with Marcuse and Barbieri in the nature of an assignment for creditors, by which they were to take his property and out of the proceeds pay his debts. Under this arrangement certain outstanding accounts of Raley's came into the hands of Marcuse and Barbieri for collection, and in making such collection the latter incurred and paid out the above items for attorney's services. Thereafter, when Raley went into insolvency, Marcuse and Barbieri surrendered the money collected on these accounts, together with the accounts uncollected then in their hands, to the assignee, less the amount so expended by them for attorney's fees. In his account the assignee adopted the method of charging himself with the full face value of the accounts that had been assigned by Raley to Marcuse and Barbieri, and against this credited himself with the items thus expended by them. In settling the account the court not only struck out and disallowed these payments as not having been incurred or made by the assignee, but charged him with their sum as so much money remaining in his hands. This method of settling the account was clearly erroneous, since the result was to charge the assignee with money which never came into his hands, and for which he was, under the evidence, in no way responsible. The only mistake on the part of the assignee was one of bookkeeping. He should have charged himself only with the net amount of money and property actually received by him, instead of pursuing the course he did; but this mistake did not render him liable for something which he never received. Whether the expenditures were legally or properly made by Marcuse and Barbieri was a question not raised in the court below, so far as the record shows, and therefore is not involved. The assignee could not be charged with money which never came into his hands, except it appeared that it was lost to the estate through his fraud or culpable negligence,—a fact which the evidence does not suggest. Other items disallowed were one of $76.50 for salary and expenses of a man employed to go about collecting outstanding accounts, and $41.25 for traveling expenses of the assignee (who lived in San Francisco) in going to and from San José, where the estate was in process of settlement, upon business of the estate. The evidence in the record with reference to these items is very meager and unsatisfactory, but what there is tends, without conflict, to show that the expenditures were incurred in good faith in and about the business of the estate. In view of the fact that the order must be reversed, it is sufficient to say generally, with reference to these items, that the insolvent act allows to the assignee "all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate." Insolvent Act 1895, § 32. Upon another hearing it will be incumbent upon the assignee to support his right to be reimbursed for these expenditures by a showing such as will bring them within the purview of this provision of the act. As to the item of loss on sale of melons, we cannot say, under the evidence presented, that it was improperly rejected.

2. We think it was error for the court, in making the order settling the account and declaring a dividend to the creditors, to refuse to make an allowance to the assignee of his commissions upon the amount of money accounted for. Section 32 of the insolvent act allows receivers "to charge and receive for their services commissions upon all sums of money coming into their hands and accounted for by them," at certain rates therein specified. The evident contemplation of the statute is that this allowance shall be made, upon the settlement of each account presented, upon the amount of moneys accounted for in such account; and, as this charge is a preferred demand upon the funds in the hands of the assignee, it should be allowed and satisfied before the funds are used to pay creditors. In this respect the method of procedure differs from that in the settlement of estates of deceased persons, where the representative is usually not allowed his commissions until final settlement. Under this act the statute contemplates and requires that the assignee shall turn the property of the estate into money as speedily as may be, and that, whenever there is money in his hands, he may be required to file an account showing his receipts and disbursements up to that time, and the surplus moneys in his hands shall be prorated among the creditors.

3. It was clearly within the power of the court to require the assignee to more specifically itemize his account, and the action of the court in referring the account to a referee for hearing and report was as much within its discretion in this proceeding as in any other of like character. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 638, 639. For the reasons above pointed out, the order is reversed and cause remanded.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—RETENTION OF TITLE—ACTION FOR PRICE—PROCEDURE AGAINST LAND —COSTS—HOMESTEAD—PARTIES.

1. Where the vendor of land retains the legal title until the purchase price has been paid, an action at law on a note given therefor is not a waiver of his right to proceed against the land.

2. Where the vendor of land, who had retained the legal title until the purchase price was paid, sued on the note given therefor, without asking for a sale of the land, he cannot recover costs in a subsequent proceeding against the land.

3. That a vendor who has retained the legal title until the purchase price is paid sued on the note given therefor, without asking for a sale of the land, does not subordinate his claim against the land to the homestead interest of the vendee's wife.

4. That a vendor assigned the purchase-money note for collection does not deprive him of the right to proceed against the land in his own name, when the judgment obtained in the note has been reassigned to him.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Marin county.

Action by John Longmaid against William A. Coulter and wife to compel payment of purchase money on land, and to foreclose defendants' interest in such land. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Otto Tum Suden, for appellants. C. H. Wilson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Upon the trial of this case in the superior court the trial judge rendered the following opinion:

"The defendants are husband and wife, and have been such ever since November 3, 1891. The default of the defendant William has been entered, and the cause was tried upon the amended complaint, and the answer of defendant Harriet A. Coulter thereto. There is no dispute as to the facts, which are substantially as follows: The plaintiff was, on the 5th day of November, 1890, the owner of and possessed of a lot of land in Sausalito, known as lot 46 in block A. On that day he entered into a verbal contract or agreement with defendant William, whereby he sold said lot to said defendant for fifteen hundred dollars, of which defendant then paid to plaintiff one hundred dollars, and at the same time agreed to pay the balance, viz. fourteen hundred dollars, on or before five years from said November 5, 1890, and, in evidence thereof, gave to plaintiff his promissory note for the same, payable 'on or before five years from date,' with interest at eight per cent. per annum until paid. It was verbally agreed between the plaintiff and said defendant that the legal title to the land should remain in plaintiff as security for the payment of the unpaid portion of the purchase price and interest, and the legal title has never been transferred by plaintiff. It was further agreed, in consideration of said sale and as a part of the same transaction, that said defendant should pay all taxes and assessments that might become due and payable upon said land; but he has neglected so to do, and plaintiff has been compelled to pay all the same, amounting to one hundred and ten dollars and fifty cents. The said defendant immediately entered into possession of said property under this verbal agreement, and has ever since been in possession thereof, and has erected a dwelling house thereon. No part of the fourteen hundred dollars has ever been paid, nor any of the interest thereon, except the sum of sixty-five dollars, paid as follows, viz.: January 13, 1892, twenty-five dollars; February 5, 1892, twenty dollars; and April 28, 1892, twenty dollars. On December 16, 1895, the plaintiff, for the purpose of collecting the unpaid portion of the purchase price of said lot, and without any consideration whatever, and without any intention of waiving or abandoning his lien, if it may be called a lien, indorsed the note to one Tyndall Bishop, with directions to collect the same; and said Bishop, on the same day, brought action against said defendant William in this court on said note, to recover the said sum of fourteen hundred dollars, with the interest due, the complaint alleging the execution of the note, and 'that the said John Longmaid thereafter indorsed the said note to the plaintiff.' The said defendant suffered default in the action, and on January 9, 1896, judgment was entered therein against him for the sum of $1,947.26 principal, and $7.50 costs; and on the same day Bishop duly assigned such judgment to plaintiff, the assignment being on that day filed in the office of the clerk of this court; and the plaintiff has ever since owned said judgment. The defendant William A. Coulter, on September 4, 1896, filed his waiver of right to appeal in said action. On December 18, 1895, defendant Harriet A. Coulter filed for record her declaration of homestead covering such property, thus barring levy of execution on the same. Defendant William has no property other than his interest in this property. Execution has been returned unsatisfied, and the judgment has never been paid in whole or in part. On May 30, 1896, plaintiff tendered to said defendant a sufficient deed, and offered to perform his agreement; but said defendant refused to accept the same, and refused to pay the unpaid portion of the purchase price. This action was commenced June 1, 1896, to compel payment of the amounts due to plaintiff under said agreement, and, in default of such payment, that the declaration of homestead be declared void, and that the defendants be foreclosed of all interest, lien, and equity whatsoever in said land, and that the same be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of such note, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from date, less the partial payments thereon, and also to the payment of all other sums that may be found to be due under the agreement, and for personal judgment against defendant William A. Coulter for any deficiency.

"The main question presented upon the foregoing undisputed facts is as to whether the plaintiff, by the indorsement of the note to Bishop for collection, and the prosecution by Bishop to judgment of an action upon such note, has waived the right he would otherwise undoubtedly have had to proceed against the defendants' interest in the land for the satisfaction of his claim. Such procedure would in this state admittedly be a waiver of the ordinary vendor's lien referred to in our Civil Code (section 3046 et seq.) existing after conveyance. Fitzell v. Leaky, 72 Cal. 477, 14 Pac. 198. But, as has universally been held, there is a great distinction between the lien of the vendor after a conveyance, and the interest of the vendor who has not conveyed, but has retained the legal title as security for the payment of the purchase price. In view of the uniformity of the decisions on this point, it seems hardly necessary to devote any time to a consideration of the authorities. As was said in Fitzell v. Leaky, supra: 'The lien which the vendor of real property retains after an actual conveyance, for the unpaid purchase money, is not a specific and absolute charge upon the land, but a mere equitable right to resort to it upon failure of payment by the vendee. It is in its nature a personal privilege, unassignable, which the vendor can assert only in a suit brought for the purpose of having it decreed and enforced.' See, also, Fitzell v. Leaky, 72 Cal. 477-484, 14 Pac. 198; Civ. Code, §§ 3046, 3047; Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 24 Pac. 608, and 26 Pac. 789; Clairborne v. Castle, 98 Cal. 30, 32 Pac. 807; Avery v. Clark, 87 Cal. 619, 25 Pac. 919. In such a case the fee is in the purchaser, and he may defeat the lien by a conveyance to a bona fide purchaser for value. On the other hand, where the legal title is retained by the vendor under an unexecuted contract for the conveyance of the same upon the payment of the purchase price, the vendee has acquired only an equitable estate in the land. He has acquired the right to have the legal title conveyed to him upon the performance of his part of the agreement. Professor Pomeroy says, in his Equity Jurisprudence (section 1260): 'To call this complete legal title [of the vendor] a "lien" is certainly a misnomer. In case of a conveyance the grantor has a lien, but no title. In case of a contract for sale before conveyance, the vendor has the legal title, and has no need of any lien. His title is a more efficient security, since the vendee cannot defeat it by any act or transfer even to or with a bona fide purchaser.' And in section 1261 he says that 'so far as it [the so-called "lien"] has any distinctive signification, it simply means his right of enforcing his claim for the purchase money against or out of the vendee's equitable estate by means of a suit in equity.' In Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 26 Pac. 789, our supreme court, in speaking of such a contract, say: 'The vendee cannot prejudice that title, or in any way divest it, except by performance of the act for which the vendor holds it. The vendor's security is something stronger than a mortgage, because the legal title is retained as security. It has been called an imperfect or equitable mortgage, which is a more appropriate term than vendor's lien. The land is, by express contract, held in pledge for such payment.' Such an interest is assignable, and the assignee of notes given for the purchase money is entitled to the benefit of the security. Gessner v. Palmateer, supra; Avery v. Clark, supra; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1202; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 190.

'The question presented by this case, as to whether, in a case where the vendor holds the legal title, a proceeding at law for the purchase price is a waiver of the vendor's right to proceed against the property, has not, so far as I have been able to find, ever been passed upon by our supreme court, but it is a question upon which authority from other states is not wanting. The sum of the decisions upon the question is that the vendor may sue at law on the debt or in equity to enforce the contract, or he may pursue both remedies concurrently; that the right to pursue the property is not waived by taking independent security, or by other acts which would operate as a waiver of the implied lien; and that, so long as he retains the title, the vendor clearly manifests an intention to rely upon it as security for his debt, and equity will not compel him to part with his title until his debt has been paid; and that the institution of proceedings at law for the purchase price, whether evidenced by notes or not, and the recovery of judgment, and the issuance of execution thereon, do not affect the right of the vendor to satisfy his claim for the purchase price out of the property except so far as such judgment may have been satisfied. See Jones, Liens, §§ 1116, 1126; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 190, 195, 197; Graves v. Coutant, 31 N. J. Eq. 763; Dickason v. Eby, 73 Mo. 133; Bank v. Bradley, 15 Lea, 279; Micou v. Ashurst, 55 Ala. 607. * * * Several decisions of the supreme court of this state, wherein it is held that an action brought on the note alone, where the note is secured by mortgage, is a waiver of the mortgage security, are relied upon by counsel for defendants as being applicable to the case at bar; but it must be remembered that in this state there is a statute regarding the procedure in case of debts secured by mortgage. * * *

'But it cannot be held that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee existed between Coulter and Longmaid. If there had been a conveyance, and a lien for the purchase price expressly reserved in the deed, the case would have perhaps presented a different aspect. There is some conflict in the opinions of writers and courts as to the exact nature of the relationship existing between the vendor and vendee in a case such as this. It has been said that the relation bears a strong similitude to that of mortgagor and mortgagee, but, as must clearly appear, there are many points of difference. In the case of Samuel v. Allen, 98 Cal. 406, 33 Pac. 273, the question was squarely passed upon by the supreme court. That was an action at law to recover money due on a contract for the sale of land. It was contended that the action should be for specific performance or foreclosure of lien, inasmuch as plaintiff, by his contract, retained the title to the land. This contention must have been sustained if the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee existed, under section 726, Code Civ. Proc., and the decisions in Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 154, 23 Pac. 1086, and Powell v. Patison, 100 Cal. 236, 34 Pac. 677. But the court, through Mr. Justice Temple, said: '* * * It is true that in some sense the vendor has a lien on the land for the portion of the purchase money which remains unpaid, and that it has been held that, until a conveyance has been made, the lien constitutes such security as will prevent the creditor from suing out an attachment. Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 26 Pac. 789. It has also been uniformly held that such contract does not establish the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee. There is therefore no statutory prohibition upon the right to a personal action to enforce the debt when it becomes due.' In Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 26 Pac. 789, a similar case, the court said, speaking of the vendor's interest: 'The vendor's security is something stronger than a mortgage, because the legal title is retained as security.' The case of Dingley v. Bank, 57 Cal. 467, where the court said it is really a mortgage, and governed by the same rules, was a case where a conveyance had been executed, the deed reserving a lien to the vendor for the unpaid portion of the purchase price.

"In the case at bar the vendor had something more than a lien upon the property; he had the complete legal title thereto,—something that the mortgagee never has. It is true that he held it as the trustee of the vendee, but he could not be compelled to convey it except upon full payment by the vendee of the purchase price. None of the decisions cited by counsel for defendants are applicable to such a case. The plaintiff, retaining the legal title, has shown no intention of waiving the security afforded thereby. The fact that he, through his agent, prosecuted to judgment an action on the note, without asking for a sale of the land to satisfy his claim, does not show an intention on his part to abandon the security afforded by the legal title before the payment of the purchase price, any more than would the taking of independent security or other acts which would operate as a waiver of the ordinary vendor's lien show such intention. See Kent v. Williams (Cal.) 46 Pac. 462. So long as he holds the legal title, he cannot be said to have shown an intention of waiving the right given him by the contract, under which he holds such title, to hold the same until the payment of the purchase price. Here the plaintiff has not parted with the legal title, and cannot be compelled to so do until payment of the purchase price. According to the decisions heretofore cited, if the homestead declaration had not been filed, and the interest of the defendant had been sold under the execution, the purchaser would have acquired only the defendant's interest in the property, namely, the right to pay up and obtain a conveyance, and the plaintiff would still have retained the legal title until full payment of the purchase price. The fact that a judgment has been obtained certainly has not extinguished the indebtedness. At most, it has been changed only in form.

"It would therefore seem that, in the absence of statutory prohibition, the plaintiff ought to be permitted to proceed against the land held by him in trust as security, unless there be something in his acts that would operate as an estoppel. But I do not see how, under the circumstances of this case, the doctrine of estoppel can have any application. The proceeding on the note, so far as I can see, has not operated to the injury of the vendee in any way, except perhaps so far as the costs of this action are concerned; and, inasmuch as plaintiff could have obtained full relief in one action, I do not consider that he should recover his costs herein. The most serious objection in my mind to the maintenance of this action is that under our system of practice two suits were unnecessary, and the plaintiff could have obtained all the relief to which he was entitled in one action. But in absence of express prohibition of such second action in a case of this character, and in view of the fact that no injury can possibly be occasioned defendant thereby beyond the costs of this action, which can be remedied here, I am not inclined to hold plaintiff to be without remedy. Of course, plaintiff will never be allowed to collect more than is due him, if he recovers here. If, under decree rendered in this action, the property is sold, defendant will be entitled to have the amount realized applied in satisfaction of the former judgment. Defendant cannot be compelled to pay the debt more than once.

"There was nothing in the plaintiff's complaint in the action on the note to justify defendant in the conclusion that he could not interpose his contract as a defense, if a defense was afforded thereby, nor to estop plaintiff from this proceeding. Counsel for defendants seeks to attribute altogether too limited a definition to the word 'indorsed,' used in such complaint. Civ. Code, § 3108. Counsel for defendants proposes to see in the indorsement, and the bringing of the action on the note, an attempt to defraud defendant William A. Coulter, and deprive him of all opportunity to make such defenses as he might have under the contract. I can see no evidence of any such intent on the part of plaintiff. To me all the equities appear to be on plaintiff's side, and the only conclusion possible from the uncontradicted facts is that the defendants are endeavoring to procure title to plaintiff's lot without paying therefor, and that the bringing of the action on the note was most gladly welcomed, as offering an opportunity for a technical defense to a claim against which no defense on the merits existed. But it does seem to me that under all the circumstances of this case, looking to the substance, and not the mere form, of the transaction, this defense will not aid defendants.

"There is no great difficulty as to any of the other questions involved. So far as the declaration of homestead by the defendant wife is concerned, it cannot, of course, be declared void as having been made in fraud of creditors. But no such decree is necessary to protect the plaintiff's rights. While the equitable estate in the land held by the vendee was subject to be impressed with the lien of a homestead as fully as an estate in fee, the declaration of homestead was subordinate to the right and claim of the vendor who held the legal title (Alexander v. Jackson, 92 Cal. 514, 28 Pac. 593), and could not prevent the vendor from enforcing his claim against the land. This, admittedly, would have been so if it had not been for the suit on the note and the judgment thereon; but, in view of what has already been said on that point, the condition of affairs has not been altered thereby.

"There can be no question as to the right of the plaintiff to maintain this action, notwithstanding the indorsement of the note to Bishop for collection. While the indorsement made Bishop the proper party to maintain the action, the assignment of the judgment by Bishop to plaintiff, on the day of the recovery thereof, was a sufficient reassignment to make plaintiff the only party who could maintain this action. Such reassignment again invested him with the legal title to the indebtedness.

"It is contended that the verbal agreement that defendant should pay all the taxes and assessments that might become due and payable upon the land is in violation of the provisions of section 5, art. 13, of the constitution, which make any contract by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust or other lien, null and void as to any interest specified therein, and also as to any assessment. Substantially similar language in a mortgage was considered in the case of Marye v. Hart, 76 Cal. 291, 18 Pac. 325, and held not to be violative of the provision invoked. But I do not think that plaintiff is in this action entitled to recover the amounts paid by him as taxes. Under the allegations of the complaint, the plaintiff would be compelled to convey the legal title upon the payment to him of the purchase price with interest, regardless of the amounts paid by him for taxes.

"As to the relief that should be granted: Defendant William A. Coulter not having answered, such relief cannot exceed that demanded in the complaint. Plaintiff's demand is for interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum. Plaintiff is entitled to be paid, under the terms of his contract, the sum of fourteen hundred dollars, with interest thereon from November 5, 1890, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, less the payments made, amounting to sixty-five dollars. A decree should be entered directing the payment of this amount, and further directing that, in the event that such amount be not paid within sixty days after the entry of judgment, the property be sold, and the proceeds applied—First, to the payment of the costs of sale, and; second, to the payment of the amount due plaintiff, as aforesaid. Plaintiff is not entitled to judgment for any deficiency, and he should pay his own costs."

We are entirely satisfied with the law as herein declared, and adopt the foregoing opinion as the opinion of the court. Judgment and order affirmed.

MEGGINSON v. TURNER. (S. F. 808.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1898.)

APPEAL—ACTION ON NOTE—DEFENSES—ACCOUNTING.

1. A finding on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed.

2. Where defendant in an action on notes alleges the conveyance to plaintiff of property as security, and asks for an accounting, it is not error to render judgment dismissing the cross complaint, where the evidence shows that plaintiff holds the property, not as security, but as a naked trustee, and is ready to surrender the same.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Lawrence Megginson against J. F. Turner. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. Gunzendorfer (Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, of counsel), for appellant. S. C. Denson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover the amount due on certain promissory notes. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals.

Defendant, in his answer, by way of cross complaint claimed that he had conveyed to plaintiff certain real and personal property as security for these notes, and asked for an accounting, and that he be allowed to redeem. He does not allege that plaintiff has sold any of this property, or converted it. Plaintiff denied that he held any of defendant's property as security, and averred that whatever title he held was as trustee and in trust for defendant, which he stood ready to reconvey. The court found the due execution of the notes by defendant, and the amount due thereon, as to which the evidence is sufficient to justify the finding. It also found that the notes were not secured by any of the real or personal property conveyed by defendant to plaintiff as claimed by defendant, "but such properties as were conveyed to plaintiff were transferred to and held by him as trustee for the defendant." In its judgment the court dismissed defendant's cross complaint.

Appellant contends that the court should have found as to the value of the properties conveyed to plaintiff by defendant, and should have adjusted the rights of the parties as to all the matters put in issue. The evidence as to the character in which plaintiff held the title to the property of defendant was conflicting. There was evidence tending to show that plaintiff did not hold the title as security for the debt, and the finding upon that issue cannot be disturbed. When the court found that plaintiff held none of defendant's property as security for the debt, it became immaterial, under the pleadings, for the court to find the value of this property. There was no occasion for an accounting, as defendant did not allege or claim that plaintiff had disposed of any of the property or converted any of it to his own use or benefit. There was no right of redemption involved, because the court found, upon sufficient evidence, that the property was not held as security. The case simply stated is this: Defendant owes plaintiff money on certain promissory notes. Plaintiff holds certain property belonging to defendant, not as security, but as a naked trustee, which he avows a willingness to surrender to defendant. We cannot see that the court could have done otherwise than to give plaintiff judgment, and dismiss defendant's cross complaint, leaving defendant to such remedy as he may elect to pursue should plaintiff refuse to surrender defendant's property. Neither the pleadings nor the facts warranted any other judgment than that rendered. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

POWER v. MAY, County Treasurer. (Sac. 355.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1898.)

COUNTIES—HOSPITAL FUND—SUPERVISORS—CONTRACTS FOR ATTORNEYS' SERVICES—MANDAMUS—COSTS.

1. St. 1855, p. 67, prohibiting an appropriation of the hospital fund for any purpose other than the care and protection of the indigent sick, refers to the fund raised by taxation by the county, and does not apply to the hospital fund coming from the state under Const. art. 4, § 22. St. 1880, p. 13, and St. 1883, p. 380.

2. Where an attorney had been employed by a county to collect a hospital fund due from the state, he to receive a certain per cent. of the fund as compensation, the county treasurer, on receipt of the fund, should credit the entire amount to the hospital fund and thereafter pay therefrom the amount due to the attorney.

3. A person who has performed important services for a county under the direction of the majority of the supervisors, who approved his claim for the services, is entitled to compensation, though no formal resolution to employ him was spread on the supervisors' minutes.

4. Code Civ. Proc. § 1095, providing that an applicant for mandamus may recover costs, applies where defendants are public officers, though such officers are not required to file undertakings on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by Maurice E. Power against E. A. May, as treasurer of Tulare county. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. B. Howard, for appellant. Lamberson & Middlecoff, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to compel defendant, as treasurer of Tulare county to pay to plaintiff out of the hospital fund of said county $588.94, the amount of a warrant, for commissions on money collected by plaintiff from the state for the care of aged and indigent persons and orphans and half-orphans. The court directed the writ of mandate to issue as prayed for, with costs. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying motion for a new trial. It appears from the findings that the board of supervisors made a contract in December, 1894, with one John Broder, while he was the qualified clerk of the board, to collect the money due from the state on account of indigents supported by the county. Plaintiff knew nothing of this contract until in March, 1895, at which time Broder informed plaintiff that he (Broder) could not perform the service, as it required a lawyer, of which profession plaintiff was a member. Plaintiff thereupon applied to the board for permission to perform these services on the terms stated in Broder's contract and for the compensation agreed to be paid him, and a majority of said board informed plaintiff that he might do the work on these terms. Acting upon the statement of the majority of the board, plaintiff prepared and presented to the state board of examiners the claim of said county, which aggregated a sum in excess of $4,000, and was allowed for $3,925.25, and afterwards paid to the county and placed to the credit of the hospital fund. Plaintiff presented his claim for said services to the board of supervisors in due form, and on July 1, 1895, it was allowed and "ordered to be paid, to the amount of five hundred and eighty-eight dollars and ninety-four cents, out of the hospital fund of said county" (being 15 per cent. of the collection). The claim as presented contained the statement, "As per contract with John Broder, made by order of board of supervisors on the 8th day of December, 1894, five hundred and eighty-eight dollars and ninety-four cents;" but these words "were inserted in said claim by plaintiff solely and entirely for the purpose of referring to said contract for the purpose of determining the rate of compensation which he was to receive for the collection of said money, * * * and were not inserted therein for the purpose of claiming any commissions or compensation of any kind whatever under or by virtue of said contract or resolution of the board of supervisors of December 8, 1896." Broder was not asked to and never did assign this contract to plaintiff, but plaintiff asked Broder to make a release of said order of employment to avoid his making any claim, and that plaintiff never agreed to pay Broder any portion of the sum received by plaintiff for such services. The auditor of the county duly issued his warrant to plaintiff for the said amount, which plaintiff duly presented to the treasurer for payment, which was refused. At the time there was "sufficient money in the hospital fund of said county properly applicable to the payment thereof to pay the said sum of five hundred and eighty-eight dollars and ninety-four cents, after paying all other sums legally chargeable against said fund."

1. This case was here on a former appeal from a judgment on the pleadings, and is reported in 114 Cal. 207, 46 Pac. 6. It was then held, on the authority of Lassen Co. v. Shinn, 88 Cal. 510, 26 Pac. 365, in a similar case, that the board of supervisors had the power to make such a contract as is here in question. Appellant renews the objection to the legality of the claim, placing it upon the ground that the hospital fund "cannot be subjected to the payment of claims for ministerial services rendered upon contracts for the collection of debts due the county." In Lassen Co. v. Shinn, supra, the contract provided for the payment of the commissions out of the fund collected. Whether this collected fund was placed to the credit of the hospital fund of the county before the commissions were paid does not appear. It does appear that the money collected was paid to the county treasurer, and that the commissions were paid by a warrant drawn on that officer. It was the duty of the treasurer to place this money to the credit of the fund to which it belonged (the hospital fund), and to pay the warrant out of that fund, and the fact found is that he did so. We see no reason why he could not pay the warrant for the commissions out of the money collected as well after it was placed to the credit of the hospital fund as before it reached that fund; indeed, it would have been improper to have paid the commissions out of the money collected, and then to have placed only the balance to the credit of the hospital fund. Appellant cites section 8 of the act of April 11, 1855 (St. 1855, p. 67), which, as to this hospital fund, provides that it is to "be used for the care and protection of the indigent sick, and shall be appropriated for no other object." Respondent claims that this act was repealed by section 25 of the county government act of 1893. We think the provisions of section 8, Act 1855, are superseded by section 25 of the county government act. But, if this be not so, we do not think section 8 applies to the fund here in question, which comes to the county by operation of section 22, art. 4, of the constitution, the act of March 25, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 13), and the act of March 15, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 380); whereas the fund referred to in the act of 1855 is raised by taxation by the county. Appellant claims that the powers of boards of supervisors to employ counsel have been greatly restricted by the decision in Merriam v. Barnum, 116 Cal. 619, 48 Pac. 727. In that case the former decisions were re-examined and distinguished; and, while it was there said that the language used in Lassen Co. v. Shinn, supra, is somewhat broader than the authorities cited in support of it would justify, the law as announced in that case was not doubted or overruled.

2. Appellant claims that the evidence does not sustain the findings. The answer alleges a collusive agreement between Broder, while he was clerk of the board, and plaintiff, who was then district attorney of the county, to obtain the Broder contract and divide the compensation. Broder and plaintiff both went out of office on the first Monday of January, 1895. This defense was held to be a good one in the former appeal, if proven. The question, then, is, does the evidence sustain the finding that plaintiff claims under a different agreement, and one made when plaintiff was not in office? The finding is that the contract was made with plaintiff alone, and that Broder had no interest in it and was not promised any part of the compensation by plaintiff. The finding is also against any collusive understanding between them when the Broder contract was made, or at any time while they were in office. We think the evidence sufficient to sustain these findings. But, if this be conceded, appellant contends that there was no lawful contract made with the board by plaintiff, because no resolution was passed by the board authorizing plaintiff to perform the service. The evidence tends to show that plaintiff represented to the different members of the board that Broder could not perform his contract and was willing that plaintiff should do the work for the board, and plaintiff offered to do it upon the same terms as were stipulated in the Broder contract. There was no resolution of authority passed by the board, but the members told plaintiff to go ahead and make the collection and he would be paid at the rate agreed upon with Broder. Plaintiff did the work, collected the money, and turned it over to the county, and presented his bill for services to the board. In the bill reference was made to the Broder contract, but the evidence tends to show, and the court found, that this reference was made to fix the amount of compensation, and not to show that he claimed under the Broder contract. We think the evidence justifies the view of the matter taken by the learned judge who tried the case. It is true that there was no previous formal resolution of the board authorizing plaintiff to perform the service. There was an understanding to that effect, which for some unexplained reason was not entered upon the minutes of the board. While in all matters of such importance we think the board should act formally, by resolution spread upon the minutes, still, as they had the power to act, and the services were performed, and the board did in fact subsequently approve the bill for the services and order it paid, we know of no reason why the subsequent ratification and order of payment should not be treated as equivalent to previous authority regularly given.

3. It is claimed that the judgment against defendants for costs was error. Appellant cites several California cases where, the defendants being public officers, it was held that undertakings are dispensed with on appeal. Such was the case of Lamberson v. Jeffers, 116 Cal. 492, 48 Pac. 485. But it was there said, "Dispensing with the undertaking does not necessarily imply that a personal judgment for costs or damages may not be rendered." Section 1095, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the applicant for mandamus may recover "the damages which he has sustained, * * * together with costs." Section 1022, Id., provides as follows: "Costs are allowed, of course, to the plaintiff, upon a judgment in his favor, in the following cases: * * * 4. In a special proceeding." These provisions of the Code we think are applicable to this case. Appellant cites McDougal v. Roman, 2 Cal. 80, where the defendant in mandamus was state treasurer, and the lower court awarded a peremptory mandamus and gave judgment against him for costs. This court affirmed the award for the writ, but reversed the judgment for costs. The ground for this reversal is not stated. It could not have been because costs could not be awarded to plaintiff, for the provisions of the Practice Act (section 477) were the same as the Code (section 1095, supra); and the court affirmed the judgment for the writ, with costs, i. e. the costs of the appeal, as we assume. The case is meagerly reported, and cannot, we think, be taken as authority to support appellant in his contention that costs cannot be awarded in a mandamus proceeding such as this. In Tuolumne Co. v. Stanislaus Co., 6 Cal. 440, which was mandamus, appellant was taxed with costs by this court. Mr. Merrill in his work on Mandamus (section 310) says that costs are awarded, or divided, or refused, as under the circumstances seems proper to the court; and that it has been considered to be such a matter of course to grant costs to the party ultimately succeeding that very strong grounds will be required to induce the court to depart from the general rule. In U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, which was mandamus to compel defendant, as secretary of the interior, to issue a patent, he was charged with costs upon a motion specially directed to that question. See note to the case (page 407), where Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court, in which he said that a careful examination of the authorities "leaves us no option but to follow the rule that the prevailing party shall recover of the unsuccessful one the legal costs which he has expended in obtaining his rights." See 5 Enc. Pl. &

Prac. pp. 151, 152. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

TILLEY v. BONNEY et al. (Sac. 433.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1898.)
ACTION TO QUIET TITLE—JUDGMENTS—PRIORITY—TENDER—REDEMPTION—DECREE.

1. Where property was sold under a judgment, the amount of which was subsequently reduced on appeal, such modification does not affect the certificate of sale, nor require the judgment creditor to again sell the property under the judgment as modified.

2. Where a prior judgment creditor was not entitled to a lien on property sold to the whole amount of his judgment, a subsequent judgment creditor must tender the amount for which the prior judgment was a lien before the expiration of the period of redemption, in order to preserve his rights in the property sold.

3. Where a judgment creditor sued to have a prior judgment declared subsequent to his, but did not ask to have a certificate of sale under such judgment set aside, and did not tender to such judgment creditor the amount for which the judgment was ultimately held to be a prior lien, he cannot acquire a right to the property sold thereunder by tendering such amount after the redemption period has expired.

4. In an action to quiet title to land sold under various judgments, some of which had been partly satisfied from other property, a decree determining the relative interests of the judgment creditors, which did not show the value of such other property nor the amount for which it sold, is erroneous.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Action by Edwin Tilley against John Bonney and another. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

P. F. Simonds and Thos. S. Ford, for appellant. J. M. Walling, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to quiet title. The court gave judgment that of the property in controversy plaintiff is the owner of 1027½-1619, and defendants of 591¼-1619, undivided. Plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll from that part of the judgment awarding an interest to defendants, and quieting defendants' title thereto. The findings set forth the sources of title of plaintiff and defendants as follows: In May, 1893, one Gray and others brought an action to foreclose a vendor's lien for $1,300 on the property in question against one Conly and the Midnight Gold & Silver Mining Company, a corporation, the latter being the owner of the property. Pending the action, Tilley (present plaintiff), who was a director of the corporation, in good faith, bought the claim for $775, and continued the action in the name of Gray and others, and on September 18, 1893, obtained judgment for $1,519.90, foreclosing the lien. An order of sale was issued September 27, 1893, and on October 19, 1893, the sheriff sold the whole of the premises for $1,619, being the full amount due, and this plaintiff became the purchaser. The property sold included all the property described in the complaint, known as the "Wisconsin Quartz Mine," but said property constituted only a part of the property of said corporation. No redemption was made, and after six months from the delivery of the certificate of sale the sheriff delivered a deed to plaintiff, which was duly recorded. Plaintiff claims title under this deed. Reference will be made to this as the Tilley-Gray judgment. On March 16, 1893, plaintiff purchased from said Conly a promissory note executed by the corporation for the sum of $14,188.80, paying Conly therefor $1,000. Plaintiff was then a stockholder and director in the corporation. May 13, 1893, plaintiff brought suit on the note against the corporation, and obtained judgment, May 24, 1893, for $14,363.79; and on October 20, 1893, the sheriff sold all the interest of the corporation in the property, the subject of this action, as well as certain other real property, and issued his certificate of sale therefor; and on September 24, 1896, delivered to plaintiff a sheriff's deed to all said property. This will be referred to as the Tilley-Conly judgment. On November 24, 1893, defendant Bonney obtained a judgment against the corporation for $1,194.30, which was that day duly entered in the records of said court, and remaining wholly unpaid. On February 20, 1896, Bonney caused execution to issue thereon, and on December 18, 1895, caused all of the real property of the corporation to be sold, including that in question, and Bonney became the purchaser for the amount of his judgment, which was fully satisfied upon the records of the court. No redemption being made, a deed was issued on July 11, 1896, to Bonney, which was duly recorded. This will be referred to as Bonney judgment No. 1. From the findings it appears that the execution issued after the sale. It is probable the execution issued December 18, 1895, and the sale was February 20, 1896, which was the fact as to the Bonney judgment No. 2, infra. On November 24, 1893, Bonney obtained another judgment against said corporation for the sum of $1,144.80, on which execution issued December 18, 1895, followed by sheriff's sale of all the property of said corporation, including that in question, and Bonney became the purchaser and took certificate of sale. No redemption being made, the sheriff made a deed to Bonney July 11, 1896, which was duly recorded, and the execution was returned fully satisfied, as was the judgment also satisfied. This will be referred to as Bonney judgment No. 2. On September 22, 1896, Bonney conveyed an undivided half interest in said premises to defendant Cox. On January 26, 1894, Bonney brought an action against plaintiff in this action, alleging that both of the Tilley judgments were fraudulent, and praying that the Bonney judgments be declared superior to Tilley's. At the trial Bonney had judgment April 13, 1894, adjudging that, as against the property now in question, the Tilley-Gray judgment "was only a valid lien for the sum of seven hundred and seventy-five dollars, with interest at seven per cent. from September 18, 1893, and as to that amount it was a prior lien, upon the property described in the complaint herein, to the judgments of Bonney (No. 1 and No. 2) hereinbefore referred to, and that as to the remainder of said judgment, over and above seven hundred and seventy-five dollars and interest, the said judgment of April 13, 1894, was silent." It was further decreed that "the judgment dated May 24, 1893, in the case of Tilley vs. Said Corporation (the Tilley-Conly judgment), was valid, and that Tilley was entitled to have his judgment on the Conly note enforced against the property of the corporation on an equality with said Bonney." The findings then show that Bonney appealed to this court from that judgment, and it was here adjudged that the Tilley-Conly judgment "could only be enforced against the property of the corporation on an equality with Bonney for the amount of one thousand dollars, interest and costs, being the amount which Tilley paid for the note, and in other respects the said judgment of April 13, 1894, in Bonney vs. Tilley, was affirmed, but it was ordered modified in the manner stated." There is nothing to show that the certificate of sale to Tilley, under which he now claims, was set aside in that judgment. On February 8, 1896, "for the purpose and with the intent of redeeming from said plaintiff the property in said complaint described herein from the lien of the judgment in the case of Gray et al. vs. Said Corporation (Tilley-Gray judgment), Bonney tendered to plaintiff, in writing, the sum of nine hundred and ten dollars gold coin, being the full amount then claimed by him (Bonney) to be due upon the judgment of September 18, 1893 (the Tilley-Gray judgment), for principal and interest at said date, but the plaintiff refused, and still refuses, to accept the same. More than six months had elapsed after the sale of October 19, 1893 (in fact two years and six months), and prior to the time of tender, before said offer was made, and the said person so claiming to redeem did not produce, nor serve with his notice, any copy of the docket of the judgment under which he claimed the right to redeem, or any affidavit showing the amount then actually due on the lien." Defendants in their answer allege that the sales under the Tilley-Conly judgment of May 24, 1893, and the Tilley-Gray judgment of September 18, 1893, were and are invalid, because they were subsequently modified by decree of this court on appeal; and defendants pray that these judgments be vacated, and that all certificates of sale and deeds executed by virtue of such judgments be canceled and declared invalid. There were no findings or decree relative to these allegations. The conclusions of law found relate only to the proportion, as first above stated, to which each party is entitled to the property in question, and the decree merely quiets the title of each in the proportion named.

Appellant disclaims all knowledge as to how the trial judge arrived at the denominator, to wit, 1,619, or as to the source whence the two numerators were derived. Respondents do not undertake to enlighten us upon that question. The denominator corresponds in amount with the bid by plaintiff at the sale under the Tilley-Gray judgment. We are unable to discover the source of the two numerators. The denominator apparently represents the entire property in dispute, and the two numerators the respective interests of plaintiff and defendants therein, but we are unable to discover from the findings how these numerators were ascertained, or why the denominator was taken to be 1,619.

Plaintiff, as we have seen, claims under the sale of the property upon the Tilley-Gray judgment of September 18, 1893. This sale was made October 19, 1893, and the sheriff issued his certificate of sale. There was no redemption, and after six months the sheriff made his deed to Tilley. Bonney brought his action January 26, 1894, to have this Tilley-Gray judgment and the Tilley-Conly judgment declared void, and his (Bonney's) superior thereto. This action was brought within the six-months period of redemption, but without any offer to redeem, and resulted in a judgment given April 13, 1894, that the Tilley-Gray judgment was a valid prior lien for the sum of $775, with interest, upon the property described, but the judgment was silent as to the balance of the Tilley-Gray judgment. At this time there was outstanding a certificate of sale, on which the time for redemption had not elapsed, showing that Tilley had purchased the property for $1,619, being the full amount of the Tilley-Gray judgment, with interest and costs. Bonney appealed to this court, and on October 4, 1895, the decision of the court was filed. Bonney v. Tilley, 109 Cal. 346, 42 Pac. 439.

The point was raised in Bonney v. Tilley, supra, at the argument here, that a vendor's lien is not assignable, and therefore Tilley's right to the vendor's lien which was held by Gray and others was destroyed by the assignment to Tilley. Upon the question this court did not distinctly decide that the vendor's lien was lost by assignment, but the court said: "If, therefore, that part of the judgment foreclosing the vendor's lien were eliminated, there would still be left a valid judgment which was a lien on all the real property of the corporation, and was prior and superior to the lien of plaintiff's judgments." All that we can find decided by this court, as to the Tilley-Gray judgment, was that it became a prior lien for the sum of $775, whether there was a vendor's lien or not, and this was an affirmation of the judgment below so far as the Tilley-Gray judgment was concerned. The effect, we think, was to leave in the hands of Tilley a certificate of sale of the premises in question which could not be avoided by statutory redemption, because the time for redemption had expired. Respondents urge that the effect of the judgment here on appeal was to set aside the certificate of sale, and leave Tilley with a judgment lien for $775, on which he would have to take out execution and sell again, and that the first sale under the judgment foreclosing the vendor's lien became ineffectual for any purpose. We cannot agree with this view of the matter. Tilley had a valid judgment for $775, which became a valid lien on the property when docketed, and it is immaterial whether it be called a vendor's lien or a judgment lien. When Bonney brought his action he did not ask to have Tilley's certificate of sale set aside. He asked to have his judgment declared to be superior to Tilley's, but made no offer to redeem, pending his action and the appeal. Failing to redeem, his right of redemption was cut off by the running of the statute. Respondents ask: "Was Bonney required to redeem from an erroneous judgment, and pay Tilley double the amount to which he was entitled?" He was not required to pay the full amount of the judgment, as the case turned out, but, to protect himself against a possible failure in his suit, Bonney was required to offer to redeem by paying the amount which was in fact found to be a valid lien. He did not do this, but relied upon defeating the entire judgment, in which he failed; and we do not know of any statute allowing him to redeem now, nor can we see upon what principle of equity he should be permitted to do so. Indeed, he admits that his tender now made is not under any statute, but claims that he "took this method of paying off the prior lien of the Gray judgment, as modified by the supreme court, thus rendering it unnecessary for Tilley to enforce his prior lien by sale of the premises"; and he adds: "This we had the right to do, as we were creditors holding judgment liens against the property." This is a mistaken view of Bonney's rights, as we have seen, for Tilley was not required to take out execution, and again sell the property, in order to enforce his prior lien. He had sold under an order of sale upon a valid judgment, which was not reversed, and that sale gave him title, which could only be defeated by redemption. It is true Tilley bid $1,619 for the property, and presumably it was of that value; and hence it may be said that he holds under his certificate of sale property worth $844 in excess of his prior lien of $775. Still, Bonney could then have redeemed, had he so desired, by paying Tilley this latter amount, and, not having done so, we cannot see that he should now be heard to complain because Tilley has in effect obtained title by his purchase for less than the value of the property. Besides, Tilley satisfied his judgment for the full amount of $1,619.

We find nothing in Southern California Lumber Co. v. Ocean Beach Hotel Co., 94

Cal. 217, 29 Pac. 627, cited by respondents, in conflict with this view of the sale. The sheriff proceeded regularly, as the findings show, under an order of sale, to enforce the Tilley-Gray judgment. The purpose was to enforce a valid prior lien. The function of the order was to subject the property in question to sale to pay the judgment, and it was equally efficacious to accomplish that object whether the judgment gave a vendor's lien or a general lien prior to Bonney's. To hold that Tilley's certificate of sale was vacated on the assumption that he did not have a vendor's lien, but did have a prior judgment lien, would result in just what seems to have happened here, namely, to place all the judgments of both Tilley and Bonney on an equality, and take from Tilley his right of priority of lien on the property purchased by him, to which this court held he was entitled.

There is another feature of the case deserving attention. Besides the Tilley-Gray judgment, there were three others,—one, the Tilley-Conly judgment, for $1,000, in favor of Tilley; and two in favor of Bonney, one for $1,194.30, and one for $1,144.80. As to these, they were held to be of equal rank between themselves upon all the assets of the corporation. Both Tilley and Bonney obtained certificates of sale under these judgments of all the property of the corporation, including the property in question. There were three separate mining claims purchased at these sales besides the premises in question. There are no findings as to the value of this outside property, or what proportion of each of the judgments was paid by it. Bonney bid the full amount of his judgments, and the executions were returned and the judgments fully satisfied. There must have been some value in the property other than the premises in question. Even if the property involved here could be sold to pay these judgments, there should have been findings as to the value of the different pieces of real estate, or, at least, of the amounts for which they were sold, before the proportion to which each party is entitled in the property in question could be ascertained, and before it could be seen that Tilley's prior lien of $775 was preserved. We are unable to determine from the facts found upon what theory the learned trial judge deduced his fractions, either as to the numerators or the denominator. It is quite clear, however, that he treated the Tilley-Gray judgment sale as ineffectual to convey title to Tilley; but the process by which the equities of the parties under the several judgments were worked out we are unable to discover. Whatever the process, the conclusion was erroneous, because it apparently dealt with property to which Tilley had title under the Tilley-Gray judgment, to redeem which Bonney had lost all right. That part of the judgment appealed from should be reversed; and, as plaintiff from the findings appears to be entitled to the relief prayed for, the lower court should be directed to enter judgment quieting plaintiff's title to the whole of the property involved in this action.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion that part of the judgment appealed from is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment quieting plaintiff's title to the whole of the property.

BONNEY et al. v. TILLEY. (Sac. 481.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1898.)

JUDGMENTS—MODIFICATION—CERTIFICATE OF SALE —MOTION TO VACATE—SUPREME COURT
—POWERS—STIPULATION.

1. Where, in an action to determine the priority of certain judgments, one of them, which was never appealed from, was modified, a subsequent judgment creditor cannot have such judgment set aside, nor a certificate of sale of property thereunder vacated, on motion; especially where he did not offer to redeem, by payment of the amount for which the judgment was a lien, within the statutory period, and did not move until 15 months after the modified judgment was entered.

2. The supreme court cannot use the facts in two cases between the same parties interchangeably, in the absence of a stipulation authorizing it.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Motion by Catherine Bonney, administratrix, etc., and another, against Edwin Tilley, to set aside certain certificates of sale under judgments subsequently modified. From an order denying a motion, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. M. Walling, for appellants. P. F. Simonds and Thos. S. Ford, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from an order in the above-entitled action denying plaintiffs' motion to set aside certain certificates of sales and deeds executed to defendant in certain other actions, on the ground that the judgments therein have been modified by this court. This case was here on a former appeal, and is reported in 109 Cal. 346, 42 Pac. 439. The facts out of which the controversy originally arose are somewhat lengthy, and not a little complicated. They will be found stated in that case, and in a case entitled Tilley v. Bonney, Sacramento No. 433, opinion in which was this day filed (55 Pac. 798). To recapitulate briefly, this case of Bonney v. Tilley was an action to have the lien of certain two judgments obtained by Bonney against the Midnight Gold & Silver Mining Company declared superior to the lien of certain two judgments of Tilley against the same company, to wit, "Tilley vs. Midnight Gold & Silver Min. Co.," and "Gray et al. vs. Midnight Gold & Silver Min. Co." One of Tilley's judgments, to wit, the Gray judgment, was held to be a prior lien to the extent of $775 on a certain parcel of the company's mining property; and, as to the other judgments of both Bonney and Tilley, they were of equal priority. On the first appeal of this case, the judgment of the lower court was affirmed as to Tilley's prior lien, in the Gray judgment, for $775; and the court reduced the lien of his judgment in the other case to $1,000, and directed the judgment in Bonney against Tilley to be modified accordingly. The judgment was entered as modified November 30, 1895. Tilley held a sheriff's deed under an order of sale in the Gray judgment, executed about April 19, 1894, and before this modified judgment was entered, and he also had a deed delivered to him by the sheriff September 24, 1896, on his other judgment. On February 26, 1897, plaintiffs gave notice of the motion in this present case to set aside Tilley's judgments, and certificates of sale and deeds in the two other cases above referred to, to wit, Gray against the corporation and Tilley against the corporation, the ground of the motion being the modification of the judgment in Bonney against Tilley. The lower court denied the motion; hence this appeal.

Appellants cite numerous cases to the point that the lower court may, on motion, set aside sales under the original judgment after it has been modified by this court. The cases referred to are instances where the restitution sought was of some right accruing to the appealing party in the action in which the motion is made. In the present case the motion is to set aside certificates of sale and deeds thereunder issuing out of and pursuant to judgments in two other separate and distinct actions, to wit, Gray and others against the corporation, and Tilley against the corporation. The judgments in these cases were never appealed from. In the action of Bonney against Tilley it was not sought to set aside the sales ordered under the Tilley judgments. The object of that action was to have Bonney's judgments declared to be superior as liens on the corporation property. It seems to us that plaintiffs could not, by motion, in this case, have greater relief than they asked for in their complaint in the action. But, aside from this objection, plaintiffs did not move in the matter until 15 months after the modified judgment was entered. Plaintiffs did not offer within the statutory period, nor in compliance with the statute at any time, to redeem from the sale under the Gray judgment, which was declared to be prior in right for $775 to all other liens. There is not only no equity in plaintiffs' motion, but positive inequity, in this: that to set aside defendant's deeds would leave plaintiffs the sole owners of the property, as to part of which defendant has a valid prior lien, and as to the rest he holds liens equal in priority to plaintiffs'.

There is still another reason why it would seem improper to grant the relief on motion, even if plaintiffs could show on a general bill in equity that they are entitled to it. They issued execution on their judgments, purchased the property, and caused their judgments to be satisfied, and they so stand now. We know of no proceedings by motion supplemental to the satisfaction and extinguishment of the judgment to accomplish the object sought here. Plaintiffs have their action to quiet title, or other appropriate proceeding to determine the relative rights of all claimants to the property. But after sales on execution and deeds have issued, and the judgments have been satisfied, we see no way by which these relative rights could be determined in the summary manner here resorted to.

We have been asked by plaintiffs in this case, who are also defendants in Tilley v. Bonney (Sacramento No. 433), to consider the two cases together, on account of their alleged intimate relations. We are not permitted to use the facts in these cases interchangeably, for there is no stipulation that we may do so; but, after an examination of both transcripts, we discover nothing in either one to change our opinion as to the other. We think the motion was properly denied, and that the order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BELCHER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA IMP. CO. v. REYNOLDS et al.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1898.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ACTION ON ASSESSMENT — PLEADING — EVIDENCE — NOTICE — PUBLICATION — CONTRACTS.

1. An allegation that the council "directed its clerk to publish and post said resolution of intention [to make certain street improvements] for two days in the manner prescribed by law," and that "said resolution was published and posted for two days in the manner and form above described," is, after verdict, in the absence of a special demurrer, a sufficient averment of compliance with Street Improvement Act, § 3 (St. 1891, p. 196), providing that the resolution shall be posted "conspicuously" for two days on or near the door of the council chamber.

2. A notice of intention to make street improvements was published on the 10th and 11th days of the month. The publication of the notice of work to which the former publication was a condition precedent was begun on the 11th and ended on the 17th. Held, that the latter publication might, in order that the prerequisite publication of the former notice should be regarded as first completed, be deemed to have been begun on the 12th, since it would still be a publication for six days within Street Improvement Act, § 3 (St. 1891, p. 196).

3. Street Improvement Act, §§ 3, 34 (St. 1891, pp. 196, 206), providing that the street superintendent shall cause to be published for six days, in one or more daily newspapers, a notice of work, and requiring the publication to be in a daily newspaper only "as often as the same is issued," do not require a publication on six separate days, and hence a publication for six days, including an intervening Sunday when no paper was issued, is sufficient.

4. In an action on a street assessment, an allegation that plaintiff did all the work mentioned in the contract, and duly performed it in every respect according to the specifications of the contract, sufficiently avers performance without pleading in extenso the contract or specifications, the allegation not being one of a performance of conditions precedent.

5. Under Street Improvement Act, § 7, subd. 12 (St. 1891, p. 204), making the assessment, diagram, and warrant, with the certificate of the engineer, prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the prior proceedings, the assessment, diagram, warrant, and certificate are sufficient proof that the resolution of intention to do the work was properly published, there being no evidence to the contrary, and the affidavit of publication of such resolution having been improperly verified.

6. A contract for street paving at a certain price per square foot which reserved to the street superintendent the power to require a greater or less amount of certain material in the work, thereby affecting the profits on the work, is invalid, as discouraging competition in bidding.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by the California Improvement Company against one Reynolds and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appealed. Reversed.

C. Harding Tebbs, for appellants. John T. Thornton (James D. Thornton, of counsel), for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a street assessment. The defendants filed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and the cause was thereafter tried and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendants have appealed.

1. Section 3 of the street improvement act (St. 1891, p. 196) declares that, after the passage of the resolution of intention to order the improvement, the resolution "shall be posted conspicuously for two days on or near the chamber door of the council." The complaint herein alleges that the council "directed its clerk to publish and post said resolution of intention for two days in the manner prescribed by law," and that "said resolution was published and posted for two days in the form and manner above described." It is objected that the complaint is defective in not averring that the resolution was posted "conspicuously." This objection was not raised by special demurrer, and, as the averment was sufficient to authorize evidence of the character of the posting, if controverted, it must be held, "after verdict," that the averment was sufficient.

2. The resolution was passed September 7, 1891, and was published and posted by the clerk for two days, the publication being on the 10th and 11th of September, and the posting is alleged to have been made "on the 10th to the 12th of September." The superintendent of streets caused a notice of the work sufficient in form to be posted and kept posted for six days along the line of said work, and also caused a similar notice to be published for six days, "which publication commenced on the 11th day of September, A. D. 1891, and ended on the 17th day of September, 1891, and was made meanwhile as often as said newspaper was issued." Section 3 of the above statute, after providing for the posting and publishing of the resolution of intention, declares that "the street superintendent shall thereupon cause to be conspicuously posted along the line of said contemplated work or improvement notices of the passage of said resolution. He shall also cause a notice similar in substance to be published for six days in one or more daily newspapers published and circulated in said city," etc. In Paving Co. v. Anker, 104 Cal. 340, 37 Pac. 1050, it was held that the publication and posting of the resolution by the clerk for the time named in this section is a condition precedent to the authority of the superintendent to post and publish the notices thus required, and it is contended by the appellants that, as the publication was commenced on the 11th of September, it was premature, and insufficient to give the notice required by the statute. But, admitting this to be so, the publication was continuous, and may be regarded as commencing on the 12th of September; and, as the complaint alleges that it ended on the 17th, and was meanwhile published as often as said newspaper was issued, it shows a sufficient compliance with the statute. The fact subsequently shown that it was not published on the 13th, that day being a Sunday, and the newspaper not being issued on that day, does not impair its sufficiency. Section 34 of the statute requires the publication of the notice in a daily newspaper only "as often as the same is issued," and the requirement in section 3 that the notice shall be published for six days does not require a publication upon six separate days. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240.

3. It was not necessary to set out the specifications for the work in the complaint at length, any more than to set out the contract in extenso. The specifications are but a part of the contract, and the averment that the plaintiff entered into a contract with the superintendent of streets for doing the work according to the specifications therein sufficiently alleged that step in the proceedings to show its right to receive an assessment upon the due performance of the contract. See Byrne v. Luning Co. (Cal.) 38 Pac. 454. The averment in the complaint "that the plaintiff did all the work in said contract mentioned, and duly performed on its part in every respect said work according to the specifications and the terms of the contract," sufficiently avers its performance. This is not a statutory averment of the performance of conditions precedent referred to in section 457, Code Civ. Proc., as is suggested by counsel for appellants.

4. It is next urged that the evidence is insufficient to show that the resolution of intention was posted for two days, and in support of this contention appellants rely upon the fact that the affidavit of such posting was made out of the jurisdiction of this state, and was therefore unauthorized. There was no evidence, however, that the resolution was not posted for two days, and, if the affidavit be disregarded, the assessment, diagram, and warrant, with the engineer's certificate, were introduced in evidence, and by section 12 of the statute they are made prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the prior proceedings.

5. The specifications for doing the work provided that "the rock to be used on the surface of the roadway shall be of such size as to pass through a one-inch mesh, a smaller percentage of fine material consequent upon the crushing of the rock being allowable, the amount of the same to be governed by the superintendent of streets." Under this specification the superintendent was at liberty after the contract had been entered into to determine or vary the amount of fine material to be used, and it was therefore impossible for bidders to determine in advance the cost for doing the work, and competition in bidding was therefore restrained, and after the contract had been awarded the owners were unable to determine whether it would be to their advantage to elect to take the contract. The fact that the contract was awarded at a fixed sum per square foot fixes the amount which the contractor would receive, but the profit or cost of the work would depend upon the will of the superintendent. The vice of the contract is the same in character as existed in Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 244, 38 Pac. 881, and under the principles declared in that case the contract must be held invalid. The validity of the contract is to be determined by its terms, irrespective of the amount involved. Unless there is a valid contract for the work, the assessment therefor will not create a lien upon the adjacent land. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; VAN FLEET, J.

ROSENTHAL et al. v. PERKINS et al.
(Sac. 348.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1898.)

ATTACHMENT—FORTHCOMING BOND—AVOIDANCE—LIEN—APPEAL—RECORD—PRESUMPTION—RIGHT OF ACTION—DEFENSE.

1. The obligation of an attachment bond, made under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 554, 555, to pay the value of released property if plaintiff recovers judgment, and there is default in its delivery, is not destroyed by an assignment by defendant, under the insolvent act of 1880, though, under section 17 thereof, the attachment was thereby dissolved, and demand for the property could not be enforced against the assignee.

2. Where attached property is released on giving a bond, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 555, the attachment lien is destroyed.

3. Where the record shows that property attached in a justice court was released, under Code Civ. Proc. § 555, and the bond recites that it was given under an order of the court to release the attached property, it will be inferred that an order was made discharging the attachment, and that the constable regularly released the property, though the record does not show such an order made.

4. The condition of Code Civ. Proc. § 552, that, after an execution against defendant in attachment is returned unsatisfied, plaintiff may sue the bond made for the release of the attached property, under Code Civ. Proc. § 555, does require issue of execution against defendant, who has made an assignment under the insolvent act of 1880, before suit on the bond.

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinion in division, see 53 Pac. 444.

BRITT, C. The plaintiffs here sued one Brusie in a justice's court, and procured a writ of attachment to be issued, which was levied by the township constable on 100 tons of hay, the property of Brusie. Afterwards the defendants in the present case executed an undertaking, in which was recited that Brusie had appeared in such action in the justice's court, and applied for an order to discharge the attachment "upon the execution of an undertaking, in accordance with the provisions of section 554 and 555 of the Code of Civil Procedure," and that said court had fixed the amount of such undertaking at $500. The instrument proceeded that, in consideration of the release of the property and the discharge of the attachment, the obligors undertook "that, in case the said plaintiffs recover judgment in said action, the said defendant will, on demand, redeliver such attached property so released to the proper officer, * * * or that, in default thereof, the said defendant and sureties will, on demand, pay to the said plaintiff the value of the property released, not exceeding the sum of five hundred dollars." Upon the execution of said bond, the officer released the hay to Brusie. A few days later, and in less than a month from the time of the levy of the writ, said Brusie filed his voluntary petition in insolvency, under the insolvent act of 1880; and in the usual course of such proceedings an assignee was appointed, to whom was conveyed all his estate. By permission of the court entertaining the matter in insolvency, the plaintiffs prosecuted their action in the justice's court "for the purpose of fixing the liability of the sureties upon such undertaking" (section 45 of said act), and obtained judgment against Brusie for the sum of $317, which has not been paid. Demand was made on Brusie and his said assignee for the return of the property released as aforesaid, but without effect. The defendants also refused on demand to pay the value of the property or the amount of plaintiffs' judgment; hence the present action on the said bond.

Section 17 of said insolvent act provides that the assignment shall vest the title to the estate of the insolvent in the assignee, "although the same is then attached on mesne process, and shall dissolve any attachment made within one month next preceding the commencement of the insolvency proceedings." Defendants contend that the effect of this provision was to dissolve the attachment in Rosenthal et al. against Brusie, and render impossible the return of the released property to the attaching officer, and hence to destroy the obligation of their undertaking. The investigator is impressed at the outset that this bond embodied a contract that, in the event of plaintiffs' recovery against Brusie, one of two alternative promises should be performed, viz. the released property would be redelivered for application to the payment of the judgment, or the sureties would pay the value thereof, not exceeding the amount of the judgment. The first of these became impossible through the act of the law set in motion by the default (failure to pay his debts, and resort to insolvency) of the principal in the bond. Why should defendants not perform the other alternative, which remains possible? "If an agreement is in the alternative, and one branch of the alternative cannot, by law, be performed, the party is bound to perform the other." Stevens v. Webb, 7 Car. & P. 60,—a case in some essential features very like the present. And see Drake v. White, 117 Mass. 10; State v. Worthington, 7 Ohio, 171; Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew, 1, 18, et seq.; 2 Pars. Cont. (8th Ed.) marg. p. 673, and notes. As succinctly stated in our Code: "If one of the alternative acts required by an obligation is such as the law will not enforce, or becomes unlawful, or impossible of performance, the obligation is to be interpreted as though the other stood alone." Civ. Code, § 1451. Consequences which might follow destruction of the released property itself do not at present concern us.

The force of the impression produced by the aspect of the case in outline is not diminished on minuter examination of the ground of the defense. It is clear, for reasons which need not be enlarged upon, that if, at the time the proceeding in bankruptcy is instituted, there is no attachment in force on which the proceeding can operate, if the attachment lien has already been discharged by a bond for that purpose, then the liability of sureties on the bond is not affected by the subsequent bankruptcy of their principal. McCombs v. Allen, 82 N. Y. 114, and cases cited; Easton v. Ormsby, 18 R. I. 309, 27 Atl. 216; section 45 of the insolvent act, last proviso. The mistake of defendants lies in supposing that the lien of the attachment in Rosenthal against Brusie continued on the attached goods after they had been released to Brusie in consequence of the delivery bond. Our statute and the inferences which follow from the decisions of this court seem to put that question at rest. Upon the execution of the bond, such as was given by defendants, "an order may be made releasing from the operation of the attachment any or all of the attached property." Code Civ. Proc. § 554. It is impossible that property can be "released from the operation of the attachment" if it yet remains subject to the attachment lien. It was assumed in Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 50 Pac. 1066, that the debtor who had obtained the release of property under this section could, by mortgaging it, create a lien which would be superior to the execution in the attachment suit; and in Metrovich v. Jovovich, 58 Cal. 341, that he could sell it. And in Risdon Iron & Locomotive Works v. Citizens' Traction Co., of San Diego (Cal.) 54 Pac. 529, it was held that, when property is released by order of court as exempt from levy, a dissolution of the attachment is, as to that property, accomplished. The decisions in other states where the practice allows a just analogy to be drawn with the case at bar confirm this view. Thus, it was held, where property was attached and delivered to a receptor, the officer taking the engagement of the receptor to redeliver the property or pay a sum of money, the attachment is thereby dissolved (Waterman v. Treat, 49 Me. 309); and that the property is liable to be attached at the suit of another creditor of the owner (Waterhouse v. Bird, 37 Me. 326); also, that under a practice allowing the officer to commit the goods to a surety who undertakes for their return, if the latter deliver them to the debtor the officer's lien is gone, and the goods may be attached by another creditor (Robinson v. Mansfield, 13 Pick. 139; Lawrence v. Rice, 12 Mete. [Mass.] 538; Drake, Attachm. §§ 344, 357). See, also, Schuyler v. Sylvester, 28 N. J. Law, 487; Bunneman v. Wagner, 16 Or. 433, 18 Pac. 841. In some jurisdictions the action in which chattels are attached has been regarded as one in rem as to those goods; as in Gass v. Williams, 46 Ind. 253, one of the cases most relied on by defendants; and in Bell v. Pearce, 1 B. Mon. 73. In that view of the nature of the action, there may be ground for holding that the property continues in the custody of the court by virtue of the action against it, even though the debtor lawfully regains possession. The theory of the remedy of attachment with us is different; the property does not become a reus. Low v. Adams, 6 Cal. 277. We are satisfied that no lien of the attachment persisted on the goods in this case after the release to the owner.

It is said that no order of the justice's court for the release of the attached property is shown to have been made. The goods were in fact released as a consequence of the bond given by defendants, and it is not quite clear to us that they are in position to urge this objection. Palmer v. Vance, 13 Cal. 553. It is sufficient, however, to say that the record does not show that an order directing the release of the property was not made. The recitals of defendant's undertaking show that it was given pursuant to an order of the court requiring the same for the purpose of releasing the attached goods in the manner prescribed by sections 554 and 555, Code Civ. Proc. The constable accepted the bond, and surrendered the goods. In this state of the case, it ought to be inferred that Brusie obtained what the bond shows he applied for, viz. an order discharging the attachment under said sections of the Code, and that the constable regularly performed his duty when he released the goods.

Section 552, Code Civ. Proc., is to the effect that if an execution against the defendant in the attachment be returned unsatisfied, in whole or part, the plaintiff may prosecute any undertaking given pursuant to section 540 or section 555, or he may proceed as in other cases upon return of an execution. Appellants contend that thereby the issuance and return of an execution against Brusie was made a condition precedent to the present action on the bond (Brownlee v. Riffenburg, 95 Cal. 447, 30 Pac. 587); and that, as the issuance of any execution on the judgment against Brusie was forbidden by section 45 of the insolvent act, the condition of defendants' liability on the bond can never transpire. The argument proves too much. It would equally destroy the liability of sureties on a bond given under section 540 to prevent an attachment, as to which we suppose argument hardly lies that it is affected by subsequent insolvency of the debtor. Looking to the several provisions referred to, and to the clause of said section 45 allowing the prosecution to judgment of the action against the attachment defendant "for the purpose of fixing the liability of the sureties" on bonds such as this, we conclude that the legislature did not mean in the same breath to destroy the liability of the sureties by forbidding an execution against the insolvent, but rather to preserve such liability, and dispense with the issuance of an execution preliminary to an action against them. An execution against the insolvent would be a futility in the face of the title to the insolvent's property taken by his assignee.

It is contended that no valid demand was or could be made on Brusie or his assignee for the return of the property, because the assignee was the lawful owner thereof for the purposes of his trust, and neither the plaintiffs nor the constable had the right to receive it from him. At bottom this is not materially different from the objections that the restoration of the goods according to the first alternative of the bond has become impossible, and that the action is not maintainable because no execution can issue on the judgment taken against Brusie. For reasons advanced in considering those objections severally, this must also be overruled. One or two minor points are made, but they do not seem meritorious. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Smith & Murasky, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The judgment went, in the court below, for defendants, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The defendants are some associated corporations, who may be designated, for convenience, as the Hume Packing Company. On the 29th day of January, 1891, one John Quinn, as party of the first part, and the defendants, as parties of the second part, entered into a certain written contract, by which Quinn agreed to employ a large number of Chinamen and proceed from San Francisco to Alaska and engage for defendants in the business of packing salmon, and for the work done the defendants were to pay certain sums of money. There were many details in the contract which are not important here, and need not be mentioned. It was stipulated that Quinn was to give a bond, in the sum of $7,500, for the faithful fulfillment of his part of the contract, and also that the money to become due under it should be paid to Sun Wah Hing & Co. Quinn and the defendants were the parties to the contract, but at the bottom of the instrument, after the signatures of said parties, was the following: "We accept the terms and conditions of the foregoing contract. [Signed] Sun Wah Hing & Co." At the same time, a bond, in the sum of $7,500, was given by said Sun Wah Hing & Co., conditioned for the fulfillment by Quinn of his covenants in said contract, and the contract is referred to in the bond as one made by the defendants "with John Quinn, bearing date herewith." After the return of Quinn and the Chinamen, at the end of the packing season, to San Francisco, it appeared that there was a balance owing by defendants on the contract of $14,801.61. Defendants claimed, however, that certain work on some of the cans, such as labeling, etc., had not been done, and they held back $1,500 for the payment of laborers to finish the work. Colonel Bee, the Chinese vice consul, was present, for the purpose of protecting the interests of the Chinese laborers, and a check for $13,301.61 was drawn by the defendants, payable to Sun Wah Hing & Co., which was immediately indorsed by the latter, and delivered to Colonel Bee. A number of Chinamen were then employed to complete the unfinished work on the cans. Afterwards Sun Wah Hing & Co. made an assignment of the $1,500 due on the contract to the plaintiff in this case, Lee San, and this action is brought upon said assignment to recover of the defendants the $1,500. The Chinamen, 28 in number, who performed the last work on the cans, have not yet been paid. The court below found that the contract was made by defendants with Quinn, and with no other person; that the money

Q. contracted to furnish defendant a number of laborers, and gave a bond, with S. as surety, for the performance of such contract, and defendant agreed to pay the money due thereunder to such surety for Q. After full performance on the part of Q., and the release of S. from obligation on the bond, the balance due from defendant on the contract was assigned by S., without the consent of Q., to plaintiff, who had knowledge of all the facts. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to recover the money in question, as his assignor had no interest therein.

was to be paid to Sun Wah Hing & Co. merely as trustees for Quinn, and for their protection on the bond; that Sun Wah Hing & Co. could not assign their trusteeship to the plaintiff; that the assignment was made without the consent, and against the will, of Quinn; that plaintiff knew all the facts at the time he took the assignment, and knew that the $1,500 was money due Quinn, and not the money of Sun Wah Hing & Co.; that Quinn performed the labor of labeling, etc., of the cans, and duly performed all the obligations and conditions of the contract, and that defendant, before the alleged assignment, had released Sun Wah Hing & Co. from their obligation upon the bond; and that at the time of the assignment the $1,500 was not the money of Sun Wah Hing & Co., and that the latter had no interest therein; and that therefore the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover in this action. There are no assignments of errors of law in the record, and the contention of the appellant for a new trial is based entirely upon specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision. Upon this point it is sufficient to say that the findings of the court below are supported by the evidence, and that it is not necessary to restate that evidence here. The order appealed from is affirmed.

BERGIN v. HINCKLEY et al. (S. F. 777.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1898.)
CONTRACT — FINAL DETERMINATION OF PROCEEDINGS.

Proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 1664, for determining heirship to B., pending at time of execution of, and referred to by, agreement of F. to pay certain money after determination of her right to estate of B. in the legal proceedings then pending, are finally determined when all but one of the appeals from judgment therein in her favor are affirmed, and the appellant in the other appeal which had been perfected has lost his right by failing to file within 4 years the transcript which he should have filed in 40 days; though there had been no formal order of dismissal, and F. could have consented to filing of the transcript after the time limited; it not being claimed that she gave such consent, and the fact of her thereafter filing petition for distribution showing that she considered the appeals disposed of; and such petition not being part of the proceedings pending at the time of the agreement.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Bergin against Hinckley and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. H. Hart (Aylett R. Cotton, of counsel), for appellants. Thomas L. Bergin, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellant Florence Blythe Hinckley, then Florence Blythe, on the 19th of January, 1892, executed to the plaintiff two instruments in writing, by which she promised to pay to him the moneys therein named within one year after the determination of her right and title to the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, in the legal proceedings then pending for the determination of the same in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. This action was brought by the plaintiff upon these obligations April 16, 1896, the complaint alleging that there had been a final determination of said legal proceedings more than one year prior thereto, and that they had not been paid. In their answer the defendants alleged that the determination of said legal proceedings did not become final until less than a year prior to the commencement of the action, and defended upon this ground. The court found that the allegations in the complaint were true, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial, and, their motion having been denied, they have appealed therefrom, and also from the judgment.

The appeal is urged upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision of the court. The legal proceeding referred to in the instruments was an action entitled "Blythe v. Ayres," instituted under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the purpose of determining the heirship to Thomas H. Blythe. In that proceeding the superior court had rendered its judgment, October 22, 1890, to the effect that the appellant Florence was the sole heir of Thomas, and the only person entitled to a distribution of his estate. Appeals had been taken from this judgment, and were pending in the supreme court at the date of the instruments, and, with the exception of the appeal of Adam Blythe et al., hereinafter referred to, were determined by an affirmance of the judgment appealed from, prior to June 18, 1894. On that day, Florence filed a petition in the superior court for a distribution to her of all of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, with the exception of certain moneys in the hands of the administrator, averring therein the rendition of the judgment, and that appeals had been taken therefrom, and that the said appeals had all been heard, and the judgment appealed from affirmed; and on October 26, 1894, a decree of distribution of the estate, in accordance with her petition, was made to her. December 22, 1890, Adam Blythe et al. had appealed from the judgment in Blythe v. Ayres, by filing and serving a notice of appeal, and filing an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300. No further steps were taken by them in the prosecution of their appeal, and a motion to dismiss their appeal was made in the supreme court June 3, 1895, and was granted on the following day. December 27, 1894, Henry T. Blythe et al., defendants in the case of Blythe v. Ayres, moved the superior court to dismiss the proceeding, upon the ground that more than six months had expired since the decision, and that the judgment had not been entered in the judgment book. This motion was denied September 27, 1894, and an appeal therefrom was taken October 17th, and the order affirmed November 30, 1895, 42 Pac. 641. Certain appeals were also taken from the decree of distribution, and this decree was affirmed by the supreme court November 30, 1895. Id. 642, 643. It is upon these facts that the appellants herein claim that the superior court erred. We are of the opinion, however, that the evidence before the court justified it in holding that the obligations named in the instruments sued on had matured more than a year prior to the commencement of the action. The judgment of October 22, 1890, had been affirmed by the supreme court in each of the appeals therefrom which were prosecuted by the several appellants (31 Pac. 915),—the last affirmation being April 24, 1894 (36 Pac. 522, 588),—and as to these appellants there was thus a final determination of the validity of that judgment. The superior court was fully authorized to find that the appeal of Adam Blythe et al. had been abandoned, and that the said appellants made no further question of the correctness and validity of the judgment, or of the rights of Florence as therein defined. Although they had perfected an appeal from the judgment, they failed to prosecute the appeal until they had lost the right to have their appeal considered. By their failure to file the transcript to be used on the appeal within the period prescribed by the rules of the supreme court, the respondent acquired the right to have the appeal dismissed. Shain v. Lumber Co., 98 Cal. 120, 32 Pac. 878. And, for the purposes of the present action, the right thus acquired was equivalent to a formal dismissal. By losing their right to prosecute the appeal, or to have it considered by the supreme court, the judgment appealed from became, in effect, a final judgment of the controversy, even though a formal order of dismissal had not been entered; and, although the respondent could have consented that the transcript might be filed after the time limited by the rules, it is not claimed that such consent was given, and it is very evident, from the petition for distribution thereafter filed by her, not only that no such consent was given, but that she deemed that all the appeals had been disposed of, and that the judgment had become final. The court was, therefore, justified in finding that the appeal of Adam Blythe et al. had been abandoned, and that her rights had been finally determined. When a party fails to take the steps towards prosecuting an appeal for more than four years which he is required to take within forty days, it is reasonable to infer that he has abandoned his appeal. The affirmance of the judgment upon the appeal of Henry T. Blythe et al. on the 24th of April, 1894, was a final determination, so far as those appeals were concerned, of the legal proceeding referred to in the instruments, and did not cease to be final by reason of their subsequent motion to dismiss the proceeding. It was held, upon the appeal from the order denying their motion, that there was no foundation for making the motion (110 Cal. 226, 42 Pac. 641), and that it had been previously so determined. The petition for distribution which was filed in June, 1894, was not included in the legal proceeding which was pending at the date of the instruments, and, consequently, the maturity of the obligation did not depend upon any delay in the final disposition of the petition. The judgment and order are affirmed.

DUDLEY'S ESTATE v. VARIAN. (S. F. 852.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1899.)

CO-ADMINISTRATORS—COMMISSIONS—ALLOWANCE—DISCRETION—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

1. Two administrators were appointed at the same time. They were sole heirs, and there were no creditors. One of them obtained letters before the other, and took possession of the property, and prevented the other, to a great extent, from participating in the administration. Held not an abuse of discretion to divide equally the commissions for administering the estate, and to allow a fee to the latter's attorney.

2. Where one of two administrators takes possession of all of intestate's property, the other, being anxious to participate in the administration, is not precluded from an allowance for his share of the commissions by his failure to make a formal demand for the property, where such demand would be useless.

3. An administrator is entitled to have the amount of his attorney's fee determined before he has paid him anything.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

In the matter of the estate of Greengrove Dudley, deceased, Flora M. Varian, administratrix, was allowed certain commissions and attorney fees, and Serena G. Hicks, her co-administratrix, appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Buck and F. A. Cutler, for appellant.
George D. Murray, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a contest between two sisters, on unfriendly terms with each other, about amounts due them as administratrixes of the estate of their deceased father, Greengrove Dudley, and about some attorneys' fees. The amount of the commissions is $308.08, all of which is claimed by appellant, as well as a fee for her attorney of $250. The court below divided the commissions between the two, and allowed to each $152.54. It also deducted $50 from the amount of the attorney's fee claimed by appellant, and allowed as such fee the sum of $200. It also allowed to the respondent, for her attorney's fee, $150. This matter was largely within the discretion of the court below, and, as we see no errors of law committed by the court, there is no ground for disturbing its action. The parties were appointed administratrixes at the same time; but the appellant qualified and got her letters two days before the respondent, and immediately took into possession all the property of the estate, which, in addition to certain live stock and farming utensils, which by agreement between the parties went to the respondent, was personal property, consisting of money in bank and notes and mortgages. The respondent was willing and anxious to take part in the administration, and we think there was sufficient evidence to warrant the court in finding that the appellant excluded her from the possession of the property of the estate, and to a great extent from participating in the administration. It is contended by appellant that respondent did not make any formal demand for the possession of the property, but the testimony of the appellant shows that such demand would have been useless. It is contended, also, that the allowance of $150 to respondent's attorney was erroneous, because it did not appear that respondent had actually paid that amount to her attorney; but respondent had the right to have the court determine in the first instance what amount should be allowed. In re Couts' Estate, 87 Cal. 480, 25 Pac. 685; Pennie v. Roach, 94 Cal. 515, 29 Pac. 956, and 30 Pac. 106. It is also contended that the respondent did not file any final account, and that, therefore, she was not entitled to any allowance; but the report of her administration which she did file stated all the matters necessary to be stated, and was, under the circumstances, sufficient. The respondent gave her bond, and assumed the responsibility of an administratrix, and performed some acts of administration. The case is different from one where a co-administratrix pays no attention whatever to the administration of the estate, and does not do or seek to do any act as administratrix. The two sisters are the only heirs of the deceased, and there are no creditors or other persons having any interest in the matter; and, as the court below is supposed to have known all the circumstances of the case, we see no reason for holding that it abused its discretion in disposing as it did of these small commissions and attorney's fees. The orders and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CUMMINGS. (Cr. 426.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1899.)

APPEAL—FALSE PRETENSES—INDICTMENT—VENUE
—CAVEAT EMTOR—FORMER JEOPARDY —DIRECTION OF FINDING.

1. The weight and credibility of evidence showing defendant guilty of the offense charged is for the jury, and their conclusions thereon cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. The doctrine of caveat emtor cannot be invoked as a defense to a charge of obtaining a note under false pretenses as the consideration of a sale induced by fraud.

3. The venue of an indictment for obtaining property under false pretenses is properly laid in the county where the representations had final effect, although they were made in another county.

4. Where there is no evidence to support a plea of former jeopardy, it is not error to direct a finding for the prosecution on that issue.

5. The pendency of an indictment for obtaining a note executed by S. under false pretenses is no obstacle to the finding and trial of another indictment charging defendant with obtaining a joint note executed by S. and another under false pretenses.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

James H. Cummings was convicted of procuring a promissory note by false representations, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Hubbs, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

BRITT, C. There was a former prosecution of Cummings, the defendant here, resulting in a judgment of conviction, which was reversed in this court on the ground (among others appearing) of variance between the indictment and proof; it being held that the charge in that action of procuring by means of fraudulent representations the promissory note of one C. Schnelle was not sustained by proof of obtaining by such means the joint note of C. Schnelle and L. W. Schnelle. People v. Cummings, 117 Cal. 497, 49 Pac. 576. After that decision the indictment in the present case was found, charging defendant with procuring by false and fraudulent representations, particularly set forth, the promissory note of said C. and L. W. Schnelle. He was again convicted; hence the present appeal.

It is contended that there was no evidence to justify the verdict of guilty. The trial court instructed the jury—properly it would seem—to disregard certain portions of the evidence submitted by the prosecution; and the matters left for their consideration related mainly to the character and consequences of divers representations made by defendant concerning a tract of land owned by him, containing 16½ acres, situated in the county of Butte, which representations occurred in the course of a transaction wherein defendant conveyed the said tract of land, besides other property, to said C. Schnelle, and received in exchange therefor certain land of the latter situated in Lake county, and also the promissory note aforesaid, executed by both the Schnelles. Said note was for the sum of $175, and was afterwards paid by the makers. L. W. Schnelle is the son of C. Schnelle, and acted as a broker for both his father and defendant, it seems, in the said transactions. Without descending to unnecessary details, it may be said that there was evidence that defendant stated to the Schnelles that his said tract of 16½ acres cost him $2,500 cash, and that the soil thereof was a dark, rich loam, and all cultivated, and that it adjoined a certain famous orchard; also, that the statements were believed by the Schnelles, and were part of the inducement to the execution of said note. There was further evidence that in fact the land of defendant did not adjoin said orchard; that nearly all of it was rocky, covered with boulders, uncultivated, and not susceptible of cultivation; and that defendant had paid no cash for it at all, but obtained the same as a bonus for releasing certain parties from a contract he had with them. These matters, with other evidence in the case, made a question for the jury, whether defendant uttered such representations, knowing them to be false, or (which is tantamount to knowledge of falsity) recklessly, and without information justifying a belief that they were true. In our opinion, there was some evidence tending to prove all the elements of the offense charged. See People v. Millan, 106 Cal. 320, 39 Pac. 605; People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 10, 14, 4 Pac. 773; People v. Bryant, 119 Cal. 595, 51 Pac. 960. Its weight and credibility were matters for the jury, and their conclusion thereon cannot be disturbed in this court.

Defendant claims that the doctrine of caveat emptor, as known in civil cases, should have effect here. In determining in cases like the present whether the defrauded party really believed and acted upon the representations of the accused, it is proper to consider whether they were of a character to probably induce belief in his mind, or in the mind of any person of ordinary intelligence; but the law, as it is at this day understood, does not go further. The guilt of the accused does not depend on the degree of folly or credulity of the person defrauded. The rule invoked affords no defense against a criminal charge. People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 566, 36 Pac. 952; People v. Jordan, 66 Cal. 14, 4 Pac. 773; Oxx v. State, 59 N. J. Law, 99, 35 Atl. 646; 1 Bish. Cr. Law, § 874; 2 Bish. Cr. Law (8th Ed.) §§ 433, 434.

It is contended that the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, where defendant was indicted and tried, had no jurisdiction of the case, for the alleged reason that the false representations charged appeared by the evidence to have been made in Alameda county, where C. Schnelle resided. It is undisputed, however, that the note was delivered by the Schnelles to defendant in the city and county of San Francisco. It was here, therefore, that defendant's representations had final effect and the offense became complete. The venue was properly laid by the indictment in San Francisco. People v. Adams, 3 Denio, 206; State v. Shaeffer, 89 Mo. 271, 1 S. W. 293.

There appears in the record matter which for present purposes may be treated as a plea of once in jeopardy for the offense charged. The court instructed the jury to find for the prosecution on this issue, which was done accordingly. Such instruction is assigned for error. There was no evidence to support the plea, and the instruction was right. The evidence offered in that behalf, and admitted by consent, included the record of the former case, wherein defendant was tried for defrauding C. Schnelle, and the decision of this court reported in 117 Cal. 497, 49 Pac. 576. Other considerations aside, the charge in that action—of fraudulently obtaining the note of C. Schnelle—was not the charge for which he has been prosecuted here, viz. the fraudulent procurement of the joint note of the two Schnelles. The decision just mentioned makes this apparent. He was therefore not on trial or in jeopardy in that action for the offense of which he has been convicted in the present. People v. Reed, 70 Cal. 529, 533, 11 Pac. 676. The pendency, undetermined, of the said former action, was, of course, no obstacle to the finding and trial of the indictment in this. See Kalloch v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 236.

We have carefully considered all the points made by appellant, though some of them, because of manifest lack of merit, or slight importance, have not been specially discussed. We find no legal ground for reversal, and recommend that the judgment and orders appealed from be affirmed.

HITE v. HITE. (S. F. 1,489.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1898.)

DIVORCE — ALIMONY — EVIDENCE OF MARRIAGE — WITNESSES — IMPEACHMENT.

1. Plaintiff and defendant in an action for divorce had never been regularly married. There was evidence that defendant furnished plaintiff a house for her residence, and lived with her there for about 25 years, and supplied her with necessities of life, and that a child was born to them; that they were known as husband and wife, and held themselves out as such; and that he treated her son by another man as his stepson. These facts were corroborated by the stepson's affidavit. Counter affidavits by neighbors denied them, and attacked the reputation for veracity and credibility of the affiants to those facts. Held a sufficient prima facie showing of marriage to support an order of the court below for payment of alimony and counsel fees.

2. Where the court below has made a finding in conformity with a witness' testimony, it is only in exceptional instances that such witness' testimony will on appeal be held to have been impeached by the testimony of others.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county.

Action by Lucy Hite against John R. Hite. From an order granting plaintiff alimony and counsel fees, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Castelhun, W. W. Foote, and Congdon & Congdon, for appellant. Rodgers & Paterson, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. In the pending action for divorce the trial court made an order for alimony and counsel fees. This appeal is now prosecuted by defendant from that order. The answer of defendant denies the fact of marriage, and it is now insisted upon his part that the evidence taken at the hearing does not justify the order. It is thus apparent that the question directly confronts us, what amount of evidence is necessary to justify the trial court in awarding alimony and counsel fees in a pending action for divorce, where the existence of the marriage relation is denied? Yet, in view of the future trial of this case upon its merits, where this question will undoubtedly be the all-important question to be tried and decided, we feel that the discussion of the matter upon an appeal from the preliminary order should be circumscribed within small limits. Any other course might result in embarrassment to both parties at the trial of the cause, and therefore its discussion will serve no good purpose at the present time.

There must be some evidence tending to show a marriage relation between the parties before an order similar to the one at bar should be made. It is perfectly evident that the requirements of the law demand this, or else the doors are spread wide open for the perpetration of the greatest frauds. At the same time, that degree of evidence required to establish the marriage relation at the trial is not demanded; for, if such were the law, then the material issue arising at the trial would be litigated in advance, and this in face of the fact that the money to be obtained by the order is largely to be applied in making preparation for the trial of that identical question. In Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 43, 16 Pac. 345, it is declared that the marriage should be established "by satisfactory evidence showing at least prima facie a marriage in fact." We deem the foregoing statement fairly illustrative of the true rule for the guidance of trial courts. There should be evidence establishing prima facie the fact of marriage. The evidence of plaintiff upon the hearing should be such that the trial court may be able to say that a fair presumption of the fact of marriage arises from the showing. Does the evidence bring this case within the foregoing rule? There is no claim that a marriage between these parties was ever regularly solemnized. The evidence tends to show that defendant furnished plaintiff a house in which to live, and that she resided there for the greater portion of 25 years; that he supplied her during this time with the necessities of life; that he lived with her during a great portion of this time, and a child was born to them. One Westfall testifies that plaintiff and defendant were known in that neighborhood and adjoining counties as husband and wife; that plaintiff was everywhere called "Mrs. Hite, and Lucy Hite, wife of John R. Hite," and that plaintiff and defendant "held themselves out to the world, and were always treated, as husband and wife"; that defendant always treated Thomas Gibbs, a son of plaintiff, as a son in every way, and "said Gibbs has always been considered and reputed amongst those who knew him and the plaintiff and defendant herein as the stepson of defendant John R. Hite." A stronger affidavit than the one from which we have just quoted, and upon the same general lines, was made by Thomas Gibbs, son of plaintiff by another man. If the facts stated in these two affidavits be true, then the marriage relation between these parties, for the purposes of this appeal, at least, may well be presumed to exist. Defendant offered affidavits from various residents of the community where plaintiff resided, in direct contradiction to the evidence of Westfall and Gibbs. He also attacked Gibbs' veracity by producing affidavits of various residents of that community to the effect that his general reputation in this regard was bad. But, as to this impeaching evidence, we are clear that it was essentially a matter for the trial court to weigh and estimate; and it would only be in a most exceptional case that this court, in the face of a contrary finding of the trial court, would hold the evidence of a witness impeached by testimony of other witnesses as to his general bad reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity. Such a case is not presented here.

Upon all the evidence before us, taken together, we will not disturb the order of the trial court. At the same time, by so holding we do not intimate that a finding of fact that the marriage relation existed between these parties, based upon the showing disclosed by this record, would be sustained by this court if attacked upon appeal from the final judgment. Suffice it to say, upon the showing here made this court will not hold the testimony of Gibbs and Westfall, taken in connection with other facts which are substantially admitted by defendant, insufficient to support the order. Notwithstanding the hearing was had upon affidavits, the trial court is entitled to take a somewhat broader view of the case than is allowed to this court upon appeal; and, notwithstanding it may be conceded that the showing here discloses a preponderance of evidence against the fact of the existence of the marriage relation between these parties, still such preponderance does not necessarily take the case out of the rule by which we should be governed. Weighing the evidence favorable to the support of the order of the trial court which we have quoted in a general way from the record, we are not prepared to say that a prima facie case of marriage, sufficient to support a preliminary order for alimony and counsel fees, was not made out. There are bad spots in plaintiff's case, which no doubt will be given due consideration when squarely presented before the trial court upon the merits. We refrain from touching upon them at this preliminary hearing. There is no merit in the remaining contentions raised by appellant. For the foregoing reasons, the order is affirmed.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—TRUSTS—ACCOUNTING—LACHES.

Where a lessee, who had become indebted to the lessor, turned over the premises to him, with authority to collect rents due under subleases, apply them on the debt, and pay the surplus to the lessee, an action for an accounting under the trust, brought by the lessee over nine years after expiration of the lease, and over a year after the lessor's death,—the property in the meantime having been conveyed to a third person,—was properly dismissed for laches.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

This motion is brought by the plaintiff, Mary Coyle, as administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, John Coyle, against J. T. Lamb and others, as executors of the last will of J. C. Wilmerding, deceased. Judgment went for the defendants, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying her motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

D. G. Mahoney and T. P. Ryan, for appellant. E. J. McCutchen, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. The substantial averments of the complaint are that said Wilmerding and one Fargo on April 15, 1876, leased to the deceased, John Coyle, for a term of 10 years then next ensuing, a certain lot of land at Boardman Place; that Coyle was to have the right to build a house upon the lot, and to remove it at the expiration of the term of the lease; that Coyle did build thereon a house; that in November, 1876, the appellant herein, Mary Coyle, acquired from her husband, through mesne conveyances, an undivided half of his interest in the lease and house; that in November, 1881, the said John Coyle, deceased, became indebted to Wilmerding in the sum of $200, and that to secure the payment of the same the Coyles "turned over" all their right to the land and improvements to Wilmerding, with authority to collect the rents, deduct from the same the said $200, and pay the balance of the rent to the Coyles,—Fargo, in the meantime, having conveyed all his interest in the lot to Wilmerding; and that Wilmerding has retained possession of the property ever since, collected the rents from November, 1881, to the commencement of the suit, and has failed to pay over or account for the same. Separate parts of the house had been leased to two or three different tenants. It is averred that the rents amounted to $45 a month, and this suit is brought to recover $22.50 a month,—upon the theory, we suppose, that one-half thereof is due to the estate of John Coyle. This claim was presented to the defendants, as executors, and by them rejected. The complaint was not verified, and the answer consists of a general denial of all the averments in the complaint, and, as a separate defense, that the cause of action is barred by sections 337 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The rulings of the court, and some of its findings, are to a considerable extent confusing. The plaintiff offered herself as a witness, and an objection by respondents, based on section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that she was not a competent witness as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of Wilmerding, was overruled, and she was allowed to testify quite fully as to matters occurring before Wilmerding died. Considering her testimony in connection with other evidence introduced, it is difficult to see how the court could have properly found "that said John Coyle did not thereafter build upon said lot any dwelling house or improvement of the value of fourteen hundred dollars, or of any value," or that the Coyles did not turn over their right, etc., to the lot and improvements to Wilmerding, with authority to collect the rents of the same. It seems, from an opinion of the court attached to the brief of respondents, that the testimony of Mrs. Coyle was admitted upon the theory that this action is in the nature of an action to enforce a trust, but there is nothing in the record to show that her testimony was stricken out or disregarded; and, even upon the theory of a trust, we cannot see how the finding that no house was ever built, or that it was not turned over to Wilmerding, as averred in the complaint, can be sustained. There is no finding that, upon the theory that the action is one at law, the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations; and the defendants, being respondents, are not in a position to contend, as they undertake to do in their brief, that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Mrs. Coyle. But, notwithstanding the incongruities above noticed, the court finds "that plaintiff has been guilty of laches in the prosecution of this claim, and that the claim is stale"; and upon this finding the judgment must be affirmed. The term of the lease ended April, 1886, and Wilmerding lived for nearly eight years thereafter, having died on February 20, 1894; in 1887 he conveyed all the property to one Selby; and this action was not commenced until June 25, 1895, more than nine years after the expiration of the lease. Under these circumstances, there is no warrant for disturbing the finding of the court upon the subject of laches. The order appealed from is affirmed.

ROBBERY—POSSESSION—INFORMATION.

Under Pen. Code, § 211, defining robbery as the felonious taking of personal property "in possession of another from his person or immediate presence," an information alleging that money was taken "from the person and immediate presence of" prosecutor sufficiently shows that the money when taken was in prosecutor's possession.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

A demurrer was sustained to an information against Byron Walbridge and Frank Shaw for robbery, and the people appeal. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the State. McKelvey & Bowes, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal is prosecuted from an order sustaining a demurrer to the information. The material part of the information alleges that the defendants "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, and by means of force and fear, and against the will of one Victor Finster, take from the person and immediate presence of him, the said Victor Finster, thirty (30) cents in lawful money of the United States." The counsel of defendants attempt to support the ruling of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer by the claim that the information contains no allegation that the money when taken was in the possession of Victor Finster, the alleged victim of the robbery. Robbery is defined by the Penal Code (section 211), in this respect, as "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate presence." Comparing this definition with the allegation of the information, we are clear there is nothing in counsel's contention. It is too technical to possess merit. The information alleges that the money was taken "from the person and immediate presence of Victor Finster." If it was taken from the person of Victor Finster, it must be assumed that it was in his possession at the time it was taken. It is so held in People v. Shuler, 28 Cal. 490. If the information had only alleged that the money was taken from the immediate presence of Victor Finster, then an additional allegation would have been necessary, to the effect that it was at that time in the possession of Finster; but the allegation that it was taken from his person renders the allegation as to possession in him not absolutely necessary. It may be conceded that it would have been better pleading to have directly alleged the possession of the money to have been in Finster, but, under the circumstances here disclosed, we deem the information sufficient in the absence of such allegation. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

LIS PENDENS—ACTION FOR DIVORCE—MORTGAGE—ORDERS—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

1. A cross bill by a wife in an action by her husband for divorce does not have the effect of a lis pendens, so as to make a mortgage taken prior to any order of court, by one with knowledge thereof, on separate property of the husband, subject to the lien of the alimony afterwards decreed her,—the transaction between the husband and mortgagee being bona fide,—though the cross bill asked for alimony and the assignment to her of the community property, and described the property afterwards mortgaged; it not appearing that the cross bill asked to have it charged with payment of alimony, or alleged that it was community property, or described no other lands.

2. Receipt from plaintiff in a divorce suit, after a decree therein restraining him from disposing of or encumbering his property, except that he is permitted to carry on and pursue his usual and ordinary business, of money remaining unpaid on a note previously given by him and secured on his land, will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be held within the exception.

3. A mortgage by its terms given "for the better securing the payment of the * * * money secured * * * by note, and the other moneys hereinafter mentioned," authorizes the attorney's fees provided for to be made a lien on the land by judgment of foreclosure.

Action by the Sun Insurance Company against George E. White and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant Frankie White appeals. Modified.

For former opinion, see 50 Pac. 546.

Rhodes & Rhodes, for appellant. W. T. Baggett, Dunne & McPike, and Walter H. Linforth (Johnson, Linforth & Whitaker, of counsel), for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action for the foreclosure of a mortgage executed to the plaintiff by the defendant George E. White. The appellant, Frankie White, was made a defendant, under the allegation that she claims an interest in the property which is subordinate to the lien of the plaintiff's mortgage. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant Frankie White has appealed directly therefrom.

The note and mortgage upon which the action is brought were executed November 1, 1888, and the action was commenced May 19, 1894. In 1885 White commenced an action against the appellant for divorce, in which, in February, 1886, she filed a cross complaint, wherein she asked for permanent alimony and maintenance, and that such portion of the common property as should be proper should be assigned and set apart to her; describing, also, the lands which are described in the mortgage. It does not appear whether these lands were described as community or separate property; nor does it appear whether the complaint contained a description of any other lands than those described in the mortgage. She also filed in the offices of the recorders in the counties in which the lands are situated notices of the pendency of the action, and the object of her cross complaint. The court finds that the plaintiff had actual notice before the execution of the note and mortgage of the pendency of the action for divorce, and of the filing and contents of the cross complaint, and also finds that all of the lands described in the mortgage were the separate property of the husband. In May, 1889, a judgment of divorce was rendered between the parties, and the whole of the community property was awarded to the defendant therein; and at the same time there was reserved for her the right to apply, in case the community property should be insufficient for her support, for a supplemental decree assigning to her a sufficient amount for her support out of the separate property of her husband, and, until such supplemental decree was made, she was to receive for her support and maintenance $200 per calendar month. By the decree the husband was restrained, until such supplemental decree should be entered, from disposing of or encumbering his property, except that he was permitted to carry on and pursue his usual and ordinary business. A certified copy of this interlocutory decree was served upon the plaintiff May 16, 1889. February 9, 1895, a final decree was rendered in the divorce suit, wherein the court adjudged that the defendant, Frankie White, should have and recover from the plaintiff, George E. White, the sum of $100,000, and that said sum should include all allowances for future maintenance and support, and all allowances for alimony theretofore made, except such as was then in arrears. A receiver had been appointed in the action in June, 1894, and, after the entry of the final decree, he sold the interest of George E. White in the lands described in the mortgage to Frankie White for the sum of $70,000, and in August, 1896, after the confirmation of this sale, executed to her a deed therefor. Upon these facts the appellant contends that she acquired a title to the land superior to that of the plaintiff by reason of its mortgage thereon, and that, upon the findings of the court, judgment should have been entered in her favor.

We need not consider the effect of filing with the county recorders a notice of the pendency of the action, inasmuch as the court finds that before the execution of the note and mortgage the plaintiff had actual notice of the pendency of the action, and of the contents of the cross complaint. The proposition contended for by the appellant is that her cross complaint, by virtue of the allegations therein contained, constituted a lis pendens, which so affected the property therein described that any person dealing with the same would be bound by whatever judgment or order might be made in reference to the property. Stated in another form, the proposition is that, in an action for a divorce by a wife against her husband, she can, by mere allegations in her complaint, without any order of the court in reference thereto, impress upon the community property, and also upon the separate property of the husband, a charge for the amount of alimony that may eventually be awarded her, which will constitute a lien thereon as of the date of filing her complaint, and that a person thereafter dealing with the husband in good faith, and in the ordinary course of business, who acquires an interest in the property, takes such interest subject to this lien. It is not claimed that there is any statutory provision in support of this proposition, but it is rested upon the legal effect of a lis pendens,—that a person dealing with property which is at the time the subject of judicial investigation takes it subject to the result of such investigation, and that the claim of the wife to enforce alimony out of specific property brings that property before the court with the same effect. In Lord v. Hough, 43 Cal. 581, it was said: "The pendency of proceedings for divorce does not of itself interrupt the exercise of the husband's powers. The property does not come into the custody of the court by the institution of the suit. The husband has still the control of it and full power of disposition of it. He is held to equal good faith in all transactions relating to it as before the commencement of the suit. He is subject to the same restrictions in its disposal. He cannot make a voluntary conveyance of any portion of the property, with the intent to deprive the wife of her claim in anticipation of divorce, any more than he could make such fraudulent disposition in anticipation of her widowhood." After an action for divorce has been commenced, the court in which the action is pending has the power to set apart a portion of the community property, or of the separate property of the husband, as a security or fund for the payment of alimony, or to charge the same with its payment; and it may, under proper circumstances, enjoin the husband from alienating or incumbering the property. So, too, a conveyance or incumbrance made by the husband with the intent to deprive the wife of the means of obtaining alimony may be set aside, at her instance, as fraudulent and void. In the present case, however, the court finds that the transaction between the plaintiff and the husband was bona fide, and that the money was loaned by the plaintiff and received by the husband without any purpose or intention to hinder, delay, or prevent her from enforcing any claim she might have, or any order the court might make, against him. Section 140, Civ. Code, provides: "The court may require the husband to give reasonable security for providing maintenance or making any payments required under the provisions of this chapter, and may enforce the same by the appointment of a receiver, or by any other remedy applicable to the case." This is the only statutory power given upon this subject, and, as the Civil Code "establishes the law of this state upon the subjects to which it relates" (section 4), it must be held that it is exclusive, and that the wife can have the property of the husband set apart as security for the payment of alimony, or burdened with the charge for her maintenance, only by an order of the court therefor. In the present case no action was taken by the court until after the execution of the note and mortgage, and, as the court finds that the mortgage was executed in good faith and for a valid consideration, it must prevail over any title or interest in the land subsequently acquired.

Certain authorities are cited by the appellant in support of her contention, and language is found in some of the opinions therein tending to support her claim. Mr. Freeman, also, in his treatise on Judgments (section 196), after stating that the doctrine of lis pendens is applicable only when the object of the action is to affect specific property, and that the rules pertaining thereto have no application in a suit for divorce and alimony, unless the wife designates in her complaint certain specific property which she seeks to subject to her claim, says: "If the pleadings in a suit for divorce describe specific property, in respect to which relief is sought, either by making it chargeable with the payment of alimony, or setting it apart for the use of, or as the property of, one of the parties, or of partitioning or dividing it between them, the doctrines of lis pendens apply,"—citing in support thereof some of the same authorities. But the decisions in the cases cited by the appellant, as well as those cited by Mr. Freeman in support of his statement, will be found, upon examination, to have been made either by virtue of some statutory provision, or upon the peculiar circumstances of the case before the court. In some of the cases the decision was rendered upon the ground that the complaint alleged that the property therein described constituted all the property out of which alimony could be recovered. In others the husband had been enjoined by the court from disposing of the property pending the action. In Wilkinson v. Elliott, 43 Kan. 590, 23 Pac. 614, and in Sapp v. Wightman, 103 Ill. 150, the court expressed similar views, but held that they were not applicable to the facts in the case. In Tolerton v. Williard, 30 Ohio St. 579, the decision was placed upon the ground that the wife, in addition to her claim for alimony, had claimed an equitable estate in the land. In Powell v. Campbell, 20 Nev. 232, 20 Pac. 156, the husband suffered default to the wife's claim for the property, and had conveyed it for less than half its value a few days before the hearing of the case. In Daniel v. Hodges, 87 N. C. 95, the property had been assigned to the wife pending the suit, by an order of the court, and she was in possession at the time it was conveyed by the husband. But, without further considering the weight to be given to these authorities, it is enough to say that the appellant has not brought her case within the principles which, under the authorities she cites, would entitle her to a reversal of the judgment. In the jurisdictions where these cases arose, she could not claim a priority of right in the land, unless she had asked to have certain property which she had specifically described appropriated for the payment of the judgment which she might obtain. In her cross complaint in the divorce suit she asked judgment for permanent alimony, and assigning and setting apart to her "such portion of the common property of the said George E. White and this defendant as should be just and proper"; and, although it appears that she specifically described therein the lands mentioned in the mortgage, it does not appear that she asked to have these lands, or any part thereof, set apart as security for her maintenance. Neither does it appear that these are the only lands which were described in her cross complaint, or that she alleged that they were community property. Her prayer was that the court would set apart "such portion of the community property" as should be just and proper, but the court finds that the lands described in the mortgage were the separate property of the husband, and it does not appear that it was alleged in her cross complaint that they were community property. The evidence upon which the findings in this respect were made is not before us, and, as all intendments are in support of the judgment of the court below, it may be assumed that the appellant did not specifically describe in her cross complaint any property which she asked to have charged with the payment of alimony, and that the description of the property which she gave was merely for the purpose of aiding the court in determining the amount of alimony which she should receive. In this connection the language of the court in Sapp v. Wightman, supra, is very apt: "Although the lands are named in the bill, no right is asserted in respect to them; nor are they, or any part of them, asked to be assigned for alimony, or any other relief asked in regard to them. They are mentioned for the apparent purpose of showing the amount of defendant's property, as bearing upon the sum to be allowed for alimony."

By an agreement between the plaintiff and George E. White at the date of the note and mortgage, the amount thereof was to be paid to him at such times and in such sums as might be agreeable to both. Of the principal sum named in the note, about $8,000 was paid after the entry of the interlocutory decree in the divorce suit, and it is contended by the appellant that for this amount the plaintiff's lien should be postponed to hers. By the interlocutory decree, however, the plaintiff was permitted to pursue and carry on his usual and ordinary business, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it must be held that the receipt by him from the company of the amount remaining unpaid upon the note that he had previously executed, and the payment thereof by the company, were within the terms of this exception. The contention of the appellant that the loan by the plaintiff was ultra vires, by reason of the fact that it was not made out of its "capital and accumulations," as required by section 427, Civ. Code, is met by the finding of the court that the moneys loaned by the plaintiff "constituted parts of its capital and accumulations."

The court found that certain taxes upon the lands described in the mortgage were not paid by the mortgagor, and that thereupon the plaintiff paid the same, and the amount thus paid by the plaintiff was included in the judgment. It is contended by the appellant that there was no evidence before the court that the plaintiff paid any part of the taxes, and, as this assignment of error is admitted by the respondent, the judgment must be reversed. The court was authorized by the terms of the mortgage to allow counsel fees for its foreclosure, and to make the amount a lien upon the land. The mortgage, by express terms, is given "for the better securing the payment of the said sum of money secured to be paid by the said promissory note, and the other moneys hereinafter mentioned." The judgment is reversed.

PER CURIAM. Respondent has filed herein a remission of its claim for taxes alleged in the complaint to have been paid by it for the mortgagor upon the lands described in the mortgage, and a consent that the judgment of the superior court be modified by striking out of and deducting therefrom the amounts found by the court to have been paid by the respondent for said taxes, with interest thereon, at the rate mentioned in the mortgage, from the times of payment until the rendition of the judgment. See Fox v. Mining Co. (Cal.) 54 Pac. 731. The judgment heretofore rendered herein is therefore modified by striking therefrom the words "the judgment is reversed," and inserting the following: "The cause is therefore remanded to the superior court, and that court is directed to modify its judgment by deducting from the amount of $88,864.47—the amount which the plaintiff is thereby adjudged to have and recover from the defendant George E. White—that portion thereof which was rendered for the several sums found by the court to have been paid by the plaintiff as taxes upon said lands, together with the interest allowed upon said sums; and, as so modified, the judgment shall stand affirmed. The costs of this appeal are to be borne by the respondent."

INSURANCE—LIABILITY FOR PREMIUM.

Insurance policies "on the estate" of deceased, procured by one of the heirs as covering his interest in the property, and his liability for the premium, are not affected by the administratrix, the other heir, repudiating any concern in them.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Phoenix Insurance Company against Robert J. Hancock. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William F. Gibson, for appellant. E. W. McGraw, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action to recover the unpaid premium on several policies of fire insurance issued by plaintiff on certain buildings which are part of the estate of one Samuel Hancock, deceased. Said estate is in process of administration, and the administratrix thereof and the defendant in this action, Robert J. Hancock, are the sole heirs of said deceased. The policies purported, respectively, to insure "the estate of Samuel Hancock, deceased," against loss on the several buildings described. There was evidence that they were issued on the procurement of defendant, and were delivered to him. Neither himself nor the administratrix was named personally in the instruments, and she repudiated any concern therein. Defendant claims that the policies are not contracts of his, that they do not insure his interest in the property, and, hence, that he ought not to be liable for the premium. There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff.

We see no difficulty in the case. The phrase, "estate of Samuel Hancock, deceased," used in the policies to describe the party or parties insured, was sufficient to extend the protection of the insurance to the interest of defendant as well as that of the administratrix in the property. Clinton v. Insurance Co., 45 N. Y. 454; Weed v. Insurance Co., 133 N. Y. 401, 31 N. E. 231; Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co., 66 Md. 339, 7 Atl. 905; The Sydney, 27 Fed. 125. Compare Civ. Code, § 2591. Although defendant had no authority to procure insurance for the administratrix, yet she could have ratified his act, even after the occurrence of a loss. Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 528. That she did not do so, but declined any interest in the policies, could not impair their effect as insurance upon defendant's interest in the property, nor affect his liability for the premium. Finney v. Insurance Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 192, 196. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

I concur: SEARLS, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

O'DONNELL v. SLACK, Judge. (S. F. 1,120.) (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1899.)

DEAD BODIES—REMOVAL—EXPENSES—ALLOWANCE—SUPERIOR COURTS.

1. The superior court has no jurisdiction to award the custody of a body of a decedent to a stranger to his blood, to the exclusion of the surviving wife, with directions to such stranger to transport the body to another place for interment.

2. Neither the probate court nor the personal representative of a decedent has any right to his body, nor any right to control the manner of disposing of the same, as against the wife of decedent.

3. Proper expenses of the disposition of the body of the decedent may be made a charge against his estate.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

In the matter of the estate of Roger O'Donnell, deceased, an order was made by Charles W. Slack, judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, giving Matthew Martin authority to remove deceased's body to Ireland, and Annie O'Donnell applies for a writ of review. Order annulled.

Stafford & Stafford, for petitioner. John A. Percy, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an application for a writ of review. Roger O'Donnell, husband of petitioner, died testate. His will was admitted to probate in the city and county of San Francisco. It contained no provision or direction for the disposition of his body. During the course of administration the widow filed a petition setting forth that the deceased had expressed a last wish that his remains should be buried beside those of his father and mother, at Finn Town, Ireland, and praying for an order enabling her to fulfill this request. The court made its order, authorizing and directing the executor "to pay over to Annie O'Donnell, the widow of the deceased, the sum of seven hundred dollars, out of the funds of the estate, to be used and expended by Annie O'Donnell in defraying the expense of removing from the city and county of San Francisco to Finn Town, Ireland, and there suitably interring, the body of Roger O'Donnell, deceased." The final account subsequently filed by the executor showed payment to Annie O'Donnell of the seven hundred dollars for the purposes named. The account was allowed and settled, and a decree of distribution was entered; but on the same day the court made the following order: "Good cause appearing therefor, it is hereby ordered that the fund of seven hundred dollars heretofore, by order herein dated February 1, 1897, allowed out of said estate for the purpose of defraying the expense of the removal of the body of deceased to Ireland, and there interring the same, and which fund, less the sum of fifty-five dollars already expended in preliminary preparations for the removal of said body, is now in the possession of John A. Percy, Esq., be retained by said John A. Percy, Esq., in his possession, subject to the further order of the court." On April 26th the court made its decree finally discharging the executor. On August 13th John A. Percy, who had been the attorney for Annie O'Donnell, filed a petition stating that he still retained in his possession the funds set apart for the transportation and burial of the body of the deceased, and prayed an order appointing some suitable person to execute the order of court. The court fixed a date for the hearing of this petition, and ordered service of notice upon all interested parties. The widow appeared, and by verified pleading set up that she had been sick, and therefore unable to take the body to Ireland; that she had recovered, and was willing, and would be ready within three weeks, to remove the body,—and asked that Percy be directed to pay to her the moneys in his hands. She objected to the payment of the money to any one else, objected to any other person being empowered to remove the body, denied the jurisdiction of the court to modify its original order, and "respectfully informs the court that she does not and will not consent to the removal of the body of her deceased husband to Ireland or elsewhere by any other person than petitioner herself." After the hearing the court made its order commanding that the body be immediately removed to Fynn Town, Ireland, and giving Matthew Martin authority, and directing him, to execute the order, and further directing Percy to pay over to Martin the money in his hands, or so much thereof as might be necessary for the indicated purposes. Martin is a stranger in blood to the deceased.

By this writ there is sought to be annulled the order last above mentioned, directing Martin to transport the body of the deceased to Ireland, and there supervise its interment. The validity of the original order, by which the $700 was ordered set apart to and paid over to Annie O'Donnell, the widow, for the same purpose, is not called in question. The single proposition which is seriously argued is whether the court in probate did or did not exceed its jurisdiction in attempting to deliver to one not of kin to the deceased his body, and in directing a particular disposition to be made of that body by this stranger. It is also further contended that the order is in excess of jurisdiction, because the moneys directed to be paid under the original order had in fact been paid; that the executor had complied with the directions of the court as to payment, and had entered the payment as a credit to himself in his final account; that his final account had been allowed, and final distribution of the estate decreed, and the control of the property had therefore passed from the court. Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204; Wheeler v. Bolton, 54 Cal. 302. The last proposition, which involves a consideration of the court's jurisdiction and control of the burial fund after entry of the decree of distribution, we do not think it necessary to consider, for the reason that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to award the custody of the body of the deceased to a stranger to his blood, to the exclusion of the next of kin; indeed, that it exceeded its jurisdiction in attempting to make any award of the custody, or to direct any disposition to be made of the body.

The body of one whose estate is in probate unquestionably forms no part of the property of that estate. It is recognized that the individual has a sufficient proprietary interest in his own body after his death to be able to make valid and binding testamentary disposition of it. The court in probate and the personal representative acquire jurisdiction from the last testament to see that its provisions in this regard, as in all others, are duly executed; but where, as in this case, the will is silent, the court in probate has no such power. The duty of the burial of the dead is made an express legal obligation (Pen. Code, § 292); but, aside from the obligation, there is a right, well defined and universally recognized, that in disposing of the body of deceased the last sad offices belong of right to the next of kin, within which phrase, as here employed, is included the surviving husband or wife. This right had its origin in sentiment, in affection for the dead, in religious belief in some form of future life. It therefore early became a subject of cognizance by the ecclesiastical courts. But, while thus having its origin in affection and religious sentiment, it soon came to be recognized as a strictly legal right; and the next of kin, while not, in the full proprietary sense, "owning" the body of the deceased, have property rights in the body which will be protected, and for a violation of which they are entitled to indemnification. Thus, if the right is interfered with, damages will be awarded. Smiley v. Bartlett, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 234. "That there is no right of 'property' in a dead body, using the word in its ordinary sense, may well be admitted, yet the burial of the dead is a subject which interests the feelings of mankind to a much greater degree than many matters of actual property. There is a duty, imposed by the universal feelings of mankind, to be discharged by some one towards the dead, a duty, and we may also say a right, to protect from violation, and a duty on the part of others to abstain from violation; and it may therefore be considered as a sort of quasi property, and it would be discreditable in any system of law not to provide a remedy in such a case." Pierce v. Proprietors, 10 R. I. 227. The whole question is learnedly considered in Ruggles' Report, 4 Bradf. Sur. 503. The conclusions there reached are those which have been generally adopted by the courts of the land. One of those conclusions is "that the right to bury a corpse and to preserve its remains is a legal right, which the courts of law will recognize and protect." Another is that "such right, in the absence of any testamentary disposition, belongs exclusively to the next of kin." And another, that "the right to protect the remains includes the right to preserve them by separate burial, to select the place of sepulture, and to change it at pleasure." In employing the phrase "next of kin," Mr. Ruggles explains that it was not used for the purpose of denying or even questioning the legal right of a surviving husband to bury his wife's remains. Hackett v. Hackett, 18 R. I. 155, 26 Atl. 42. The same right belongs to the surviving wife. Hackett v. Hackett, supra; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238; Perley, Mortuary Law, 27; Hadsell v. Hadsell, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 196; Durell v. Hayward, 9 Gray, 248. Therefore, in a case such as this, neither the court in probate nor the personal representative has any right to the body of the deceased, nor any right to control the manner of disposing of the remains, nor to dictate the place of interment. The proper expenses of such disposition may well be a charge against the estate, but the duty and right of burial are quite different things from the duty and right of auditing and paying the expenses of such burial. It is concluded, therefore, that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in intrusting the body of the deceased to Matthew Martin, and in directing that by him the body should be taken to Finn Town, Ireland, and there interred. The order is therefore annulled.

CLARK v. BENNETT. (S. F. 792.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1899.)

COLLISION WITH STREET CAR—NEGLIGENCE AND CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Evidence for plaintiff showed that, just before driving his wagon across defendant's street-car track, he looked and listened, but did not see an approaching car until he was nearly on the track. The car was then about 50 yards away, and he could have crossed, if those in charge, after he called to them, and after they saw him, had lessened its speed, as they could have done. Owing to obstructions, he could not see the car, or be seen by those in charge of it, until he reached the street from an adjoining lot. Held, that the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

2. Evidence showed that defendant's street car was traveling faster than the prescribed limit, and there was evidence that those in charge, after they discovered plaintiff on the track with a wagon, could, with ordinary diligence, have stopped the car before it reached him; and plaintiff testified that the car was 50 yards distant from the crossing at the time he was discovered by those in charge of the car. Held, that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.

3. An instruction, in an action for injury to a person crossing the track, that a street railroad has only an equal right with the traveling public to the use of the street whereon its track is built, was not improper because omitting some few exceptions not material in the case, such as that, when an ordinary vehicle meets a car on its track, it must give way to the car.

4. There is no error in refusing an instruction sufficiently included in instructions given.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; Hunt, Judge.

Action by Frank Clark against Sanford Bennett, receiver of the San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. While plaintiff was driving a wagon across the railroad track of the defendant he was struck by a car and severely injured, and he brings this action to recover damages for personal injuries occasioned by the collision. The verdict and judgment were for plaintiff, and from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendant appeals. The place where the injury occurred is within the city and county of San Francisco, and the road in question is a street railroad operated by electricity. Appellant's main contentions for a reversal are (1) that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence which should have prevented his recovery; (2) that there was not sufficient evidence to show that there was negligence at the time of the accident on the part of the employes who were running the car which caused the injury; and (3) that the court committed errors prejudicial to appellant in giving and refusing instructions to the jury.

1. We cannot say that as a matter of law the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence; that is, that "all the facts plainly and inevitably point to such negligence, leaving no room for argument or doubt." Bailey v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 328, 42 Pac. 914. The railroad track was on a public street called the "San José Road," and ran easterly and westerly. At the place of the accident there are some vegetable gardens on the south line of the road. The gardens are fenced, and there is a gate in the fence, through which people travel in going from the public street into the gardens, and in coming from the gardens out into the street. The railroad track lies on the southerly side of the street, and is about 15 feet from the fence and gate. From the gate to the southerly rail of the track there is an up grade of four or five feet, and a road is made from the gate to the railroad track by a fill which is somewhat narrow. The portion of the street which is on the southerly side of the track is uneven, and cannot be traveled over with vehicles; and, in order to get from the vegetable gardens to the traveled part of the street, the railroad track has to be crossed upon the filled-in, narrow road above mentioned. This way from the railroad track into the gardens is not a public road, but it was frequently traveled by the owners of the gardens and others having business with them. The respondent was in the habit of traveling this way nearly every day. At the time of the accident the respondent drove his wagon up over this filled way onto the railroad track, and while on the track was struck by the car; and it is contended by appellant that he was guilty of contributory negligence, because he drove upon the track without due caution. We cannot say, however, that this was so as a matter of law. He testified that when coming out of the gardens he got off his wagon and opened the gate, and then looked up the track, and could neither hear nor see an approaching car; that, in coming towards the track with his wagon, he did not see an approaching car until he was nearly or about on the track; that the car was then about 50 yards away, and that he believed he could cross the track before the car reached him; that he could have done so, if those in charge of the car, after he had hollered to them and after they had seen him, had lessened the speed of the car, as they could and should have done. It is true that before the respondent drove out of the gate, owing to obstruction of view by buildings, trees, etc., he could not see up the track, and those on the car could not see him until he came upon the road; still, he did look up the road when he first came onto it after opening the gate, and we cannot say that the jury were bound to find that his subsequent acts constituted contributory negligence. The case is certainly somewhat different from one involving the approach of a heavy train and locomotive of a steam railway passing through the country at a high rate of speed, and at long intervals, as in Herbert v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651. See Driscoll v. Railway Co., 97 Cal. 566, 32 Pac. 591. It cannot be said that a person is guilty of contributory negligence merely because he attempts to cross a street railway when a car is approaching. If that were so, he could never attempt to cross such a track in the crowded parts of a city, where there is practically always an approaching car; and in such case, as street cars go at a comparatively slow rate of speed, and are quickly stopped, the question of negligence would depend upon the proximity or remoteness of the car, and upon all the other circumstances surrounding the occurrence. In such a situation the traveler cannot be held to exercise the very highest prudence and judgment; it is sufficient if he exercises that degree of care and prudence and good sense which men who possess those qualities in an ordinary or average degree exercise.

2. Neither can we hold that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the jury in finding that the employes on the car were guilty of negligence. There was certainly some evidence to the point that the car was traveling faster than the prescribed limit,—eight miles an hour. And there was evidence tending to show that those in charge of the car, after they discovered the position of the respondent, could, with ordinary diligence, have stopped the car before it reached the crossing. The evidence as to the distance of the car from the crossing at the time the respondent was discovered by the employes on the car was somewhat conflicting; but the respondent testified that the distance was 50 yards, and we cannot say that the whole evidence on that point did not warrant the jury in finding that with reasonable diligence the car might have been prevented from striking the respondent.

3. We see no good reason for reversing the judgment on account of any alleged prejudicial errors of the court in the matter of instructing the jury. Appellant's principal contentions on this subject are that the court erred in giving instruction No. 9 asked by respondent, and in refusing to give proposed instruction No. 2 asked by appellant; and that for these errors the judgment should be reversed. The attack on No. 9 is directed against its second clause, which is as follows: "A street railroad has only an equal right with the traveling public to the use of the street whereon its track is built." The court might properly have added to this the exceptions referred to in Shea v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 414, and in Bailey v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 320, 42 Pac. 914. In the Shea Case the court say: "The company, however, as we understand the law, has only an equal right with the traveling public to the use of the street, with some few exceptions, not material to the question, which arise entirely from the fact that the cars are designed to run only on the railroad track,—such as that, when an ordinary vehicle meets a car on its track, it must give way to the car." The Bailey Case is not seriously in conflict with the Shea Case. In the Bailey Case the court below had granted a nonsuit, and this court held that the nonsuit was properly granted, because the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; and the commissioner who wrote the opinion, in discussing generally the whole question of negligence as applicable to a case where there has been a collision between a street-railroad car and an ordinary traveler on foot or in a vehicle, used general language as follows: "The street car has, and from the necessities of the case must have, a right of way upon that portion of the street upon which alone it can travel, and which it cannot leave, paramount to that of persons in ordinary vehicles;" but he immediately adds "that this superior right is not exclusive, and does not prevent others from driving or passing across or along its tracks at any place or time, when by so doing it will not materially interfere with the progress of its cars. In other words, the better right is not an exclusive right, and can only be enforced against those who needlessly impose obstacles to its free and unrestricted exercise,"—citing the Shea Case, among others. And further on he says that this principle is founded upon two reasons: "(1) That the car cannot turn out or leave the track, while the vehicle or passenger can; (2) these companies are chartered, nominally, at least, for the convenience of the public." There was no question in that case about instructions to the jury, and the main significance of what was there said was that the railroad cars had a superior right of way over that portion of the street on which the track was laid, as against travelers on foot or in vehicles, and that, as the latter could easily go elsewhere on the street, they had no right to obstruct the passage of the car by needlessly remaining on the track. But, as a traveler has the right to cross the track if he does so with proper care, we do not see how the proposition stated in the opinion in the Bailey Case is material in determining the quantum of care or negligence exhibited either by the traveler or the manager of the car, in a case of collision. Therefore, even admitting that the instruction complained of should not have been quite so broad, yet we do not see that its defect in this respect was material in this particular case, or important enough to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

The proposed instruction No. 2 asked by appellant and refused by the court is as follows: "A person about to cross a street-railroad track is obliged to use due care to keep out of the way of moving cars. On approaching a track he is bound to look for approaching cars, and, if his sight be obstructed by any objects, to listen or take other satisfactory means to assure himself that no car is approaching that will injure him. The failure to take such precautions is negligence." The alleged propriety of this instruction is based principally upon language used in the opinion in the case of Everett v. Railway Co., 115 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 207, and 46 Pac. 889. That case also came here upon an exception to a denial of the court below of a motion for a nonsuit, and no question was presented touching the giving or refusal of instructions. Conceding that in the case at bar the instruction refused might have been properly given, yet we do not think that its refusal warrants the reversal of the judgment, because in other instructions given by the court the principle contained in the refused instruction was sufficiently stated. The court, among other instructions asked by appellant, gave the following: "If the plaintiff approached and attempted to cross the track of the railway operated by the defendant without exercising due care in ascertaining if any car was approaching which might injure him, your verdict should be for the defendant, unless you find from the evidence," etc. (the rest of the instruction is upon another subject). Also: "If, when plaintiff first saw the approaching car, it became apparent to him, or should have been apparent to him (after it became apparent), that a collision between the car operated by defendant and plaintiff's wagon (if it did so become apparent) was inevitable, if he attempted to cross the track, then the plaintiff was bound to exercise prudence to prevent injury to himself, if possible; and if he was negligent in this respect, and such negligence contributed directly to the injury, your verdict should be for the defendant." There were other instructions touching this point also given at the request of appellant. In its charge to the jury, of its own motion, the court, among other things, said: "It is the duty of the railroad company to endeavor to avoid injuring a party traversing the street. It is the duty of the party traversing the street to look out for himself, and to exercise ordinary care for his own protection. To authorize a recovery by plaintiff, it must appear that he exercised ordinary care to avoid the injury complained of; that is, that he acted with ordinary prudence under the circumstances." Considering these instructions, and that all the instructions given, as a whole, stated the law correctly, and fairly to both sides, we do not think that the refusal to use the precise language contained in the offered instruction refused could have prejudiced the rights of the appellant.

Appellant contends that the verdict was against law, because it was contrary to some of the instructions given, and particularly that it was inconsistent with the instruction No. 7 given at the request of appellant; but this contention cannot be maintained. The instruction No. 7, as well as the other instructions alluded to, left open questions of fact which could be decided either way without a violation of the instructions.

There are no other points necessary to be specially noticed. It may be said of the case that the evidence left it very doubtful whether the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, and whether the employes of the appellant were guilty of negligence; but it is also true that the evidence was such as to leave those questions within the province of the jury. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HENSHAW, J. I concur in the judgment, and generally in the opinion; but, as to proposed instruction No. 2, I think it was properly refused as being an incorrect exposition of the law. The proposed instruction makes identical the duty of one who is about to cross the right of way of a steam railroad with that of one who is about to cross the track of a street-car line. From the nature of the business of steam railroads; from the character of the conveyances and of the motor power; from the necessity for swift transportation; from the fact that they carry the mails of the country; from the additional facts that the trains are of immense weight, that rapidity in locomotion is a high desideratum, that they cannot be easily and readily stopped, that they move upon their own right of way, that the number of them passing a given point is comparatively few,—the rule of conduct made necessary to one who is about to cross their right of way, even upon the line of a public highway, has become crystalized into a single phrase. It is a well-recognized rule which requires the traveler, if necessary for his own protection, "to stop and look and listen," and imputes negligence to him if he does not; but this rule of the Flemming Case, 49 Cal. 257, of the Glascock Case, 73 Cal. 138, 14 Pac. 518, and of many other like cases, was by the proposed instruction sought to be extended and made applicable to one who is about to cross the track of a street railroad operating upon a public highway. The distinction between the two kinds of public vehicles is too broad, the differences between their characters too substantial, to justify their obliteration, and to impose upon the citizen occupying a highway, where his right is the same as that of the street-car company, a duty identical with that which is his when he attempts to cross the right of way of a steam-railroad company. The proposed instruction was a clear attempt to place street-railroad companies and steam-railroad companies, in this regard, upon exactly the same footing, and for this additional reason it was properly refused.

PEOPLE v. KEHOE. (Cr. 448.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1898.)
SEDUCTION—PROMISE OF MARRIAGE—CHASTITY—EVIDENCE.

1. Promise to marry, and reliance on it, is proved by the girl's testimony that she submitted to defendant's embraces under his promise to marry her when they got old enough.

2. Though one is under 18 years old, so that he cannot obtain a marriage license without consent of his parents, he may be convicted of seduction under promise of marriage.

3. Unchaste character previous to the alleged seduction is not shown by mere improprieties, or by intercourse subsequent thereto.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Leslie Kehoe was convicted of seduction, and appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Buck, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of seduction under promise of marriage, and appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying him a new trial. The sections of the Penal Code bearing upon the offense are the following:

"Sec. 268. Every person who under a promise of marriage seduces and has sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than five years, or by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"Sec. 269. The intermarriage of the parties subsequent to the commission of the offense is a bar to a prosecution for a violation of the last section, provided such marriage take place prior to the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information charging such offense."

Defendant and the girl with whose seduction he was charged were both school children, and about the same age. At the time of the seduction, and of the first act of sexual intercourse, each was about 16 years old. The girl testified that she submitted to his embraces under his promise to marry her "when he was old enough," and "when they were old enough." She says: "There was no time ever set when we were to be married, only after he became of age, and became old enough to be married, we would be. I didn't know whether we would be married in one year or two years or three years or five years. I knew when he would become of age." The girl's evidence, if believed by the jury, was sufficient to support the conviction. It proved the promise, and her reliance upon it in submitting herself to the defendant's desires. But it is very earnestly pressed upon the consideration of this court that the defendant, under the facts, does not come within the purview of this statute. It is argued that a boy of 16 is incapable, under our law, of consenting to and consummating marriage; that only an unmarried male of 18 years or upward can do so (Civ. Code, § 56); that, even when the male has reached the age of 18 years, he is still under disability, and may not obtain the requisite marriage license without the consent of his parent or guardian, and that, if such consent should be withheld,—and in this case it was withheld,—he could not legally marry until he attained the age of 21 years (Civ. Code, § 69); that, as a boy of 16 is incapable of consenting to and consummating marriage, so his promise to marry is invalid, and could not be made the foundation of a civil action, much less of a criminal; that section 269 of the Penal Code makes provision for barring a criminal prosecution under the preceding section of the Code by intermarriage of the parties; and that, if section 268 of the Penal Code be held to apply to a case such as this, it must result in the hardship, if not in the absurdity, of the law, that an adult offender, who has arrived at years of discretion, whose judgment is matured, and whose passions presumably are better under control, may avail himself of marriage with his victim, and so escape criminal prosecution, while the same avenue of escape would be absolutely closed to a young lad of immature judgment and tender years, who at the worst had but indulged the innate propensity of youth. Still further, it is pointed out that a boy of 14 or 15 years of age may be thus convicted of the seduction of a mature woman of 30 or 40; and, finally, it is insisted that the statute has in contemplation only male offenders who have passed their nonage. This argument is not without much force, yet, after having given to it the full weight to which we deem it entitled, we are nevertheless of opinion that it cannot prevail. The law is designed to protect female chastity; for, as said by Judge Cooley, "whenever it shall be true of any country that the women as a general fact are not chaste, the foundations of civil society will be broken up." People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134. If a previously chaste woman submits herself to the embraces of a man, under promise of marriage from him, upon which she in fact relies, the conviction, generally speaking, may not be avoided by proof that the promise was not legal and binding. The exceptions to the rule are found in those cases in which the promise itself is base and meretricious, and known to be such by the consenting woman. Thus, if a married man seduces a woman under promise of marriage, she not knowing that he has a wife, his promise is illegal and invalid, but this fact does not excuse him. The woman, in ignorance of the fact, was justified in relying upon that promise; but if, at the time of giving her consent, she knew the fact to be that the man was married, and that, therefore, the promise was necessarily conditional upon the death or the putting away of his present wife, so base a contract would not excuse her in law for the surrender of her chastity. The contract itself would be void, as against public policy, and the woman's reliance upon it could not be extenuated or excused. People v. Alger, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 333. But, within the limitations thus indicated, the general rule is, and we think it should be, that the promise need not be such a legal promise as would support an action for breach of promise of marriage, provided it be such a promise as will justify the reliance upon it of the woman betrayed. In this case, the promise was not legally binding, and, as the girl knew the age of the defendant, and is chargeable with knowledge of the law, it may even be presumed against her that she knew that the boy was incapable at the time of making a valid and legally binding contract of marriage,—that any promise which he made could certainly be repudiated by him upon attaining his majority. But this is not determinative of the main question. The boy was not incapable of making a promise of marriage, which in good faith and in good morals it was his bounden duty to perform. In such a case as this, where the presumption of legal knowledge upon the part of the girl is, to say the least, a strained one, it is far more natural to assume that her reliance sprang from her confidence in the defendant, and from her belief that, aside from any question of the legally binding force of his words, he would keep faith with her. It is precisely such confidence and such belief which is to be protected by the law, and herein we quote with approval the language of the supreme court of Indiana in Callahan v. State, 63 Ind. 198: "There is nothing in the statute that requires the promise of marriage to be free from all legal objections, viewed as the foundation of an action for its breach. Its purpose was to prevent the obtaining of the female's consent to sexual intercourse by means of a promise of marriage; to protect her from the arts of designing and unprincipled men, in whom she may repose trust and confidence, and to whose solicitations she may yield, believing that their promises of marriage are made in good faith, and will be fulfilled. It is not to be supposed that she will pause to consider, even if she were capable of judging, whether the promise is valid in law, and one on which she could maintain an action if broken. It is not to be assumed in such case that her consent to the intercourse is given in consequence of her reliance upon an action upon the promise for damages in case of its breach; but it may be given upon the confidence she places in the good faith of the promise, believing, not that it will be broken, but fulfilled." In Kenyon

v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, it is said: "It is not necessary that the promise should be a valid and binding one between the parties. The offense consists in seducing and having illicit connection with an unmarried female under promise of marriage. It is enough that a promise is made which is a consideration for or inducement to the intercourse." In Polk v. State, 40 Ark. 482, the indictment charged merely that the parties to the act were past the age of puberty, and did not charge that they were of full age and able to make valid and binding promises to marry. The court say: "The offense consists in having illicit connection with an unmarried female, who yields to the solicitations of her seducer under the inducement of a promise of marriage. And it may be committed by an infant upon an infant, provided they have reached the age of puberty." In Crozier v. People, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 455, it is said: "Whether the promise is binding or not, if the prosecutrix believes it, the danger and wrong are the same. If the promise is the consideration for or the inducement to the illicit intercourse, the offense is complete. * * * Though infancy may be a good defense to an action for a breach of promise of marriage, I apprehend it would not avail against a prosecution under this act. The offense is certainly of no less magnitude morally, and there is no less necessity for its punishment, because the promise was intended to be, and was in fact, a false pretense."

There was sufficient evidence to justify the finding of the jury that the complaining witness was of previous chaste character. In the first place, the law presumes a woman to be chaste until the contrary is shown. People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134. In the next place, there was affirmative testimony of the girl herself to this effect. The rejected evidence by defendant that she had had sexual intercourse with other men after the date of the alleged seduction was properly excluded, and the admitted evidence that she had permitted certain liberties to be taken with herself by her young male companions was not sufficient to show that, at the time of the seduction, she was of "unchaste character," within the meaning of the law. Chastity, as here employed, means, in the case of an unmarried female, simply that she is virgo intacta, and though one woman may permit familiarities, liberties, or even indecencies, at the thought of which another woman would blush, so long as that woman has not surrendered her virtue she is not put without the pale of the law. Crozier v. People, supra. It is conceivable that a woman may permit or suffer many things which would be regarded as improprieties, and yet hold firmly to her virtue. As is happily said in State v. Brinkhaus, 34 Minn. 285, 25 N. W. 642: "Although a female may from ignorance or other causes have so low a standard of propriety as to commit or permit indelicate acts or familiarities, yet, if she have enough sense of virtue that she would not surrender her person unless seduced to do so under promise of marriage, she could not be said to be an unchaste woman, within the meaning of the statute." The alleged errors of the court in giving and refusing to give instructions do not call for detailed consideration. Of the instructions given, some are criticised as assuming the existence of facts as proved against defendant, but the criticism is not borne out by the court's language. Where so assuming facts, it is apparent that the instruction is an abstract consideration of the crime and of its elements, and is not directed to the particular circumstances of the case at bar. When the court came to more specifically deal with the evidence in the case, it was careful to leave all questions of fact for the determination of the jury. For example, the opening sentence of a long instruction given by the court is as follows: "The law does not require that the promise of marriage should be made at the time the sexual intercourse is had, but it is sufficient if the promise was made at any time before the act was done." It is said of this that it assumes the existence of two facts,—the first the promise of marriage, and the second that the act of sexual intercourse charged had been committed; but a reading of the whole instruction discloses, as has been said, that the court is here abstractly analyzing the necessary elements of the crime, and this very instruction concludes with the following unambiguous and unassailable proposition of law: "Therefore, I instruct you that, if you find that the defendant seduced and had sexual intercourse with Loleta Brewer, that she was of previous chaste character, and that he had previously promised Loleta Brewer to marry her, that she yielded and consented to the act because of such promise, and that she would not have consented if such promise had not been made, then the law will not hold the defendant guiltless." The instructions proposed by the defendant, and refused by the court, were either erroneous in point of law for the very reasons which we have hereinbefore considered, or were open to the objection of charging upon the effect of evidence. Upon the whole, the instructions given upon behalf of defendant were certainly quite as favorable to him as the law permits. We do not think that undue latitude was allowed in the cross-examination of defendant. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

FIRST NAT BANK OF LOS ANGELES v.
MAXWELL et al. (L. A. 316.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1899.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—WAIVER—JUDGMENT
—LIENS—EVIDENCE.

1. Complainant agreed to delay the issuance of an attachment on defendant's property for a week, on condition that defendant should make no conveyance of her property, or change its situation, in the meantime. In violation of such agreement, defendant at once conveyed the property in trust for her children, by a recorded deed. Afterwards, with knowledge of such conveyance and of the financial embarrassment of defendant, complainant took a new note from defendant, secured by a mortgage on other property. Held, that complainant did not thereby waive the right to attack the trust deed as fraudulent.

2. A judgment duly docketed is a lien on real estate previously conveyed by the judgment debtor in fraud of creditors, since the conveyance is void, under the Code.

3. A conveyance made with a personal intent to defraud creditors is fraudulent and void, though the debtor has ample property to pay his debts.

4. The sheriff's return of nulla bona, and the judgment debtor's statement to the officer that she had no property, is conclusive on that point, on an issue as to whether a previous conveyance by the debtor was fraudulent as to creditors.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Suit by the First National Bank of Los Angeles against Amelia C. Maxwell and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. Wells & Lee and C. Edgerton, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Suit to remove a cloud and quiet title to real estate. Findings and judgment were for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. Walter S. Maxwell, the husband of Amelia, their three children, all minors, and Charles A. Baskerville, as trustee, were the other defendants. The property involved was the separate property of Mrs. Maxwell. The facts, briefly stated, are as follows: On and prior to August 23, 1893, Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $9,300; and plaintiff had instructed its attorneys to commence proceedings by attachment against them to collect said indebtedness, and to attach the property here in controversy. Before commencing suit, plaintiff sent for Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, and informed them that an immediate settlement must be made, or proceedings would be taken for its collection.

That said defendants requested delay, saying they had reasonable prospects of settling in a few days. Plaintiff then agreed, "on condition that Mrs. Maxwell would make no disposition of her property, and make no change in the situation of it, that proceedings would be postponed until Saturday." That Mrs. Maxwell then promised, "on her honor,—using those words,"—that she would make or suffer no change in the situation of her property, whereupon plaintiff instructed its attorneys to delay proceedings until the following Saturday. That Mrs. Maxwell, the same day, went to her attorneys, and executed a deed to the defendant Baskerville, conveying to him the property here in controversy in trust for her three minor children, by the terms of which the trustee was to pay the rents and profits thereof, not exceeding $300 per month, to Mrs. Maxwell, for the clothing, support, education, etc., of said children, and any surplus over that sum to be deposited in a savings bank in the name of the children, to be accumulated until the youngest should arrive at majority, when it should be distributed to them. This deed was recorded the same day, and on the next plaintiff was informed of it; and, with knowledge that it had been executed and recorded, the plaintiff took from the Maxwells their promissory note, payable one year after date, with interest payable quarterly, and, if not so paid, the principal to become due and payable upon such default, and a mortgage upon the interest of Mrs. Maxwell in the Llanfranco Block, in the city of Los Angeles, to secure said note. Default was made in the payment of the first quarter's interest, and plaintiff thereupon foreclosed the mortgage, and, after exhausting the mortgaged property, on April 7, 1894, docketed a deficiency judgment for the sum of $5,167.05. At and prior to the execution of said trust deed one Etchepare held the promissory note of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, then past due, upon which he brought suit in December, 1893, and obtained judgment for $1,723.30 and costs, and an execution issued thereon was levied upon the property described in said trust deed, and the interest of Mrs. Maxwell therein was sold to Etchepare on February 19, 1894. Upon the plaintiff's deficiency judgment being docketed (April 7, 1894), an execution was issued thereon, which was returned nulla bona, and thereafter the plaintiff performed all the acts necessary to redeem the said premises from Etchepare; and in due time the sheriff executed and delivered to the plaintiff, as such redemptioner, a deed for the said premises, and said deed was duly recorded prior to the commencement of this action.

The foregoing facts are shown by the evidence without conflict, and, excepting the directions of the plaintiff to its attorneys, and the interview between Mr. Elliott, the president of the bank, and Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, are incorporated in the findings. The court, however, made some additional findings, which are to the effect that, prior to the execution of the mortgage to the plaintiff upon the one-fourth interest in the Lanfranco Block, the French Bank had taken a mortgage upon all the interests therein for $60,000, upon which Mrs. Maxwell had paid $20,000; that at the time of the execution of the mortgage to the plaintiff she owned other real estate in the city of Los Angeles, "aggregating several thousand dollars over incumbrances, and was possessed of a large amount of personal property, unincumbered, aggregating in value between five and six thousand dollars." The seventeenth finding is as follows: "The plaintiff knew of the execution of the said trust deed, and the financial condition of the said defendants Walter S. Maxwell and Amelia C. Maxwell, his wife, at the time of the execution and delivery of the said note and mortgage by them to the plaintiff on the 24th day of August, 1893." From these findings the court drew the following conclusions of law: "(1) That plaintiff waived its right to attack said trust deed; that no legal redemption in this case was had, and that plaintiff did not become substituted to the rights of the purchaser at the sheriff's sale on the Etchepare judgment, and is not the owner of the property, and not entitled to have the same removed as a cloud thereon, or to quiet its title thereto"; and that defendants are entitled to judgment. The complaint alleged that said trust deed was made with the intent to delay and defraud creditors, and especially the plaintiff, and that the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell were insolvent; and these allegations were denied. After the findings were filed, but before judgment was entered thereon, the plaintiff, upon due notice, moved the court to amend and supplement its findings in several particulars,—among them, to find upon the question of fraudulent intent in making the trust deed, and to find that the Etchepare note was made before the deed of trust was executed. The motion was denied, and plaintiff excepted. As to the latter request, it need only be said that it was so alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer. A finding is unnecessary where a fact is admitted by the pleadings. The other proposed amendments and additions to the findings will be noticed, so far as material, in another connection.

Two principal questions were presented to the trial court: (1) Was said trust deed made by Mrs. Maxwell with intent to delay or defraud her creditors? (2) If so, did the plaintiff waive its right to attack it, and to have it declared void?

It is conceded that, if the plaintiff is estopped from attacking said trust deed upon the ground that it was made with intent to delay or defraud creditors, it is immaterial to the plaintiff whether it was so made or not. Appellant contends, however, that the conclusion of the court, "that plaintiff waived its right to attack said trust deed," if regarded as a conclusion of law, is not sustained by the findings; and, if regarded as a finding of an ultimate fact, is not justified by the evidence; and this contention, I think, must be sustained. This question of waiver cannot be discussed without assuming that the trust deed was made with the fraudulent intent charged, for, unless there was first a fraud, there could be no waiver; and the court, in finding that the plaintiff waived the fraud, impliedly found that the deed was fraudulent, and would have been void as to the plaintiff but for the waiver. The facts upon which counsel for respondents base their argument that plaintiff waived the fraud are stated in their brief to be: That the bank had full knowledge of the making of the trust deed by which the property was conveyed for the benefit of the children; that it was recorded; that it knew of the mortgage upon the homestead, and of the general embarrassment of the defendants in meeting their obligations; that all the incumbrances on Mrs. Maxwell's property were of record, and, "after knowing these facts, he [the president of the bank] entered into an agreement whereby he accepted for the bank a mortgage to the bank"; and the principle which counsel say must control is "that a man who does not speak when he ought, shall not be heard when he desires to speak." If Mrs. Maxwell had informed the bank of her intention to place the property in question beyond the reach of her creditors, or sought Mr. Elliott's advice in the matter, this maxim might have an application. But "it is an essential element of estoppel by conduct that the party claiming the estoppel should have relied upon the conduct of the other, and was induced by it to do something which he otherwise would not have done." McCormick v. Insurance Co., 86 Cal. 260, 24 Pac. 1003. It is not pretended that the plaintiff induced the trust deed to be made, or advised that it be made, or that subsequent to the making of it anything was done in relation to the trust property by Mrs. Maxwell or the trustee which, but for the conduct of the plaintiff, would not have been done. On the contrary, a delay in the commencement of legal proceedings and an attachment of the property conveyed by the trust deed was made upon the express condition that no conveyance of her property, or change in its situation, should be made. This promise is not controverted, except by the testimony of Mrs. Maxwell that she did "not remember it." Neither the statement of counsel for respondent, nor the findings of the court, nor the testimony of any witness show that Mrs. Maxwell did anything in relation to the property in question, in consequence of the conduct of the plaintiff, that she would otherwise not have done, except to convey the property to the trustee in consequence of the announced intention of the plaintiff to commence legal proceedings for the collection of its claim against her. The equitable maxim invoked by counsel surely cannot be based on that; nor, indeed, do they claim any such basis for the waiver or estoppel existed, nor even that there was any verbal agreement or understanding that the validity of the trust deed would not be attacked. It was said by Sir Edward Coke, referring to St. 13 Eliz., that, if there is actual fraud at the outset of a transaction, nothing afterwards can "anyways salve or amend the matter." It is conceded that this is not now the broad and unbending rule. The exceptions to it are stated in 2 Bigelow, Frauds, pp. 407, 408, to be cases of present or subsequent consent or ratification by the creditor, and an undoing of the fraud, as by a reconveyance before proceedings are commenced. We do not think that the acts of the plaintiff which defendants call "a waiver" amount to a subsequent consent or ratification by the creditor. "To make out a case of abandonment or waiver of a legal right, there must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act of the party showing such a purpose, or acts amounting to an estoppel on his part." Ross v. Swan, 7 Lea, 467. "A waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right." 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 526.

The conclusion of the court below that plaintiff waived the fraud of defendants was based, as the evidence and the findings conclusively show, wholly upon the fact that it took the note and mortgage with knowledge of the financial embarrassment of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, and of the making and recording of the trust deed. Those facts do not justify the inference that the plaintiff intended to waive the fraud. Nothing was said upon that subject. No stipulation to that effect was inserted in the note or mortgage. The only inference to be drawn from the mortgage is that of a condition attached by the law to all mortgages, namely, that the mortgaged property shall be first exhausted, and, if that proves insufficient, a judgment for the deficiency shall be docketed, which may be enforced against any other property liable to execution. It is not contended that this statutory right was waived as to any other property than that fraudulently conveyed, though I can see no logical or satisfactory reason why the supposed waiver would not equally apply to such other property. Any other interpretation of the law, or inference of fact, would make fraud a virtue to be carefully protected and nurtured into full fruition. There was no dealing with the trustee in relation to the trust property. From the time the trust deed was delivered, Mrs. Maxwell was a stranger to the title of the property thereby conveyed. She had no authority to act concerning it. She could neither exempt it from the payment of her debts, nor apply it thereto. The giving of a mortgage as security for an antecedent debt requires no new consideration to support it, nor does it impose upon the mortgagee any condition not expressed upon its face, other than those provided by law. The note and mortgage were in writing, and expressed the whole agreement of the parties. This transaction falls far short of "clear, unequivocal, and decisive" evidence of a purpose on the part of the plaintiff to waive a legal right given it by the solemn act of the mortgagors; and, in the absence of such evidence, a court of equity will not infer a waiver. As in all cases where a mortgage is taken to secure a debt then due, the taking of the security operated to suspend the right of proceeding against the property fraudulently conveyed, or any other property of the debtor, until the mortgaged property should be exhausted and a deficiency judgment docketed; but we cannot perceive any principle upon which such suspension of the remedy, without more, should operate more favorably upon property fraudulently conveyed than upon property still remaining in the hands of the debtor, all being alike subject to the process of the law in favor of existing creditors.

Respondents cite several authorities, but none of them sustain their contention that the facts of this case show a waiver on the part of the plaintiff. Our attention is particularly called to the case of Pell v. Tredwell, 5 Wend. 661, from which they quote the following passage: "A family settlement,—that is, a conveyance by a parent of all his real estate to a daughter for the benefit of herself and her brothers and sisters,—made bona fide, will not be set aside in favor of a creditor at the time of the conveyance, by whose advice and procurement the settlement was made; the creditor having at the time ample security for the money due him, by mortgages upon specific portions of the estate, but which, after a lapse of ten years, proved insufficient, at a forced sale, to satisfy his demand. Nor will the creditor be permitted to raise the residuum of his debts by sale of the lands not covered by his mortgages." No one doubts that a voluntary conveyance, "made by the advice and procurement of a creditor," is valid as to him. Wolf v. Van Metre, 23 Iowa, 397, cited by respondents, lends no support to their contention. There the husband gave a note to the plaintiff for his personal debt, and his wife signed it as surety, and gave a mortgage on one parcel of land to secure it. She afterwards, in good faith, made a voluntary conveyance of other lands to her children; and, after the last-mentioned conveyance was made, the plaintiff, with knowledge thereof, surrendered his note and mortgage, and took a new note, and a mortgage executed by the wife on the lands conveyed to the children. The court held, "Where the voluntary conveyance is made in good faith, and the subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer has notice of it, he cannot defeat it." One material distinction between that case and this is that here the voluntary conveyance was not made in good faith, but with an undisputed fraudulent intent; and another is that under the laws of Iowa, as declared by the court in that case, the wife was not personally liable upon the note; that she could only create a liability against her property, and could not, therefore, make a conveyance in fraud of her creditors, who could have no legal or equitable right in any of her property, except that specially charged. In the case of Zuver v. Clark, 104 Pa. St. 222, the statement of facts shows that the creditor was present at the execution of the deeds alleged to be fraudulent, and was a subscribing witness to their execution, and that the exchange of properties was made upon his recommendation. Bobb v. Woodward, 50 Mo. 95, cited by respondents, was the case of an assignment to hinder and delay creditors. It was held that the creditors might have treated the sale as a nullity, but, having failed to do so, and having lain by, and suffered the assignee to carry on the business in his own name and with his own money and credit, to sell out and replenish the stock, and engage in other transactions based on their acquiescence, the creditors were estopped. But here there was no change in the property by the trustee or the beneficiaries induced or acquiesced in by the creditors. None of the cases cited by respondents are more nearly in point than those above noticed. The burden of proving a waiver of, or acquiescence in, the fraud is upon the defendants, and such waiver or acquiescence cannot be inferred from the facts appearing in the evidence in this case.

It is further contended by respondents that plaintiff was not a judgment creditor having a lien upon the property in controversy, and was not, for that reason, entitled to redeem from the sheriff's sale to Etchepare. This contention is based upon two grounds: (1) That plaintiff waived the fraud, and thereby admitted the title of the trustee; and (2) that, admitting the trust deed was made to delay and defraud creditors, as alleged, the judgment lien could not attach to the land, because the conveyance was operative between the parties, and hence there was no title or interest in Mrs. Maxwell to which the lien could attach. The first of these grounds has been disposed of, and need not be further noticed. The second ground is wholly untenable. The Code expressly declares that such transfer "is void against all creditors of the debtor." "A void thing is as no thing." So far as existing creditors are concerned, the title and ownership of the property remain in the fraudulent grantor as fully as though no transfer had been attempted. In 1 Freem. Ex'ns, § 136, it is said: "As against the fraudulent transferee, the creditor may seize the property, whether real or personal, as that of the fraudulent vendor, and may proceed to sell it under execution. The title transferred by such sale [on execution] is not a mere equity,—not the right to control the legal title, and to have the fraudulent transfer vacated by some appropriate proceeding; it is the legal title itself, against which the fraudulent transfer is no transfer at all." This language was quoted and approved by this court in Judson v. Lyford, 84 Cal. 507, 24 Pac. 287. See, also, Bull v. Ford, 66 Cal. 176, 4 Pac. 1175, where the same point was decided. The case of In re Estes, 6 Sawy. 459, 3 Fed. 134, cited by respondents, appears to sustain their contention; but, as the point is conclusively settled by our own decisions, it is not necessary to review that case. If it be true, as the authorities clearly hold, that so far as it is necessary for the protection of creditors the title and ownership remain in the fraudulent grantor, and that a sale under execution will pass the legal title to the purchaser, it must logically follow that a judgment duly docketed becomes a lien on the real estate so fraudulently conveyed. If there is nothing to which a judgment lien could attach, there can be nothing which would pass by a sale on execution. I therefore conclude that the plaintiff had a judgment lien, and was entitled to redeem the property from the sale under execution issued upon the Etchepare judgment.

Another question should be briefly noticed. The answer alleges, and the court found, that, aside from the property embraced in the trust deed, Mrs. Maxwell owned real estate aggregating several thousand dollars over incumbrances, and was possessed of a large amount of personal property, unincumbered, aggregating in value between five and six thousand dollars. This is not a finding that the trust deed was not made to delay and defraud creditors, though competent as evidence tending in some measure towards that conclusion, though far from being in itself conclusive. In 2 Bigelow, Frauds, p. 393, it is said, "Indeed, it matters not, where personal intent to defraud is shown, that the fraudulent conveyance, if allowed to stand, would not harm any one, by reason of the fact that the debtor has other property, ample in amount, within the reach of his creditors;" and in Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 60, it was said, "A rich man may make a fraudulent deed, as well as one who is insolvent." See, also, Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 300, 26 Pac. 873. There can be no question, upon the evidence appearing in the record, that there was on the part of the grantor such personal intent to defraud, and the facts stated in said finding do not overcome that evidence; and, besides, it is a finding of probative facts, merely, and not of the fact of fraudulent intent or its opposite. The evidence upon which that finding is based is also used, in argument, to show that there was personal property out of which plaintiff's deficiency judgment could have been satisfied. The return of the sheriff of "No property found," and Mrs. Maxwell's statement to the officer that she had no property, are conclusive upon that point, if it were material,—a point we need not discuss. Besides, the finding relates to the date of the trust deed, and not to the date of the execution. The conclusion "that plaintiff waived its right to attack said trust deed" not being justified by the findings or the evidence, a finding upon the issue of the fraudulent intent with which it was charged to have been made is essential. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: SEARLS, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

JUDGMENT—EXECUTION—APPEAL.

The enforcement of a judgment by execution does not deprive defendant of the right to appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by R. Ramsbottom against B. M. Fitzgerald. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

J. G. Swinnerton, for appellant. Elliott & Elliott and Budd & Thompson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal herein upon the ground that since the affirmance of the judgment by this court (52 Pac. 149) an execution for the enforcement of the judgment was issued out of the superior court, and has been returned by the sheriff fully satisfied. In Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 22, 52 Pac. 40, and 54 Pac. 251, and in Marble Co. v. Black (S. F. 1207; recently decided) 55 Pac. 599, it was held that an enforcement of the judgment by the plaintiff does not deprive the defendant of his right of appeal. The motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the orders appealed from are not appealable was denied in department 2 September 12, 1898.<sup>1</sup> The motion is denied.

WITNESS—CREDIBILITY—CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

1. An instruction that a witness whose testimony is false in one part is to be distrusted in other parts is not erroneous.

2. Where an instruction was given at the request of one of the parties, he cannot, on appeal, object that it did not state a sound declaration of law.

3. The verdict of a jury in a criminal prosecution, convicting defendant, will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence is squarely conflicting,—especially where such evidence is of Chinese witnesses.

4. Rulings of the trial court upon the admission of evidence will not be reviewed where no exceptions thereto are found in the record.

<sup>1</sup> No opinion.

Lon Yeck, Lee Keong, and Yee Sang were convicted of robbery, and appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Ferral, for appellants. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendants have been convicted of robbery, and appeal from the judgment and order denying their motion for a new trial. The points relied upon for reversal of the judgment are few, and of little importance.

Complaint is made that the following instruction was erroneously given: "A witness whose testimony is false in one part is to be distrusted in other parts." This enunciation of the law is framed substantially in the language of the statute, and has been directly approved in People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 223, 10 Pac. 502, and People v. Ah Sing, 95 Cal. 656, 30 Pac. 796. However, in giving instructions to the jury bearing upon this particular question of law, courts would do well to heed the suggestions given out in the recent case of People v. Plyler, 121 Cal. 160, 53 Pac. 553. It may be further suggested that the instruction of which complaint is now made was given at the request of the defendants, and it is not for them to now insist in this court that it does not contain a sound declaration of law.

It is also claimed that the verdict lacked support in the evidence. To this contention it may be said that the evidence is squarely conflicting. All the direct evidence comes from the mouths of Chinese witnesses, and, as usual in cases where such is the fact and where the litigation involves their interests alone, the evidence is flatly contradictory. In such a case, especially, the verdict of the jury will not be disturbed by this court.

Complaint is made as to the misconduct of the district attorney. We see nothing in the contention of sufficient merit to demand a new trial. Various rulings made by the trial court upon the admission of evidence are claimed to be erroneous; but we find no exception to them in the record, and refrain from giving them any consideration. There is no merit in this appeal. Judgment and order affirmed.

FALSE PRETENSES—NOTES—PROPERTY—INFORMATION.

1. One signing a note instead of an application for insurance, as he intended, is not negligent, where defendant moved and manipulated the papers with the fraudulent purpose of procuring such signature, so as to prevent defendant's conviction of defrauding by false pretenses, under Pen. Code, § 532.

2. One fraudulently procuring another to sign a note which he supposed was a different instrument is guilty of defrauding another of his

"property" by false pretenses, within Pen. Code, § 532.

3. An information under Pen. Code, § 532, charging defendant with defrauding another of his property by false pretenses, is sufficient though there is no direct allegation that the property obtained by the fraud was the property of the person defrauded, where facts are alleged from which the ownership of the property can be inferred.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

T. F. A. Skidmore was convicted of defrauding by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph H. Skirm, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Section 532 of the Penal Code reads: "Every person who knowingly and designedly by false or fraudulent representation or pretenses defrauds any other person of money or property * * * is punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as for larceny of the money or property so obtained." Under this section of the law, the defendant was charged by information with the commission of a felony, and pleaded guilty to the charge. He now appeals from the judgment, upon the ground that the information does not state a public offense. The gist of the information is that the defendant, by false and fraudulent representations and pretenses, defrauded M. Righetti out of a promissory note of the value of $277.69. A copy of this note is set out in the information, and is signed, "Michael Righetti." The information has been carefully drawn, and the facts of the transaction are set forth in detail. We quote the following allegation: "Said Skidmore then and there represented and pretended to said Righetti that he (said Righetti) was then and there signing an application for insurance on his (said Righetti's) life, and an option on taking said policy applied for, but in truth and in fact, by some fraudulent pretense or deception of said Skidmore in moving and manipulating said papers, the signature of said Righetti was obtained to said promissory note."

It is first claimed that the representations made by defendant to Righetti were statements the falsity of which Righetti could have detected by an ocular inspection of the instrument which he signed. That Righetti's carelessness in signing this note is a material element in the case is not apparent, for the offense is committed against the public, and not against him. The guilty party is prosecuted in the interest of the people of the state, and not in the interest of the party defrauded. Yet, even conceding, for present purposes alone, that lack of care or gross negligence upon the part of the party defrauded might in some cases defeat the conviction of the party charged, we do not have that case before us, for here prestidigitation was practiced. It was a case of juggling, and it does not appear but that the most careful and wary likewise would have been defrauded. The very recent case of People v. Summers (Mich.) 73 N. W. 818, upon its facts, is quite similar to the case at bar, and the conclusion there declared is opposed to appellant's contention.

It is also insisted that the promissory note in this case was not "property," in the sense of the word as used in the aforesaid section of the Penal Code. The Summers case, cited, decides to the contrary. It is also expressly held to the contrary in the case of People v. Reed, 70 Cal. 529, 11 Pac. 676.

It is further claimed that there is no allegation that the note was the property of any particular individual. In this behalf it is sufficient to say that all the facts of the transaction are set out in detail. Conceding in many cases the materiality of an allegation to the effect that the property obtained by the fraud was the property of the party defrauded, yet the absence of such an allegation in a case like the present is not fatal to the pleading, for the facts here set out show the ownership of the note as fully as though there was a direct allegation in the pleading to that effect. There is no merit in the appeal. Judgment affirmed.

STUPARICH MFG. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN FRANCISCO
et al. (S. F. 1,732.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 16, 1899.)

RECEIVERS — SUMMARY PROCESS — RECOVERY OF ASSETS — PROHIBITION.

1. The person claiming the ownership of personal property cannot be deprived thereof by a summary order of court, based on the affidavits of one of the parties to an action for dissolution of partnership that it is the property of the firm, directing the receiver to take possession.

2. Where such order has been made, and the application of the owner for a stay of proceedings thereon has been denied, a writ of prohibition will be granted restraining such proceedings.

In bank. Application of the Stuparich Manufacturing Company for a writ of prohibition to the superior court of San Francisco and others. Writ granted.

George D. Collins, for petitioner. Rothchild & Ach, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. In an action pending in the superior court for San Francisco between Paul J. Stuparich, as plaintiff, and Joseph Gassmann, as defendant, for the dissolution of a partnership, the court appointed a receiver to take into his possession all the property belonging to said partnership. The defendant in the action, claiming that certain personal property belonged to the partnership, procured an order of the court directing the receiver to take possession of the same, whereupon the petitioner herein presented to the court a petition setting forth that it was the owner of said property, and in possession of the same, and prayed the court for a stay of proceedings upon its order directing the receiver to take it into his possession. The court denied this petition, and directed the receiver to take possession of said property. Thereupon the petitioner made this application for a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court and its receiver from seizing any of the property so claimed by it. In answer to this petition the respondents allege that the property in question belongs to the partnership, and that the petitioner has no claim or right thereto, and that at the time the receiver was appointed the property was in the actual possession and control of the partnership. There is also an averment in the answer that the property is in the possession of the petitioner herein and of the respondents, but this is evidently a clerical misprision. The name of the person who has the physical possession of the property is not alleged, but it is assumed that the property is in the possession of Paul J. Stuparich, the plaintiff in the action in the superior court, who is also the president of the petitioner herein, and who makes the affidavit for the writ in its behalf.

It is not within the function of this court upon this application to determine whether the property in question does or does not belong to the petitioner, nor did the superior court have authority by its order to direct the receiver to take the property from the possession of the petitioner. A person in possession of personal property under a claim of ownership cannot be summarily deprived thereof by an order of court based upon the affidavits of an adverse claimant, but he has the right to have his title determined in an appropriate action by the verdict of a jury or the findings of a court upon issues framed for that purpose. Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 405; Ex parte Casey, 71 Cal. 269, 12 Pac. 118. The petitioner herein was not a party to the action in the superior court, and that court had no jurisdiction over it, or over its property, or to direct it to surrender to the receiver any property which it claimed to own. The fact, if it be such, that the property is in the custody of the plaintiff in the action, does not change the rule. If his possession is that of the petitioner, and not in his own right, the petitioner is entitled to be protected in such possession against the claim of the receiver; and, as its officer or bailee, the plaintiff was authorized to assert the ownership of the corporation, and the character in which he held the property in opposition to such claim. As soon as it was made to appear to the superior court that the property was claimed by a stranger to the action, the court should have denied the application of the receiver. It could have authorized the receiver to institute an action for its recovery, but it could not direct him to take the property from the possession of the petitioner. The application for the writ is granted.

WILSON v. HENDERSON et al. (S. F. 842.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1899.)

JOINDER OF PARTIES—PLEADING—PARTNERSHIP—
COMMON AGENT—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPALS.

1. Where creditors of an insolvent corporation agree upon an agent to conduct the business of the insolvent for their joint and several benefit, and to furnish material and labor therefor, any person who sues such creditors for material furnished the agent may properly implead the insolvent corporation under the allegation that it was one of the principals to the agreement.

2. A complaint alleging that defendants, as creditors of an insolvent debtor, had authorized and directed an agent, for their joint and several benefit, to carry on the business of the insolvent, and to employ labor and to buy material therefor, does not charge defendants as partners, but as principals; and therefore there need be no further facts pleaded showing an actual or ostensible partnership.

3. If creditors employ a common agent to conduct the business of their insolvent debtor, and to employ labor and purchase material therefor, they become liable for such labor and material; and this liability is not changed by the mere fact that the agent was the assignee, and was authorized by order of court, made subsequent to the agreement, to carry on the business, and to pay the costs thereof out of the assets of the estate, unless the order was intended to supplant the agreement.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by John C. Wilson against O. L. Henderson and others. From a judgment against plaintiff, he appeals. Reversed.

G. R. Lukens and John D. Wright, for appellant. Jos. Kirk, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff, for cause of action, alleged that the defendant the Vallejo Electric Light & Power Company was an insolvent debtor, and that the defendant O. L. Henderson was its assignee. All of the other defendants, 30 or more in number, were creditors of the insolvent corporation, and entitled to share ratably in the distribution of its property and assets. On the 24th day of July, 1893, all of the defendants entered into a mutual agreement that it would be to their joint and several interests that the plant and business of the insolvent should not be shut down, but should be operated and maintained as it had before the corporation's insolvency. Defendants thereupon "authorized and directed the said O. L. Henderson, for his, their, and each of their joint and several benefit and advantage, to carry on, maintain, operate, and run said plant in all respects as it should be run; * * * and further authorized and empowered and directed him to employ the necessary labor for said purpose, and to buy the necessary supplies for said purpose." Following this authorization, it is next alleged that the defendants applied for and obtained an order of the insolvency court, in which order the court found that it was for the best interests of all concerned that the plant of the corporation should be kept in operation, and that the creditors consented thereto, and by which order it was declared that Henderson, the assignee, "shall have power, and it shall be his duty, to employ the necessary labor for said purpose, and to buy the necessary supplies for said purpose; and the costs of the same shall be paid out of the assets of said estate of said insolvent in preference to any other claim." Afterwards defendant Henderson, "acting on his own behalf and as agent for the other defendants, under and in pursuance of the power and authority conferred upon him according to the terms of the agreement made as aforesaid, and for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the same, and none other," took from plaintiff, and plaintiff sold and delivered to him, certain supplies necessary for the purposes of the agreement and for the conduct of the business. For the unpaid part of the purchase price of these supplies judgment was demanded against all of the defendants, who were each and all sued in their individual capacities. To this complaint pleas by demurrer were presented, and the demurrers were sustained. Plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for certain of the defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

There were many special grounds of objection raised by the demurrers of the different defendants, but every one tendered the issue of law that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. While some of the special grounds of demurrer have been adverted to in the briefs, none have been argued, and upon consideration of them we do not think that any one of them was well taken. The general ground of demurrer is the only one which has received attention from counsel, and is the only one which, therefore, need be considered here. As to the special grounds of demurrer, suffice it to say that the complaint is sufficiently unambiguous, intelligible, and certain, and that, as will hereafter be considered, the defendants being all sued as joint principals, there is no misjoinder of parties defendant, and there is no objection to impleading the insolvent corporation under the allegation here made that it was one of the principals to the contract.

In support of the judgment, and of their argument that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, respondents urge that the defendants, if liable at all, are liable only as partners, and that the facts pleaded show neither an actual partnership nor such a holding out to plaintiff as would estop defendants from denying a partnership liability. Again, they insist that it appears that the proceedings of the defendants ended in the order of court set out in the complaint, and that plaintiff must be held to have dealt upon the security of this order alone, in which event he would have no right to a personal judgment against any of the defendants, but merely a right to a preferred lien or claim upon the assets of the insolvent; or, at the most, if personal liability attached, it would be to the assignee only, and the creditors and insolvent could not, therefore, be held by this proceeding. In the view which we take of the complaint, the question of partnership, actual or ostensible, becomes quite immaterial. The pleading sufficiently charges that the defendants, for their mutual interest and advantage, as joint principals, employed a common agent to conduct a certain business; that as such agent, and acting within the scope of his authority, he purchased upon behalf of the joint principals certain supplies of coal at an agreed price; that a part of this purchase price has not been paid, and that there is due and owing to plaintiff from defendants on account of this purchase a certain sum of money. The facts thus pleaded are certainly sufficient as a declaration in assumpsit, and state a cause of action against the defendants as joint principals. Under such a pleading no question of partnership, of sharing in profits, or engaging in business, need be considered. It is sufficient if the defendants have agreed, and by agreement have authorized their common agent to do certain things, and to incur liability in so doing. They become responsible for his acts within the scope of his authority. "It cannot be too carefully borne in mind," says Mr. Justice Lindley, "in all cases of this description, that a person who is neither a partner nor a quasi partner is liable on the general principles of agency for acts done by others with his authority, express or implied. If, therefore, directors, members of committees, managers of clubs, or any other persons not in partnership, pass resolutions that work shall be done or goods supplied, they authorize whatever may be done in pursuance of such resolutions; and they are the persons naturally looked to and prima facie liable to pay for what may be done. The question in these cases is simply one of agency, and the question of partnership or no partnership is immaterial." 1 Lindl. Partn. p. *45.

Were these facts to which we have last adverted, and these only, pleaded in the complaint, it would require some boldness to contend that a cause of action was not stated, but it is argued that the effect of these averments is modified, and, indeed, nullified, by the further allegations showing that the defendants obtained an order of the insolvency court declaring it to be to the best interests of the insolvent and of its creditors that the business should be continued, and instructing the assignee so to do. But, for this order to avail respondents, it must appear that it supplanted the agreement, and that plaintiff contracted and furnished supplies upon its authority alone. This, however, plaintiff does not plead, nor is any such deduction fairly inferable from the complaint. To the contrary, the specific allegation is that Henderson purchased coal "under and in pursuance of the authority conferred upon him according to the terms of the agreement made as aforesaid." An order of court is not an agreement between parties. If the contention is that plaintiff consented to be bound by the order in seeking payment for his supplies, it may at once be answered that this is affirmative matter of defense, and that the utmost that could be claimed in this regard from the language of the order itself is, not that plaintiff may not recover a personal judgment against defendants, but that he is given a preferred claim in the nature of a lien against the assets of the insolvent, which he ought to exhaust before personal recourse against defendants is sought. As for the order, it cannot be seen that it otherwise exerts any protective force in favor of defendants against plaintiff's action. It attempts to authorize the assignee to carry on the business of the insolvent corporation, but we have been unable to discover any authority in the insolvent act for so doing, and we have not been referred to any. The powers of the assignee in insolvency are expressly defined (Insolvent Act, § 21), and this power of continuing the business of the insolvent is not included among them. To the contrary, the act contemplates and declares—indeed, it is its main purpose—that the insolvent's estate shall be converted into money as speedily as possible (section 25), and ratably distributed among the creditors (section 31). To speculate with the assets by continuing the business is certainly foreign to these purposes. It may be—though upon this no expression of opinion is given—that the order would protect the assignee against any future demands of the consenting creditors. But this would result, not from the force of the order itself, but from the equitable principles of estoppel. But certainly the order would not avail to defeat the cause of action which plaintiff here pleads, nor to relieve the creditors, and cast the whole liability upon the assignee. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrers of the defendants, from the judgments in whose favor this appeal is prosecuted.

HABEAS CORPUS — CONTEMPT — ORDER TO PAY MONEY—COURTS—JURISDICTION—HOMESTEAD—ALIMONY.

1. One cannot be imprisoned for contempt in failing to pay alimony which he is unable to pay.

2. One imprisoned for contempt for failing to pay alimony will be released on habeas corpus where the order for his imprisonment does not show that he was able to pay.

3. A husband cannot be compelled, by duress of imprisonment, to sell or incumber his homestead to pay temporary alimony.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In bank. Application for habeas corpus by John J. Silvia. Granted.

T. J. Geary, for petitioner. J. T. Rogers, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The return to the writ of habeas corpus issued herein shows that the petitioner is held in custody under orders directing his imprisonment until he shall have paid a certain sum of money awarded as alimony pendente lite. When an alleged contempt consists in the failure to obey an order of court, the party charged with such failure may be imprisoned until he complies, provided he has the ability to comply. If it is not in his power to do what he has been commanded to do, he cannot be condemned to perpetual imprisonment for failure to perform an impossibility. This being so, and every court being, in contempt proceedings, a court of strictly limited jurisdiction, it is essential to the validity of a judgment directing the imprisonment of a person until he complies with an order of court that it should be found that he is able to comply. In this case the first order of imprisonment did contain a recital that the petitioner was able to pay the alimony in question, but upon a subsequent proceeding in habeas corpus before the same court, in which his ability to pay was the principal question to be determined, the order remanding him, and under which he is now held, fails to show that he is able to pay without selling or incumbering his homestead; and the question is presented whether a man can be compelled by duress of imprisonment to sell or incumber the homestead, which, under the constitution and laws of the state, is exempt from forced sale, except in certain enumerated cases, of which payment of temporary alimony is not one. In our opinion, this cannot be done. The prisoner having no means aside from his homestead, in a legal sense has not the ability to pay the alimony, and his continued imprisonment is unlawful. It is ordered that he be discharged from custody.

PEOPLE v. TEIXEIRA. (Cr. 463.)

ASSAULT—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Accused was in possession of hogs, which he held for trespass. The owner and one M. came up where the hogs were corralled, and there met accused. The owner alighted, and, after some words, accused assaulted him with a club, and immediately attempted to assault M., who drove away. Held, that evidence of the attempted assault. M. was admissible as res gestæ.

2. An instruction that if accused, at the time of the assault, was defending property lawfully intrusted to his care, such assault was justified, and the jury should acquit, is properly refused, since it places no limit on the amount of force which accused might use in defending the property in his possession.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

George Teixeira was convicted of an assault, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. G. Lamberson and C. L. Russell, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of assault with intent to commit murder. The substantial facts giving rise to the charge are as follows: Defendant was in the possession of a certain lot of hogs, which he held for trespass. These hogs were the property of Williams. Williams and one Manuel, in a vehicle, drove up to the corral where the hogs were confined, and there met the defendant, Teixeira. Williams alighted from the vehicle. Words arose between him and the defendant, and thereupon he (Williams) was struck by a club in the hands of the defendant, who immediately thereafter also attempted to assault Manuel. Manuel at once drove away, although pursued some distance by defendant. Defendant is now charged and convicted of assaulting Williams with intent to commit murder. It may be conceded that the evidence we have stated is that most favorable to the support of the verdict of the jury. Counsel for defendant insist that the court improperly admitted the evidence bearing upon the attempted assault upon Manuel, but it is perfectly apparent that the assault upon Manuel was part of the same affray. It was essentially res gestæ. The fact that Williams was first a subject of the assault, rather than Manuel, is immaterial. The case would have been the same if the order of assault had been reversed. See People v. Wong Ark, 96 Cal. 129, 30 Pac. 1115, as to what constitutes res gestæ. The facts in People v. Lane, 100 Cal. 379, 34 Pac. 856, are not at all analogous. It was there held that the second shooting was no part of the first shooting, and therefore no part of the res gestæ.

It is claimed that the court committed error in allowing the prosecution to introduce some evidence in rebuttal which should have been introduced in chief. This is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court. Certainly no abuse of that discretion is disclosed here.

Error is predicated upon the refusal of the court to give the following instruction: "If the defendant, at the time of the alleged assault, was engaged in the defense of property lawfully intrusted to his care, and which it was his duty or his right to maintain the possession of, the assault was justified, and you should acquit him." This instruction places no limit upon the amount of force which the defendant might use in the defense of the property in his possession. In law he was only entitled to use that amount of force necessary for the protection of his property. The instruction fails to make the distinction. The correct principle of law was stated in another portion of the charge. There is no substantial merit in the appeal. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. OPIE. (Cr. 481.)

LARCENY OF GOLD ORE—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY—STATEMENTS OF CO-CONSPIRATOR.

1. Under St. 1871-72, p. 282, making the stealing of gold ore, whether severed from the earth or not, by the party charged, a crime, an information charging the stealing of such ore in the usual form in which grand larceny is charged, is sufficient.

2. Evidence as to the appearance, conduct, and declarations of a co-conspirator after the conspiracy is accomplished is inadmissible as against a conspirator.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Mariposa county.

William Opie was convicted of stealing gold ore, and he appeals. Reversed.

Maddux & Stonesifer and J. A. Adair, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant, Opie, was jointly charged with Edward Opie with the stealing of gold ore of the value of $500. The information is in the usual form where grand larceny is charged, and it is now insisted that it is fatally defective. Under the case of People v. Williams, 35 Cal. 671,—the contention would have weight, but the legislature, with the view of modifying the law as there declared, passed an act found in St. 1871-72, p. 282. By that statute the stealing of gold ore, whether severed from the earth or not, by the party charged, is made a crime. And for that reason the information as here laid charges grand larceny.

Having arrived at the conclusion that a new trial must be ordered, we refrain from any detailed discussion as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. We will only say that, while the evidence bearing upon the identification of the ore as to being ore taken from a certain mine is conflicting, still, looking at the case from all sides, we are not prepared to say that the jury were not justified in rendering a verdict against the defendant. William Opie and Edward Opie were jointly charged. William Opie was upon trial. Conceding the evidence established a conspiracy between these two parties to commit the crime of grand larceny, still the court committed error in allowing evidence to be introduced as to the appearance, the conduct, and the declarations of Edward Ople, the defendant not upon trial. It is elementary law that such evidence as to a co-conspirator not upon trial partakes of the character of pure hearsay. This evidence was all directed towards matters occurring after the commission of the offense—after the conspiracy was accomplished and ended. There is not even the excuse for its admission that the defendant on trial was present at the time. This court has had occasion many times, and recently, to advert to the error of similar judicial action. People v. Moore, 45 Cal. 19; People v. Dilwood, 94 Cal. 89, 29 Pac. 420; People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 652, 44 Pac. 312. Without question it may be said that this evidence was extremely prejudicial to defendant, and its admission demands a new trial of the case. The attorney general attempts to meet the force of these objections by saying that the conspiracy was not ended when the events occurred which this evidence disclosed. It is said the conspiracy was not ended because the property stolen had not yet been distributed between the thieves. This is no answer, for there is no evidence disclosing that it had not been distributed at the time; and, again, there is no evidence that it was ever intended that it should be distributed. In certain cases where the conspiracy discloses an intention to divide the property to be stolen, evidence of the acts and declarations of a co-conspirator taking place any time prior to the division are admitted. This is upon the theory that the conspiracy does not end until that time. The present case discloses nothing of that kind.

The instruction given as to the evidence of the expert bearing upon the value of the ore is dangerously near the border line dividing the law from the facts. The same may be said as to instruction No. 11. Upon the second trial these instructions should not be given to the jury.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by F. Matteucci and another against Richard I. Whelan. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

A. D. Splivalo, for appellants. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to recover certain personal property situated in a building used as a restaurant. The defendant was sheriff, and on the 2d day of November, 1895, attached the said property as the property of one M. Zaro, under a writ of attachment issued in an action commenced against Zaro by one Witt. The jury, under instruction of the court, returned a verdict for defendant, upon which judgment in defendant's favor was rendered. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The pleadings, evidence, and the conduct of the trial, leave the case in an unfinished and confused condition. The learned judge of the court below well said that it was "a remarkable case." The two main points made by appellants for reversal are: (1) That the court erred in denying plaintiffs' motion for judgment upon the pleadings; and (2) that the court erred in instructing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant.

1. The court did not err in denying the motion for a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs on the pleadings. It is not necessary to determine whether or not the original answer sufficiently denies that at the time of the commencement of the action plaintiffs were the owners of, or entitled to the possession of, the property in question. The amended answer does contain such denial, and the court did not err in allowing the amended answer to be filed under the circumstances presented in the record.

2. On the 20th of June, 1895, the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, where the property involved was situated, by virtue of an execution issued in the case of one E. Isaacs against the said M. Zaro, sold the property in question here at public auction to the plaintiffs in this present action, and gave possession thereof to the plaintiffs, together with a certificate of sale thereof. At that time Zaro was using the property in conducting a restaurant at No. 161 Steuart street, in the city of San Francisco. Zaro had been acting as cook of the establishment, and had in his employ a man named Giovanni, whom the plaintiffs employed to take charge of the business, and they hired another man to assist him. The plaintiffs were merchants, and visited the restaurant about once a day, supplying it with groceries, wines, etc., and paying the bills incurred in the business. They also paid the rent of the premises for two months. They desired to sell the property as soon as they could find a purchaser; but, after conducting the business in this way for about two weeks, and finding that it did not pay, they told Zaro that if he could make it pay he might take the business himself at his own expense until such time as the plaintiffs could find a purchaser. Under this agreement Zaro went into possession, and ran the business from June until the next November, when the attachment in the case of Witt v. Zaro was levied. This last attachment suit by Witt was for meat furnished Zaro a short time before the attachment was levied. The foregoing were substantially all the facts proven. There was no evidence at all connecting the plaintiffs with Isaacs, under whose judgment against Zaro the property was sold by the sheriff under execution in June. From all that appears, the plaintiffs were strangers to that suit and execution, and purchased at the public sheriff's sale as any other stranger would have had the right to do. It was with reference to this sale under the execution in June that the court said in the presence of the jury: "There is no evidence to show such an actual, continued, exclusive change of possession as is required under the statute of frauds," and instructed the jury, after the case had been submitted, as follows: "In this case I am satisfied that there was no such change of possession of this property as the law required; that this alleged sale and alleged delivery of possession of the restaurant was void as against this creditor represented by Mr. Witt, who commenced the attachment suit; and the defendant is entitled to a verdict at your hands. Therefore I direct you to find a verdict in this case in favor of the defendant. The clerk will give you the verdict, and you will select a foreman, who will sign the same." The court evidently went upon the theory that section 3440 of the Civil Code applies absolutely to public judicial sales made by a sheriff under an execution; but this principle does not apply to such a sale, at least where the purchaser is a stranger, and not a party in any way, to the proceeding. Section 698, Code Civ. Proc., provides that a sale under execution by an officer conveys to the purchaser all the right which the debtor had in the property on the day the execution was levied. It has been held in some cases, although the authorities are not uniform on the point, that, where the purchaser in such a case is the execution creditor, the rule applies; but we have been referred to no case where it has been applied to a purchaser who is a stranger to the suit. We have found no decision by this court in which the point was raised, except the case of O'Brien v. Chamberlain, 50 Cal. 285, and in that case the court expressly declined to decide the point. There the execution debtor was Moffitt, and the purchaser was O'Brien, and the court below refused to instruct the jury that, if Moffitt continued in the possession of the goods after the sale, they might take that fact into consideration in determining whether or not Moffitt or O'Brien was the real purchaser. This court reversed the judgment for error in not giving the instruction, and said: "If the purchaser permits the property to remain in the possession of the judgment debtor, and allows him to exercise actual ownership over it after the sale, the jury is authorized to consider this circumstance in determining the question of actual fraud." That was clearly correct; and if, in the case at bar, it could be held that there was any question of actual fraud involved, it would have been proper enough for the court to have instructed the jury that in determining that question it could have considered the fact that Zaro was allowed to resume possession of the property; but under any circumstances it would not have been proper for the court to have instructed the jury that this fact alone, as matter of law, was determinative of an issue within the province of the jury. The cases on the point are largely cited by Mr. Freeman in his work on Executions, in his notes to paragraph 151. In the text he says that: "When the plaintiff in execution becomes the purchaser, some of the American cases have considered that the necessity for a change of possession is as imperative as though the sale were voluntary; but in England the question has been determined otherwise;" and that: "It seems to be almost universally conceded that when a stranger to the writ purchases and pays for property at an execution sale, the fact that he does not choose to remove it from the control of the defendant neither renders the sale fraudulent per se, nor, unless connected with other circumstances of a suspicious character, creates any presumption against its good faith." One of the quotations which he gives from adjudicated cases is as follows: "Retention of possession by the former owner of a chattel sold at sheriff's sale is not an index of fraud, because the sale is not the act of the person retaining, but of the law, and because a judicial sale, being conducted by the sworn officer of the court, shall be deemed fair till it is proved otherwise. It may, like a judgment, be shown to be collusive and fraudulent in fact, but the presumption of the law is favorable to it in the first instance. A chattel thus purchased, then, may safely be left in the possession of the former owner on any contract of bailment that the law allows in any other case." We are of opinion that the court erred in instructing the jury in this case to find a verdict for the defendant, and for this reason the judgment must be reversed. (In the testimony of one of the plaintiffs there was an incidental reference to some other attachment, but what it was does not appear, and no importance seems to have been attached to it.) In this case we decide merely the questions presented. If there be any other reasons why the judgment should have been for the respondent, they are not before us. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

PEOPLE v. JONES. (Cr. 440.)

PERJURY—AGENCY—IMMATERIAL ISSUE.

1. An averment that a conveyance from one person to another was negotiated by a third person, "acting as agent" for the first, does not raise the issue of agency, and hence a false sworn denial of the agency is not perjury.

2. In a suit to hold one as trustee of property alleged to have been conveyed to him as agent, it was not perjury for him to swear falsely that he was not an agent, but acted as the factor or intermediary of both parties, since the fact of agency did not affect his liability as trustee.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

R. A. Jones was indicted for perjury, and, from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the indictment, the people appeal. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People. L. A. Wright and McDonald & McDonald, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Indictment for perjury, to which a demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff appeals. It was averred in the indictment that a verified complaint was filed in the superior court of San Diego county, wherein one John Long was plaintiff, and R. A. Jones, the defendant here, was defendant. Long sought judgment that Jones held the legal title to certain lots in trust for Long, and to compel conveyance thereof. It was alleged in the indictment, as in Long's duly-verified complaint in his suit against Jones, that one Kampling and wife conveyed certain lots to Long, "pursuant to a sale of the said premises from said" Kampling and wife, "as vendors, to said John Long, as vendee, negotiated by the defendant, R. A. Jones, acting as the agent of said Kampling and wife; that, in consideration of part of the purchase price of said property so sold by said Kampling and wife, through said R. A. Jones, as their agent, to said John Long, * * * the said Long conveyed to said R. A. Jones" certain lots, which Long was induced to do "upon the representation that he, the said Jones, would hold the same in trust" for said Kampling and wife, "and would convey the same to said Mrs. Kampling." It was alleged, also, that Kampling and wife were ignorant of the fact that Jones had procured said conveyance to be made to him by Long in part consideration of the selling price of the property conveyed by Kampling and wife to Long; that Jones paid no consideration for the lots deeded to him by Long, and concealed from Kampling and wife that he had acquired this property from Long; that Kampling and wife had conveyed to Long all their interest in the property conveyed to Jones by Long, and that the latter is now the owner thereof. The perjury complained of is in the verified answer filed by Jones to Long's complaint, in which the indictment charges that Jones deposed as follows: "That he, the said defendant R. A. Jones, did not, in the property trade between B. Kampling and Emma Kampling and the plaintiff, the said John Long, * * * act as agent for said B. Kampling and Emma Kampling, or either of them; that, in and about the exchange of the properties, * * * he, the said defendant, acted as the factor, or intermediary of both parties,—that is to say, he brought the parties together, and let them do their own trading." Allegations follow that the action was tried on the issues formed by said complaint and answer, that defendant knew that said matter above set forth as in the answer was false, "and was matter material to the issue in said cause," etc. Respondent contends that, if the matter specifically set forth in the indictment as constituting the alleged perjury could in any event have been material, it affirmatively appears upon the face of the indictment that, in the complaint in the case of Long v. Jones, there was no direct allegation that Jones was the agent, or acted as the agent, of the Kamplings, but such agency is alleged by way of recital only, if alleged at all. If it was material to Long's complaint that he should clearly allege that Jones was the agent of the Kamplings, and as such agent negotiated the transfer alleged, the complaint, so far as set out in the indictment, failed to do so, and of course the indictment, which recites the allegations of the complaint, also failed in that particular. There was, therefore, no material issue tendered as to Jones' agency. Direct and positive averments of the fact cannot be supplied by any intendment or implication, and, where stated argumentatively, or by way of recital or inference, it is insufficient. People v. Dunlap, 113 Cal. 75, 45 Pac. 183. This rule applies even to civil actions. Denver v. Burton, 28 Cal. 549; Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 318. But, aside from this view of the matter, we cannot regard the answer of defendant as constituting perjury. He averred that he did not act as agent of the Kamplings in the property trade referred to, but that he "acted as the factor or intermediary of both parties,—that is to say, he brought the parties together and let them do their own trading." It seems to us that defendant should have been permitted to make such an answer, without subjecting himself to the charge of perjury. Whether he was acting as "agent" or "intermediator" does not seem to be material to his liability as a trustee, because it was alleged that he took the title and agreed to hold the property "in trust for said Kampling and wife, and would convey the same to said Mrs. Emma Kampling," which does not appear to have been denied by defendant. He was equally liable as trustee, whether he acted as agent, factor, or mediator, under the allegations of the complaint, for he was charged with having received the title without consideration and as trustee. The false oath must be material to the issue, and therefore prejudicial to some one; otherwise, however willful, it cannot be perjury. People v. McDermott, 8 Cal. 288. In the case just cited the defendant denied, by verified answer, the note sued upon, because, as he alleged, "he was confident that the words 'value received' were not in the note when he made it." The court held that the answer showed that the denial was made upon the ground that the words "value received" were not in the note he had signed. It was said that a very different question would have been presented if he had simply denied that the note was his. But he gave the reason for his denial which, if true, did not change the effect of the instrument; it was immaterial, and therefore did not prejudice the plaintiff. So, here, the denial of the agency, and admitting that he acted as factor or mediator, did not place Long in a worse, nor Jones in any better, position. "An agent is one who represents another, called the principal, in dealings with third persons." Civ. Code, § 2295. Section 2297 declares that "an agent for a particular act or transaction is called a special agent." It seems to us that defendant might deny that he was the "agent," and allege the exact relation in which he acted, because the allegation presented a question of mixed law and fact as to the kind of agency alleged, as well, also, whether there was any agency at all. The judgment should be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PETE. (Cr. 450.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1899.)
CRIMINAL LAW—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED —IMPEACHMENT.

Defendant may be asked on cross-examination if he did not make certain statements at a certain place, though the inquiry as to the place tends to show that he had been arrested for another offense, where the inquiry was made to lay a foundation for impeaching him, by showing that he subsequently made other inconsistent statements.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Inyo county.

Pete (alias Little Pete) was convicted of larceny, and he appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Ben H. Yandell and Richard S. Miner, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, he having been convicted of the crime of grand larceny in stealing a horse. Errors are insisted upon in the overruling by the court of objections to certain questions asked the defendant upon cross-examination by the district attorney, when the defendant was testifying in his own behalf. These questions were asked for the purpose of laying a foundation in order that the defendant might be impeached by showing that he had made inconsistent statements at other times. It has been held often that, when a party attempts to impeach a witness in this way, the witness is entitled to have the time, place, and parties present specified with particularity, in order that he may answer with a recollection refreshed as to the conditions surrounding him at the time it is claimed the statements were made. This is a salutary rule of law, and should be followed in all cases. It is now claimed that the questions addressed to the witness, as bearing upon the place where and the parties present when the statements were made, tended to show the defendant guilty of another offense. If the question or questions were asked in bad faith,—that is, were asked simply to get before the jury the imputation that defendant had been arrested upon a previous occasion for some other offense,—then, certainly, the practice was most reprehensible. But we see nothing to indicate such a purpose; and in view of the rule of law to which we have alluded, and which is a rule of law favorable to the witness, and strictly enforced in his behalf, we cannot say there was reversible error in the ruling of the court in allowing the questions. The same suggestions apply to the objections made to the testimony of the sheriff, who subsequently took the witness stand, and testified to the inconsistent statements made by the defendant. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1898.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—RECEIVER—GROWING CROPS—COMPLAINT—ACTION BY ADMINISTRATOR
—NONPAYMENT—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS—RECEIVER.

1. A mortgage on land not expressly mortgaging rents and profits gives the mortgagee no right to growing crops gathered before the decree of foreclosure.

2. A receiver appointed in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on lands, not expressly mortgaging the rents and profits, does not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 2 (authorizing appointment of receiver where mortgaged property is in danger of being lost), acquire any right to growing crops gathered before the decree of foreclosure.

3. Complaint in action to foreclose a mortgage on lands, not expressly mortgaging the rents and profits, does not show cause for appointment of receiver, by mere allegation that the mortgaged property is probably insufficient to pay the mortgage debt.

4. Complaint in action by administratrix is not demurrable on the ground that it appears thereby that she has not legal capacity to sue, merely because it does not sufficiently appear therefrom that she has capacity to sue; but such defect must be taken advantage of by answer.

5. Complaint in action by administratrix to foreclose mortgage need not aver that she is the owner and holder of the note and mortgage, but it is enough that they are in her possession as administratrix, and are offered in evidence, and are on their face made to her intestate.

6. Introduction by an administratrix, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, of the note with indorsements thereon, is in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, relating to transactions with decedent.

7. Possession of note by the payee's administratrix is evidence of nonpayment.

8. Findings of fact may be embodied in a decree.

9. Though a receiver was improperly empowered in a mortgage foreclosure suit to harvest crops on the mortgaged lands, and was not entitled to the same, he should be allowed proper expenses incurred by him therefor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Susan L. Locke, administratrix of George L. Locke, deceased, against Amelia Klunker, administratrix of Ludwig Teuber, deceased. Decree and order for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Modified.

Minor & Ashley, for appellant. Elliott & Elliott, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. When this case was in department, the opinion hereto annexed was prepared by Mr. Commissioner CHIPMAN. After due consideration of the case, we are satisfied with that opinion, and with the conclusions therein reached, and that the judgment of the court below should be modified in accordance with the directions of said opinion. Therefore, for the reasons given in that opinion, the decree of foreclosure and the order settling the receiver's account are affirmed, and the court is directed to cause the net proceeds of the crops in the hands of the receiver to be paid to the defendant administratrix.

CHIPMAN, C. This is an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The pleadings are verified. The complaint was filed June 19, 1896, and alleged, among other things, that the entire estate of which defendant was administratrix, including the mortgaged premises, was appraised at a value less than the mortgage debt, and that said mortgaged "premises are inadequate for the satisfaction of said indebtedness, and will not probably sell for enough to satisfy the decree in this case." The complaint prayed for the appointment of a receiver "to take charge of said premises and its income, rents, and profits, with authority to harvest and sell the crops so harvested, and the same be applied on said indebtedness." Upon filing the complaint, the court made an ex parte order appointing a receiver as prayed for. Defendant demurred to the complaint in due time, and on July 6th moved the court to vacate the appointment of the receiver, upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order, and that the facts do not establish a proper case for such appointment. The court denied the motion. The motion of defendant was heard upon an uncontroverted affidavit, from which it appeared, among other things, that the mortgage did not contain any provision by which the rents, issues, and profits of the premises were mortgaged; nor did the mortgage provide for the appointment of a receiver.

It appeared from the affidavit that the only real property belonging to defendant estate is the mortgaged property; that defendant's intestate died April 5, 1896, leaving as his sole heir a minor son; that defendant was duly appointed administratrix May 1st, and on June 8th she petitioned to have the said real property set apart as a homestead for the benefit of the minor, which was done by order of the court of June 22, 1896. It also appeared in the affidavit that the defendant administratrix and the minor were in possession of the land at the hearing of the motion, and that on June 20, 1896, the receiver claimed possession. A bill of exceptions was duly settled August 12, 1896, showing the foregoing proceedings. August 22, 1896, plaintiff filed a second amended complaint, making the minor child a party defendant, to which the defendants in due time demurred and answered. It further appears by a second bill of exceptions that on September 7, 1896, defendants again moved the court to revoke and set aside the order appointing the receiver, and to discharge him, upon the grounds stated in the first motion, and upon the same affidavit, and upon the demurrer and answer to the second amended complaint, and upon the further grounds that the court had made no new order of appointment after the complaint was amended, and that the minor child was and is the owner of the crops. The court denied the motion. The cause was heard November 6, 1896, and the court embodied its findings of fact in the decree which it entered, as prayed for by plaintiff, on November 14, 1896. An amended decree was entered ex parte on December 8, 1896, including some portion of the mortgaged land omitted from the first decree. A third bill of exceptions was duly settled, setting forth the proceedings at the trial, and defendant's motion for nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence, and motion for a new trial, and its grounds. A fourth bill of exceptions was duly settled, setting forth that the report and account of the receiver came on to be heard April 17, 1897, together with plaintiff's motion for an order directing the receiver to pay to plaintiff the moneys in his hands, the proceeds of the crops grown on the mortgaged premises; that defendants still insisted upon their objections to the appointment of the receiver, and objected to the hearing of the account and the granting of plaintiff's motion, and claimed that the moneys in the hands of the receiver should be paid to defendant administratrix and guardian; that the receiver was acting without authority of law, and the court had no jurisdiction to hear or to settle the account, because the appointment was void; that the account showed that the receiver had received from the rents and profits of the mortgaged property $1,173.69, and had expended in harvesting the crops and other ways $401.77, leaving a balance in his hands of $771.92; that the returns of sales under foreclosure showed a deficiency of $1,019.74; that the court settled the receiver's account as rendered, and on April 20, 1897, at an adjourned hearing of plaintiff's motion, the court made an order directing the receiver to apply the moneys in his hands on the deficiency judgment of plaintiff. The appeal is from the decree of foreclosure as first rendered, and also from the order amending the decree; also, from the various orders of the court set forth in the various bills of exceptions, which need not be recapitulated here.

1. The point particularly relied upon by appellants is that, under subdivision 2, § 564, Code Civ. Proc., the court cannot, by the appointment of a receiver, take from the mortgagor, or from any person claiming under him, the rents, issues, and profits of the mortgaged premises, and apply them to the mortgage debt, unless the mortgage so provides in terms. Quite recently the point has been under examination in this court, and the previous cases reviewed. Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 120 Cal. 614, 52 Pac. 1006. The subject was also fully discussed in Simpson v. Ferguson, 112 Cal. 180, 40 Pac. 104, 44 Pac. 484. Upon the authority of these cases and the principles therein enunciated, we think the trial court erred in directing the proceeds of the growing crops of the mortgaged premises to be applied to the deficiency judgment. In the Bank of Woodland Case it appeared that an assignment by bill of sale had been made of the crops before the assignor or the assignee knew of the order appointing a receiver, and that the rights of third persons had intervened; and it also appeared that the receiver never had actual possession of the crops; but we think that the principle upon which the decision rests, and the reasons advanced in support of the conclusions reached, are decisive of the rights of appellants in this case, although the facts differ somewhat in the two cases.

Defendant administratrix entered upon her duties as such May 1, 1896, and was appointed guardian of the minor's person and estate April 10, 1896. She was in possession of the property at the time the receiver was appointed, and remained in possession of the real property thereafter. It does not appear when the receiver took possession of the crops, but presumably at harvest, which as to the barley may have been before, but as to the wheat must have been after, the court had set apart the real property as a homestead on June 22d. The administratrix was entitled to the possession of the crops for the purposes of administration, payment of debts of deceased, and other administrative purposes. But, apart from these facts, we do not think the appointment and the subsequent possession of the receiver created any lien on the crops, or authorized the application of the proceeds to plaintiff's deficiency judgment. We are not aware that this court has ever held in any case, where the mortgage did not purport to mortgage the rents, issues, and profits, that the growing crops of the mortgagor may be taken possession of by a receiver, under section 564, supra, and the proceeds applied to any deficiency there may be upon the foreclosure sale of the mortgaged premises. In Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432, 4 Pac. 414, the rents and profits were expressly mortgaged, and the crops were held to be applicable to the deficiency judgment, there being no intervening rights of third parties by sale or chattel mortgage. But it was held in Simpson v. Ferguson, supra, that the manner of mortgaging growing crops, under section 2955, and following, of the Civil Code, is an exclusive mode, and covers every case of a mortgage given upon that class of property. It was further held that "while it is perfectly true that growing crops may be either personal or real property, according to the circumstances, and while * * * a mortgage of the land gives a lien upon everything that would pass by a grant of the land, which includes crops growing thereon, it is, nevertheless, well established that such lien, so far as the growing crops are concerned, is limited in its effect to the crops growing upon and unsevered from the land at the time of foreclosure. It does not vest the mortgagee with a right to the crops grown intermediate the giving of the mortgage and the foreclosure thereof. Until the latter event, where, as in this state, the mortgage creates no estate in the mortgagee, but confers only a lien upon the property, the mortgagor is entitled to such crops, with the same absolute right and dominion over them as if the mortgage did not exist." In that case the mortgage was expressly made a lien upon the rents, issues, and profits; but, before suit to foreclose, the mortgagor had given a chattel mortgage on the growing crops; but it was held that "the mortgagor being in possession of the land, and entitled as of right to the crops grown thereon, it was competent for him to sell or mortgage, or otherwise dispose of them, and convey a good title thereto, as against the mortgagee of the land or his assigns, at any time prior to the foreclosure of the latter's mortgage."

In the case at bar the mortgagee had no lien upon the crops, by the express terms of his mortgage. The decree of foreclosure was not entered until December 8, 1896, long after the crops were gathered, and the deficiency was not ascertained until upon sale under the decree. The authority of the receiver, and the power of the court over the crops, even where the mortgage undertakes to subject the rents, issues, and profits to the mortgage, it is thus seen, are very much circumscribed under our law. Where the mortgage is silent upon the subject, the power given the court or receiver must come alone from section 564, Code Civ. Proc.; and upon this section alone must respondent rely. In the recent Bank of Woodland Case, supra, the question of the right of the receiver to hold the crops by virtue of his appointment alone, and to apply their proceeds to the deficiency judgment after having reduced them to possession, and whether such possession under the appointment as receiver gave the lien, received some attention. Speaking of the effect of the appointment being treated as a sequestration of the property mentioned in the order of appointment, it was said: "The cases in which that principle was declared are mainly cases in which complainants, at whose instance the receivers were appointed, had some estate in, or some right to, or lien upon, the property involved, prior to and independent of the appointment of the receiver. * * * In all such cases the complainants have estates or interests in the property, or liens thereon, independent of, and not created by, the receivership, and the receiver is appointed to preserve and enforce their pre-existing rights. But in the case at bar the appellant, under his mortgage contract (it did not purport to mortgage the rents, issues, and profits) and the laws of this state, had no estate or interest in or lien upon the growing crops prior to and independent of the receivership; and the rule contended for by him as above stated should not be extended to such a case."

We do not think it was ever intended by section 564, supra, to create a new lien by the mere appointment of a receiver, in a case like the present one; or that, when appointed for any proper purpose (as he may be to restrain the commission of waste, for example), he may be empowered to take possession of the crops of the mortgagor, and apply them to the mortgage debt; nor do we think that, having taken possession under such appointment, any lien is thereby acquired for any such purposes. Any other view would, we think, in effect create a new contract for the parties, and give a lien upon property not included in the mortgage. As there was no showing by the plaintiff or allegation in the complaint, except that the mortgaged property was probably insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, there was no sufficient cause for the appointment of a receiver; and, as the receiver had no authority to take possession of and harvest the crops, it follows that the court had no authority to apply the proceeds of the sale of the crops to the payment of the deficiency judgment. The administrator was entitled to these proceeds, as property of the estate. The deficiency judgment was payable only in due course of administration, and gave no lien upon the crops or their proceeds. The unpaid balance of plaintiff's judgment became the subject of a claim against the estate, and could be paid only as any other claim upon proper proceedings.

2. The complaint was twice amended, and demurrers were interposed. It is objected to the second amended complaint that it did not allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that it appears thereby that plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue, and failed to show that plaintiff was the owner and holder of the note and mortgage. It was alleged in the second amended complaint, and not denied in the answer, that the note and mortgage were executed by defendant's intestate to George L. Locke, plaintiff's intestate; that the latter died December 9, 1895; and that, "after due proceedings had in this court, this plaintiff was, by order of this court duly given, made, and entered, appointed administratrix of the estate of the said George L. Locke, deceased, and thereafter duly qualified as such administratrix, by taking the oath of office, and giving bonds, as required by law." It is not enough that it does not sufficiently appear from the complaint that plaintiff had capacity to sue. It must appear therefrom that she has not such legal capacity. The omission can only be taken advantage of by answer. District No. 110 v. Feck, 60 Cal. 405; Miller v. Luco, 80 Cal. 258, 22 Pac. 195; Wilhoit v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 453, 25 Pac. 675.

There is nothing in the point that plaintiff is not alleged to be the owner and holder of the note and mortgage. On their face they are made to plaintiff's intestate, and were in plaintiff's possession as administratrix, and were offered in evidence. An averment that plaintiff was the owner and holder was unnecessary. Bank v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 604, 34 Pac. 337.

3. Appellant claims that the motion for a new trial should have prevailed:

(a) Because there was no evidence of nonpayment other than the promissory note itself, which was not identified, with its indorsements of payments, and that introducing the note was making a witness of plaintiff's intestate; citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3. This section of the Code does not apply.

(b) The denial of nonpayment is made on want of information to answer the allegation of nonpayment. The evidence of nonpayment was the introduction of the note, on which certain payments were indorsed, as shown in the complaint. The objection made to this evidence was that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, because it was not shown that the indorsements were made by authority of any one, or that they were "all the indorsements that should be upon the note, and were not proper evidence of what the payments upon the note were." The court found that the allegation of nonpayment in the complaint was true. There was, we think, evidence of nonpayment,—enough to support the finding. Possession of the note by plaintiff was some evidence of nonpayment.

4. It is complained that the findings of fact were embodied in the decree. This was permissible (Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 133, 41 Pac. 868); and we think the findings support the judgment of foreclosure. The account of the receiver shows that the expenses incurred by him all related to the harvesting, protection, and sale of the grain; nothing is charged for his services. While we have held that the court had no authority to empower him to do this work, we cannot agree with appellant that he should pay over the entire proceeds of the crop. There is no suggestion that he failed to harvest the crops economically, and with as little cost to the defendant estate as the administratrix could have done. He was acting, at least, under color of authority. It was held in Staples v. May, 87 Cal. 178, 25 Pac. 346, where a receiver in a foreclosure proceeding had mined ores on ground not the subject of the mortgage, that, as a trespasser, he was liable only for the net proceeds of the ore extracted. We do not think the receiver in this case should be held to any greater liability.

Our conclusion is that the decree foreclosing the mortgage should be affirmed; that the order settling the receiver's account should also be affirmed; but that the order directing the net proceeds of the crops to be applied to the payment of plaintiff's deficiency judgment should be modified so as to direct that such proceeds be turned over to defendant administratrix, as assets of the estate.

TOMPKINS et al. v. MONTGOMERY.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1898.)

INSTRUCTIONS—CONTINUANCE—AFFIDAVIT.

1. A requested instruction that if the jury found that J., "by reason of having hired the team, wagon, and driver from defendant, had become, as it were, the owner * * * for that day," defendant was not responsible for injuries received by negligence of driver, is properly refused, because submitting to the jury a question of law.

2. An instruction directing a verdict for defendant if the jury find a certain fact, of which there is no evidence, is properly denied.

3. Statement of defendant, in affidavit for continuance on ground of absent witness, that he has not known the address of the witness for the past six weeks or two months, implies that he had known it up to that time, and that he did know it at the time the case was set for trial, it having been set for trial more than two months before the day affidavit was made; so that continuance is properly denied for want of diligence, it not appearing that he had made any effort to secure the testimony of the witness.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by Emma A. Tompkins and husband against Montgomery. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For former opinion, see 47 Pac. 1006.

E. M. Gibson and Welles Whitmore, for appellant. A. A. Moore, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The defendant is the proprietor of an hotel and livery stable at Cazadero, and on the 1st of June, 1895, the plaintiff Emma A. Tompkins was a guest at the hotel. On that day a party consisting of 10 persons started to go from Cazadero to Ft. Ross, in a vehicle drawn by four horses, which were driven by an employé of the defendant; and after proceeding a few miles the vehicle was overturned, and the plaintiff thrown out upon the ground and seriously injured. The present action was brought to recover damages for the injury, alleging that it was caused by reason of the negligence of the defendant's servant. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $13,500. The present appeal is from an order denying a new trial.

Whether the vehicle was overturned by reason of the negligence of the driver, as well as the extent of the injury, and the amount of compensation to be awarded the plaintiff, were matters which were determined by the jury upon the evidence before them, and their verdict thereon must be accepted as final. The amount of the verdict cannot be held as excessive, in view of the injury shown to have been sustained.

The main ground of the defense before the jury was that the team had been hired from the defendant by one Joy, and that it was under his direction and control in making the trip from Cazadero to Ft. Ross, and, consequently, that the defendant was not liable for the negligence of the driver. The evidence before the jury tended to show that a day or two before the accident a party of guests at the hotel was made up for the purpose of taking this drive, and that Mr. Joy, who was to be one of the party, went to the office of the hotel the afternoon before the accident, and made arrangements for the team for this day, and was told that the charge therefor would be $15. Mr. Joy did not get up the party, nor does it appear that any one went at his request or upon his invitation. When he engaged the team he said nothing about the payment for it, or by whom it was to be made, nor did he say anything to any of the party that he was to be paid by them. Before going on the trip, Mrs. Tompkins inquired of Mr. Ward, who was the defendant's general manager, what the fare for the trip would be, and was told by him that it would be $2. Others also testified that Mr. Ward told them that the fare for the trip would be $2. No entry was made upon the defendant's books of the hiring of the team by Joy, and, owing to the accident, no charge was made to any one for the team, or for the fare of the trip. The driver was furnished by the hotel, and was the person usually employed by the defendant in that capacity. The court instructed the jury that, if they found from the evidence that at the date of the accident the team and the driver were under the control and management of Joy, the defendant was not liable to the plaintiff. The verdict which was rendered necessarily implies that, upon the evidence before the jury, they found that it was not under his control or management, and this conclusion must be accepted as correct.

The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury that if they found that Joy, "by reason of having hired the team, wagon, and driver from defendant, had become, as it were, the owner or proprietor of said team, wagon, and driver for that day," the defendant was not responsible. The court did not err in refusing to give this instruction. It would have been to leave to the jury to determine a proposition of law, rather than a fact. If the defendant had requested the court to instruct the jury, as a proposition of law, that Joy had become the owner of the team and driver by reason of having hired them, the court would have refused it, and it was justified in refusing an instruction which depended upon such a finding by the jury. The defendant cannot complain that the court gave the instruction with the modification "that the team and conveyance and driver were under the control of Joy." Neither can he complain of a similar modification in the other instruction which was requested by him.

The court properly refused to instruct the jury that the defendant was not liable if they should find from the evidence that the plaintiff was not thrown from the wagon, but jumped therefrom. There was no evidence before the jury which would have authorized them to find that she jumped from the wagon.

When the case was called for trial the defendant asked for a continuance upon the ground of an absent witness, and filed his affidavit in support thereof, but the court denied his motion. The statement in his affidavit that he had not known the address of the witness for the past six weeks or two months implied that he had known it up to that time, and that he did know it at the time the case was set for trial. The case had been set for trial upon that day more than two months previous, and it did not appear that the defendant had made any effort to secure the testimony of this witness. The court properly refused a continuance upon the ground of this want of diligence on the part of the defendant.

The record is quite voluminous and contains many exceptions which were taken at the trial to the rulings of the court upon the admission of testimony; but, upon a careful examination, we find no error therein of which the defendant can complain, or any ruling that requires an extended consideration. Upon an appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial, the sufficiency of the complaint, or the correctness of the ruling in overruling a demurrer thereto, cannot be considered. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186. The judgment and order are affirmed.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL — INSANITY — INSTRUCTIONS—MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

1. One accused of assault with intent to murder, who interposed a defense of insanity, is not prejudiced by the failure to define malice to the jury as defined by Pen. Code, § 188.

2. Nor was accused prejudiced by the giving of an instruction which left the condition of defendant's mind at the time of committing the assault out of consideration, where the court had, in other portions of the charge repeatedly told the jury that, if accused was insane in committing the assault, he was incapable of forming the necessary intent.

3. An instruction that, where accused pleads insanity, "we hear everything that he says, consider everything that he does, we observe his conduct on the stand, we don't check him in stating his testimony, because one of the purposes is to see whether he is a sane man or not," is not prejudicial as authorizing the jury to infer that the issue was accused's insanity at the time of trial, and not when committing the assault, where the jury had in various forms been told that the question was whether or not accused was insane at the time of committing the crime.

4. On the issue of the insanity of one charged with assault with intent to commit murder, testimony was received to show that the prosecuting witness had oppressed accused to such a degree in financial transactions as to drive him to insanity. The jury was instructed that this testimony was admitted solely on the question of insanity, and was irrelevant for any other purposes, and then charged that, where a man pleads insanity, his testimony is heard, his acts are considered, his conduct on the stand observed, and he is not checked in testifying, because one of the purposes is to ascertain whether he is sane or not, but, if the jury should "conclude that he is a sane man, * * * those things drop out of the case." Held, that the instruction was not erroneous as directing the jury to disregard accused's testimony entirely if they found him sane, the words "those things" referring solely to the evidence admitted on the issue of insanity.

5. It is not prejudicial to refuse a proper instruction, the principle of which is embodied in other parts of the charge.

6. An order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Anthony Burgle was convicted of an assault with intent to commit murder, and from the judgment, from an order denying a new trial, and from an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment, he appeals. Appeal from order denying the motion in arrest of judgment dismissed, and judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

Walter Gallagher and J. S. Guilfoyle, Jr., for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. Defendant was convicted of an assault with intent to commit murder, alleged to have been committed upon the person of one Sigmund L. Braverman; and he appeals from the judgment, from an order denying a motion for new trial, and also from an order denying his motion in arrest of judgment.

Appellant's contentions for a reversal are all based upon asserted errors of the court committed in giving and refusing instructions to the jury. The evidence, beyond all doubt, warranted the jury in finding that the appellant assaulted the prosecuting witness with intent to murder him, unless the appellant, at the time of the assault, was insane; and therefore the only rulings of the court in the matter of instructing the jury which are of much significance in the case are those touching the subject of insanity. There are, however, some exceptions to instructions given by the court touching the general nature of an assault with intent to commit murder. In its general charge to the jury the court correctly and very fully stated the nature of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, and informed them that the defendant should not be convicted of the crime charged, unless, at the time of the assault, he intended to kill the prosecuting witness under such circumstances that, if he had killed him, the homicide would have been murder; and the court, having described the crime of murder, used the following language: "In defining the crime of murder, which crime the defendant is alleged to have attempted to commit, I have told you that it involves the element of malice aforethought. The word 'malice' imports a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person, or an intent to do a wrongful act." The appellant objects to the foregoing language, because it does not contain that description of express and implied malice which is to be found in section 188 of the Penal Code. It is doubtful, however, whether the language of section 188 should be given to the jury at all in a case of assault with intent to commit murder. It seems to have been intimated in People v. Wallace, 101 Cal. 285, 35 Pac. 862, that said section should not be given in a case like the one at bar, because implied malice is not equivalent to that actual intent which is essential to the crime of assault with intent to commit murder. See, also, on this subject, People v. Mize, 80 Cal. 42, 22 Pac. 80. The appellant did not ask the court to instruct the jury in the language of section 188; and, at all events, it is apparent that appellant was not injured by the fact that section 188 was not given to the jury as an instruction. Another sentence of the court in its general charge to the jury upon the subject of intent is objected to by appellant, not because it does not, on its face, state the law correctly if applied to a sane man, but that it leaves out the consideration of the soundness or unsoundness of defendant's mind at the time of the assault. But the court had over and over again told the jury that, if the appellant was insane at the time of the assault, he was incapable of forming the intent necessary to constitute the crime; and, considering all that the court had said upon that subject, the jury could not have been led astray by the omission to restate the matter again in the language to which exception was taken.

The appellant particularly objects to the following language, which constitutes the first part of a sentence: "Now, a man comes and pleads that he was insane. We hear everything that he says; consider everything that he does; we observe his conduct on the stand; we don't check him in stating his testimony, because one of the purposes is to see whether he is a sane man or not." The latter part of this sentence is as follows: "But if you have concluded or shall conclude that he is a sane man, of course those things drop out of the case, and they form neither a defense nor a palliation against a crime, if the crime is proven to have been committed." The charge was an oral one, and the first half of the sentence seems to be one of those remarks which a person engaged in oral conversation is often led to make without any very accurate notion of what he is about to say. There is no great pith or moment to it; its meaning and intent are somewhat obscure; but we do not think that the jury could have given it any meaning prejudicial to the appellant. The appellant contends that the jury might have inferred from the language that the main question was whether or not the appellant was a sane man at the time he was on the witness stand, and not whether or not he was a sane man at the time of the assault; but the court had repeatedly told the jury in various forms that as to the matter of insanity the question was whether or not the appellant was insane at the time of the assault, and the language used by the court cannot be fairly construed as meaning anything more than that the appearance of the appellant at the time of the trial might be considered as a circumstance, however slight, in determining the defendant's sanity at the time of the alleged committing of the offense. It is also contended by appellant that the last half of the sentence told the jury that, if they found that the appellant was sane, then they were to disregard his testimony altogether. But this contention cannot be maintained. A great deal of testimony had been admitted tending to show that the prosecuting witness had oppressed the appellant to a great degree in financial transactions,—this testimony having been admitted for the purpose of showing that these financial transactions had tended to drive appellant to insanity. Immediately prior to the use of the language above quoted, and to which exception was taken, the court had instructed the jury that this testimony as to the financial transactions was admitted solely upon the question of insanity, and that it was not relevant for any other purpose, and the court was clearly referring to that matter when it said that, if the jury should conclude that the appellant was sane, then "those things drop out of the case,"—that is, those things which had been admitted solely as tending to show appellant's insanity. There was no error in refusing to give instruction No. 1 asked by appellant. It is doubtful whether the instruction upon its face is clearly correct; but the principle involved was, we think, clearly stated in other instructions of the court. The appeal from the order denying the motion in arrest of judgment is dismissed, that order not being appealable. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

DENNING v. STATE. (S. F. 1,379.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1899.)

CLAIMS AGAINST STATE — HARBOR COMMISSIONERS — GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS — INJURIES TO EMPLOYEES.

1. St. 1893, p. 57, § 1, authorizing one to sue the state for a claim not allowed by the board of examiners, does not create any liability or cause of action which had not previously existed.

2. St. 1889, p. 380, authorizing the state harbor commissioners to collect sufficient tolls to enable them to control San Francisco Bay, does not make their duties purely administrative, enabling their employé to recover of the state for injuries occasioned by their negligence.

3. Though the harbor commissioners exercise administrative functions while acting as wharfingers, yet their duty of extinguishing fires in wharves is purely governmental, and hence one employed by them to extinguish such fires cannot recover of the state for an injury caused by their negligence.

4. An action by an employé of the state harbor commissioners, for injuries received occasioned by their alleged negligence, is an action of tort, and not of contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by John W. Denning against the state of California. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the State. R. R. Bigelow, Henley & Costello, and Edw. J. Banning, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff, Denning, was employed by the board of state harbor commissioners as a night deck hand upon a tugboat—the Governor Irwin—belonging to the state and used by said board. Among other duties of the plaintiff as a deck hand, it is alleged he was required to place lights on the top of the cabin on each side, and for this purpose climbed a ladder eight or nine feet high, reaching from the deck to the top of the cabin; that the ladder was insecurely fastened, and became detached at one side, and caused the plaintiff to fall, whereby he sustained serious injuries, and to recover damages therefor he brought this action, alleging that it was caused by the negligence of the defendant. The defendant demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It was overruled by the court, and the defendant answered. A jury trial was had, and the plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, the defendant appeals.

The most important question in the case is whether the state is liable for the negligence of the board of state harbor commissioners, whereby the plaintiff, an employé, it is alleged, was injured. This question was raised by the defendant by demurrer to the complaint, by motion for nonsuit, by a request to instruct the jury, and by a specification that the evidence does not justify the verdict. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff was employed by said board "as a night deck hand on a steam towboat, owned by the state of California, and operated by it in and upon the waters of the Bay of San Francisco, through its servants, the said board of state harbor commissioners"; but for what specific purpose it was so operated is not alleged. Upon this subject, however, there was some evidence. Capt. Farley, who was in the immediate command of the boat at and before the time of the accident, testified: "There are two boats, and three crews. The day crew do the towing and attend fires, in case fire comes in, and the night crew does nothing but attend fire duty at night, except every third Sunday and every third holiday the night crew is on in the day time." And the plaintiff testified: "I was night hand on that boat, in case of fire alarms,"—and again: "The boat was head on at the time the accident happened, lying at the side of a wharf, ready for action when the alarm came in. The boat was tied up to a little dock at the end of Mission street."

The point made by appellant in the several ways above mentioned is that the boat was used as a governmental agency in promoting public interests, and that in such case the state is not liable for the negligence of its agents, the board of state harbor commissioners, or of its employé in the immediate control of the vessel. To this the respondent replies—first, that the legislature intended, by the act of February 28, 1893, to make the state liable for the negligence of its officers and agents to the same extent that other corporations are liable; and, second, that, if the state is not responsible for the negligence of their officers or agents in the discharge of a strictly governmental duty, it is responsible for their negligence while they are in the discharge of purely administrative or business functions, and that they were so engaged at the time the plaintiff was injured. The first section of the act of 1893, relied upon by respondent, is as follows: "All persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the state board of examiners, are hereby authorized, on the terms and conditions herein contained, to bring suit thereon against the state in any of the courts of this state of competent jurisdiction, and prosecute the same to final judgment. The rules of practice in civil cases shall apply to such suits, except as herein otherwise provided." St.

1893, p. 57. This statute has been considered by this court in at least two cases, arising under different facts, and in both it was held that said statute did not create any liability or cause of action against the state where none existed before, but merely gave an additional remedy to enforce such liability as would have existed if the statute had not been enacted. Chapman v. State, 104 Cal. 690, 38 Pac. 457; Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 Pac. 416. Respondent's first point cannot, therefore, be sustained.

Respondent's second contention concedes that an action will not lie against the state for injuries caused by the negligence of its officers or agents in the discharge of a purely governmental duty; but it is contended that said board was not engaged in the discharge of a purely governmental power, but was engaged in the discharge of a purely business function. By section 2504 of the Political Code, as amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 380), it is provided that "the commissioners shall have possession and control of that portion of the Bay of San Francisco, together with all the improvements, rights, privileges, easements and appurtenances connected therewith," for the purposes therein provided. Among other things, they are required to construct such number of wharves as the wants of commerce may require, and to repair and maintain all the wharves, piers, quays, landings, and thoroughfares, and to make such improvements as may be necessary for the safe landing, loading and unloading, and protection of all classes of merchandise, and for the safety of passengers passing into and out of the city of San Francisco by water, and to construct a sea wall, dredge slips, and docks to a depth that will admit of the free ingress and egress of all classes of water craft, to perform which dredging the board is authorized to purchase or construct dredging machines, scows, steam tugs, and the necessary machinery, and employ men for operating the same. Said board is also authorized to fix and regulate, from time to time, the rates of dockage, wharfage, crantage, tolls, and rents, and collect such amount of revenue therefrom as will enable the commissioners to perform the duties required of them by the act, and for the purpose of collecting such revenue the board is authorized to appoint wharfingers and other officers. The board is also authorized to make rules and regulations in relation to the mooring and anchoring of vessels in said harbor, providing and maintaining free, open, and unobstructed passageways for steam ferryboats and other steamers navigating the waters of the bay, so that they can make their trips without impediment from vessels at anchor or other obstacles, besides many other things which need not be mentioned.

Article 15 of the constitution contains the following provisions:

"Section 1. The right of eminent domain is hereby declared to exist in the state to all frontages on the navigable waters of the state.

"Sec. 2. No individual, partnership or corporation, claiming or possessing the frontage or tidal lands of a harbor, bay, inlet, estuary or other navigable water in this state, shall be permitted to exclude the right-of-way to such water whenever it is required for any public purpose, nor to destroy or obstruct the free navigation of such water; and the legislature shall enact such laws as will give the most liberal construction to this provision, so that access to the navigable waters of this state shall be always attainable for the people thereof.

"Sec. 3. All tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in this state, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay or inlet used for the purposes of navigation, shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships or corporations."

These provisions of the constitution clearly show that the state has retained the control of the harbors and frontages thereon for the use and benefit of the people, for the promotion of commerce and the general benefit of the body politic, and not as a mere business enterprise, through which profits may accrue to the state treasury; and the statute creating the state board of harbor commissioners is intended and adapted to the execution of this purpose. It gives, it is true, various powers to that board, and imposes upon it various duties, some of them of a character which, under certain circumstances, may give a cause of action against the state. The construction of sea walls, wharves, piers, boats, etc., requires contracts for material and labor, and the state is liable upon its contracts. And so the board is authorized to conduct the business of a wharfinger, collecting tolls and charges for loading and unloading freight upon its wharves, storage thereon, etc., a business that might be conducted by an individual or private corporation; but all such business necessarily involves matters of contract upon which the state may become liable. But the powers and duties of the board are diversified. It has control of the bay and of the vessels using it, keeping open passageways for the ferryboats, controlling the anchorage of vessels, removing vessels from the wharves and piers when unloaded, and the general care of all the property belonging to the state, and connected with the wharves and piers, or used by said board. These duties are of a police character, and purely governmental. The fact that the board is authorized or required to collect tolls and charges for dockage and wharfage to such extent "as will enable the commissioners to discharge the duties required of them by the act" does not affect its character as a governmental agency. In Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 53 Pac. 416, the plaintiff was a visitor at the state fair conducted by the state board of agriculture, and was injured by the seats giving way, the seats being insecure through their negligent and insecure construction. The board was authorized to charge, and did charge and receive, fees for admission; but it was said by this court, after stating that fact: "It does not follow, however, that the society is organized for gain. It exists for the sole purpose of promoting the public interest in the business of agriculture and kindred objects. It is an agency of the government, and in no sense an organization for pecuniary profit to the state." Citing Daggett v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 56, 28 Pac. 51. So here, the fact that the board is authorized and required to collect tolls and charges under the act does not make the board an instrument or agency of the state for profit, or convert it into a mere business enterprise. The act creating the board and defining its powers and duties was inspired and authorized by the constitution itself, in the interest and for the benefit of the people, through the promotion of commerce, which is always one of the chief cares and imperative duties of all governments. But, even if it were true that, in so far as the duties of the board were those of a wharfinger, the liabilities of the state to its employés are or should be the same as that of a private corporation engaged in the same business, it does not follow that the state is or would be liable to the plaintiff, inasmuch as he was employed in a distinct branch of the service, viz. the protection against or extinguishment of fires, which, even in the case of municipal corporations, is uniformly held to be the exercise of a purely governmental function; and there is certainly as strong ground for distinguishing between the different functions of the board as there can be for distinguishing between the different functions of municipal corporations, in the exercise of some of which the corporation is liable for negligence, while in others it is not.

Respondent refers to Chapman v. State, 104 Cal. 690, 38 Pac. 457, where the state was held liable for the negligence of the board of harbor commissioners in permitting a wharf to become unsafe, and which fell, whereby a large quantity of coal placed thereon was lost, and, after correctly stating that the liability of the defendant was that of a wharfinger,—a bailee,—and that the action was substantially an action for the breach of a contract, he argues that "the relation of master and servant is a contract relation, and this action, the same as in the Chapman Case, is brought to recover damages for a breach of duty under the contract." This action, however, is in tort, and not upon contract. A tort is defined to be "any wrong, not consisting in mere breach of contract, for which the law undertakes to give to the injured party some appropriate remedy against the wrongdoer." Cooley, Torts, p. 2. The same author (page 19) says: "One may become liable, in an action as for tort, either (1) by actually doing to the prejudice of another something he has no legal right to do; (2) by doing something he may rightfully do, but wrongfully or negligently doing it by such means, or at such time, or in such manner, that another is injured; or (3) by neglecting to do something which he ought to do, whereby another suffers injury." In the Chapman Case the defendant's contract of bailment was to deliver a certain quantity of coal, and the damages for a breach of that contract was the value of the coal agreed to be delivered, and the contract itself furnished at least one of the essential standards for the measurement of damages, viz. the quantity of the coal lost. Here the contract of employment has nothing whatever to do with the liability, except to create a duty on the part of the employer,—a duty not expressed in the contract, and for the violation of which the contract of employment furnishes no rule or standard for the estimation of damages. Nor is the action grounded upon the contract, but upon the duty springing from the relation created by it, viz that of employer and employé, and under the old system of pleading was always classed as an action ex delicto.

Having concluded that the action is not upon contract, that it did not arise out of the employment of the plaintiff by the board while it was engaged in the exercise of a mere business function, but in the exercise of a governmental power for the benefit of the public, and that the act of 1893 authorizing suits against the state is merely remedial, and did not create a liability where none existed before, this action is brought clearly within the case of Bourn v. Hart, 93 Cal. 321, 28 Pac. 951. There the petitioner asked this court for a writ of mandate compelling the board to allow his claim against the state, in accordance with the provisions of an act of the legislature appropriating $10,000 for his relief, for injuries received by him while acting as a guard at the state prison, through the alleged negligence of his superior officer. The writ was denied, the court saying: "In entering the service of the state the petitioner assumed all the risks attending such employment, whether arising from its ordinary perils, or resulting from the negligence or misfeasance of other servants of the state, and the appropriation made by this act is a mere gratuity, as the state was under no legal liability to compensate him for any loss which he may have sustained while thus in the discharge of his duties."

In this discussion we have assumed, without deciding, that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the charge of negligence on the part of the officers and agents of the state, and our conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider numerous alleged errors of law occurring upon the trial. The judgment and order are reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1899.)

FORGERY—INDICTMENT—EVIDENCE—OTHER CRIMES.

1. Since the statute provides that one who utters a fictitious order for the payment of money, with intent to defraud any person, is guilty of the crime, an indictment alleging that defendant uttered such an order to J., with intent to defraud a certain company, is sufficient, without showing that J. is connected with such company.

2. Evidence in chief that a defendant charged with making and uttering a fictitious order for the payment of money had on prior occasions gone under assumed names, and had been arrested for drunkenness, is not admissible, as tending to show intent, system, and guilty knowledge.

3. Nor is evidence that on a prior occasion he wrote a check under an assumed name.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

A. Arlington was convicted of making and uttering a fictitious order for the payment of money, and he appeals. Reversed.

A. S. Newburgh, R. H. Gaylord, and G. B. Keane, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of making and uttering a fictitious order for the payment of money. Objection is now made for the first time to the sufficiency of the allegations of the indictment. The pleading appears to have been drawn with great care, and we find no substantial objection to it.

The indictment charges the order to have been uttered to Charles Johnson, with intent to defraud the United Carriage Company. It is now claimed that there should be some showing by the pleading that Johnson was in some way connected with this carriage company. We see no reason why such a showing could not be made by the evidence, if it were necessary. But the statute says, if the defendant utters the writing with intent to defraud any person, he is guilty of the crime; and it would seem that the allegations of the indictment fully satisfy the requirements of the statute.

Under objection the court admitted the evidence of a detective and a policeman to the effect that the defendant, upon occasions prior to the making and the passing of the order here involved, had gone under assumed names, and had been arrested for drunkenness. We know of no law justifying the admission of this evidence, and the attorney general has failed to call our attention to any legal principle justifying it. Its admission is violative of elementary principles. The attorney general says in his brief: "This testimony was admissible as tending to prove intent, system, scienter, guilty knowledge." We fail to see how this testimony tends to do any of these things. It is hardly necessary to point out how the admission of this evidence was prejudicial to defendant's case. Going under assumed names, and being arrested for drunkenness, are matters not conducive to a good character for defendant. And it is expressly held in People v. Denby, 108 Cal. 56, 40 Pac. 1051, that the admission of this kind of evidence is not only error, but is reversible error. It is claimed by the attorney general that the case of People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 383, 17 Pac. 431, is opposed to the Denby Case. We fail to find any inconsistency in the principles declared in the two decisions. In the Meyer Case the court held that upon cross-examination the defendant might be asked if he had ever been convicted of a felony. The decision went no further, and is fully supported by People v. Chin Mook Sow, 51 Cal. 597. The decision in that case is directly placed upon the authority of section 2051, Code Civ. Proc. It may be further suggested that all these cases arose upon the question as to the proper limit of the cross-examination of a defendant. In this case the evidence was directly offered in chief. When a person is accused of crime, and placed upon trial, he cannot be required to defend himself against anything but the specific charge, and he cannot be compelled, under the rules of law, to maintain the honesty and integrity of his entire life.

A witness (Evatt) also testified that upon a previous occasion the defendant made different statements as to his name. The witness says: "One name he gave me was Allison. He said he was of the firm of Allison & Gray,—wrote out a check to that effect." This evidence is objectionable, for the reasons already given. Under certain circumstances, in cases of forgery, other forgeries may be proven against a defendant. Our Reports contain many cases where the principle has been recognized and applied, but the evidence quoted falls far below the mark as coming within the rule there declared.

Some complaint is made of the instructions of the judge. In view of the fact that many of these instructions probably will not be given upon a second trial, we refrain from an examination of them in detail. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

LLOYD v. DAVIS et ux. (S. F. 872.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1899.)

LIMITATIONS—DEMURRERS—BANKRUPTCY—DEATH OF TRUSTEE—COURTS—JURISDICTION—MORTGAGES—PAYMENT OF TAXES—EVIDENCE.

1. Where an amended and supplemental complaint does not show on its face when the original complaint was filed, a demurrer, on the ground that the action was not brought before limitations had run, is properly overruled.

2. Rev. St. U. S. § 5103, providing for the settlement of an estate of a bankrupt by the appointment of a trustee by the creditors, to whom the bankrupt's property shall be conveyed, provides also that such settlement shall be deemed to be proceedings in bankruptcy, and the trustee shall have all the rights and powers of an assignee in bankruptcy. Held that, where the trustee dies, a state court has no authority to appoint a successor, or direct the execution of the trust, within Civ. Code, § 2289.

3. The settlement of an estate by the trustee does not divest the jurisdiction of the federal district court which adjudicated the bankruptcy, and, where the trustee dies, such court has power to take such steps as the circumstances require, so that a mistake as to the proper step to be taken cannot be collaterally attacked.

4. A mortgage covered an undivided 120-acre interest in a ranch. Prior to the action to foreclose, an action of partition was brought, joining as parties the trustee of the bankrupt mortgagee and the mortgagor. Five parcels of the ranch were set off to the mortgagor, including the lot in dispute, and all adjudged to be subject to the mortgage lien. Held, that the mortgagor in the foreclosure suit was bound by the adjudication that the lot in dispute was subject to the mortgage.

5. Where the mortgagee has the right, and it is his duty, to pay the taxes on the property to preserve his security, and receipts for taxes, some of which recite that the taxes were received from the mortgagor or third persons, are among the papers left by the trustee of the bankrupt mortgagee on his death, the receipts are admissible in evidence in the foreclosure action, as tending to prove the taxes were paid by the mortgagee.

6. The receipts are sufficient to sustain a finding that the taxes were paid by the mortgagee, where not contradicted by evidence of the mortgagor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county.

Suit by John Lloyd, assignee of D. Ghirardelli, a bankrupt, against John Davis and his wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order refusing a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. H. Griffith, for appellants. Edward J. Pringle, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Suit to foreclose a mortgage executed by appellants to "Rudolph Hochkoffler, trustee of the creditors of D. Ghirardelli, bankrupt," on the 6th day of April, 1883, to secure their promissory note of that date for the sum of $17,961.25, payable to the order of said Hochkoffler, as such trustee, one year after the date thereof, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum. The action was dismissed as to the other defendants not above named. The plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appeal therefrom, and also from an order refusing a new trial.

The complaint upon which the cause was tried purports to be an "amended and supplemental complaint," and no other appears in the transcript. To this complaint the defendants demurred: (1) That it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and (2) that said cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendants answered, but did not by their answer plead any statute of limitations; and, as there was no issue, there was no finding upon that question. The amended and supplemental complaint was filed December 30, 1895. It shows that the action was commenced by Rudolph Hochkoffler, as trustee, to whom said note and mortgage were executed; but neither the original complaint, nor any statement of the date at which it was filed, appears in the transcript, and therefore it does not appear that the action was barred at the time the suit was commenced. In Wise v. Williams, 72 Cal. 544, 548, 14 Pac. 204, it is said: "Unless it clearly appears from the face of the complaint that plaintiff's cause of action is barred, the issue must be raised by answer." And in Curtiss v. Insurance Co., 90 Cal. 245, 249, 27 Pac. 211, it is said: "Here, however, the question is as to a rule of pleading, and we do not understand that a complaint showing money to have been loaned at a date sufficiently remote to admit of the running of the statute raises a presumption that it has run. On the contrary, when the allegation is consistent with the opposite conclusion, i. e. that the debt is not barred, the defense must be raised by plea,"—and several cases are there cited to that proposition. As the original complaint may have been filed before the statute had run, and nothing appearing in the amended complaint to show that it had not, the demurrer was properly overruled, so far as that ground is concerned.

Under the other ground of demurrer, viz. that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, it is contended that the facts alleged show that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest. This question is raised also by the answer, by exceptions to evidence, and by an attack upon the second finding, and may, therefore, be discussed generally.

The general facts of the case are that on June 6, 1870, D. Ghirardelli and Angelo Mangini, co-partners, were, as co-partners and individually, upon petition of their creditors, adjudged bankrupts by the United States district court for the district of California, under the bankruptcy act of 1867. On June 24, 1870, it was resolved by said creditors that it was for their best interests that the estate of said bankrupts should be settled and distribution made by a trustee under the inspection and direction of a committee of creditors, pursuant to section 43 of said act (section 5103, Rev. St. U. S.); and the creditors thereupon nominated Rudolph Hochkoffler as such trustee, and Joseph W. Stow and B. Corruith as such committee, and on July 11, 1870, said court confirmed said proceedings, and ordered said bankrupts to convey, transfer, and deliver all their property and estate to said trustee, and this order was complied with on July 15, 1870. All or part of the mortgaged premises were conveyed by Ghirardelli to one Ivancovich prior to the proceedings in insolvency, and on April 8, 1871, Ivancovich conveyed to the defendant John Davis the same land, and Davis and wife executed to Ivancovich a mortgage thereon to secure the sum of $8,000, and this mortgage was assigned by Ivancovich to said Rudolph Hochkofler as such trustee in February, 1875, and on April 6, 1883, Davis and wife executed to said trustee a new note and mortgage, the same that are here in suit. Hochkofler, the trustee, died in September, 1891, after having commenced this action. The bankruptcy act of 1867 was repealed in June, 1878, to take effect September 1st of that year, with a proviso that such repeal should not invalidate or affect any case in bankruptcy instituted and pending prior to the day the repeal should take effect, but as to cases so pending the act repealed should continue in full force and effect until they were finally disposed of. On December 24, 1891, J. M. Gitchell, purporting to act as one of the registers in bankruptcy in said district court, reported to said court that said trustee had recently died, and that there was no person in charge of said bankrupts' estate, and thereupon, and upon the recommendation of certain creditors, said court made an order appointing John Lloyd, the plaintiff herein, an assignee in bankruptcy of said bankrupts' estate, and ordered that the executor of said Hochkofler, deceased, execute to said Lloyd a deed of assignment of all the estate, right, title, and interest which said Hochkofler had, as trustee, in the estate of said bankrupts, and such conveyance and transfer was made, and said Gitchell, as register in bankruptcy, also executed to said Lloyd an assignment of the same estate and effects; and on January 10, 1892, the superior court in which this action was pending made an order substituting said Lloyd as plaintiff in this action in place of said Hochkofler, deceased.

Appellants contend that, the creditors of the bankrupts having elected a trustee to settle the estate under the direction of a committee, and the estate, property, and effects of the bankrupts having been conveyed and assigned to the trustee, the district court had no jurisdiction to appoint an assignee, or to authorize or direct a conveyance and transfer of the estate to him; that Hochkofler was the trustee of an express trust; that the order of the district court appointing an assignee did not extinguish the trust or alienate the property rights or interests of the beneficiaries, or vest any rights, duties, or functions in the assignee, and that therefore it appears that "Lloyd, assignee of the estate of D. Ghirardelli, bankrupt," is not the real party in interest in this action; and that a trustee should have been appointed by the superior court, in which this action was pending, under the provisions of section 2289 of the Civil Code, which provides: "When a trust exists without any appointed trustee, or where all the trustees renounce, die or are discharged, the superior court of the county where the trust property, or some portion thereof is situated must appoint another trustee, and direct the execution of the trust.

In this we think appellants are mistaken. The settlement of the estate of a bankrupt under the provision of section 43 of said act (section 5103, Rev. St. U.S.), by a trustee, does not divest the jurisdiction of the district court, but said section expressly declares that "the winding up and settlement of any estate under the provisions of this section shall be deemed to be proceedings in bankruptcy, and the trustees shall have all the rights and powers of assignees in bankruptcy." It also provides that the trustee shall have and hold the property conveyed to him in the same manner and with the same powers and rights as the assignee in bankruptcy would have done. The settlement of the estate of a bankrupt by a trustee, under said section, being "a proceeding in bankruptcy," over which the state courts have no jurisdiction, it would appear to be clear that the superior court could not have the power to appoint a successor to the trustee, or "to direct the execution of the trust"; and it would appear to be equally clear that the jurisdiction of the district court, not having been divested by the election of the creditors to appoint a trustee, continued for the purpose of such further action as the circumstances might require, and, having jurisdiction to take some proper proceeding, a mistake as to the proper step to be taken would be an error merely, and could not be attacked collaterally. It can make no difference to the appellants by whom payment of their liability upon the note and mortgage may be enforced, provided that payment thereof secures them from further liability; and it is not suggested that there could be such liability to any one except the creditors, who, they rightly say, are the beneficiaries of the trust. But these creditors are parties to the proceedings in bankruptcy, though not individually named upon the record, and are bound by the action of the bankruptcy court, unless in some proper manner they have such action set aside and vacated. But that said court had power, by some appropriate action, to prevent an absolute failure of the purposes and intent of the bankrupt act, I think is beyond question. No provision was made for the contingency of the death of the trustee, nor for the appointment of a successor. In Re Trowbridge, 9 N. B. R. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 14,191, it was said: "The proceeding contemplated by section 43 is evidently intended to be one by arrangement, and not by judicial process or proceedings. The power and jurisdiction of the court are, however, retained over the matter, in order that it may interfere whenever it may become necessary for the preservation and enforcement of the rights of all parties concerned." It is obvious that circumstances made it necessary for the district court to take some action for the preservation of the rights of the creditors, and we are not called upon to decide whether its action was technically regular or not. It had jurisdiction, and the creditors are concluded by its order. Respondent, having been vested with all the right, title, and interest which was before vested in the trustee, was rightly substituted as plaintiff in the action, and for the purposes of the action is the real party in interest.

The court found that lot 192, containing 41.17 acres, was covered by said mortgage, and this finding is attacked by appellants. In addition to several parcels specifically described in the mortgage, there was included therein an undivided interest in the ranch San Pablo, amounting to 121 acres. Prior to the commencement of this action, an action was brought to partition said rancho, and Hochkofler, the mortgagee, and these appellants, were made parties. All the lands described in said mortgage were parts of said rancho, but five several parcels described in the complaint were set off to Davis in satisfaction of his undivided interest of 121 acres, and said lot 192 was one of these five parcels; and by the decree in the partition case all of them were adjudged to be subject to the lien of said mortgage. Defendant Davis testified that he got said lot by taking possession in his own right, but admitted that it was decreed to him in the partition. It was therefore adjudged in the partition case that it was included in the mortgage, and by that adjudication both these parties are bound, whether said lot was originally covered by the mortgage or not.

The costs in said partition suit assessed against defendant John Davis amounted to $2,606.45. These costs were a judgment lien on the mortgaged premises, and were paid by plaintiff Lloyd, and included in the amount found due under the mortgage. The mortgage authorized the payment, but appellants contend that this amount was settled by the transfer of a claim against the California & Nevada Railroad Company. As to whether it was taken in satisfaction of said judgment, or to be applied if collected, the evidence was conflicting, and we cannot disturb the finding that it was not paid by said transfer.

Appellants also object to the amount of taxes found by the court to have been paid by the mortgagee, and quote from the sixth finding that "there is now due and owing to the plaintiff, for amount paid on taxes on the mortgaged premises, with interest, the sum of four thousand three hundred and sixty-four dollars and seventy-eight cents." The quotation omits the following, which appears in the finding after the word "plaintiff," viz. "for amounts paid in satisfaction of the judgment in said partition suit, and," so that said sum includes both judgment and taxes. The amount of taxes found to have been paid by the plaintiff is sustained by the evidence, if the evidence was properly received.

It was objected, to the introduction of receipts for taxes paid before the present plaintiff was appointed assignee, that they did not show that the taxes were paid by Hochkofler, the mortgagee; one of them reading, "Received from John Davis," etc., and another, "Received from Wells, Fargo & Co." These receipts came to the hand of the plaintiff among the papers left by Hochkofler at his death. Under section 4, art. 13, of the constitution, a mortgage, for the purposes of taxation, is deemed an interest in the property affected thereby, and the taxes assessed are made a lien on the property and security, and may be paid by either party; and, if the tax on the land be paid by the owner of the security, it becomes a part of the debt so secured. As the mortgagee had not only a legal right to pay the tax assessed upon the land, but as it was his duty to do so for the protection of his security, we think they were admissible as evidence tending to prove that the taxes were paid by him as mortgagee, and were sufficient to justify the finding, in the absence of evidence on the part of the defendants, who must have had personal knowledge of the fact if the taxes had been paid by them.

Appellants, in their opening brief, attack the correctness of the computation of interest upon the note, contending that an agreement was made by which the annual interest should be $1,000 per annum, instead of 7 per cent., and also that there was paid upon account of interest after March 1, 1891, the sum of $3,924.75, and compute the interest accordingly. Neither of these points is made by any specification of insufficiency of evidence or error of law. The only specification relating to interest in any manner is the fourth, which says: "The sixth finding is unsustained by the evidence, for the reason that both by the complaint and the evidence it is affirmatively shown that all interest on said note and mortgage was paid down to March 1, 1891,"—and it is not specified that there was any omission to credit interest paid after that date. It is explained by respondent that the payments made after March 1, 1891, were applied upon interest, and paid the interest to that date. The agreement to reduce the interest to $1,000 per annum is in the record, and contains the condition that it should not have effect longer than the annual payments should be punctually made.

Finding no error in the record, I advise that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCHELL. (Cr. 471)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 21, 1899.)

LARCENY—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for the larceny of a gray horse, defendant asked a witness if, at a certain time and place, "defendant and another person did not have some conversation in regard to a gray horse, and where this defendant could find that gray horse." Held, that it was not error to reject the question as too general, though it would have been admissible if it had been explicitly directed to a conversation, which defendant afterwards testified to as having been had at said time and place, wherein he was told by the other person that he had a gray horse, which he would turn into defendant's pasture, and which defendant might sell, and on his return to his home that night he found the gray horse in his pasture.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Hiram Schell was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Hinds and M. D. Ashbrook, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of grand larceny in stealing a certain gray horse, and now prosecutes this appeal.

At the conclusion of the people's case defendant placed a witness (Amos) upon the stand, who testified that he heard a conversation between defendant and one Spivey, in Fresno, the day prior to the time when the horse was taken. He was then asked the following question: "I will ask you if at that time this defendant and another person did not have some conversation in regard to a gray horse, and where this defendant could find that gray horse?" An objection was made and sustained to the question, and this ruling is assigned as error. After the witness had been withdrawn, the defendant took the stand, and testified that Spivey told him, at the conversation of the previous day, that he (Spivey) had a gray horse, which he would turn into defendant's pasture, and which defendant might sell, and upon his return to his home that night he found this gray horse in his pasture. This evidence of the defendant was clearly admissible, the truthfulness and good faith of the statements being matters for the jury to test; and if the question addressed to the witness Amos had been explicitly directed to the conversation, which was afterwards testified to by defendant, it should have been answered. But it was so general that it could not have been apparent to the judge that the answer would be competent evidence. At the time the question was asked Amos, the judge knew nothing of the claim of the defendant that he took the horse under authority from Spivey. He should have been so informed; otherwise, the question was entirely too general. Anything relating to a gray horse would be a pertinent answer to it, yet a thousand matters pertaining to a gray horse would be wholly inadmissible as evidence. The question should have been more pointed. The trial judge should have been informed in some way as to the particular matters intended to be proven by the answer of the witness. In the form the question was presented, it was impossible for the judge to know.

We have examined with care the three instructions refused by the trial court, and find either the subject-matter of them covered by other instructions, or legal justification for their refusal. For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

CHICAGO CLOCK CO. v. TOBIN et al.

APPEALS—PRESUMPTIONS—JUDGMENTS—NAMES.

1. In an action by the seller for the rescission of a sale, where neither the findings of fact nor any of the evidence appears in the record, it will be presumed that the court imposed on the seller all the conditions for recovering the goods that the facts would justify.

2. A judgment against "M. E. Tobin and John J. Tobin," whereas the action was against "E. M. Tobin and John J. Tobin, Jr.," where the pleadings and judgment, taken together, show clearly who are designed to be bound by the judgment, is not reversible.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Chicago Clock Company against E. M. Tobin and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Shay, for appellants. Haven & Haven, for respondent.

BRITT, C. The case alleged by the complaint in this action is, in substance: Plaintiff, a corporation, agreed to sell certain carpets and other furniture to defendants, they promising to pay for the same the sum of $1,727 in specified monthly installments. Defendants received possession of the goods, but agreed that plaintiff should remain the owner thereof until full payment of the price, with the right to retake possession upon default of any of the agreed payments. Defendants paid installments amounting to $535, and afterwards refused to pay anything further, and refused to redeliver the goods. The sums paid by defendants on the contract were no more than the reasonable value of the use of the goods by them, and the depreciation thereof from wear exceeded in amount the payments aforesaid. Plaintiff prayed that the contract and the payments made thereon be declared forfeited, and for recovery of possession of the goods. Besides sundry denials, the defendants pleaded, both by answer and cross complaint, that they were ready and willing to surrender the goods, but claimed a recovery of the money they had paid on their contract with plaintiff. The judgment was that plaintiff recover from "M. E. Tobin and John J. Tobin, defendants," possession as prayed, "provided that plaintiff pay to said defendants the sum of two hundred dollars, being the sum paid by defendants to plaintiff in excess of the value of use and depreciation of said property."

Defendants contend that the purpose of the action and the effect of the judgment was to rescind the contract of sale, and that they should have recovered the whole amount—$535—which they had paid the plaintiff. Admitting, though without deciding, that the action proceeds for a rescission, still the result contended for does not follow. No findings of fact appear in the record, nor any of the evidence at the trial. We must, therefore, assume, in support of the judgment, that the court imposed upon plaintiff, in favor of the defendants, all the conditions of recovering the goods which the facts before it would justify. Civ. Code, § 3408. Considering the state of the record, defendants have little reason to complain of the provisions of the judgment. See Rayfield v. Van Meter, 120 Cal. 416, 52 Pac. 666.

It is objected that in the body of the judgment defendants are named, respectively, M. E. Tobin and John J. Tobin, whereas the action is against E. M. Tobin and John J. Tobin, Jr. There is nothing in the objection. The pleadings and judgment, taken together, show clearly who are designed to be bound by the judgment, and that the error is but a clerical misprision, which may be corrected on motion, if deemed desirable for any purpose. Fallon v. Brittan, 84 Cal. 511, 24 Pac. 381. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

TRUMPLER et al. v. TRUMPLER et al.
(Sac. 398.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1899.)

APPEAL—RECALL OF REMITTITUR—PARTIES.

1. The nominal parties to a decree in partition sold the land to another, and 10 years afterwards, for the purpose of defeating his title, moved for a new trial, without notifying him, and fraudulently induced an attorney to appear for those of them who had been defendants, and to agree to such trial, and to confess the assignment of error on appeal from the order denying the new trial, whereby a remittitur issued from the appellate court, ordering a new trial. Held, that the court would recall the remittitur, on a showing by the purchaser of the fraud practiced on the court.

2. The propriety of recalling the remittitur was not affected by the fact that some personalty was included in the decree, and not conveyed by the nominal parties.

3. The real party in interest may move the appellate court to recall a remittitur secured in fraud of his rights, and by imposition on the court by the nominal parties; he being the legal representative of the parties by purchase of the subject-matter, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and having control of the action, under section 385.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Suit by Harry F. G. Trumpler and others against Barbara Trumpler and others. On appeal from an order denying a new trial, there was a judgment of reversal, and a remittitur issued, and J. H. Glide moved to recall the remittitur and set aside the judgment. Motion granted.

J. Chas. Jones, for appellants. H. G. Soule, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This case is now before us upon a submitted motion of J. H. Glide for an order recalling the remittitur hereinbefore issued, vacating the judgment of this court reversing the order of the superior court denying a new trial, and dismissing the appeal. The facts upon which the motion is based, appearing upon the face of the moving papers, are substantially these: The parties named as plaintiffs and defendants were the heirs and successors in interest of one Louis Trumpler, deceased, who died August 15, 1882, leaving several large tracts of land in Yolo county. The action was for the partition among the parties to the suit of said land. The interest of each party was set forth in the complaint, which concluded with the prayer that the lands be partitioned among the parties according to their interest as alleged therein. The defendants filed an answer in which they "admit, all and singular, the allegations in the said complaint contained," and "also join in the prayer of said complaint," and suggest certain names as suitable persons to make division of said lands. Such proceedings were afterwards had that an interlocutory decree was entered in accordance with the prayers of the parties, and the persons named in the answer were appointed referees to make the partition and division; and afterwards, on January 17, 1887, a final decree was entered, in which partition was made of the lands in accordance with the prayer of the complaint and of the answer. McKune & George appear as attorneys for the plaintiffs, and all the proceedings and the interlocutory and final judgments were in accordance with the consent of all the parties. Afterwards, in 1888, all these parties to the action conveyed all their interest in the lands to the said Glide, who makes this motion; and he at that time entered into the possession of the lands, and has been continuously in possession ever since. He paid for the lands $46,999.98. On May 18, 1897, more than 10 years after the entry of the judgment, another attorney, J. Charles Jones, without any substitution of attorneys having been made, filed in the court in which the judgment had been entered a notice on the part of the plaintiffs of an intention to move the court for a new trial. This notice had an admission of service indorsed on it by Harry G. Soule, as attorney for defendants. On the same day, May 18, 1897, an order was made in the court below denying the motion for a new trial. On May 20, 1897, notice of appeal to this court was given by the said attorney who moved for the new trial; and acknowledgment of service of the notice was by the said Soule, as attorney for defendants, indorsed thereon. On July 21, 1897, a stipulation was filed in this court, signed by the said attorney who appeared for plaintiffs, and by the said Soule as attorney for defendants and respondents, by which it was confessed that the errors assigned by appellants in the record were well taken, and that the order denying a motion for a new trial should be reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court of Yolo county; and upon said stipulation an order was made by four of the justices of this court reversing the order denying the motion for a new trial and remanding the cause, and thereupon a remittitur was issued from this court on the 24th day of August, 1897. It appears by the affidavit of said Soule that he had no knowledge concerning the action, except that he understood it was a partition suit; that he was informed by the attorney who appeared for the plaintiffs that it was merely a friendly suit; that there was no work for him to do except to sign a few papers, and that he agreed to act merely as a personal accommodation to the attorney who appeared for plaintiffs, supposing that he would ask for nothing improper; that Harry F. G. Trumpler, one of the plaintiffs, whom he knew to be a brother of the defendants, also appeared with the attorney, and asked that affiant appear and sign certain papers; that he supposed it was a family matter, in which no one except members of the Trumpler family were concerned, and that the proceedings to be taken were the result of a friendly agreement between them; that he "did not know nor was he any way informed of the fact that a final judgment and decree had been rendered and entered in 1887 in the action in which said papers were filed"; that he "had no knowledge that J. H. Glide was interested in the property affected by said action, and did not know and had not heard that said Jones, the attorney who appeared for plaintiffs, was at that time prosecuting actions against said Glide to recover the property affected by said action"; and that he "did not know of any error of any kind in any way made in said action when he signed said 'confession of error,' nor does he now know of any such error, except as stated to him, but he signed the same under the circumstances and in the manner and for the reasons hereinbefore stated, and because he understood that said defendants wanted him to do so." It appears further that one of the persons named as defendant (Barbara Trumpler) had died long before the date of said motion for a new trial and said confession of error, and that there had been no substitution of her personal representative as a party to the suit. It further appears that on the 30th day of March, 1896, said Harry F. G. Trumpler, one of the plaintiffs herein, had commenced an action against Glide and others to partition the said lands, claiming an interest therein, and that all of the plaintiffs in this present action appeared in said last-mentioned action, either as plaintiffs or defendants, and claimed an undivided interest in the whole of said lands; that Glide had answered in said action, claiming title to the whole of said lands under his purchase thereof as aforesaid; that said action came on for trial in June, 1898; that, after all the other parties to the action had rested their case, Glide offered the judgment roll in this case at bar as a muniment of his title, and that the evidence was objected to by the other parties on the ground that the judgment was not final, because this court had on the 24th of July, 1897, reversed the order of the superior court denying a new trial; and that Glide then learned for the first time of the proceedings taken in this action for a new trial, and of the judgment of this court reversing the order denying a new trial. Upon these facts Glide bases his motion to recall remittitur, etc.

The general principles governing the jurisdiction of this court over a case which has been here, after the issuance of remittitur, and the power of the court to recall a remittitur, have been well settled. They were first elaborately stated in the case of Rowland v. Kreyenhagen, 24 Cal. 52. In that case the court, having stated that as a general rule this court cannot exercise any jurisdiction over a case in which a remittitur has been issued by its order and filed in the court below, say as follows: "But this general rule rests upon the supposition that all of the proceedings have been regular, and that no fraud or imposition has been practiced upon the court or the opposite party; for, if it appears that such has been the case, the appellate court will assert its jurisdiction and recall the case. Against an order or judgment improvidently granted upon a false suggestion, or under a mistake as to the facts of the case, this court will afford relief after the adjournment of the term, and will, if necessary, recall a remittitur and stay proceedings in the court below. This is not done, however, upon the principle of resumption of jurisdiction, but upon the ground that the jurisdiction of the court cannot be divested by an irregular or improvident order. In contemplation of law, an order obtained upon a false suggestion is not the order of the court, and may be treated as a nullity. If, under color of such an order, the proceedings have in part found their way back to the court below, yet in law they are considered as still pending in the appellate court, and that court may take such steps as may be necessary to make the fact and law agree. These views are fully sustained by the numerous authorities cited on the argument by counsel for appellant." In Vance v. Pena, 36 Cal. 328, the court ordered that the remittitur be recalled, and said as follows: "In Rowland v. Kreyenhagen, 24 Cal. 52, we held that, although this court loses jurisdiction after the remittitur has been issued and filed in the court below, yet if any fraud or imposition has been practiced upon the court or the opposite counsel by the party procuring the dismissal, or the order of dismissal has been improvidently granted upon a false suggestion, the appellate court will recall the remittitur and stay the proceedings in the court below, and assert its jurisdiction, even after adjournment of the term, upon the ground that its jurisdiction cannot be devastated by such irregular order, and that the order itself is a nullity. This must be so, or intolerable injuries might result." The same rule has been declared in Hanson v. McCue, 43 Cal. 178; Bernal v. Wade, 46 Cal. 640; Holloway v. Galliac, 49 Cal. 149; People v. McDermott, 97 Cal. 249, 32 Pac. 7; and in re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. 459, 41 Pac. 483, and 42 Pac. 479. The case at bar is one to which the principle above stated clearly applies. It appears that the nominal parties plaintiff and defendant had no further interest whatever in the land; that the motion for a new trial and the confession of error were for the sole purpose of defeating the real party in interest, who was given no notice and had no knowledge thereof; that the attorney who appeared for the respondents and signed the confession of error was deceived and beguiled into doing acts, the purpose and consequence of which he had no conception; and that the confession was an imposition upon this court, by which it was wrongfully induced by parties having no real interest in the litigation to render a judgment injuriously affecting the rights of the person who was the real owner of the land involved. An intervention by Glide in the court below after the setting aside of a judgment which had stood for 10 years would afford him no adequate remedy.

It is contended that, because Glide was not a nominal party to the record, he is not in a position to make this motion, but this contention cannot be maintained. The injury of which he complains was done by this court in its order of reversal, which was based on the confession of errors, and made in ignorance of the true state of the facts; and he is entitled to have his remedy where the wrong was done. As to the land involved, he was the legal representative of all the nominal parties to the action, within the meaning of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Plummer v. Brown, 64 Cal. 429, 1 Pac. 703), and under section 385 he had control of the action; and he had the right to exercise that control in whatever condition, or at whatever point, the action was when he first discovered that his grantors, the nominal parties, had taken steps adverse to his rights. Section 385 applies to this court, except in instances where the Code otherwise provides, or where it would be evidently applicable only to the nisi prius court; and the case at bar does not present such instance. Although no case exactly like the one at bar has been called to our attention, yet in People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. 348, the views above stated were substantially declared. In the latter case default was wrongfully entered against the defendant Mullan, but before the default he had conveyed the land in contest in the action to the Cucamonga Company, who moved to set aside the default. The court below had denied the motion, apparently upon the ground that the company was in no position to make it, but this court reversed the order refusing to open the default. The company, a corporation, appealed. The court say: "But we regard the corporation as in legal effect the assignee and legal representative of Mullan, and standing in his shoes. We think the motion was well made. Code Civ. Proc. § 473; U. S. v. Patterson, 15 How. 12. The company could have moved in the name of Mullan, and it has substantially done this. We should be sacrificing form to substance, to hold otherwise. The same remarks apply to the appeal." The same general principle was announced in Malone v. Mining Co., 93 Cal. 384, 28 Pac. 1063. In that case the Del Norte Gravel-Mining Company was the grantee of the defendant's land involved in the action, and, although not a nominal party to the action, moved to set aside a default against the defendant. The court below denied the motion, and the Del Norte Company appealed. This court reversed the motion, and said, among other things, as follows: "The Del Norte Gravel-Mining Company, as grantee of the defendant, had a clear right in its own name to move to have the default and judgment set aside, and, on denial of its motion, to appeal from the order, and thus bring the matter to this court for review. Plummer v. Brown, 64 Cal. 429, 1 Pac. 703; People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. 348." The same general principle was decided in Plummer v. Brown, supra. There is nothing in the cases cited by respondent in conflict with these views. In Leonis v. Biscailuz, 101 Cal. 330, 35 Pac. 875, the only question was whether a person could become a formal intervener in this court under section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was held that that section could be invoked only, as it expressly provides, "before the trial." In Faulkner v. Hendy, 99 Cal. 172, 33 Pac. 899, there was a motion of an assignee of one of the parties for a substitution of attorneys, submitted upon conflicting affidavits; and, although that motion was denied, it was ordered that the assignee's attorney be allowed to file briefs in the case. And in re Ryer's Estate, 110 Cal. 556, 42 Pac. 1082, the only question involved was as to the proper parties to be served with notice of appeal. And neither of these cases presented the state of facts which we have here in the case at bar.

The proper action to be had here is not at all embarrassed by the fact that, in addition to the partition of the lands, there was also a division of a small amount of personal property. That part of the judgment which involves the personal property may be disposed of in accordance with the wishes of the nominal parties to the action.

Under the above facts the judgment reversing the order denying a new trial must be set aside, and the remittitur recalled. We think, however, that the appeal should not at present be dismissed, but that the parties should have a further hearing as to that part of the action, if so desired. The judgment of this court heretofore rendered, reversing the order of the superior court denying a new trial, is set aside, and the remittitur heretofore issued on the 24th day of August, 1897, is hereby recalled, and the clerk of the superior court of Yolo county is hereby directed to return the same to the clerk of this court. The action to dismiss the appeal will be placed upon the law calendar for further hearing.

IN RE YOUNG'S ESTATE. (S. F. 998.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1899.)

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—EXTRINSIC WRITINGS—PAROL EVIDENCE—PATENT AMBIGUITY—RIGHTS OF HEIRS—SEPARATE ESTATE OF WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—APPEAL.

1. Testatrix provided in her will that "two deeds" should be handed to her husband, and after his death they should go to M. Held, that parol evidence is inadmissible to show what deeds were meant.

2. The evidence is inadmissible as explaining a patent ambiguity.

3. Testatrix some days prior to making her will executed two deeds to M. of her separate real estate. The deeds were not delivered in testatrix's lifetime. The will provided that there should be handed to her husband "two deeds"; after his death the two deeds to go to M. Held insufficient to create a devise of the real estate to M., and inoperative for any testamentary purpose.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 475, providing that a judgment may be reversed only when the appealing party has sustained injury, the contestant of a will, who has no interest except as heir, cannot on appeal complain of the court's construction of a valid clause of the will.

5. Community property is not subject to administration or distribution in the wife's estate.

6. A petition for distribution of the wife's estate alleged the declaration by the wife of a homestead out of her separate estate. Contestants did not deny the allegation. By a decree of probate court the homestead was set aside to the husband. Held, that on appeal contestants cannot question the validity of the homestead, as no issue was joined thereon in the court below.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Napa county.

Proceeding in the estate of Anna Young, deceased. From a decree of distribution, from an order setting aside certain property as community property, and from an order setting aside a homestead to the surviving husband, certain sisters of the decedent appeal. Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

F. E. Johnston and Geo. E. Colwell, for appellants. T. B. Hutchinson, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. These are appeals by two sisters of the deceased, Anna Young, from the decree of distribution made in the matter of her estate, from an order setting aside certain property as community property, and from an order setting aside the homestead to C. H. Young, the surviving husband. Anna Young died testate on the 29th of April, 1894, and in due time her will was admitted to probate. That will is as follows: "Calistoga, the 15th of April, 1894. Anna Young's Will.—To C. H. Young, my husband, my bank book shall be handed to him, with gold watch and chain, also two deeds. After my husband deatts the two deeds shall go to Katarina Muhr. After all expenses are paid, the balance of the money in bank shall be divided between C. H. Young and Katarina Muhr. Also my husband shall control all of my business, pay insuring, tax and repairs to property, furnish clothing to my niece, Katy Muhr, in reason, and her portion of the money in the German Savings Bank shall remain on interest until she is fifty years old. Signed Anna Young, my hand, seal." The testatrix at the time of her death owned real estate in the counties of Napa and Sonoma, which was her separate property. There was on deposit in the German Savings & Loan Society Bank of San Francisco the sum of $2,200, which was also her separate property. She left a note and mortgage, which was executed to her by one Fales, and other personal property, over all of which there is a contest as to whether or not it was community property or a part of her separate estate. C. H. Young, the husband, was appointed administrator with the will annexed. In his petition for a final distribution he asked that the Fales note and mortgage and certain furniture be declared community property; that a certain piece of real estate, which was the separate property of the deceased, and upon which she had declared a homestead in her lifetime, be set aside to him as a homestead; that one-half of the money in the German Savings & Loan Society be distributed to him absolutely, and the other one-half be distributed to him in trust for Katarina Muhr until she arrived at the age of 50 years; and that the lands in the counties of Napa and Sonoma be distributed to Katarina Muhr, subject to a life estate in himself. Objections were presented to the petition. On the hearing, oral and documentary evidence was introduced, and the court made and entered its decree substantially in accordance with the petition, saving that the lands in Sonoma and Napa counties were distributed "to C. H. Young, as trustee, during his life, for Katarina Muhr, that he account to her for the proceeds thereof, and that upon the death of said C. H. Young the possession thereof be delivered to said Katarina Muhr, the owner of said property." By the evidence taken at the hearing it was shown that on April 11, 1894, Anna Young was sick. She was looking forward to undergoing a surgical operation from which she might not recover. She then made two deeds of grant, bargain, and sale to Katarina Muhr, her cousin, whom she called her niece. The lands described in these deeds were her separate property. One was for all the land owned by her in Napa county; the other, for all the land owned by her in Sonoma county. The husband signed and acknowledged these deeds with her. Witnesses were called in to witness her signature, she stating to them that she was making the deeds in view of the impending surgical operation; that the witnesses were young men, and so would probably outlive herself and her husband, and she wanted her affairs arranged in case anything should happen to her. Four days later she wrote her holographic will as above set forth. She placed this will inside of her bank book, and placed the bank book in its usual envelope. The two deeds were placed in another envelope, which was sealed. She wrapped the will, the bank book, and the deeds in a single package. She went to a hospital in San Francisco to undergo the operation, and handed this package to Katarina Muhr, saying: "There is my will, and the two deeds. Put them in the office, and, if I get well, I will get them; and, if I do not, you get them and give them to my husband." Upon her death, Katarina Muhr recovered the package and gave it to C. H. Young. The deeds thus identified were admitted in evidence. The court, in construing the will, adjudged the two deeds mentioned in the will to be the deeds admitted in evidence, and construed the direction in the will that the two deeds should be handed to the husband, and after the husband's death "the two deeds shall go to Katarina Muhr," as vesting an estate in Katarina Muhr, with the husband as trustee of the property for her during his lifetime.

1. To the introduction of this evidence many objections were taken and exceptions reserved. It will not be necessary to consider these in detail. The rules governing the introduction of evidence touching the interpretation and construction of wills are all well settled. Many of them are cast into succinct form in the provisions of our Code. No more in wills than in any other writing is parol evidence admissible to vary the terms of the instrument. Parol evidence—even declarations of the testator—is never admissible to modify, change, or vary his expressed intent. Civ. Code, §§ 1318, 1340. This must be deduced from the face of the will, or the bequest or devise fails. The apparent exceptions to this rule which allow parol evidence in the case of latent ambiguities, or to establish an implied trust, or to perfect imperfect descriptions of beneficiaries, or of the subject-matter of a devise or bequest, are not true exceptions at all. In no case is such evidence allowed or considered to change the expressed intent. The proofs afforded by such evidence are employed merely as an aid to the court in determining what in fact was the expressed intent. In the same manner an existing writing may by reference be incorporated into, and made a part of, a will. But, before such an extrinsic document may be so incorporated, the description of it in the will itself must be so clear, explicit, and unambiguous as to leave its identity free from doubt. The identification of the paper must be had from a description given in the will itself; otherwise, the will is not wholly in writing, as our law requires, but rests partly upon a writing and partly in parol. In re Shillaber's Estate, 74 Cal. 144, 15 Pac. 453; Chambers v. McDaniel, 28 N. C. 226; Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 250; Smart v. Prujean, 6 Ves. 565; Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jr. 209; 1 Jarm. Wills (6th Ed.) *98; 1 Redf. Wills (4th Ed.) *261 et seq.

Applying these familiar principles of construction, it is apparent, not only that the deeds are not referred to with sufficient definiteness to insure certainty in their identification, but that there is even a patent ambiguity in the very language of the will which attempts a designation of them. There shall be handed to C. H. Young "two deeds." Any two deeds by any person conveying any kind of an estate in any land would fill the measure of this requirement, so that to the admissibility of parol evidence to aid this clause there are two objections, each equally insurmountable: The first, that the description of an extrinsic writing must be so definite as not to require such evidence; the second, that parol evidence is never admissible to explain a patent ambiguity. Civ. Code, § 1318.

But, were these objections to the consideration of the parol evidence entirely removed, there are yet others equally fatal to the construction which the court in probate has put upon this clause of the will. There was no delivery of these deeds during the testatrix's lifetime. What validity they possess then comes from the will, and, therefore, if by the act of the testatrix title to these lands passed, we must find in the will both an intent to devise them, and operative words to effect the intent. We are not here unmindful of the rule that permits reference to an extrinsic writing duly incorporated into a will for the purpose, not alone of determining the subject-matter of a devise, but even for determining the character of the estate conveyed. Fesler v. Simpson, 58 Ind. 83. But in the case just cited, and in all such cases, there must in the will itself be found a clear intent to devise, and words legally sufficient to create a devise. If such words exist at all in this will, they are contained in this language: "To C. H. Young, my husband * * * shall be handet * * * two deeds. After my husband deatts the two deeds shall go to Katarina Muhr." Assuming a proper identification of the two deeds, there is left in this language nothing of doubt or uncertainty. The directions are plain, explicit, and not to be misunderstood. The intention of the testatrix then was that two paper instruments, in form, grant, bargain, and sale deeds of her lands in the counties of Sonoma and of Napa, duly signed and acknowledged by her and by her husband, should at the proper time in the administration of her estate be handed to her husband, and after his death be handed to Katarina Muhr. What effect would a compliance with the terms of these directions have upon the title to the real estate? Unquestionably, none. For this reason it is strenuously argued that, as the law favors a construction which avoids total or partial intestacy (Civ. Code, § 1326), and, as it is not to be supposed that a testator, in so solemn an instrument as a will, would exact the doing of a vain and empty thing, it must be certain that this testatrix intended to devise some estate in these lands to the husband and cousin, and that the decree of distribution should do so accordingly. It is true that courts have always leaned to constructions which will avoid intestacy, and their swift willingness in this regard has passed into a rule of construction; but there are well-defined limits beyond which the courts have not gone, and beyond which they could not go without subverting all rules, and leaving the interpretation of every will to the mere caprice and whim of the chancellor. One of these rules, firmly established, and never departed from or even criticised, is that the expressed intent will not be varied under the guise of correction because the testator misapprehended its legal effect. The testator is presumed to know the law. If the legal effect of his expressed intent is intestacy, it will be presumed that he designed that result. The inquiry will not go to the secret workings of the mind of the testator. It is not, what did he mean? but it is, what do his words mean? In Bingel v. Volz (Ill. Sup.) 31 N. E. 14, it is well said: "The purpose of construction, as applied to wills, is unquestionably to arrive if possible at the intention of the testator; but the intention to be sought for is not that which existed in the mind of the testator, but that which is expressed in the language of the will." To the same effect may be cited Arthur v. Arthur, 10 Barb. 9; Caldwell v. Caldwell, 7 Bush, 515; Sturges v. Cargill, 1 Sandf. Ch. 318; Rosborough v. Hemphill, 5 Rich. Eq. 95; Abercrombie's Ex'r v. Abercrombie's Heirs, 27 Ala. 489.

The case thus presented is one where the expressed intent of the testatrix is plain, but where a full performance of the acts which she has directed will amount in law to nothing. The testatrix, it may be assumed, did not understand the legal effect which would follow a compliance with her will, or thought that the legal effect would be other than it is. But a court for this reason is not justified in speculating over what may have been in the testatrix's mind, and in substituting what it may believe to have been her intent in place of the directions which she has actually employed. The inquiry of the court in construing a will comes to an end when the intent has been discovered from the language of the will. Its duty is then limited to giving effect to that intent, so far as may be, without doing violence to express law or the mandates of public policy. It is never at liberty to supply omissions, or to wrest language from its plain import, and give it such a meaning as it may be guessed the testatrix would have intended if she had known that her own efforts to create a legal devise had resulted in failure. In re Walkerly's Estate, 108 Cal. 659, 41 Pac. 772. Here, to repeat, there is no doubt as to the language, and its meaning. The testatrix merely mistook the legal effect which would follow a compliance with her directions. While no form of expression is required to create a devise, and while, considering that wills are frequently made by ignorant people in a great extremity of sickness, and under an impending fear of immediate death, and while, therefore, much liberality is and should be shown in construing the terms of such instruments, in every case some words must be employed from which, under the rules of law, an expressed intent to devise particular real estate must be found in the will itself; otherwise, the court is not carrying out the last will of the deceased, but is making testamentary disposition of his property for him,—not such disposition as the testator made, but such disposition as the court thinks he would have made. This can never be permitted. We may well leave this branch of the case with the following quotation from Buller, J., in the case of Dacre v. Dacre, 1 Bos. & P. 251: "I agree that a testator may express his intention by what words he pleases, and the court is so to expound his expressions that every word may stand, if possible. The court is to pronounce according to the apparent intent of the testator, but that intent must be found in the words of the will, and is not to be collected by conjecture dehors the will, or, as my lord chief justice expressed himself in a late case, as the question has not been asked of the testator, it is but conjecture what would have been his answer. I hold that, if there are repugnant or inconsistent clauses, the court must take the whole will and find the meaning as far as they can; but if the words are sensible, and there are none used but what may stand, then they must all so stand, and the will must be construed according to the plain meaning of those words, without any ingenious conjecture whether the testator meant more or not."

2. Construing and giving effect to the terms of the will relative to the disposition of the money in the German Savings Bank, the court decreed "that one-half of all money on hand in said estate, up to and not exceeding eleven hundred dollars, is the property of Katarina Muhr, under the terms of said will, but by the terms of said will it is not to be distributed to her until she attains the age of fifty years, and that said portion of said Katarina Muhr's money be distributed to C. H. Young, as trustee for said Katarina Muhr, to be held by said trustee for said Katarina Muhr until she attains the age of fifty years, and that he account to her for the proceeds thereof." As to this it is argued that the court has given a construction not permissible under the terms of the will, and that by that construction a void trust is created. It is to be remembered that, as the appellants and contestants are heirs of the deceased, they are not parties injured, if a valid bequest of the moneys was made under the will, no matter what form, under the interpretation of the court, was given to that bequest. In other words, these appellants are interested only, if the deceased died intestate, as to the money. Section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure suffers a judgment, decision, or decree to be reviewed, modified, or reversed only when the complainant or appealing party has sustained or suffered injury by it. It is clear, by the terms of this will, that there was made to Katarina Muhr a present gift, vesting immediately. The time of payment only was deferred. If the condition deferring the time of payment is repugnant to the gift, the condition, and not the gift, would be void. In re Walkerly's Estate, 108 Cal. 627, 41 Pac. 772; 1 Jarm. Wills, § 837. Katarina Muhr is not complaining of the interpretation given to this clause, and, having gone so far as to see that a valid bequest of the money was made to her, appellants' concern in the matter is at an end, and we need be at no pains further to consider this question.

3. The so-called Fales note and mortgage were executed to deceased. From this the disputable presumption arises that they were her separate property. The court received evidence upon this question, as also upon the question of the title to certain articles of furniture, and decided that they were community property, and therefore not subject to administration in the wife's estate. It is insisted by appellant that this evidence had no proper place in proceedings under a decree of distribution, the sole purport of which is to distribute the property under the will or under the laws of succession; and the question of what property belongs to the estate, and is in the hands of the representative for distribution, is determined by the decree settling the representative's final account. In this reliance is had upon Burdick's Estate, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734. This statement of the proposition by appellants is stronger than the law warrants, and than the case above cited upholds. Wherever a man dies, possessing both separate and community property, both pass into his estate for the purposes of administration and distribution, and the final account would do no more than declare that such property was in the estate. It might not, and probably would not, determine the distinctive characters and kinds of property, but would leave that for the reception of evidence under the petition for distribution. Upon the other hand, where a wife dies, no administration at all is to be had upon any but her separate property; and therefore it may well be argued that a final account, decreeing that such and so much property is in the hands of the representative for distribution, is an adjudication between the representative and the heirs and devisees fixing the status and character of that property. But whether in this case the final account did so declare, and, further, whether under such declaration the administrator who shows himself to be the husband is estopped therefor and thereby from contesting the title because he has not appealed from the decree settling the final account, are questions which need not here be considered; for, under the record presented, they are merely speculative. The bill of exceptions does not present the final account, and it cannot, therefore, be said what adjudications upon these matters the decree settling it contained. So far as the case before us now is concerned, there is but a finding supported by evidence that the property in question was community property. Such being the case, it was not subject to administration or distribution in the wife's estate, as the court properly decreed.

4. A homestead had been declared by the wife upon what was admittedly her separate property. The declaration was proper in form and substance. If the property was of such a kind as that it could be impressed with the homestead characteristics, there is no question but the title to it descended absolutely to the husband. In re Croghan's Estate, 92 Cal. 370, 28 Pac. 570. The validity of this homestead, which was upheld by the decree, is here attacked upon the ground that the property, though used as a home by deceased and her husband, was in fact a public inn or hotel. The petition for distribution alleged the homestead. The appellants in their written objections did not deny these allegations, but, to the contrary, affirmatively alleged the same facts. In no way is the validity of the homestead brought in question. "The rules of pleading and practice in civil cases are applicable to proceedings in the probate courts. Issues joined in such proceedings are to be tried and determined by that court as in civil cases." Burton's Estate, 63 Cal. 36. No issue having been joined upon the question of the validity of the homestead, it does not lie with appellants to assail the decree in this particular.

That portion of the decree which construes the will as creating a devise of the real estate described in "two deeds" mentioned in the will, and distributing the property in accordance with the devise so found, is reversed, and the court is directed to decree that this language in the will is insufficient to create a devise, and is inoperative for any testamentary purpose. In all other respects the decree is affirmed.

ADMINISTRATORS—RIGHT TO FUNDS—ACCOUNTING —CHARGES—INTEREST—PAYMENTS—EVIDENCE—EMBEZZLEMENT.

1. An administrator cannot be charged with compound interest unless he has been guilty of some positive misconduct or willful violation of duty.

2. The fact that an administrator kept the funds of the estate on deposit in a bank managed by his brother, who was surety on his bond, and that such funds were used by the bank as the funds of other depositors, does not show that he embezzled the funds, so as to justify charging him with compound interest.

3. An administrator cannot be charged with interest on funds of the estate prior to the date of their receipt.

4. A widow's receipt to an administrator for the "balance" of the widow's allowance is prima facie evidence that no more is unpaid.

5. An order directing that the administrator, on payment to the clerk of the court of all moneys of the estate in his hands for distribution to creditors, shall be entitled to his discharge, is erroneous, since, so long as the administrator remains in office, he is entitled to retain the funds of the estate in his possession.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Final accounting of the administrators of the estate of Peter J. Sarment, deceased. From an order disallowing certain items, and charging the administrators with compound interest, they appeal. Reversed.

M. L. Short and Horace L. Smith, for appellants. Dixon L. Phillips and Rowen Irwin, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The administrators of the above estate have appealed from the order settling their final account and directing a disposition of the estate in their hands. The estate is insolvent, and the account was contested by the surviving widow and one of the creditors of the deceased. The court disallowed some of the items of expenditures set up in the account, and held that the administrators should be charged with compound interest upon certain moneys in their hands from the time of their receipt.

1. A former account of their receipts and expenditures prior to June 24, 1894, filed by them December 5, 1894, in which they had charged themselves with the proceeds of certain sheep sold by them in 1893, had been settled by the court at the sum of $5,163.76. Certain items of expenditure which were omitted from that account were presented and allowed in the present account, and the court finds that they had in their possession, on August 1, 1893, the sum of $5,007.09, upon which they should be charged with compound interest from that date at the rate of 7 per cent. It is contended by the appellants that the court erred in thus charging them with interest upon this amount. An administrator is not to be charged with even simple interest upon the funds of the estate which may be in his hands, unless it is made to appear to the court that the estate, or the parties interested in it, have sustained loss by reason of his negligence or fault; but he is to be charged with compound interest only in cases in which he has been guilty of some positive misconduct or willful violation of duty. Wheeler v. Bolton, 92 Cal. 159, 28 Pac. 558. As he is required by the statute to take into his possession all of the estate of his intestate, and to give bonds for its preservation, it would be inequitable to charge him with interest upon moneys which might at any time be received by him, from the date of their receipt, merely because he had retained them in his possession. Until the estate should be in a condition which would authorize him to take steps for its settlement, he would violate no duty in failing to take such step. Whether any delay in procuring an order for its settlement would authorize the court to charge him with interest must be determined by the court upon a consideration of all the circumstances of the case, including the character and condition of the estate, the causes of the delay, and whether it has been reasonable or unreasonable. Walls v. Walker, 37 Cal. 424. The burden of showing that he should be charged with interest is upon the contestant. The court finds that in July, 1893, the administrator Biddle embezzled and wrongfully mingled the proceeds of the sale of the sheep with his own funds; and also that the administrators were negligent in the management of the estate, and in failing to file their final account and close up the estate at the proper time for doing so, and that the estate has been for three years in a condition to file their final account and close it up. It is upon these findings that the respondents seek to sustain the order of the court charging the administrators with compound interest. We are of the opinion, however, that the claim of the appellants that these findings are not supported by the evidence must be sustained. The court does not find, nor is there any evidence, that the administrators used the funds of the estate in their own business, or made any profit from their use. The mere fact that one of them mingled the proceeds of the sale with his own funds would not justify charging him with interest thereon, since he had the right to their custody, and there is no provision of law which required him to keep them separate from all other funds. The finding is rested upon the evidence of the administrator Biddle that he kept the moneys he realized from the sale of the sheep with his brother,

S. E. Biddle. His brother was one of the sureties on his bond, and was manager of the Bank of Hanford, and when the money was received by the administrators it was turned over to him, and presumably, although there is no direct evidence to that effect, was deposited by him in the bank. Payments by the administrators on account of the estate were made by checks drawn upon the Bank of Hanford, signed "Joe D. Biddle & Co.," and indorsed upon their face, "On acct. P. J. Sarment estate." There was no evidence that S. E. Biddle or the Bank of Hanford made any use of the funds thus deposited other than the use made by banks of deposit of the funds of their depositors. This evidence did not justify the court in finding that the administrator Biddle had embezzled the funds of the estate, or in holding that he should be charged with compound interest thereon. The record does not disclose the date at which the administrators had reduced the entire estate to money, but it appears therefrom that they were in possession of certain real estate, from which they received rents, until January 5, 1895, at which date it was sold under a decree of foreclosure. As the present account was filed May 27, 1897, the finding of the court that the estate had been for three years in a condition to be closed was unauthorized.

2. At the hearing of the contest certain errors in the account were discovered, from which it appeared that the administrators should be charged with $466.01 more than was shown by the account as presented by them, and the court found that this amount had been embezzled by Biddle, and held that the administrators should be charged with compound interest thereon from April 1, 1894. This amount was made up of three items, viz.: $139.01 for an error in stating the account; $60 collected for rent in the last three months of 1894; and $267 collected for rents by suit, the date of the receipt of which is not shown, but it appears that it was not paid at the date of the former account. It is manifest that the administrators should not be charged with interest prior to the dates at which they received the money, and we are unable to find any evidence which would authorize the court to find that this money was embezzled or converted by the administrators, or which would justify imposing the penalty of compound interest thereon.

3. The appellants contend that the finding by the court that a claim of upwards of $7,000 against the estate in favor of Shoobert, Beale & Co. was purchased by S. E. Biddle for the sum of $200, for the use and benefit of the administrator Biddle, is not sustained by the evidence. For the purpose of settling their account, this finding does not affect the appellants; but to the extent that this is an indirect charge upon their integrity in the performance of their trust, and for that reason a basis for charging compound interest, they are justified in challenging the finding. Not only is there no evidence in support of the finding, but there is direct testimony to the contrary by both the administrator and his brother.

4. After settling the account, the court in its order directed a pro rata payment upon the claims allowed, and also that $575 be paid to the surviving widow as a part of the family allowance previously ordered. The administrators claim to have paid this allowance in full, and that the court erred in allowing this payment. The disposition which the court might make of moneys in their hands belonging to the estate is immaterial to the administrators. All that they are concerned in, upon a settlement of their account, is to be credited with the various payments they have made, and to have the accounts settled according to the correct amount in their hands. Whatever disposition the court makes of this amount is no concern of theirs, and, if the parties interested therein make no objection to the order, they should be content. The administrator testified that he had paid to the widow the whole of the family allowance, and produced a voucher from her which he procured a short time before the hearing, in which she acknowledges the receipt from the administrators of "one thousand dollars, balance payment of the eighteen hundred dollars allowed by the court for widow's allowance." The production of this voucher, purporting to be for the "balance" of the $1,800, was prima facie evidence that no more was unpaid, and threw upon the contestant the burden of showing the contrary. In the absence of any other evidence, and with the testimony of the administrators that the whole had been paid, the court should have given them credit for the full amount. In their account filed herein they credit themselves with the payment of $1,575 as the balance of the family allowance, and the widow in her contest does not dispute this payment by them, but alleges that of this sum about $700 had been paid to the mercantile house of Kutner, Goldstein & Co., without her knowledge or consent. There was no evidence in support of this averment, and the widow did not testify at the hearing, or give any evidence controverting that of the administrators that the family allowance had been fully paid. The court, however, ruled that the voucher from her could be received as a voucher for only $1,000, and thereupon the administrators offered evidence of other payments for her account. After the order for family allowance was made, an arrangement was entered into between the widow, the administrators, and the above mercantile house in Hanford, by which that mercantile firm was to furnish the widow with supplies, and the administrators were to pay for the same from the amount of the family allowance. Under this arrangement, the sum of $400 was paid to Kutner, Goldstein & Co., and credited to the administrators upon their former account. The further sum of $300 was paid upon this account with the mercantile firm,

November 8, 1894, for which the court should have allowed the administrators credit. A bill of $87.80 was paid by them to Hicks & Co. under a similar agreement, and should have been allowed them by the court. They also paid two sums, of $25 and $7, respectively, to the widow upon her family allowance, for which they were entitled to credit. It would appear, although there is no direct evidence thereof, that the sum of $225 was credited to the administrators upon the account for family allowance in the settlement of the former account, but it does not appear whether this was any part of the $400 paid to Kutner, Goldstein & Co. for which they received credit in that account. It is impossible to tell from the record whether the administrators have received credit for all the payments made by them for the family allowance, but this matter can be determined by the court upon the next hearing.

5. After settling the account and apportioning the money in the hands of the administrators, the court directed that, "upon the payment into court and to the clerk thereof the sum of $3,029.82 by the said J. D. Biddle, the administrator, which last-mentioned sum is to be paid out and distributed as herein-before directed, the said administrators shall thereupon be entitled to their discharge." No authority is cited in support of this portion of the order, nor is it authorized by any provision of the statute. The administrator is responsible for the assets in his hands, and so long as he remains in office is entitled to retain them in his possession, until disposed of to the parties entitled thereto under the directions of the court. In re Welch's Estate, 110 Cal. 605, 42 Pac. 1089; De Greayer v. Court, 117 Cal. 640, 49 Pac. 983. Upon the entry of an order for the payment of the claims against the estate, the administrator becomes liable therefor to the creditors, both personally and upon his bond, and each creditor is entitled to an execution against him therefor. Code Civ. Proc. § 1649. He cannot escape this liability by complying with an order which the court had no power to make. In re Spanier's Estate, 120 Cal. 698, 53 Pac. 357. The court, therefore, erred in making this part of the order. The order is reversed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1899.)
SCHOOLS—SUPERINTENDENT—ELECTION—VACANCY.

St. 1863, p. 605, § 14, authorizing the board of education, in case of vacancy in the office of superintendent, to appoint a person to fill the vacancy until the regular election then next following, when the office shall be filled by the election of the people, means the next "general" election, and not the next election at which superintendents are to be elected.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Quo warranto by the people, on the relation of Reginald H. Webster, against Madison Babcock. There was a judgment for relator, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rodgers & Paterson, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, C. W. Greene, A. A. Moore, and Garber & Garber, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. On the 14th day of October, 1895, the office of superintendent of schools of the city and county of San Francisco became vacant by the death of the incumbent, who, on November 6, 1894, had been elected to fill the office for the term of four years, commencing upon the first Monday in January, 1895. On the 24th day of October, 1895, the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco appointed Madison Babcock, appellant herein, to fill the vacancy "until the regular election then next following." On November 3, 1896, there was held throughout the state of California a general election, and at the same time, and in conjunction with this general election, there was held a municipal election in and for the city and county of San Francisco. The proclamation for this election included in the list of officers to be voted for thereat one superintendent of schools for an unexpired term. Upon the ballots cast at that election appeared the names of candidates for this office, and one of them, the relator, Reginald H. Webster, was by the board of election commissioners duly declared to be elected to the office of superintendent of schools of the city and county of San Francisco. A certificate of election was issued to him, he qualified in all respects as required by law, made formal demand upon the appellant for possession of the office, and, upon refusal of the demand, with leave of the attorney general, instituted this action to determine the right to the office.

Section 14 of the consolidation act of the city and county of San Francisco thus declares: "In case of a vacancy in the office of superintendent, the board of education may appoint a person to fill the vacancy until the regular election then next following, when the office shall be filled by election of the people." St. 1863, p. 605. The constitution declares (article 9, § 3) "that a superintendent of schools for each county shall be elected at each gubernatorial election." Section 14 of the consolidation act, above quoted, contains the law governing the method of filling vacancies in this office. People v. Babcock, 114 Cal. 559, 46 Pac. 818. The determination of this appeal turns upon the construction to be given to this section.

By appellant it is contended that the "regular election then next following" means the next election at which officers of this class, to wit, superintendent of schools in counties, are to be elected, and that the final clause, "when the office shall be filled by election of the people," is adjectival and descriptive in character; or, to paraphrase the section, and give it the meaning for which appellant contends, it is that the person appointed by the board to fill the vacancy shall hold office until the coming of that election at which the office is to be regularly filled by election of the people. Since, under the constitution, the superintendent is regularly elected at each gubernatorial election for the term of four years, this construction practically is equivalent to saying that the person so appointed shall hold office for the unexpired term. Upon the part of respondent it is argued that the phrase "regular election," as here used, has no such meaning as that imputed to it by appellant; that the word "regular" is employed in the sense of "general," as contradistinguished from a "called" or "special" election; that the election at which relator was elected was such a general election, both for the state and for the municipality.

In support of his position respondent relies with much confidence upon the case of People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 Pac. 1060. In that case, the office of lieutenant governor having become vacant by the death of the incumbent, this court was called upon to construe the language of section 8, art. 5, of the constitution, relative to the filling of the vacancy. This court decided that the phrase "the next election by the people," as employed in the constitution, did not mean the next general election, or the next election held by the people, but that the section, taken as a whole, simply provided for the filling of vacancies by appointment; that the appointee held until the office was filled in the manner provided by law, and that the section itself did not provide the manner nor contain any provision for the holding of such an election. Therefore, and under all these facts, it was determined that the appointee held until the next election at which a lieutenant governor would have been regularly elected, or, in other words, until the next gubernatorial election. But in this case, as in all such cases, no set rule can be formulated for the construing of the provisions of similar statutes. Cases may be instanced, and, indeed, some are cited in People v. Budd, where the phrase "regular election" has been construed to mean the next election at which officers of the particular class are regularly to be elected; but no such inflexible definition can be given to the word "regular," as will hereafter clearly appear.

In the case of any particular statute, the construction can be determined only by considering the context in which the word is found, the purpose of the statute, and the object which it was designed to fulfill. The next regular election may mean the next election at which officers are to be regularly elected, or it may be used merely to exclude special elections, or it may be used synonymously or interchangeably with the word "general." Thus, in State v. Conrades, 45

Mo. 47, the act under consideration provided: "If any officer in St. Louis county named in the act of which this is amendatory shall hereafter vacate his office by death, resignation or otherwise, except by expiration of his term of office, it shall be the duty of the governor of the state to appoint until the next regular election a suitable person to perform the duties of the office." The act of which this was amendatory declared that, "if any county judge shall vacate his office by death, resignation or otherwise, * * * it shall be the duty of the governor of the state to appoint for the remainder of the term for which such officer was elected or appointed a suitable person to perform the duties of such office." Construing these acts the court say: "By the act of 1859 the governor was invested with full power to appoint, whenever a vacancy occurred, for the remainder of the term. The act of 1864 was a limitation on this power of appointment, and abridged its exercise to the next regular election. It is insisted that, in passing this law, the legislature meant that the executive appointee should continue to hold his office till the next regular election of county judges, and that the act had exclusive reference to that election. But this construction, we think, is founded in misconception, and is not maintainable. It was the obvious intention to give the people an opportunity to elect this officer at the earliest practicable moment, without incurring the expense of a special election. When applied to elections, the terms 'regular' and 'general' have been used interchangeably and synonymously. The word 'regular' is used in reference to the general election occurring throughout the state. It was employed by the draftsmen of this bill, in contradistinction to the election which was held in St. Louis county specially for judges of the county court."

In sections 754 and 854 of the municipal corporation act of 1883 (St. 1883, pp. 251, 267), provision is found for filling vacancies in municipal offices. It is declared that "any vacancy occurring in any of the offices provided for in this act shall be filled by appointment by the board of trustees; but, if such office be elective, such appointee shall hold office only until the next regular election, at which time a person shall be elected to serve for the remainder of such unexpired term." If "regular election" is here to be construed as the election at which this class of officers is regularly chosen, then, in the cases of some officers contemplated by the charter, the regular election could only be at the end of the term, and the provision that a person shall be elected to serve for the remainder of the unexpired term would be meaningless. These instances are given, not as having any determinative force upon the question here presented, but in illustration of the fact that the phrase "regular election" has no fixed and inflexible meaning.

Coming to the consideration of the meaning of the phrase as employed in the consolidation act, it is apparent, we think, that the word "regular," as here used, is an adjective, synonymous with "general," and that it was not within the contemplation of the legislative mind that the appointee of the board of education should hold for the remainder of the unexpired term. If such had been the intent, it could readily have been expressed in brief and certain terms; but to give this language that meaning would be to deprive of all efficacy the final clause of the section, "when the office shall be filled by election of the people." We cannot accede to the construction which appellant puts upon this sentence—First, because so to do would be to say that the legislature used a most unhappy and cumbrous circumlocution to express an extremely simple idea; and, second, because thus to construe the clause is to do direct violence to the proper and grammatical use of language. If it be said, as appellant contends, that the clause is only descriptive, and the verb "shall be filled" is to be considered as importing mere futurity, the result is to attribute to the legislature, in a case which does not call for it, a faulty and ungrammatical use of the parts of English speech. The clause, grammatically construed, is mandatory in its nature, and is a declaration that, when the next regular election arrives, the office shall be—must be—filled by the people. But, such being its construction, it is without meaning if the phrase "regular election" is to be held to mean the election at which the office is regularly to be filled; for such an election can only come at or near the expiration of the term. "Regular election," as thus employed, then, is synonymous with "general election."

Whether it be a general state election or a general municipal election it is unnecessary here to determine, since the election at which the relator was elected was both a general state election and a general municipal election. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county.

Frank J. Gross was convicted of manslaughter, and from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Street and Crittenden Hampton, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of manslaughter, and appeals to this court. It is now insisted that the evidence fails to justify the verdict. We pass the contention by saying that, after a careful examination of the record, we are entirely satisfied the verdict has full support in the evidence.

It is claimed that error was committed in the refusal of the court to give the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that, while the deceased and his brother were engaged in fixing the water barrel, the defendant said to them, 'Don't turn off the water,' and went into the saloon, and if you further find from the evidence the deceased and his brother left the water barrel, and returned with arms, then I instruct you that defendant's saying to deceased and his brother, 'Don't turn off the water,' and then going into the saloon, was no sufficient cause for the deceased and his brother, or either of them, returning armed to said water barrel." There are many legal objections which may be urged to this instruction as a sound declaration of law. As a fair illustration of these objections, it may be said that the evidence fairly indicates that the defendant did not go into his saloon until the brothers had left the water barrel for their weapons.

The following question was asked and answered under objection: "Q. I will ask you, Mr. Block, if you heard this defendant state, while at Tuttletown or elsewhere, that he would wipe out the entire Gross family?" The witness answered: "He said he would wipe out the name, and then shoot himself, and that would end the programme." The question was entirely proper, and likewise the answer. The fact that the deceased had not been living in Tuttletown for several years is an element wholly immaterial. The threat was a broad one. It appeared to cover the entire Gross family, and under this language it was for the jury to say whether or not the deceased was included therein. There is no error in the record. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

INSURANCE—EXEMPTIONS TO WIDOW.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 10, exempting moneys accruing on an insurance policy issued on the life of a debtor if the annual premiums do not exceed $500, the proceeds of a policy, the premiums on which exceeded $500 annually, cannot be set apart to the widow as exempt.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county.

Petition by Lucy P. Brown, widow of A. Page Brown, deceased, asking that certain life insurance money be set apart to her and her minor children. From an order denying the petition, she appeals. Affirmed.

Harold Wheeler, for appellant. Mullany, Grant & Cushing, Roger Johnson, Morrison, Foerster & Cope, Geo. C. Ross, T. C. Coogan, and Edw. F. Fitzpatrick, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case is from an order of the superior court denying appellant's petition asking that certain life insurance moneys be set apart to her and to her minor children. There is no controversy as to the facts. The decedent, A. Page Brown, died testate in 1896, leaving a widow and three minor children. The inventory showed the value of the estate to be $43,869.21, of which $25,000 consisted of moneys collected by appellant, as executrix, from the New York Life Insurance Company, upon its policy No. 356,577, issued to her husband some six years prior to his death, and which was made payable to his estate. All of the estate was community property. The estate was indebted to such extent that the total assets of the estate, after deducting expenses of administration, a homestead, family allowance, etc., are not sufficient for the payment of the creditors in full. The widow's petition is based upon the provision of section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires the court to set apart to the widow all property exempt from execution, and upon that portion of section 690, Id., which reads as follows: "The following property is exempt from execution, except as hereinafter specially provided: * * * Sec. 10. All moneys, benefits, privileges or immunities accruing, or in any manner growing out of any life insurance on the life of the debtor, if the annual premiums paid do not exceed five hundred dollars." Exemptions are the creatures of statutes and exceptions to the general rule. No property is exempt unless made so by express provision of law. No assumed legislative policy can justify the courts in adding to the statutory list of exemptions. Legislators are presumed to understand the force and effect of the language which is used, and to have contemplated all circumstances which would make it desirable that other property not in the lists of exemptions should be added thereto. The language used is entirely unambiguous. The legislative intent is clear, and is to no extent defeated by executing the law as it reads. Under such circumstances it is fruitless to talk of the literal meaning of the language, and of other meaning than the literal meaning. In fact, no attempt is made to find any other meaning in the language. The attempt is to defeat the express legislative will; not by giving the language used another meaning, for that is impossible, but by saying the law as it plainly reads is unreasonable. What chance is there for the construction of the law? It simply says that moneys accruing upon an insurance policy issued upon the life of the judgment debtor are exempt if the annual premiums paid do not exceed $500. It is as plainly said that, if the annual premiums paid do exceed $500, no part of the same is exempt, as though it had been so added in words. And, besides, we do not expect to find in such a statute negative words, for nothing is exempt save what is expressly made so; and when a statute gives a list of exempt property it expressly provides that no other property is exempt. To construe an unambiguous statute is an attempt to defeat the expressed legislative will, and not to ascertain it. Probably no one would ever have questioned this view, or contended that a statute means something different from what it plainly expresses, were it not for the fact that in 1868 a statute was enacted upon this subject, which, it is contended, was the source from which the present code provisions were derived. St. 1867-68, p. 500. That provision is that moneys accruing from certain life insurance policies shall be exempt, "provided, however, this exemption shall not extend beyond such moneys, benefits, rights, privileges and immunities as have been or might have been secured by the payment of an annual premium of five hundred dollars." The difference in the two statutes is obvious. The statute of 1868 exempts some portions of all moneys accruing upon certain policies, with a proviso that an exemption shall only extend to such benefit as might have been secured by the annual payment of $500. It expressly exempts some portion of larger policies. The code provision only exempts moneys accruing upon policies where the annual premiums do not exceed $500. It cannot be construed as exempting part only of any policy.

It is said that the statute is remedial, and should be liberally construed to effect the purpose of the legislature. That is so, but that is not a liberal construction which defeats the plainly expressed purpose of the legislature. The purpose here is as plainly expressed as it could be, and is entirely accomplished by executing the unambiguous statute. An example of liberal construction would be to make such words as "tools of the mechanic," "implements of husbandry," etc., as comprehensive as possible. But it would not be a liberal construction of a statute which simply makes exempt policies upon which the annual premiums are less than $500 to hold that it also makes exempt monies due upon a policy upon which the annual premiums exceed $500 to the extent of benefits which could have been earned by an annual premium of exactly $500. The order appealed from is affirmed.

Merguire, an executor of the estate of deceased, presented his fifth annual account, and at the same time tendered his resignation as executor, to take effect upon its settlement. He petitioned also for the court to determine the compensation to which he was entitled. Due notice was given of the hearing of all these matters. A hearing was had, the account settled, and the compensation of the executor fixed. Thereupon Merguire presented an application to the court, setting forth that, as executor, he had employed J. M. Walling, attorney at law, on behalf of himself and his co-executrix, as their attorney at law in the matter of the estate; that Walling had rendered valuable services to the estate, for which he had been compensated only in part; and that such services had been rendered upon an agreement between himself and Walling that the amount of the latter's compensation should be determined and fixed by the court. The application requested the court to fix the amount of compensation for the services of the attorney. No notice of this application was given to the heirs, devisees, and parties in interest. In fact, no notice whatever was given. But the court proceeded forthwith to take testimony, notwithstanding the protest of one of the residuary legatees, who happened to be present, and who insisted that, in the absence of notice, the court was without jurisdiction to pass upon the matter. The court made its order directing the representatives "to pay to said J. M. Walling, Esq., from the funds of the said estate, the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars."

The order is an appealable order. Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 487, 14 Pac. 35; In re Kasson's Estate (Cal.) 51 Pac. 706. The compensation of the attorney of the executor, while not a claim against the estate, is an expense of administration, allowed to the executor, the amount of which is to be fixed by the court and paid out of the estate (In re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. 450, 41 Pac. 483, and 42 Pac. 479); but such an order for the payment of money, by which the property of the heirs, legatees, and devisees is to be taken from them, cannot be made without notice and an opportunity to them to be heard. It cannot require the citation of authority in support of the proposition that one may not be thus deprived of his property without process of law. Commonly, the account of the executor includes the item of attorney's fees as an expense of administration; and, when the notice required by law of the hearing and settlement of the account is duly given, the parties in interest are afforded an opportunity of contesting that with any other items which fall to meet their approval. Here the final account of the executor contained no hint or suggestion that it was proposed to make any charge upon account of the services of the attorney, and, while upon all matters properly embraced within the account due notice was given, this was not such a matter. The order of the court fixing the compensation of the attorney without notice to the parties in interest is therefore void.

Upon the hearing, one of the devisees who was present offered evidence upon the question of the value of the services of the attorney, which, it was insisted, showed that, by reason of the culpable negligence of the attorney, there had been lost to the estate the sum of $14,000. Objection was made to the introduction of the evidence, upon the ground that it could not be considered by the court in the proceeding at bar, because the court did not have jurisdiction or power to consider or determine the liability of an attorney for his negligence in the conduct of litigation on behalf of the estate, and that the only remedy of a person interested in the estate for injury occasioned by such negligence was through the medium of a civil suit against the attorney. The court ruled that such negligence could be considered "incidentally" in determining the value of services for which compensation was asked, and overruled the objection. Later, however, when the court came to deliver its decision, it announced that it "refused to allow in this proceeding, as an offset or counterclaim, any damages claimed to be occasioned by the alleged neglect of J. M. Walling in the Henry suit." It is evident from the foregoing that it is a matter of dubiety whether or not the court weighed the evidence touching the question of negligence, what it meant when it said that it would consider it "incidentally," and whether its final refusal to allow as an offset any damages claimed was because of its conviction that no damages had resulted, or because of its conviction that it was not within its power so to do. As the question is certain to arise upon a rehearing of the application to fix the attorney's compensation, it should be said that it is well settled that it is within the jurisdiction of the court in probate to fix the compensation which shall be allowed to the attorney of the personal representative of the deceased. Gurnee v. Maloney, 38 Cal. 85; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 38, 16 Pac. 345; Henry v. Superior Court, 93 Cal. 569, 29 Pac. 230; Pennie v. Roach, 94 Cal. 515, 29 Pac. 956, and 30 Pac. 106; In re Ogier's Estate, 101 Cal. 385, 35 Pac. 900; In re Blythe's Estate, 103 Cal. 350, 37 Pac. 392; In re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. 450, 41 Pac. 483, and 42 Pac. 479. Indeed, as early as Gurnee v. Maloney it was decided that the court in probate not only had jurisdiction to fix the value of the services rendered by an attorney to the administrator on behalf of the estate as an expense of administration, but that the court had exclusive original jurisdiction to adjust and enforce such demand. Having jurisdiction, it must, of necessity, have power to do full and complete justice between the parties; and where an attorney contracts with the representative of the estate, knowing that, in law, the value of his services, so far as they are to be a charge upon the estate, is to be fixed by the court in probate, he cannot be heard to say, if dereliction is charged against him, that the question is one not cognizable before that court to which alone he must look for compensation; for it is the duty of the court in determining the compensation to hear all evidence pertinent to the consideration, and it would indeed be extraordinary if an attorney, in support of his claim for compensation, could be heard to urge his faithful performance of duty, and that, in answer, the opposing heirs should not be permitted to show that, by reason of his culpable dereliction, he was entitled to less compensation, or to none at all. The order appealed from is reversed.

CAPELLI v. DONDERO et ux. (S. F. 768.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1899.)

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—MISTAKE OF FACT—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS—APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. Where there is evidence, though conflicting, to support the findings of the trial court on 55 P.—67 questions of fact, the weight of such evidence cannot be determined on appeal.

2. In an action to reform a deed alleged to have been executed under a mistake of fact, it appeared that plaintiff and defendant, who were tenants in common of certain land, agreed to divide it by the center line of a private road running through the tract, and employed a surveyor to establish such line; that said road, as used by the parties, diverged from a straight line near plaintiff's buildings, leaving sufficient space intervening for the convenient use thereof; that the surveyor, who established such line in plaintiff's absence, instead of following the center line of such road, ran a straight line between the initial and terminal points, passing so near plaintiff's buildings as to deprive him of the convenient use of them; that the deed in question, prepared by direction of both parties, described the division line as so surveyed, though they supposed, and for several years thereafter understood, that such line, as therein described, was the center line of such road (which they had continued to use as theretofore); and that such mistake was not discovered until afterwards, when defendant began the erection of a fence on the line as surveyed. Held, that such evidence supported findings in favor of plaintiff.

3. Oral evidence as to an alleged mistake was admissible in an action to reform a deed on such ground.

4. Under Civ. Code, § 3399, authorizing the revision of a written contract on the ground of mistake, it was not necessary, in order to entitle a party to the reformation of a deed on such ground, that such mistake should have been mutual.

5. Where plaintiff claimed, in an action to reform a deed, that the center line of a certain private road had been agreed on by the owners of adjoining lands as the division line between them, and that, through a mutual mistake, a different line was so designated in the deed, it was not error to admit in evidence a certain deed to another person, made by defendant three years thereafter, in which such private road was referred to as a boundary.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county.

Action by Charles Capelli against Charles Dondero and wife. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Julius Lee, for appellants. Geo. P. Burke, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to reform a deed on the ground that it was executed under a mutual mistake of the parties to it. It appears from the findings of fact that prior to December 10, 1890, plaintiff and defendant Charles Dondero were the owners of a tract of land situated near the town of Watsonville, containing about 74 acres. On or about said date they agreed to divide said land so that each could own his interest in severalty, and to that end agreed to make a certain private roadway, running through the tract from west to east, the dividing line, plaintiff to take the portion on the southerly side, and defendant Charles Dondero that on the northerly side, of this road. This private road was entered by a gate at the county road, and terminated on the eastern boundary line of the tract at a stake marked "C & D," midway of two cherry trees. A surveyor was employed to establish the center line of this road, which was to become the division line. He ran a straight line between the two points agreed upon, which gave a course north, 70 deg. east, distance 38.15 chains, instead of following along the center of said road, as was agreed should be done. Some distance from the gate entrance, and south of this road, plaintiff's buildings, barns, and outhouses were situated, "a sufficient distance from the southerly line of said private road so as to make and render the said barns, buildings, and outhouses convenient of access and use by said plaintiff." A plat is attached to the complaint, which the court finds correctly shows the location and course of this road and its center line, and the situation of plaintiff's said buildings relative thereto. The contention turns upon the question as to the location of this center line. Plaintiff contends, and the court found, that the center of this road from the center of the gate took a course north, 70 deg. east, for 21.62 chains, to a point west of, and not far from, plaintiff's buildings, where it bore a little more to the north, following the center of the road (69 deg. 25 min. east) 5.21 chains; thence along the center of this road north, 70½ deg. east, 11.30 chains, to said stake marked "C & D." Appellants contend for a straight line from the point of beginning to the point of ending. The difference in acreage is very little. The slight divergence from a straight line near the buildings, returning to it at the stake "C & D," was necessary to give to plaintiff the free and unobstructed use of his buildings. It further appears from the findings that on December 18, 1890, by direction of both parties, one Julius Lee, Esq., who had been their attorney, prepared a deed, which was executed by defendant Charles Dondero to plaintiff, conveying the tract south of this road, describing the dividing line as it was surveyed. The deed was left with Lee, who had it recorded in January, 1891. The parties at this time, and until July 8, 1895, mutually understood that the division line as described in the deed was the center of said road, and the said deed was executed and accepted under such belief; but said described line was inserted in said deed by the mutual mistake of the parties named therein. No stakes or marks were placed by which said line could be ascertained by any person examining the same. Plaintiff did not discover said mistake until about July 8, 1895, when, for the first time, the defendants commenced to erect a fence upon said line, and procured said surveyor to lay out by stakes the line surveyed by him. Plaintiff then discovered that the line did not follow the center of said road, as originally agreed upon, but was so run that the fence so constructed by defendants stands a distance of four or five feet from the center of said private road, and so close to the said buildings "as to render them, in their location and situation to said fence, worthless, and of no value or use to plaintiff."

If said fence had been erected on the dividing line, as agreed upon, "plaintiff would have had the free and uninterrupted use and enjoyment of said buildings." Defendant Charles Dondero conveyed to his wife, co-defendant, his interest in the premises on November 18, 1894, who had full knowledge and notice of all the facts above related. A jury was called to pass upon the principal issues of fact, which were determined in favor of plaintiff. The court adopted most of these findings of the jury and certain of its own, and gave plaintiff judgment, from which, and from the order denying a new trial, defendants appeal.

1. The principal question raised by appellants is that the evidence does not support the findings. It is true, as appellants contend, that evidence warranting the reformation of a deed must be clear and convincing, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory, leaving the mistake open to doubt; and, unless the proofs come up to this standard, equity will withhold relief. But these are rules for the government of the trial court, and are not controlling in this court where the findings find support in the evidence. Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 502, 24 Pac. 930. This court cannot enter upon an examination of all the evidence to determine where the preponderance lies. Upon questions of fact its province is to determine whether there be evidence tending to support the findings, and it cannot decide as to the weight of the evidence where there is a conflict. Plaintiff testified that the agreement was to divide the land by the center of the private road which he described as delineated on the plat used at the trial, and as running through the tract from west to east. The instructions given the surveyor were to follow the center of this road. He was not present when the survey was made, but left one Scrivani (who was in his employ) to represent him. With respect to the road as shown on the map, his buildings were a little distance south of the road. (The exact distance is not given, but it was sufficient for their convenient use.) After the survey was made, he and Dondero took the field notes to the attorney of the parties, and directed him to make the deed according to the survey. Neither party knew anything about courses, and plaintiff testified that when he signed the deed he knew nothing about the description in it. After the deed was executed, the parties continued to use the road as before, and not until in 1895, when Dondero commenced to erect his fence, did plaintiff know that the survey ran so close to his buildings, and did not follow the center of the road at that point. The fence made by Dondero on the surveyed line was within three feet of two of plaintiff's buildings, and within a foot and a half of one of them, depriving him of their convenient use. He also testified that he saw no stakes on the line except from the gate to his house. There is much evidence (probably preponderating) that the road from the gate was well defined to a point near the dwelling, but beyond that point it was undefined, and held no certain course. But it is not probable that for all these years plaintiff had allowed a road to run so near his dwelling and other buildings as was this surveyed line, and that he consented to or directed a division line which would give Dondero the right to erect a fence which would so seriously affect the enjoyment of his property. But, be this as it may, the jury and the court found that the dividing line agreed upon was as claimed by plaintiff, and we think there was evidence to support this conclusion.

Appellants contend (1) that plaintiff was bound by the survey, because the person who acted for him at the time knew that the line was established where defendants claim it should be; and (2) that plaintiff is charged with knowledge of this fact, or with the means of knowledge which he had so near at hand. It appears, however, that after the survey was made the parties continued to use the road for five years before Dondero made known his claim by fencing on the surveyed line. During all this time plaintiff was indulging the mistake that the surveyed line was along the middle of this road, as the agreement called for. He saw no stakes along this disputed part of the road, and might well have rested upon the belief that the line was along the middle of the road. The jury and court found, upon sufficient evidence, that plaintiff and Dondero had agreed upon a line in the middle of this road, and we do not think plaintiff's agent can be presumed to have had authority to consent to any deviation from that agreement in a matter of such importance to plaintiff. The evidence does not disclose his instructions. Scrivani (the agent) testified that he carried the chain and stuck the stakes, and the surveyor testified that Scrivani must have seen that the line ran close to the buildings, and that he made no objection to it. There is no evidence that Scrivani communicated this fact to plaintiff, and plaintiff testified that he did not know where the surveyed line was until in 1895, when Dondero began to make his fence. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that plaintiff authorized no other line to be surveyed than the one agreed upon, and we do not think that the knowledge of Scrivani that the line deviated from the one agreed upon can be imputed to plaintiff, for there is no evidence that Scrivani knew what the agreement was, or that he informed plaintiff where the survey fixed the line. Plaintiff had a right to assume that the line would be, and in fact was, run according to the agreement; and negligence to inquire just where the line was established cannot be presumed under the circumstances of the case.

2. It was not error to admit oral evidence as to the mistake, and as to how it arose (Isenhoot v. Chamberlain, 59 Cal. 630); and it is not necessary that the mistake should have been mutual (Civ. Code, § 3399; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630).

3. Error is alleged in allowing the introduction of a deed from Dondero, executed in 1893 (three years after the agreed division), in which he refers to this private road as a south boundary. The purpose of this evidence no doubt was to show that he recognized the existence of this road, and that it bounded his property on the south. We think the evidence was admissible, because plaintiff and Dondero were, according to plaintiff's testimony, at that time using the road as before, and plaintiff had not then learned where the surveyed line was. The evidence also tended to corroborate plaintiff's evidence.

No point is made that the finding as to Mrs. Dondero's knowledge of the facts was not justified by the evidence. Mr. Dondero testified that he gave plaintiff notice in 1895 as to building the division fence, and the case seems to have been tried as though he were the owner or controlled the property north of the road. Whether his deed to his wife in October, 1894, would affect the rights of plaintiff, need not, therefore, be, and is not, considered. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GODWIN. (Cr. 403.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1899.)

SEDUCTION — TRIAL — WITNESS FOR DEFENDANT — IMPEACHMENT — CROSS-EXAMINATION — HARMLESS ERROR — LAW BOOKS — READING TO JURY — ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR — RECORD.

1. In a prosecution for seduction, after a witness for defendant denied having sexual intercourse with prosecutrix, the evidence being of a negative character, and favorable to neither party, defendant could not impeach him by examining him as to contrary declarations.

2. A witness for defendant in a prosecution for seduction was asked on cross-examination if he ever knew of improper conduct on the part of the prosecutrix, and answered that he never had had improper relations with her, as he had testified on his examination in chief. Held that, if the question was improper cross-examination, it was harmless error.

3. Refusal to allow the reading of a law book to the jury is not ground for reversal where the record does not show the abstract sought to be read.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

William H. Godwin was convicted of seduction, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Graves & Graves, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of the seduction of a female of previous chaste character, under a promise of marriage, and now prosecutes this appeal. Rulings upon the admissibility of evidence are mainly relied upon for a new trial. Defendant placed one St. Clair upon the witness stand, and in answer to a direct question he testified that he never had had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix. He was thereupon asked if he had not at several specific times and places stated to certain individuals that he had had such intercourse with the prosecutrix. Objections were sustained to these questions, and such rulings are now insisted upon as error. The action of the trial court has full support in the law. It is only when the witness gives hostile evidence that a party may impeach him by showing contradictory statements made at other times. The answer of the witness being "No," the evidence was purely of a negative character. It was neither favorable to one side nor the other, and, if the witness had been impeached, the case before the jury would have assumed no different aspect. The only purpose in any case of introducing the inconsistent and contradictory statements of the witness is to cast doubt and distrust upon the evidence he has previously given. As already suggested, if this witness had been impeached, either by inconsistent statements or general bad reputation for veracity, the result would simply have been that the evidence he gave would have been cast out. There would have been no evidence before the jury that in fact he had had intercourse with the prosecutrix. In other words, his answer to the question addressed to him by counsel for defendant being "No," it neither weakened nor strengthened the case. After impeachment, the case would have stood exactly the same as before. This principle is well settled by the authorities found in the reports of this state. People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 Pac. 314; People v. Crespi, 115 Cal. 50, 46 Pac. 863. The witness St. Clair, upon cross-examination, was asked the following question: "Q. During the time you knew her, or at any time, have you ever known of any improper conduct on her part?" In direct examination the witness only testified as to his personal acquaintance and relations with the prosecutrix. For this reason the matter inquired about was not proper cross-examination. While various objections were made to the question, there was no objection upon this ground, and for this reason the ruling of the court in admitting the answer probably was not error. In addition, it appears the witness answered the question by saying that he never had had any improper relations with the prosecutrix. This answer was only a repetition of a statement he had previously made several times, and no possible harm to defendant could have been caused by it.

The court refused to allow defendant's counsel to read to the jury extracts from a decision of this court, and this ruling is assigned as error. The practice of reading law books to the jury is not a commendable one, and this court has often so declared. People v. Ander- son, 44 Cal. 70. In this particular instance we know nothing as to the character of the extract sought to be read. The record is entirely silent upon the matter, and for this reason, even conceding such a practice allowable in exceptional cases, there is nothing before us showing the case to be of that character.

We have examined the remaining contentions put forward by appellant's counsel, and find them without merit. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

DAVIS v. HART. (S. F. 1,228.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1899.)

PROCESS—SERVICE—LIMITATIONS—DEATH OF DEFENDANT—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, as amended in 1889, requiring that no action shall be further prosecuted unless summons shall have been issued within one year and served within three years from bringing suit, includes an action in which defendant dies within the year.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, as amended in 1889, requiring issuance of a summons within one year and service within three years from bringing suit, is not unconstitutional as applied to a case where defendant dies within the year, because cutting off plaintiff's opportunity to serve his summons within the year in which he could issue it.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Samuel Davis against Amos Hart, administrator of the estate of George D. Jordan, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial defendant appeals. Reversed.

Bishop & Wheeler, for appellant. Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This action was commenced against George S. Jordan July 1, 1886, by filing a complaint and issuing a summons thereon. The action was upon a promissory note dated July 1, 1882, due one year after date, without grace. The summons was not served. Defendant then resided, as plaintiff knew, in Sierra county, in this state. The suit was commenced on the very last day upon which it could have been brought to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations. That purpose accomplished, plaintiff rested upon his oars, and seven months thereafter defendant died. No administrator was appointed on the estate of Jordan until April, 1896, when plaintiff procured the issuance of letters to defendant. Afterwards, the first thing done in the case, the court of its own motion, and without the knowledge of defendant, dismissed the action for want of prosecution. The first appearance in the action on the part of the plaintiff after the issuance of summons was in a successful motion to vacate and set aside the judgment so entered on the 12th day of June, 1896. At the same time an order was made substituting Amos Hart, administrator of the estate of Jordan, as defendant, and the clerk was directed to issue a summons directed to the said defendant. The summons was issued and served, and the defendant, appearing specially, moved to quash the summons on the ground that the same was unauthorized by the statute. The motion was denied on the 15th day of August, 1896, and defendant excepted. On the 15th day of September, 1896, plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint, alleging the death of defendant Jordan, and that the claim had been duly presented to the administrator, and that the administrator rejected the same on the 11th day of April, 1896. After the motion to dismiss had been denied, defendant demurred to the amended and supplemental complaint, and also answered, always reserving the objection to the further prosecution of the case on the ground that summons was not served and was not returned within three years after the commencement of the action. The demurrer was overruled, and the case came to a trial, defendant objecting that the court had lost jurisdiction of the case, and that the same should not be further prosecuted, but should be dismissed, as provided in section 581, Code Civ. Proc. The court, however, proceeded, against the protest of the defendant, to try the case, and judgment was for the plaintiff. Defendant appeals from an order denying a new trial, and still insists upon his objection that the court should have dismissed the case under section 581, Id.

It is not denied that this case is strictly within the language of section 581, as amended in 1889, and that there is no doubt that it is one of a class of cases which that amendment was especially designed to include. It was intended to prevent the indefinite extension of the life of an obligation in spite of the statute of limitations by simply commencing an action. Such obligations should not be kept alive without the knowledge of the debtor lying in wait for him in case he should acquire further property. It is a matter of general interest that a debtor should know whether the debt is kept alive or not. Uncertainty upon this matter hampers enterprise. The language of the statute could not be made less ambiguous than it is: "No action heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be further prosecuted, and no further proceedings shall be had therein, and all actions heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed by the court in which the same shall have been commenced, on its own motion, or on the motion of any party interested therein, whether named in the complaint as a party or not, unless summons shall have been issued within one year, and served and return thereon made within three years after the commencement of the said action, or unless appearance has been made by the defendant." The language shows that great care was taken to make the statute comprehensive, and free from doubt. The repetitions are evidently to remove all possibility of doubt. First, the prohibitory form is used: "No action shall be prosecuted," and "no further proceedings shall be had therein." Then the same thing is repeated in the affirmative form: "All actions heretofore or hereafter commenced shall be dismissed." The legislative will is thus not only made sure, but that it is absolute and imperative is manifested. Could there be any doubt that it was intended to include all actions? A cardinal rule of interpretation is that a statute free from ambiguity and uncertainty needs no interpretation. This must be so, for all interpretation and construction is for the purpose of ascertaining the legislative will. When this is clear, interpretation is not allowable. In such case it cannot be argued that the result is unjust or against policy. It is itself conclusive upon these subjects. True, the literal sense will not always prevail. But, even in such cases some ambiguity must be found in the statute itself. Thus, a statute making it an offense to lay hands upon a priest carries upon its face a suggestion that the words are not to receive a literal interpretation. To lay hands upon another is often a mode of stating an act of violence, and plainly it is so used in the statute. So other parts of the statute may be inconsistent with the more obvious sense of particular provisions, or a policy may be disclosed in the law which would be defeated by a literal interpretation of some special provision; and so, too, sometimes clauses may be restricted in their operation, when it appears from the statute that it was not intended that they should apply to all that would be comprehended by the words literally construed. And other instances might be mentioned, but in all these cases some reason is found in the statute itself to induce a belief that the legislature did not intend the statute to receive the obvious and literal construction. In such cases the statute or clause will be so interpreted, if possible, as to further the general purpose rather than to defeat that purpose; but where, as here, the meaning is free from doubt, and the case in hand is clearly the very case the statute was intended for, and the practice followed is exactly that which the legislature intended to prohibit, construction is out of the question. We may refuse to obey the law, but we should not cloak our refusal under a pretense of construing language which is unambiguous, and cannot be made clearer by any explanation.

It is said this case differs from the case of Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 Pac. 470. I see no difference in principle, but it is immaterial. Neither the opinion in that case nor any opinion that can be written is less ambiguous than the statute itself, which, as we have said, neither needs nor admits of construction.

But it is said the law is unconstitutional as applied to this case, because it cuts off plain-tiff's opportunity to serve his writ before the end of the year within which he could issue his summons. The statute does not allow any particular time within which to serve the summons after its issuance. A plaintiff is required to serve the summons within three years after the suit was commenced. If he allows eleven months to pass before issuing summons, then eleven months of the time allowed him to serve his summons have also passed. His opportunity to serve his summons commenced with the bringing of the action. Here, in fact, the summons was issued on the day the suit was brought, but that will make no difference. Plaintiff had seven months within which he could have served his summons before Jordan died. The period had commenced to run, and, having begun, it did not stop running because of the subsequent disability, if it could be deemed a disability. There are no exceptions to the bar of the statute except those found in the statute itself (Wood, Lim. § 252); and when the statute has commenced it continues to run, notwithstanding the death of the defendant or an intervening disability, unless it is expressly provided otherwise in the statute. Disability of the defendant does not in any case prevent the running of the statute, nor will ignorance of the creditor as to the residence of the debtor, or that he has property which can be reached, or even of his own right of action, prevent the running of the statute. The fact that Jordan died within the year, and before summons was served on him, is an immaterial circumstance, unless the statute has provided that such circumstance shall prevent the running of the statute. Whenever the statute has commenced to run, delay in bringing an action is always at the risk of an intervening disability, which may, in the absence of statutory saving, prevent suit being brought at all. Code Civ. Proc. § 353, cannot apply to this case, for the time limited for the commencement of the action had run before the death of Jordan. Under that section a party having a cause of action against the estate of a deceased person is not bound to cause administration to be had, because the statute expressly extends his time for one year after the issuance of letters. Here the condition is reversed. The time continued to run whether letters were issued or not, and, having commenced to run, would have continued to do so whether the plaintiff could have caused administration to be had or not. There was no actual hardship here, however, for the creditor could have caused letters to be issued at any time. In no event could his alleged ignorance that Jordan died possessed of an estate cut any figure. All creditors are bound to know such facts at the risk of losing their debt. The order and judgment are reversed, the cause remanded, and the court is directed to dismiss the action.

BALFOUR v. FRESNO CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. (Sac. 302.)

CORPORATIONS—CONTRACTS—RATIFICATION—NOTICE.

Where a corporation ratifies a contract made by its president without authority, it is bound by any declarations he may have made during the negotiation determining the meaning of an ambiguity, since it is presumed to have notice of all the facts relating to the negotiation.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by Robert Balfour against the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company for a decree declaring that there was nothing due from him to defendant under certain irrigation contracts, and for an injunction. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short, for appellant. L. L. Cory, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This appeal is from a judgment and from an order refusing a new trial. It is the second appeal in the case. The first was taken by the plaintiff, and will be found reported in 109 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 876, where a more detailed statement of the facts can be found than is deemed important here. The language of the contract is there stated, and it was determined that such language was fairly susceptible of two constructions, without doing violence to its usual and ordinary import, on any established rule of construction; and that, therefore, there was an ambiguity, to explain which it was competent to show the surrounding circumstances, and how the parties understood its terms, as manifested by their declarations during the negotiations which preceded the execution of the contract.

The only ruling discussed in the opinion relates to the exclusion of the conversations between the president of the defendant corporation and the plaintiff. The court held that the trial court erred in striking out the evidence on motion of the defendant, and for such error the judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. Upon the new trial the same evidence was offered and received, but the objections made were not precisely the same. On the first trial the objection was that the evidence was incompetent, and could not be received to contradict, add to, or vary the terms of the written contract. On the last trial the objection was added that no one present had authority to represent the corporation. It is admitted that the corporation ratified the contract made, but it is contended that the power was vested entirely in the directors, and all that they ratified was the written contract, and they cannot be held to any other construction than that which would be given the language unaided by those unauthorized conversations. The corporation accepted the contract as written, and can be bound only by its terms. It knew of no conversations which might give a different effect to the contract than the obvious purport of its language. This proposition cannot be maintained. When the corporation ratified and adopted the contract made for it by its president it took it cum onere. The ratification itself affords conclusive proof that the president had authority to negotiate such contracts for the corporation. If no previous authorization existed, the ratification is the equivalent of a previous authorization. If the corporation ratified without adequate knowledge of the facts, or if unauthorized representations were made without the knowledge of the principal, it might, under some circumstances, refuse to be bound by the contract, and seek a rescission; but it cannot insist upon its contract rights, and repudiate the unauthorized representations of the agent, which, to some extent, constituted the inducement to make the contract on the part of the other party. Gribble v. Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 71, 34 Pac. 527; Mundorff v. Wickersham, 63 Pa. St. 87; Bennett v. Judson, 21 N. Y. 238. In these cases numerous authorities are cited to the same effect. The rule that the principal will not be held to a ratification unless he act with full knowledge of all the facts has no application here, for the principal is insisting upon the contract. But, if full knowledge was necessary, it must be presumed that the corporation had full notice of all the facts which were known to its president. The president of a corporation is a proper person to whom notice, which is to affect a corporation, is to be given. The corporation has no eyes, ears, or understanding save through its agents. The president is considered the head of the corporation, and it is his duty to report to the trustees information affecting the interests of the corporation. And the presumption is that he does so. Usually this is a conclusive presumption. Thomp. Corp. § 5228.

Appellant's counsel seems to appreciate the force of this rule, but contends that it ought not to be applied to this case. "It would destroy all safeguards and all protection to corporate property, at least to the extent wherein the power of making, authorizing, or ratifying contracts is reserved to the board of directors." Corporate property is no more sacred than any other property, and some corporations can only be reached through their agents. It behooves them to be especially careful in regard to the conduct of their agents. In no other way can knowledge be conveyed to the fictitious entity, or negotiations be had with it. It is not usual for parties dealing with a corporation to be brought before the directors to negotiate their contracts. Instead of seeing any reason for excepting this case from the rule, it seems to be exactly the case in which justice requires its application. If the contract were made with an individual, it would be construed in the light of the oral declarations. It would be an injustice to allow a more favorable rule to a corporation. Having had the benefit of the inducement, without which the contract would not have been made, it cannot retain the contract, and escape the construction which the court would give the contract in the light of the representations made by its agent. Counsel in his zeal forgets his case. There is no attempt to destroy the contract, or to enforce one it has not made. On the contrary, the design is to enforce the contract exactly as it is written. We are trying to find out what the contract as written means, not to modify it and make another.

This court on the former appeal said that the construction contended for by plaintiff was reasonable; that it violated no rule of construction; that without the evidence offered the contract is ambiguous. I do not admit, nor do I think it can fairly be said to have been admitted on the former appeal, that without the testimony in question the contract should be construed in favor of appellant. The basis of the former decision is that it is a matter of doubt. The payments are to be made after the water is brought upon the land. The corporation was not required to bring the water even to the land; much less was it required, or even authorized, to bring it upon the land. The contract expressly provided that plaintiff might do so. It says: "The party of the second part will construct a ditch," etc. The first payment was to be made "on the first Monday in September, after the water has been brought upon said land." I think the most natural interpretation of this language is that it refers to the bringing of the water upon the land as expressly provided in the contract.

As I read the case, this is not contrary to the decision in Irrigation Co. v. Dunbar, 80 Cal. 530, 22 Pac. 275. It was there held that as soon as the water company had brought the water and constructed its gate it had fully performed its contract. There the contract was that the landowner shall pay after the water has been brought to the land. The language differs much from that in the contract involved here. The real question here is, was the landowner required by his contract to construct his distributing ditches at once? If so, he should not be allowed to defeat the claim of the water company for payment by refusing to perform that part of his contract. As to this the contract is silent or of doubtful import.

We need not follow the argument as to the construction of the contract, in view of the evidence. Counsel's real contention is that the contract is not ambiguous, and the oral declarations contradict its terms, and that all propositions and counter propositions during the negotiations were merged in the written contract subsequently entered into. These were all important and weighty considerations upon the former appeal, but are not of interest upon this appeal. The former conclusion has become the law of the case. The judgment and order are affirmed.

MITROVICH v. FRESNO FRUIT-PACKING CO. (Sac. 317.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1899.)

SALES—NOVATION—PLEADING—AGENCY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Plaintiff contracted to sell and deliver fruit to a firm. Previous to its delivery, the partners formed a corporation with other persons which succeeded the business of the firm. The corporation received the fruit, and assumed the duties of the firm in relation thereto. Held not essential to plaintiff's right to recover the price that there should have been a formal novation of the corporation in the contract and a release of the firm from liability thereon; hence such novation and release need not be alleged.

2. A firm contracted with plaintiff for the delivery of fruit to be sold on commission, with the privilege of purchase at the market price. The partners formed, with others, a corporation which succeeded to the rights of the firm under the contract. In an action against the corporation for fruit delivered, which defendant, it was alleged, had elected to buy, an instruction that if one D. represented the corporation in dealing with plaintiff, and did not disclose to plaintiff any limitation on his authority, and contracted to purchase, the jury should find for plaintiff, is erroneous, since mere silence by an agent as to limitations on his authority cannot render the limitations ineffective.

3. If such instruction was designed to convey information as to the "holding out" of D. as an agent with authority to purchase, it was misleading, since the jury could infer that he possessed any power whatever which he might assume to exercise.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by S. M. Mitrovich against the Fresno Fruit-Packing Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

L. L. Cory, for appellant. S. S. Wright and C. Scribner, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Four certain persons were co-partners, and in that capacity, on June 27, 1895, entered into a contract in writing with Mitrovich, the plaintiff in this action, whereby he agreed to deliver to them the crop of figs to be obtained that season from a certain orchard, and authorized them to pack and sell the same on his account for specified compensation; the duties of which employment they on their part undertook to discharge. Said contract contained also a provision allowing to said partnership "the privilege of purchasing said described figs at time of delivery at the agreed market value." About August 21st following, three of said partners, together with two other persons, formed a corporation under the same name which had been the partnership designation, —Fresno Fruit-Packing Company. This is an action against said corporation. Plaintiff's complaint contains three counts. In the first it is alleged, among other things, that defendant "succeeded to all business relations, interests, and liabilities of said partnership; and, in pursuance of the terms of said contract, exercised its privilege and option to, and did, buy of and from said plaintiff, and plaintiff sold and delivered to said defendant corporation," 21,254 pounds of said figs at certain prices agreed upon, for which a balance specified remains unpaid. There was a verdict in plaintiff's favor for a few dollars less than the aggregate of the sums demanded on his several alleged causes of action, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The evidence at the trial concerning plaintiff's right to recover on the second and third counts was conflicting, and they are of little or no consequence in the appeal. The matters for our consideration concern the first count of the complaint, which was the foundation of the greater part of the recovery.

Defendant claims that said first count (to which he demurred) is bad both in form and substance, in that it does not show with certainty or at all a novation of defendant for the partnership of the same name in the contract of June 27, 1895; that there could be no novation without a release of the partnership from the obligations of the contract; and that no such release is averred. But, as we read the pleading, it alleges a sale and delivery of the figs by plaintiff directly to defendant at agreed prices. The averments regarding the previous contract with the partnership, and the relation of defendant to that contract, are but evidentiary matter, and might as well, and better, have been omitted. If, therefore, any uncertainty exists in the pleading, it is in a particular not at all material to the cause of action, and the demurrer was properly overruled.

The principal disputed question of fact is whether there was a sale by plaintiff to defendant, as alleged by him. Defendant contends that whatever goods it received from plaintiff were to be sold by it on commission, and that they had not been sold when this action was brought. The evidence for plaintiff under the first count related to two distinct lots of the fruit. The first lot consisted of 10,000 pounds of figs, which he delivered on or about August 29, 1895. The second contained 11,254 pounds, and was delivered about September 19th following. The negotiations concerning the goods included in the later delivery occurred between plaintiff and one A. F. Tenney, the managing agent of defendant. The evidence was conflicting as to whether they were sold outright to defendant, or bailed to it for sale on commission, and we need not notice that transaction further. But the first lot of 10,000 pounds was, according to the contention of plaintiff, purchased by defendant through the instrumentality of one Dunlap, a subordinate agent, who was in the employ, first, of said partnership, and afterwards of the corporation.

In our opinion, there was evidence from which the jury might infer that the corporation undertook to fulfill the obligations of the partnership under the said contract of June 27th. It succeeded directly to the business of the partnership. Mr. Tenney, who was manager of the business of both concerns, testified that the partnership had made no contracts to handle fruit during 1895, prior to September 3d, except the contract with Mitrovich, and that "all the goods under that contract had not been delivered at the time the corporation was formed, and the corporation took charge of the balance of it." The fact seems to have been that none of such goods was delivered prior to August 29th, and the corporation was formed a week earlier. There was other evidence tending in the same direction,—to show, that is, that the defendant received the goods and assumed the duties of the former partnership in relation thereto, and also that this arrangement was in effect when plaintiff delivered the first lot of figs. This being the situation of the parties, it was not essential to plaintiff's right of action now asserted that there should have been a formal novation of the corporation in said contract and a release of the partnership from liability thereon. Malone v. Transportation Co., 77 Cal. 38, 44, 18 Pac. 858; Paper-Bag Co. v. Van Nortwick, 52 Fed. 752; Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 3, last clause.

But, although there was some evidence from which the jury might find that Dunlap received the first delivery of figs as the agent and servant of defendant, it remained to determine whether defendant elected, through him, to purchase the goods under the option allowed by the contract of June 27th, and this necessitated an inquiry as to the scope of his agency. Defendant contends that he had no authority for any such purpose, even if he attempted to exercise it, which is also denied. Viewing the evidence touching the extent of Dunlap's power in the light most favorable to plaintiff, all that can be said is that it was conflicting. In this state of the case, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If you should find from the evidence that Dunlap was employed by the defendant and the co-partnership as an agent to represent them in dealing with the plaintiff, and that said Dunlap did not disclose to the plaintiff any limitations upon his authority to contract with the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did not know that he was not authorized to contract with reference to the purchase of the figs, and you should find from the evidence that said Dunlap did make the contract for the purchase of the figs on behalf of the co-partnership or the defendant, then you should find for the plaintiff." This instruction was clearly erroneous, and can scarcely have failed to prejudice the case of defendant. As an agent cannot bind his principal by any express definition of his agency (Civ. Code, § 2322), so he certainly cannot, by mere silence concerning limitations on his authority, render such limitations ineffective. If the instruction was designed to convey to the jury information on the subject of a "holding out" of Dunlap by defendant as an agent having authority to purchase, it was very misleading. Virtually, from the fact that he was an agent to represent either defendant or its predecessor, the partnership, in some undefined dealing with plaintiff regarding the figs, they were allowed to infer that he possessed any power whatever in that behalf which he might assume to exercise. See Robinson v. Bank, 81 Cal. 106, 22 Pac. 478; Bergtholdt v. Porter Bros. Co., 114 Cal. 681, 46 Pac. 738; Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46, 52 Pac. 115.

Some other points are made, but it is believed that, so far as we can safely go without anticipating unnecessarily the effect of evidence likely to be produced on another trial, they are sufficiently covered by the foregoing remarks. Because of the error in the charge to the jury, the judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS.

AIKMAN v. MURPHY et al. (L. A. 370.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1898.) In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county. Action by William Aikman, administrator, against Simon J. Murphy and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed. For opinion in division, see 52 Pac. 729. Works & Lee, for appellants. C. L. Batcheller, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The facts involved in this appeal differ in no material respect from those presented in the case of Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony (Sac. 367; this day decided) 55 Pac. 713, excepting that in the present case the lower court found that the defendant Murphy had rescinded the agreement of purchase with the plaintiff, Aikman; but as to this finding there is no competent evidence in the record to sustain it. The case is, therefore, upon all fours with the one above referred to, and upon the authority of that case the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

GEORGE v. GABRAL et al. (S. F. 995.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.) Department 1. Action by Henry C. George against John Gabral and Henry Pierce. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial defendant Pierce appeals. Reversed.

PER CURIAM. This action in all respects is similar to that of George v. Pierce (S. F. 883; this day decided) 55 Pac. 775. The appeal in this case involves the same questions that were there involved. Upon the authority of that case the order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded.

GEORGE v. HAYDEN et al. (S. F. 884.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1898.) Action by Henry C. George against D. L. Hayden and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial defendant Henry Pierce appeals. Reversed.

PER CURIAM. This action in all respects is similar to that of George v. Pierce (S. F. 883; this day decided) 55 Pac. 775. The appeal in this case involves the same questions that were there involved. Upon the authority of that case the order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded.

KELSEY v. MERCED COUNTY. SHAFFER v. SAME. HALEY v. SAME. (Sac. 405, 407, and 408.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1898.) Department 2. Separate actions by G. P. Kelsey, R. Shaffer, and J. W. Haley against Merced county. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

PER CURIAM. The pleadings, proceedings, facts, and questions of law in each of these cases cannot be distinguished, except as to the names of the parties plaintiff, the amounts claimed, and the amounts of the several judgments, from the case of Nelson v. Merced Co. (Sac. 406; this day decided) 55 Pac. 421, and all were submitted in this court upon the briefs filed in that case; and upon the authority of that case the judgment appealed from in each of the above-entitled causes is reversed.

MCDONALD v. PETERS et al. (S. F. 904.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1898.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. Action by one McDonald against one Peters and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. J. C. Bates, for appellant. J. Brooks Palmer, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The questions involved in this appeal have been considered in the case of Ede v. Cuneo (S. F. 905; recently decided) 55 Pac. 388, and upon the authority of that case the judgment is affirmed.

WORDEN v. BEAR VAL. IRR. CO. et al. (L. A. 304.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1898.) In bank. Action by P. B. Worden against the Bear Valley Irrigation Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

PER CURIAM. On the authority of Slocum v. Irrigation Co. (L. A. 305; this day decided) 55 Pac. 403, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

TONER et al. v. MEUSSDORFFER et al.
(S. F. 790.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1899.)
EXECUTORS — FRAUD — LIABILITY OF ESTATE — PLEADING.

1. An estate is not liable for the executor's fraud.

2. In an action against a landlord for deceit in stating unqualifiedly that premises were safe, the complaint alleged that defendant knew of the defect during the tenancy, and that he made the assertion in the absence of knowledge or information as to its truth; that the defect was inherent, and not apparent on exterior view; and that plaintiff occupied the premises five months without learning of it. Held, that it did not make out a case of fraud.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Hugh Toner and others against Caroline Meussdorffer and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Dunne & McPike, for appellants. Lloyd & Wood, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. This is an action for damages, brought by the heirs of Mary E. Toner, deceased. The defendants are the executors of Charles Meussdorffer, deceased, and, in their representative capacity, leased certain premises to the plaintiff Hugh Toner, who was the husband of Mary E. Toner, deceased, and is the father of the other plaintiffs. In the action it is sought to recover for the death of the said Mary E. Toner, which it is charged was caused by deceit and fraud practiced upon Hugh Toner by the defendants. The action, if it could be maintained at all, is properly brought against defendants in their individual capacity; for in no event could the estate be charged with damages for the fraud of the executors. Judgment was for the defendants upon the pleadings, and the question to be decided is, therefore, whether the complaint states a cause of action.

After the averment of the letting of the premises, and a description of them, it is alleged in the complaint as follows: "During all the time of the aforesaid occupancy of said hired premises by said Hugh Toner and his family, the fence of said rear gallery was attached to the said hired premises on the north—that is, to the said closet—by nails, and was attached to an upright post on the floor of said gallery at the south also by nails. Said nails and posts were, at the time of said hiring and at all the times of the aforesaid occupancy, insecure, defective, rotten, and insufficient to hold said fence in place, and were at all of said times suffered to remain in such condition by the said defendants; and such condition, during all of said time, was known to the said defendants, and unknown to the said occupants, namely, the said Hugh Toner and his said family; and the said defendants, during all of said times, allowed the said occupants to be and remain in the said premises in ignorance of their said condition. (5) At the time of the aforesaid hiring by the said Hugh Toner of the said hired premises, the defendants, with intent to induce him to hire the same, asserted to him positively that the said premises were entirely safe and in perfectly sound condition. This assertion was not true when made, or at any time during the aforesaid occupancy; and it was made in a manner not warranted by the information of the said defendants,—that is to say, positively and without qualification, and in the absence of any knowledge or information on the part of the defendants as to the truth of the assertion. The said Hugh Toner believed the said assertion to be true when made, and upon the faith thereof, and induced thereby, hired the said premises as aforesaid; and at no time during the period of the aforesaid occupancy, until the happening of the accident hereinafter mentioned, did the said Hugh Toner, or any of his family, have any other knowledge or belief upon the subject, except as conveyed by the said assertion; and in this behalf these plaintiffs aver that the aforesaid condition of the said rear gallery was inherent, and not apparent upon exterior view, and was not disclosed to the said Hugh Toner, or any of his said family, until the happening of the said accident.” The allegation of knowledge on the part of the defendants is that, while the plaintiff and his family were occupying the premises, the defendants knew of their condition. But in the next paragraph it is alleged that the defendants asserted positively, and without qualification, that the premises were entirely safe and in a perfectly sound condition, in the absence of any knowledge or information on the part of the defendants as to the truth of the assertion, and that the defect was inherent and not apparent upon exterior view. Furthermore, it is stated in the complaint that the plaintiff and his family had occupied the premises continuously from the 2d day of April, 1895, until the 3d day of September of that year, and the defects were “not disclosed to the said Hugh Toner, or any of his said family, until the happening of the said accident.”

It affirmatively appears, therefore, that the assertion was made in good faith, without any knowledge of the defect, and was warranted by the appearance of the premises. The defect was so latent that none of the plaintiff's family discovered it during five months' occupation. Certainly, this was not a fraud upon the part of the defendants, unless, before making such a declaration, they were called upon to make such an examination as would have led to the discovery of the defect. The complaint does not discuss the character of the examination that would have been required. The assertion is little more than what would be called “simplex commendatio,” rather than a representation, had defendants themselves been the landlords. The duty of making an examination rested as much upon the lessee as upon the landlord, and to all such transactions the rule of caveat emptor applies. It is not averred that the lessee abstained from making an examination because of the representations; and clearly he would not have been justified in refraining from so doing in reliance upon such an assertion. I think the defendants cannot be charged with fraud for an assertion which they believed to be true, and which seemed to be amply justified by their information, because of the existence of an unsuspected defect which it is not made to appear they ought to have known.

There are other objections to the complaint which I do not deem it necessary to discuss. The judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California, Jan. 30, 1899.)

STATE AND FEDERAL COURTS—COUNTY—GARNISHMENT—FUNDS IN COURT.

1. Where a United States district court in California, having seized and sold, to pay maritime claims, a vessel belonging to a receiver appointed by the court of another state, intends to return the surplus, and the jurisdiction to determine conflicting claims to it, to the state court, and, in compliance with its decree, its clerk prepares checks to mail to the receiver according to his direction, the latter is, in effect, an officer of the federal court in the transmission of the fund; and hence garnishment will not lie against the clerk to subject the fund to other debts, on the theory that there was a delivery to the receiver, and that the federal court had parted with its control.

2. Comity requires a state court to be bound by a federal court's determination as to when the latter's possession and control of property of which it first acquired jurisdiction cease.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by W. A. Swinerton against the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from orders withdrawing general authority of a receiver appointed at plaintiff's instance to collect moneys and demand and receive checks belonging to defendant, and limiting the receiver's powers to proceedings before the United States district court, and instructing him to dismiss a suit in the superior court against the clerk of the United States court seeking to compel him to surrender a check and to enjoin him from sending it away, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry E. Monroe, for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Eells, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. On the 4th day of June, 1894, the appellant recovered a judgment in the superior court of San Francisco against the respondent the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company for $15,363.78 and costs. Execution was issued thereon, proceedings supplementary to the execution instituted; and Southard Hoffman, who had been previously garnished under the execution, was cited to appear and be examined before Judge Seawell concerning any property, moneys, or credits in his hands due, owing, or belonging to the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company. Upon his examination it appeared that the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company had been the owner of a steamship known as the "Willamette Valley"; that in the business of the railroad company this steamship plied between the port of Yaquina, Or., and the port of San Francisco; that upon one of her voyages to the port of San Francisco, and while in that port, she was seized by the United States marshal under admiralty process issued out of the district court of the United States for the Northern district of California, upon a libel in admiralty filed therein against the steamship by R. D. Chandler. Such proceedings were had in this libel suit that the steamship was, by order of the court, duly and regularly sold, and the proceeds paid into the registry of the United States district court where the libel was filed. At the times of the libel proceedings, the sale of the steamship, and the further proceedings hereinafter mentioned, Southard Hoffman, the garnishee, was clerk of the United States district court, and he deposited the proceeds of that sale in the subtreasury at San Francisco. The ultimate issue of the Chandler libel suit was a decree in favor of Chandler and other libelants and interveners against the steamship Willamette Valley for her condemnation and payment to the libelants and interveners of certain amounts found by the court to be due to each of them. After all the moneys so found due to the libelants for whom the ship and her proceeds were held in custody by the United States district court were paid under its decree, there remained in the registry of the court, undisposed of, $23,950.85. Prior to the seizure of the steamship Willamette Valley in the libel suit, a receiver over the property of the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company was appointed by the circuit court of Benton county, in the state of Oregon; and such receiver took possession of all the property of the corporation found in Oregon, including the steamship Willamette Valley. In the latter part of the year 1895 a number of persons (among them the receiver appointed by the circuit court of Benton county, in the state of Oregon), claiming an interest in the remnant of the proceeds of the sale of the steamship, then still lying in the registry of the court, filed petitions in the United States district court, as provided by the rules and practice of the federal courts, praying for a distribution to them of this surplus or remnant. After hearing had upon these petitions, the judge of the court made and gave a decree in the matter on the 9th day of June, 1896, dismissing all of the petitions except that of the Oregon receiver, and directed the clerk of his court to pay the moneys then in the registry of the court to that receiver, or to his proctor. In compliance with this decree, Southard Hoffman, as clerk of the United States district court, on the 28th day of September, 1896, prepared two checks,—one for $19,918.29, in favor of Charles Clark, receiver of the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company, and one for $3,606.16, in favor of Charles Page, who was the proctor of the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company and of Charles Clark, the receiver. These two checks Mr. Hoffman took to Judge Morrow, judge of the said United States district court, for his signature. The judge signed them, and returned them to Mr. Hoffman for delivery and his signature, and Hoffman then signed them. Both of these checks were drawn on the United States subtreasury at San Francisco. On or about the 18th day of June, 1896, Charles Page, as proctor for the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company and the Oregon receiver, instructed and requested Mr. Hoffman that when the decree became final he should prepare two checks,—one for $19,918.29, in favor of the Oregon receiver, and one for $3,606.16, in Charles Page's favor,—and that Mr. Hoffman should mail the larger check of the two to Charles Clark, the receiver, at Corvallis, Or., and inclose it in a letter previously written by Mr. Page to Mr. Clark, and which was left by Mr. Page with Mr. Hoffman for transmission through the mails. The decree did not become final until September 28, 1896. Mr. Hoffman, in pursuance of the instructions received from Mr. Page, did on the 28th day of September, 1896, after the same was signed, place the larger check inside of Mr. Page's letter, and put these in an envelope, which he sealed and addressed to Charles Clark, Corvallis, Or.; but, before he could deposit the letter in the United States post office or a mail box for delivery, and while the check so signed and countersigned and letter were in his possession, the sheriff levied a garnishment on Mr. Hoffman, under and by virtue of a writ of execution issued out of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, under the judgment recovered in this action. At the same time Hoffman was served with an order in supplementary proceedings to appear before Hon. J.

M. Seawell and be examined; also, an injunction and a subpoena duces tecum to bring into court the check drawn in favor of the foreign receiver. Upon the hearing Mr. Hoffman declined to produce the check; claiming to hold it in his possession in his official capacity as clerk of the district court of the United States, and that all his acts in relation to the placing of the check inside of Mr. Page's letter addressed to Clark, receiver, sealing the letter, addressing it, and the intended deposit thereof in the United States mail for transmission to Oregon, were official acts as such clerk. The superior court then made an order appointing one Forsyth receiver of the defendant's property, in which order it was recited that this check was in the possession and under the control of Southard Hoffman, apparently as an individual, and not as clerk, and that the check represented property, in the state of Oregon, of the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company. The order further authorized the receiver to collect all moneys by suit or otherwise, and to demand and receive checks to which the defendant was entitled. Thereupon the plaintiff moved for an order upon Southard Hoffman directing him to deliver the check in his possession to Forsyth, the receiver appointed by that order. The court denied the motion. Immediately upon obtaining this order, Forsyth, as receiver, brought an action in the superior court against Hoffman to compel him to surrender the check, and enjoining him from sending it away. This fact having been brought to the attention of Judge Seawell, he on the 23d of October modified his previous order by setting aside all its provisions and recitals, except the order appointing Forsyth as receiver, and by limiting his powers to the taking of such proceedings as he might be advised, before the district court, and not elsewhere. On the 30th of October the court made still a new order, slightly changing the modification heretofore set forth, and finally instructing the receiver to dismiss the suit which he had brought in the superior court, and to confine his proceedings to the court of which Hoffman was clerk. From these two orders this appeal is taken.

The respondent Hoffman was permitted by the court in bank (52 Pac. 1132) to supplement the record in this case by proof of the following facts, among others, to wit: That Forsyth, receiver, appeared in the district court of the United States, and prayed that Hoffman be required to deliver to him the check in controversy. That the matter was litigated in that court, and that the United States district court rendered an opinion in which it was held that the check was in the custody of that court for the satisfaction of its own decree; that the attempt of the petitioner to have process issuing from a state court to control property in the possession of a federal court was void, and the petition of Forsyth, receiver, should be dismissed. Furthermore, that on the 6th day of February, 1897, Charles Clark, receiver of the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company, applied to him (Hoffman), as clerk, for delivery to him of the check in question, and that, upon referring the matter to the district judge, the judge ordered him to deliver the check in accordance with the terms of the decree theretofore entered by the court, which order, as clerk, he obeyed, and the check in dispute is no longer in the possession of Hoffman, as clerk or otherwise.

Of course, appellant does not contend, and never has contended, that the fund can be reached while in custodia legis, or that the officers of the United States court can be interfered with in the discharge of their official duties. His contention was and is that the money had been, as matter of law and fact, distributed by the court, and actually paid to the receiver appointed by the Oregon court, or to his proctor, and, since such receiver had no official standing in this state, he could be regarded as receiving it only as the agent of the appellant's debtor, to wit, the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company; and, further, being assets of the debtor found in this state, it was subject to be adjudicated upon only by the courts of this state, and could not be sent or taken out of this state simply to give jurisdiction over it to the courts of another state. The real answer to this contention is that the United States district court intended to transfer the fund, and the jurisdiction to determine conflicting claims to it, to the receiver's court in Oregon, and in doing this the Oregon receiver and his proctor were, in effect, officers of the United States court in the execution of its decree in the transmission of the fund. In my opinion, a federal court cannot rightfully transfer property from one state to another for the purpose of giving the courts of the state to which it is transferred jurisdiction to distribute such property under its decree to claimants, thereby depriving the courts of the state from which it is taken of such jurisdiction. This would constitute a serious assault on the sovereignty of the state and the jurisdiction of its courts. This was not done, however, in this case, under the view of the matter entertained by the learned judge of the United States district court. His views are fully explained in Chandler v. Willamette Valley, 76 Fed. 838, where the court considered and determined all the claims to the surplus then in the registry of that court. It is there stated that, to entitle a claimant to the fund, he must show a vested interest in or a lien upon the fund. It is then shown that no claimant except the Oregon receiver has such a lien or interest. It is then stated that the vessel was in the possession of the receiver when seized to satisfy the maritime liens, and it is said: "The fact that this court took possession of the vessel while she was engaged in commerce between the state of Oregon and the state of California, being operated as a part of the road of the corporation, did not affect or impair the prior equitable right of the state court of Oregon to the surplus proceeds. The proceedings in admiralty in this court simply operated to suspend, not to divest, the action or control of that court as to the surplus." Consequently the surplus was restored to the jurisdiction of that court.

But, whatever may be the right of the United States district court to take the surplus money in its registry from the jurisdiction of our courts, it is apparent that such surplus cannot now be reached in any suit which can be instituted here by the receiver in the proceedings supplementary to execution. The property is not in this state, and such receiver would have no standing in Oregon. To reverse the orders appealed from here, therefore, would be followed by no consequence whatever. But, independently of this consideration, we think nothing should be done. The mere claim on the part of the federal court that Hoffman was still in possession of the money as an officer of that court should prevent our interference. Not conceding any superior authority in that court, except such as accrued to it from being first in possession of the subject of litigation, yet, since the two jurisdictions are independent, to avoid unseemly conflict that court must be left to determine when its possession and control of the property have ended. We cannot apply here the doctrine of Dunsmoor v. Furstenfeldt, 88 Cal. 522, 26 Pac. 518. As to co-ordinate courts of the state, there is a common appellate jurisdiction which can settle and compose all such questions. There is no such common arbiter between the state and federal courts. Comity therefore becomes a necessity. It is a law which must not be disregarded. The orders appealed from are affirmed.

RECEIVERS—LIABILITIES.

Where the president of a corporation in the hands of receiver assists the receiver, with services and advice, in superintending the trust property, an action at law against the receiver, as such, by such president, will not lie for the services rendered, as it was the duty of the receiver himself to perform them.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Behrend Joost against Sanford Bennett, receiver of the San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Mullany, Grant & Cushing, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson and Robt. A. Friedrich, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment, and from an order refusing a new trial. The action was brought and prosecuted, by leave of the court in which the receiver was appointed, against the defendant herein, as such receiver, for causes alleged in the complaint. The complaint contains two causes of action. In the first, after showing the due appointment of the defendant, it is averred: "That plaintiff herein was employed by, and rendered services to, said Sanford Bennett, as such said receiver, at his request, in the necessary and proper services and management of the property, business, and operations of said San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company, and in the defense of its interests, and in the prosecution of its rights and claims, in numerous proceedings and actions at law, and in the preparation for the trials of said actions, and in becoming informed upon and regarding the same, and in settling and adjusting the claim and demands made in and by said actions against said San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company and its property, and by the parties and persons who were and are prosecuting their said claims against said railway company and its property through and by said actions. That said services were performed by plaintiff for and at the request of defendant, as aforesaid, from or about the 1st day of September, A. D. 1894, to the 1st day of March, A. D. 1896, and were so performed in and concerning and pertaining to the rights, property, and interests of said San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company under the charge, direction, and management of said defendant, as such said receiver, in the following causes and proceedings, viz.: In consulting, advising, and operating with and instructing said defendant, receiver, and his legal counsel and attorneys, in the following actions and causes, and the property, claims, and affairs involved therein, viz." Then follows the enumeration of 38 different actions, by their titles, then pending against the said corporation; also, the statement of a controversy between said corporation and the Market Street Railway Company in regard to protecting the franchise for railroad purposes on Frederick street; also, the controversy with the same street-railway company as to mutual accommodations of their respective railways on Valencia and Fourteenth streets, Castro and Eighteenth, Mission and Fourteenth, and Sixth and Harrison streets, Sixth and Bryant streets, and Fifth and Bryant streets, in said city and county of San Francisco; also, in arranging controversy between the corporation and said Market Street Railway Company, on Stanyan street, between Waller and Frederick; also, in resisting attempts made by and on behalf of the board of supervisors, and certain members composing said board, of the city and county of San Francisco, to declare and order vacated the franchise for railroad purposes granted to the said corporation. Then follows an averment as to the value of the said services. The second cause of action stated in the complaint is for the rent of seven certain lots of land alleged to belong to the plaintiff. It is charged that defendant, as receiver, "for the purposes of carrying on the traffic of the railroad of said railway company, or of maintaining its railroad for the purpose of carrying passengers thereon, and maintaining a way for its rolling stock, railroad, cars, and trains," rented, hired, occupied, and used these lots. Defendant, in his answer, denied all the material allegations of the complaint, except as to his official character. At the trial a jury was waived, and the court found, in effect, that the plaintiff did not render the services charged, at the request of the receiver, but that such services as he did render were rendered in his character as president of the railroad corporation. As to the second cause of action, the court found that the defendant did not rent any of the land from plaintiff, and did not contract to pay him rent therefor. This finding is abundantly supported by the evidence. Whatever claim Joost may have for the use and occupation of the land, he certainly had no claim for conventional rents.

The action against the receiver, as such, for the services which it is averred were rendered by plaintiff, cannot be maintained. The service, it will be seen, was not that required in continuing and carrying on the business of the corporation, but was to aid and supplement the superintendence, which was due from the receiver himself. It is presumed from his acceptance that the receiver was competent for his position. If he was not, and needed such advice as is charged in the complaint he received from the plaintiff, he should have paid for it himself; and the court, in the settlement of his accounts, would be justified in refusing to allow credit for such disbursements. It appears that the receiver was allowed $12,000 for 23 months' service as receiver, and for his attorney he was allowed $16,000 more. The entire property was sold for $800,000. We are not in a position to say that the allowance was unreasonable, but it was a good deal to pay for superintendence. But in no possible case could such a suit be maintained. Neither Joost, for services of this character, nor the attorney for the receiver, had any claim directly against the property in the hands of the receiver. If the allowance had been made, it would have been made, not to Joost, but to the receiver, for moneys properly expended by him. Smith, Rec. § 129; Stuart v. Boulware, 133 U. S. 78, 10 Sup. Ct. 242. The charges of the plaintiff for services are, in this respect, exactly like the expenses of administration incurred as an administrator. See, on this subject, Gurnee v. Maloney, 38 Cal. 85; Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 53 Pac. 560; In re Kason's Estate, 119 Cal. 489, 51 Pac. 706; In re Kruger's Estate (Sac. No. 532, filed Jan. 25, 1899) 55 Pac. 1056. It may be that a case might arise where such an allowance would be proper, but that is a matter to be determined in the first instance by the court whose officer the receiver is and when an allowance is made, as already stated, it will not be to the attorney or the other counsel who have aided the receiver by advice, but to the receiver, as a proper expenditure made by him. The trial court found that such services as were rendered by plaintiff in regard to the litigation set out in the complaint were rendered by him as president of the corporation. This may be so. Upon the statement found in the record, it is difficult to determine this matter. It is said the receiver was appointed at the instance of creditors. If those creditors had liens upon the property, the receiver would not have been interested in pending suits for damages against the corporation, wherein personal judgments only could have been recovered. If the receiver represented unsecured demands, he would be interested; but in no case should the receiver have undertaken the defense of suits pending when he was appointed receiver, unless directed or authorized to do so by the court. It was for the court, and not for the receiver, to determine what actions against the corporation the receiver should defend at the charge of the fund which he held for the court. It does not appear that the receiver was directed to defend any of these suits. Many of them are shown to have been actions for damages which were pending when the receiver was appointed. That the receiver was interested in them is not shown, except as to one case; but the stockholders certainly were interested, and Joost, as president of the corporation, was interested. Upon the other ground, however, it is evident that this suit cannot be maintained. Judgment and order affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1899.)

ACCOMPLICE—CORROBORATION—EVIDENCE OF CO-CONSPIRATOR—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS—PROVINCE OF JURY—INSTRUCTIONS—FORGERY—DELIVERY TO ACCOMPLICE—PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSORIES—JUDGES—DISQUALIFICATION THROUGH BIAS—HOW DETERMINED.

1. The question whether a witness is an accomplice is for the jury.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6, providing that after proof of a conspiracy the act or declaration of a co-conspirator shall be admissible, is not mandatory; and, where it is otherwise difficult to present the evidence, the court may, in its discretion, admit the testimony of the accomplice first.

3. An instruction that the jury is not at liberty to disregard the testimony of a witness corroborated by other competent evidence is erroneous, because, if "disregard" be used as synonymous with "refuse to consider," it implies that the testimony of an uncorroborated witness need not be considered.

4. The question of what degree of credibility shall be given to a witness, or whether his testimony is to be entirely rejected, is for the jury, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, making the jury the sole judges of the credibility of a witness.

5. Mere delivery of a forged instrument to one knowing it to be a forgery, with intent to have it uttered or passed as genuine, with intent to injure another, is insufficient to constitute forgery, under Pen. Code, § 470, making a person who attempts to pass a forged instrument as true and genuine, with intent to cheat or injure another, guilty of forgery.

6. A corroboration of an accomplice which tends to connect accused with the crime only by being considered in connection with the accomplice's testimony is insufficient, under Pen. Code, § 1111, requiring the corroboration to be by evidence which, without the aid of the accomplice's testimony, tends to connect accused with the commission of the offense.

7. To be guilty as a principal, a person must both aid and abet, under Pen. Code, § 971, declaring guilty as principals all persons who aid and abet in the commission of a crime.

8. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended in 1897, providing that when it appears, from the affidavits on file, that either party cannot have a fair trial before any judge, because of such judge's bias, the judge shall forthwith secure some other judge to preside, and providing that the adverse party may file counter affidavits, does not entitle a litigant who has filed the proper affidavit to a trial by another judge as a matter of course.

9. The existence of such bias must be determined from the affidavits filed, and the judge cannot use his own knowledge of the matter; hence, it is error to refuse to call in another judge where it appears from uncontradicted affidavits that the judge is biased.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Charles Compton was convicted of forgery, and from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Shinn, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. The defendant, with others, was charged with the forgery of a deed, with intent to injure and defraud the Columbia Savings Bank. Upon a separate trial he was convicted, and appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying him a new trial.

One Ware, who was charged with the offense jointly with Compton, was a witness for the people. He is a self-confessed accomplice, conspirator, and participant in the crime. The scheme, as outlined by his testimony, was the following: Compton secured the description of a piece of land, the title to which stood in L. H. Greene, who was a resident of an Eastern state, and was not in California. Ware procured a certificate of title showing the land to be free from incumbrances. Compton prepared a forged deed of this land, naming Ware therein as grantee. The deed was to have been placed upon record, and upon the strength of this record title a loan secured by mortgage upon the land was to be effected. Ware objected to being named as grantee in the forged deed, upon the ground that he could not obtain his wife's signature to a mortgage, but offered to procure, and did procure, one A. E. Davis, for a consideration agreed upon with Ware, to take part in the conspiracy. Compton thereupon destroyed the first deed, and prepared or caused to be prepared another, in which Davis was named as grantee. Compton, in the presence of Ware, signed Greene's name to this deed, and Ware signed the name of Williams as witness to the signature of Greene. Compton then left the room with the deed, and returned shortly after with the acknowledgment of a notary attached. The deed was given to Ware. It was placed upon record. Davis made application for a loan, obtained a loan of $1,000 upon the security of a mortgage of the property executed by himself and his wife, cashed the check which had been given to him at the bank, retained $250 as his share, and delivered the rest of the money to Ware, who met Compton in a saloon, and who there divided with Compton the remainder of the plunder. Ware's testimony implicates as participants in the conspiracy, besides himself and Compton, Mrs. M. L. Reinholds, who sent Davis with a letter of introduction to secure the loan; J. H. Shields, who procured the certificate of title; P. E. King, the notary public who took the acknowledgment to the false deed; A. E. Davis and Ida M. Davis, his wife, who executed the mortgage. Ware's testimony being admittedly that of an accomplice and of a conspirator, it became necessary, before Compton could be convicted of the forgery, that this testimony should be corroborated by other evidence "which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense." Pen. Code, § 1111. And, before he could be convicted of the forgery with the intent to defraud the corporation named, it became necessary to establish by evidence, independent of that of Ware, the existence of a conspiracy to defraud, and the fact that Compton was a member of that conspiracy. People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 502, 20 Pac. 56; Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 483, 25 Pac. 1. The independent evidence upon both of these points is, at the best, extremely slight. The only evidence besides that of Ware which can be fairly said to tend to connect the defendant with the crime was that of one M. B. Howard. Howard testified that he had given to Compton, upon the back of a card, a brief description of the lot of land, the deed to which was forged. This card appears in evidence, apparently coming from the possession of Ware, who testifies that Compton gave it to him as an aid to securing the certificate of title. Howard further testified that, seeking to borrow $100 from Compton about the time that the false mortgage had been put of record, Compton told him he would let him have a hundred dollars in a few days; "that he was about to turn a mortgage trick for a thousand dollars." Afterwards Compton told him "that the parties had run off with the money. He mentioned a man by the name of this man Davis. I suppose he meant A. E. Davis.

He didn't mention his initials." He also said that "he had not been able to find them, and he guessed they had skipped the country." The witness, however, explained that the phrase "turning a trick" was a common expression of Compton, used by him to indicate any deal or transaction in land or securities by which he realized or expected to realize moneys. He further testified that there was never any conversation between them concerning any fraudulent dealings had or to be had with the land; that Compton expressed great surprise when informed that a forged deed and a false mortgage had been made, and insisted that he knew nothing about the matter, and did not receive any money from the transaction. It is urged that this evidence, also, was the evidence of an accomplice with Ware, and is not of the independent character required to establish proof of the existence of a conspiracy, or of a defendant's participation in it. But, though Howard was stoutly impeached as to his general reputation, and though proof was made of admissions from which the jury might well have believed that he, and not Compton, was a prime mover in the crime, still the question whether or not he was an accomplice was one of fact for the jury, and by their verdict it is to be concluded that they held he was not. But, considering his evidence as independent evidence, untainted by participation in the conspiracy, it is at least doubtful if it be adequate and sufficient, standing alone, to show Compton's participation in the crime of forgery, or to show that Compton was a co-conspirator with the others named. One other piece of evidence, however, should be considered in this connection. Exemplars of defendant's handwriting were admitted in evidence, and presented to the jury for inspection. They compared this writing of the defendant with the signature to the forged deed, and a witness testified that Compton had told him of his skill in imitating handwriting. But, while all this evidence is unquestionably slight, considered either as independent evidence in proof of the conspiracy, or as independent evidence tending to connect defendant with the commission of the crime of forgery, we do not deem it necessary to decide whether or not it was legally insufficient, in view of the fact that upon a new trial, which must be ordered, a different state of facts may be presented.

Appellant complains that the testimony of Ware was admitted in advance of proof of the conspiracy, and insists that it was erroneous for the court to receive evidence of the acts and declarations of a conspirator until after the conspiracy, and defendant's participation in it, had been proved by independent evidence. And upon this proposition he relies upon the express provision of the Code of Civil Procedure that the acts or declarations of a conspirator against his co-conspirator, relating to the conspiracy, may be received only after proof of the conspiracy.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6. It has, however, been too often decided that this rule as to the order of the evidence is not mandatory, to warrant a reconsideration of the question; but this much should be said, that since, in general, the order of proof is entirely within the discretion of the trial judge, if the law-makers did not design by this section to limit the exercise of that discretion in this particular, then the section itself is without force. It is the exceptional case which justifies the court in departing from the salutary provision of the Code. Considering that the facts expected to be proved by the people are usually—indeed, almost invariably—set before the jury in the opening statement of the prosecution, it can seldom happen that the jury will need the evidence of the conspirator in advance of the proof of the conspiracy. The practice has become too common for the trial court in such cases to take the testimony of the conspirator or accomplice before proof of the conspiracy, upon a promise of the prosecution "that they will connect it," or that "it is offered out of order for the better understanding of the jury," or that "it may be stricken out, if independent corroborative proof be not subsequently furnished." The regular and ordinary method of procedure, and the one expressly declared by the law, is that the conspiracy should first be established by independent proof to the satisfaction of the court, and only after it has been so established can the court fairly and intelligently rule upon the admissibility of the offered evidence of the co-conspirator. In the present case, while the course pursued by the court is not one which may be declared error, it is only to be resorted to in extreme cases, when the facts from which the conspiracy is to be inferred are so intimately blended with other facts going to constitute the crime that it is difficult to present the evidence in intelligible form without first admitting the testimony of the accomplice. People v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 394, 36 Pac. 678. However, a new trial must be ordered for several reasons.

The court instructed the jury "that you are not at liberty to disregard the testimony of a witness, where you may believe from the evidence that such witness is corroborated by other competent evidence and the circumstances in proof in the case." If "disregard" is here used as synonymous with "refuse to consider," so that the sense of the instruction is that the jury is not at liberty to refuse to consider the testimony of a witness when corroborated, then the instruction is misleading, for the implication which it carries, that they are at liberty to refuse to consider such testimony, if not corroborated; for it is the duty of the jury to consider and weigh all of the admitted evidence whether corroborated or not. But if, as seems probable, "disregard" is used in the sense of "reject," then there is a clear trespass upon the domain of the jury. "The word 'competent,' when relating to a witness, implies a legal capacity to testify, and, when applied to evidence in law, means having the legal capacity or fitness to be heard in court, as designated from credibility or sufficiency. * * * Thus, a witness may be competent, although unworthy of belief. Evidence may be competent, although not alone sufficient, even if believed." Cent. Dict. "Competent." Though the jury may believe the witness to be lying, though his story may appear to them incredible, though he may have been successfully impeached, yet by this instruction the court lays down a rule that they may not reject the testimony of such a witness, provided only it be corroborated by other competent evidence. The corroboration may not even be upon material matters. The competent evidence may itself be discredited by the jury. Yet the court attempts to declare to the jury the degree of credibility which they are to accord to such testimony, notwithstanding the fact that, under the law and the express provisions of the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847), they are the sole judges of that credibility, and of the weight to be accorded to a witness' testimony. People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 111; People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 166; People v. Gibson, 53 Cal. 601; People v. Messersmith, 61 Cal. 246; People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 Pac. 502; People v. Choynski, 95 Cal. 640, 30 Pac. 791; People v. Stanton, 106 Cal. 139, 39 Pac. 525.

Again, the court instructed the jury that they should find the defendant guilty, if they believed from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant falsely and feloniously uttered, published, or passed the instrument described in the information as a true and genuine instrument, knowing it to be forged, with intent to cheat and defraud the Columbia Savings Bank, "or delivered said instrument to any one, knowing it to be forged, with intent to have it uttered, published, and passed as a true and genuine instrument, with intent to cheat," etc. Section 470 of the Penal Code, under which this information is drawn, makes a forgery of any one or all of three different kinds of acts: First, the crime of forgery is committed if one falsely makes, alters, counterfeits, etc., an instrument with intent to defraud another; and, second, the crime is committed by one who utters, publishes, or passes as true and genuine any of the specified forged or counterfeited matters or papers, knowing the same to be false, forged, and counterfeited, with intent to injure another; and, third, the crime is committed if he so attempt to pass such counterfeited matters, etc. In criminal law an attempt to pass a false instrument as genuine is an uttering, even if the attempt fail. But the codifiers, for clearness, have specifically declared that an attempt to pass shall constitute the crime. The portion of the instruction above quoted is directed to the third class of acts; that is to say, to the attempt to pass. By it the jury was told that if one having a forged instrument in his possession, knowing it to be forged, delivers it to another, with intent to have it uttered, published, and passed as genuine, he is guilty of forgery. But such was not the common law, and such is not the law under our Code. In general, before an attempt to commit a crime can be made out, some overt act towards the commission of the crime, other than a mere act of preparation for its commission, must be established. In People v. Stites, 75 Cal. 570, 17 Pac. 693, the question of attempt is considered with some fullness, and we need not here pause to elaborate upon it. Now, the essence of the third class of forgeries is the attempt to injure an innocent person by foisting upon him a known false instrument. As is aptly said in People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509, where the subject is learnedly and exhaustively considered: "'Uttering' implies two parties,—a party acting and one acted upon. If it be by way of sale, there must be a vendee; if by pledge, there must be a pledgee; if by offer, there must be some one present to hear the offer; and, if it simply declare its goodness, there must be some one addressed as reader or hearer." Therefore, if one deliver to his agent a false instrument, with the design that the agent shall utter or pass it, the crime of uttering or attempting to pass is not complete until after some overt act done by the agent to this end; for, until this shall come to pass, in contemplation of law the paper is still within the control of the principal, and all the steps are but steps of preparation. Equally true is it that if A. and B. should conspire to commit the crime, and A. should deliver a forged instrument to B., by whom it was to be uttered, and B. should destroy the paper without attempting to pass it, the crime of uttering or attempting to pass would not have been committed; for there would have been no effort to foist it upon an innocent person, and, as has been said, if the uttering is by offer, the offer must be made to some one. The instruction under consideration announced an opposite rule, and was therefore erroneous.

The court instructed the jury "that, while it is true that a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, yet I charge you that such corroborative evidence need not tend to establish the precise facts testified to by the accomplice. It is sufficient if such corroborative evidence tends in any way to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged." Elsewhere the court correctly charges the jury upon the law as laid down in section 1111 of the Penal Code. This instruction fails to take account of the essential character necessary to the corroborative evidence, which is that, standing alone, or, as it is phrased in the Code, "without the aid of the testimony of the accom-plíce," it must tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Here the jury was told that it is sufficient if such corroborative evidence tends in any way to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Such is not the law. It could tend to connect him with the crime, by considering it with the testimony of the accomplice; yet, if it is necessary so to consider it, it would not be legally sufficient. It is legally sufficient only if, standing alone, it tends so to connect him. In giving this instruction the court seems to have had in mind the case of People v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449; but there the opinion merely lays down the indisputable rule that the evidence which, standing alone, is sufficient as tending to connect the defendant with the crime, need not be corroborative of the precise acts and facts related by the accomplice. But there is nothing in this case, nor in any other, which justifies the elimination from the instruction of the vital circumstance that the evidence, independently considered, must be sufficient for the purpose.

The court further instructed the jury "that the distinction between an accessory before the fact and the principal in case of a felony is abrogated, and all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or aided or abetted in its commission, though not present, shall be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals." As to this instruction, it is sufficient to say that it charges in the disjunctive that one who either aids or abets is guilty, when the language of the Penal Code (section 971), in consonance with justice, requires that one shall both aid and abet. This precise error has been recently considered in the case of People v. Dole, 55 Pac. 581.

The defendant presented to the court his motion that the judge of the department before which he was tried should transfer his cause to another department and to another judge, or should call in some other judge to sit in his place. The ground of the motion was the alleged bias and prejudice of the judge. The defendant supported his motion by his affidavit, stating that he could not have a fair and impartial trial before the judge, by reason of his prejudice and bias, and, upon information and belief, alleged facts tending to show that the judge had formed and expressed an opinion of the guilt of the defendant. No counter affidavits were filed, but the motion was denied. While at civil law the bias or prejudice of a judge against a litigant was a valid ground of recusal, as it was a valid ground of challenge against a juror, it was not so at common law; nor has it been so in this state, until the change effected by a recent amendment to the Code. People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 31. Section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1897, provides that no justice, judge, or justice of the peace shall sit or act as such in any action or proceeding: " * * * (4) When it appears from the affidavit or affidavits on file that either party cannot have a fair and impartial trial before any judge of a court of record about to try the case, by reason of the prejudice or bias of such judge, said judge shall forthwith secure the services of some other judge of the same or another county to preside at the trial of said action or proceeding." The section provides for the filing of counter affidavits, and that a party may have but one such change of judges. But, while this modification of the common-law rule is thus new to our state, we are not without like statutes, from other states. Indeed, as to justices of the peace, a somewhat similar provision has long been upon the statute books. It was found in section 582 of the practice act, and has been re-enacted in subdivision 2 of section 833 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The place of trial, where the action is commenced in a justice's court, must be changed when either party makes and files an affidavit that he believes that he cannot have a fair and impartial trial before such justice, by reason of the interest, prejudice, or bias of the justice. Under this law it has always been held that the filing of an affidavit in conformity with the provisions of the law makes it the duty of the judge to transfer the cause. People v. Hubbard, 22 Cal. 34. It seems to have been contemplated by the legislature, in framing the statute applicable to the justice's court, that the justice shall be relieved from the very delicate and trying duty of deciding upon the question of his own disqualification, and that the mere fact that a suitor in his court makes affidavit as to his belief that the justice is biased against him renders it imperative upon the justice to transfer the cause to some other disinterested officer. We should unhesitatingly say that this same salutary rule was in the mind of the legislature when it amended section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure by providing that the litigant shall have a new judge, or a transfer of his cause, "when it appears from the affidavit or affidavits on file that either party cannot have a fair and impartial trial, by reason of the bias or prejudice of the judge." But the succeeding portion of the amendment seems to militate against this view, for it is therein provided that counter affidavits may be filed. It would be useless to permit the filing of counter affidavits, unless they could be considered and weighed in determining the controverted fact of the judge's bias. But one thing, at least, is certainly clear,—that the provision contemplates that the question shall be determined upon affidavits, and that the facts found are to be found from the affidavits, and that the judge is neither to be called upon, nor to be permitted, to use his own knowledge of the matter. If in fact he knows himself not to be disqualified, it is not for him to deny the motion, if the contrary

"appears from the affidavit or affidavits on file." In this case the defendant brought himself within the letter and the meaning of the provision. He made it appear by the facts set up in his affidavit (however ill-founded the affidavit may have been in truth) that the judge was biased and prejudiced against him. No counter affidavits were filed. There was, then, not even a conflict upon the facts. The duty of the trial judge was plain. The defendant having made it appear by affidavit, in conformity with the requirements of the statute, that the judge was biased or prejudiced against him, his motion should have been granted. McGoon v. Little, 7 Ill. 42; Witter v. Taylor, 7 Ind. 110; Rines v. Boyd, 7 Wis. 155; Walsh v. Ray, 38 Ill. 30; Cass v. State, 2 G. Greene, 353; Griffin v. Leslie, 20 Md. 15; Mix v. Kepner, 81 Mo. 93. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

ADMINISTRATORS DE BONIS NON—DECEASED ADMINISTRATOR—FAILURE TO ACCOUNT—ACTION AGAINST BONDSMEN—PARTIES—JURISDICTION—SURETIES' LIABILITY—PRESUMPTION.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 1586, provides that an administrator may maintain an action in his own name for the benefit of the estate on the bond of a former administrator. Held that, under this statute, an administrator de bonis non was authorized to sue the bondsmen of a former deceased administrator to recover assets unaccounted for, though he could not do so at common law.

2. The superior court, as a court of equity, has jurisdiction of a suit by an administrator de bonis non to compel an accounting of assets of the estate not administered, against bondsmen of the former administrator.

3. In a suit against a deceased administrator's bondsmen for an accounting of goods not administered by him, it will be presumed that no administration has been issued on such administrator's estate, in the absence of an allegation to the contrary, under Civ. Code, § 3530, providing that what does not appear to exist must be regarded as if it did not exist.

4. Where an administrator dies without accounting for funds in his hands, suit for an accounting may be maintained against his bondsmen, without joining his personal representatives, under Code Civ. Proc. § 383, authorizing any or all sureties to be sued in the same action, at plaintiff's option.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Suit by Clara J. Slater, administratrix de bonis non of John Evoy, deceased, against H. B. McAvoy and others. From judgments sustaining demurrers to plaintiff's complaint, she appeals. Reversed.

E. Crisp, for appellant. J. R. Glascock and Fitzgerald & Abbott, for respondents.

BRITT, C. One Howard Shaw was administrator of the estate of John Evoy, deceased.

As such, he obtained leave of court to sell certain lands of the estate, and thereupon gave a bond required by the court, and provided by statute preliminary to exercising the authority to sell. Code Civ. Proc. § 1389. The defendants in this action became sureties in such bond,—which was executed in January, 1886,—and thereby obligated themselves severally, and also jointly with Shaw, that he, "as such administrator, shall faithfully execute the duties of his trust according to law." The sale was made, and afterwards, on April 17, 1888, Shaw rendered an account of his administration, showing that he had in his hands an unexpended balance of the proceeds of said sale amounting to $3,958, which account was, a few days later, allowed and settled by the court. On January 9, 1895, Shaw died, leaving the estate unadministered, and having never accounted further for the said balance held by him in April, 1888. Thereupon the plaintiff here was appointed administratrix of the estate of Evoy in his stead. The matters above stated appear, among other things, from the plaintiff's original complaint. The prayer was for judgment against defendants for said sum of $3,958, "or so much thereof as shall be unaccounted for," with interest, etc. Certain defendants demurred to the complaint, on the ground that it stated no cause of action, and the demurrers were sustained by the court. Judgments final were rendered for the demurrants severally, and plaintiff has appealed therefrom. There was an amended complaint served on one only of the defendants, to which a demurrer on the same ground as before was again sustained. All the respondents contend that the amended pleading added nothing to the force of the original, and we shall not notice it further.

"An administrator may, in his own name, for the use and benefit of all parties interested in the estate, maintain actions on the bond of an executor, or of any former administrator of the estate." Code Civ. Proc. § 1586. Under this statute, plaintiff has the right to proceed for the recovery of the assets described in her complaint, though at the common law she would have had no capacity to maintain the action. Woerner, Adm'n, §§ 351, 352, 536; Balch v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 158, 20 N. W. 124; Giles v. Brown, 60 Ga. 658. Now, it may be allowed that the complaint is insufficient to support a recovery of the balance of the money in the hands of Shaw on the settlement of his account in 1888, for the reason that it does not allege such settlement to have been final, or otherwise show that the defendants thereupon became liable for that precise sum, irrespective of the necessities of Shaw's further administration. But the complaint does show that Shaw remained accountable for that sum, and that he died without accounting for it. In this state of the case, jurisdiction to compel an accounting from the proper parties vested in the superior court, as a court of equity. Chaquette v.

Ortet, 60 Cal. 594; Bush v. Lindsay, 44 Cal. 125. The defendants are undoubtedly proper parties to a suit for such accounting. Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425. Compare Powell v. Powell, 48 Cal. 234. But they contend that, before suing them, plaintiff ought to have pursued the personal representative (administrator or executor) of Shaw, and have compelled from him a statement and settlement of Shaw's account; at least, that they cannot be brought to account without the presence of Shaw's representative as a party defendant. These objections are untenable. Defendants, as shown above, being proper parties to a suit in equity for a settlement of Shaw's account with the estate of Evoy, of course it cannot be necessary that the account be settled in some other forum or in some other action before proceeding against them. It is unnecessary to decide whether, if administration of the estate of Shaw had been granted, and the complaint so alleged, his executor or administrator would appear to be an indispensable party to this action, nor whether, if that proposition were ruled affirmatively, the demurrers of defendants, which do not go on the ground of any defect of parties, were sufficient to raise the question; for it does not appear from the complaint whether any executor or administrator of Shaw was ever appointed, or, indeed, that he left any estate to be administered. "That which does not appear to exist must be regarded as if it did not exist" (Civ. Code, § 3530); and we must assume that he has no personal representative who may be compelled to state his account with the estate of Evoy.

The case is, then, that defendants are severally liable as sureties on a bond conditioned for the performance of a trust undertaken by their principal, which included the duty to account. The principal is dead; there is no administration of his estate; and the account is unstated. It is provided by statute that parties severally liable upon an instrument, including sureties, may all or any of them be included in the same action at the option of the plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 383. Under these circumstances, the right of plaintiff to enforce, against defendants, an accounting of the transactions of their deceased principal, seems to us clear, both in reason and authority. In such a case the sureties are the proper parties to make the settlement. Tudhope v. Potts, 91 Mich. 490, 51 N. W. 1110; Same v. Avery, 106 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 969; Farrington v. Secor, 91 Iowa, 606, 60 N. W. 193; Fulgham v. Herstein, 77 Ala. 496; Moore v. Armstrong, 9 Port. 697; State v. Porter, 9 Ind. 342; Curtis v. Bailey, 1 Pick. 198; Woerner, Adm'n, § 352. See, also, People v. Jenkins, 17 Cal. 500; Com. v. McDonald, 170 Pa. St. 221, 32 Atl. 410; Martin v. Ellerbe's Adm'r, 70 Ala. 326. We have examined the several cases in this court cited by defendants, but do not find that they at all conflict with our conclusion. The judgments should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrers.

WHITNEY v. AMERICAN INS. CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1899.)

INSURANCE—PROOFS OF LOSS—CHANGE OF TITLE
—NOTICE—REINSURANCE.

1. A notice of a change of title may be given to the person who signed the policy as insurer's agent when the policy was issued, where insured had no knowledge that such person had ceased to be insurer's agent.

2. Under a clause, in a policy insuring a mortgagee, providing that the insurance should not be invalidated by the mortgagor's neglect, provided the mortgagee notified insurer of any change of ownership coming to his knowledge, and had permission for such change indorsed on the policy, a change of ownership to the mortgagee's knowledge does not invalidate the policy, if the change did not increase the risk, though he gave insurer no notice thereof, the provision respecting the giving of notice by him being merely directory.

3. An insured may make proofs of loss to one who had assumed insurer's liabilities, where insurer had authorized him to receive them, and had withdrawn all its own agencies from the state.

4. A contract of a company to pay losses under policies issued by another company as promptly as losses under its own policies is not a contract of reinsurance, under Civ. Code, § 2646 et seq., and hence the company is directly liable to the insured.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by A. L. Whitney against the American Insurance Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jas. A. Watt and John R. Aitken, for appellants. Mullany, Grant & Cushing, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action upon a fire insurance policy, in which the loss is payable to the plaintiff, as mortgagee of the land upon which the building insured was situated. Judgment was for plaintiff in the superior court, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal.

There is no charge of fraud or of any misconduct by the respondent which was material to the risk, and there is no apparent reason on the face of the record why, upon principles of justice and fair dealing, the loss should not have been paid. Appellants contend that they are shielded from payment by certain asserted legal defenses. These asserted defenses are substantially as follows:

First, that before the fire there was a transfer of the title of the property insured, without notice thereof to appellants; second, that proofs of loss were not made to the proper party; and, third, that the Northwestern National Insurance Company was a mere reinsurer of the American Insurance Company, that there was no privity of contract between the respondent and the Northwestern, and that, therefore, respondent was not entitled to judgment against the Northwestern Company. We do not think that either of these grounds for a reversal is tenable.

1. The policy in question was issued by the appellant the American Insurance Company on September 6, 1893. (For convenience, we will call one of the appellants the "American," and the other the "Northwestern.") The premises insured were situated in Los Angeles, Cal. At the time of the issuance of the policy the legal title to the land was in James E. Gordon, who had purchased it from J. F. Sullivan, a resident of San Francisco. The amount of the policy was $1,000, and at this date the respondent held a mortgage on the premises, executed by said Sullivan, for a greater amount than $1,000; and the loss, if any should occur, was made payable to the respondent, as mortgagee. There was a mortgage clause in the policy, which provided "that this insurance, as to the interest of the mortgagee or trustee only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured, or by the occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by the terms of this policy: * * * provided, also, that the mortgagee or trustee shall notify this company of any change of ownership or increase of hazard which shall come to his or their knowledge, and shall have permission for such change of ownership or increase of hazard duly indorsed on this policy." There was no provision that a failure by the mortgagee to give such notice should avoid the policy. In December, 1893, Gordon conveyed the property back to Sullivan, and assigned the policy to him, and this transfer and assignment were approved by the company. On May 19, 1894, the building insured was destroyed by fire. A short time prior to that event, to wit, on the 9th of May, 1894, one Beach, who was a tenant occupying the premises insured, had some negotiations with Sullivan, in San Francisco, looking to an exchange of some of his property with Sullivan for the insured property at Los Angeles; and, as a result of those negotiations, Beach requested Sullivan to make a deed of the insured premises to one Taylor, who lived at Los Angeles. Beach expected that Taylor would accept a deed of these premises in satisfaction of certain claims which Taylor had against Beach. Sullivan executed the deed to Taylor, and Beach sent it to the county recorder at Los Angeles, who recorded it; but Taylor repudiated the transaction, and refused to accept the deed. A day or two afterwards, Sullivan wrote to the respondent that he had made the deed to Taylor. Thereupon the respondent looked over the records in Los Angeles, and could not find that any such deed had been recorded. Respondent informed J. K. Mulkey, who was the agent of the American Company at the date of the issuance of the policy, and who signed the policy as such agent, and who respondent had every reason to believe was still the agent of such company, of the letter which he had received from Sullivan about the sale of the premises to Taylor; and Mulkey told the respondent that he thought no change would be advisable, as there was no evidence of the actual transfer. Mulkey had also received a notice from Beach that the property had been deeded to Taylor. Under these circumstances, we see no reason whatever for holding that the policy had been forfeited on account of respondent's conduct with respect to notice of the transfer. Owing to the refusal of Taylor to accept the deed, it is doubtful if any transfer of the title ever took place, although it is not necessary to absolutely determine that point. Respondent, at all events, gave all the notice which he could be fairly expected to have given. The provision in the policy that respondent should inform the insurance company of such transfer of the property as should come to his knowledge is only directory, and his failure to do so is not declared to be such a violation of the policy as would avoid it; and his failure to give such notice would have been material only where it would have caused prejudice or increased risk to the insurance company, and there is no pretense of such a thing here. It may be observed, as appellant seems to attach some importance to the fact, that, although Beach held a general power of attorney from Taylor, the transaction between Beach and Sullivan was one which Beach entered into on his own behalf, and not in his capacity as attorney in fact for Taylor.

2. On the next day after the fire, respondent called on said Mulkey, as agent of the American Company, and informed him of the fire. Thereupon, for the first time, Mulkey stated that he was no longer agent of said company, that said company's policies on this coast had been assumed by the Northwestern Company, and that Betts & Silent, of Los Angeles, were the agents. Soon afterwards Mr. T. A. Nerney sought out the respondent, and informed him that he was the agent and adjuster of the Northwestern, and took him to the office of Betts & Silent, and there prepared and caused proof of loss to be made in due form, which proof of loss he sent to George W. Turner, at San Francisco, who was the general agent for the Northwestern; and he (Nerney) assured respondent that the money due for the loss by fire would be paid. It is a fact that Nerney was the agent and adjuster of the Northwestern at Los Angeles, and that Turner was the general agent of the Northwestern. The American and Northwestern were both foreign corporations. These further facts appear: In March, 1894, a written contract was entered into between the American and the Northwestern, by which, in consideration of certain money and property given by the former to the latter, and in consideration of the payment by the American to the Northwestern of certain pro rata unearned premiums under each and every policy of the American in force in certain states and territories, including California, the Northwestern assumed all the liabilities of the American upon all its policies, among which it is admitted the policy in question in this action was included. By that contract the Northwestern covenanted that it "will make as prompt adjustments and payments of loss, if any, under any and all of its policies of the said American Insurance Company, as it would under its own policies, if issued direct to said assurer." Thereafter all the agencies of the American Company in California were revoked, and the Northwestern took the entire control and management of all matters arising out of said policies, and the adjustment of losses in cases of fire, and the American practically disappeared from the business. Several years before that, the American Company had filed in the office of the insurance commissioner of this state a designation of one Ed. E. Potter as its agent; but, a few days after the fire, Sullivan went to see Potter, who informed him that he was no longer agent of the American, except perhaps for the purpose of settling with the Northwestern Company. The proofs of loss above referred to were made within five days after the fire, and were directed formally to the American Company, but were sent, as above stated, to Turner. Turner testified that, after the contract between the Northwestern and the American above noticed, "I had charge of the business covered by that contract, including the risk of policy sued for here, and now before this court." He also testified that Nerney was the agent of the Northwestern, and had charge at Los Angeles, and that, "as to this policy sued on, I began to handle it about a week or ten days after the fire. Just as soon as I received the proof of loss from Mr. Nerney, I went to work on the subject, and called on Mr. Sullivan." He further testified that "Mr. Potter had called in all the agencies of the American Insurance Company before the fire occurred for the loss for which this action is prosecuted," and that the Northwestern, "through its agents and under my general agency, had been attending to the affairs under the policies of insurance issued by the American Insurance Company's agents under this agreement since about April 1, 1894, and it was under that agreement, and in the duty and in the pursuance of the duties which were assumed under that agreement, that I went to see Dr. Sullivan in regard to this policy; and Mr. Nerney attended to the taking of the proofs of loss on behalf of the American Insurance Company in Los Angeles from A. L. Whitney, the plaintiff herein. I, as agent of the Northwestern National Insurance Company, had authority to receive the proofs of loss under this policy of the American Insurance Company. I am aware that the fire occurred on May 19 or 20, 1894, under the policy sued on in this action." But, after Turner "began to handle" the matter, he learned from Sullivan that the latter had made a deed to Taylor, Sullivan supposing at that time that the title had passed from him to Taylor through the deed which he had executed to the latter; and thereafter Turner returned the proofs of loss, and the defenses set up in this case seem to have been determined upon. We have stated these facts somewhat fully here, because they are applicable to the third point made by the appellants. Upon these facts, we think that the proofs of loss were properly made.

3. Appellants have argued the third point as though the contract above referred to between the two insurance companies, and their subsequent action carrying it out, amounted to nothing more than the dry, naked contract of reinsurance, under section 2646 et seq. of the Civil Code. But the facts hereinbefore stated show a contract much broader than a mere technical reinsurance. The Northwestern, under the situation here shown, was directly liable to the plaintiff, upon the principle declared and illustrated in Morgan v. Mining Co., 37 Cal. 534; Flint v. Cadenasso, 64 Cal. 83, 28 Pac. 62; Lockwood v. Canfield, 20 Cal. 126; Arnold v. Lyman, 17 Mass. 400. As was said in Morgan v. Mining Co., supra, "the companies agreed, and the plaintiff manifests his assent by bringing the action." In Arnold v. Lyman, supra, the court said: "The promise being not to Hutchins expressly, but general in its form, the assent of the creditors made them parties to the promise; and this assent is sufficiently proved, as respects the plaintiffs, by their bringing an action upon the contract." "The law creates the privity necessary" for the maintenance of this action.

Appellants make some points as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify some of the findings; but the findings attacked are either unimportant, under the views above expressed, or the objections thereto have been substantially noticed above. The finding which is most objected to is the one to the effect that Sullivan remained the owner of the property; but, as hereinbefore stated, that matter is unimportant. The finding "that plaintiff has duly performed all the conditions and covenants on his part to be performed under said policy of insurance" is fully sustained by the evidence as hereinbefore stated. The other objections to the findings are unimportant and immaterial. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

GEORGE v. MATONNI et al. (S. F. 883.)
(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1899.)

PLEDGE—STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

A pledge of personal property is invalid as against the pledgor's creditors, where no delivery is made, and no actual, open, and unequivocal possession is taken.

In bank. On rehearing. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 55 Pac. 775.

GAROUTTE, J. In view of the citation of a number of new cases in the petition for a rehearing, wherein it is claimed that the law is so declared that, under the facts of the present case, the conclusion of the department is wrong as to the insufficiency of the actual and continued change of possession of the cows involved in this litigation, the following is submitted:

In Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, the court said as to the true construction of this provision of the statute of frauds: "A delivery must be made of the property. The vendee must take the actual possession. That possession must be open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership by the vendee. It must be such as to give evidence to the world of the claims of the new owner. He must, in other words, be in the usual relation to the property which owners of goods occupy to their property. This possession must be continuous,—not taken to be surrendered back again; not formal, but substantial." This has been the law from that day to this day, unquestioned and unchallenged by bench or bar. Hundreds of cases have stood or fallen tested by this canon of construction. In Rothschild v. Swope, 116 Cal. 678, 48 Pac. 911, we find the statement: "This court, thirty-seven years ago, in Stevens v. Irwin, supra, gave an interpretation to the statute which has stood unassailed ever since." That case is immediately preceded by Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 48, 46 Pac. 892, and Byxbee v. Dewey (Cal.) 47 Pac. 52, where Stevens v. Irwin is cited and approved. Indeed, at every milestone in the long road leading from volume 15 of the California Reports to volume 121, some case may be found indorsing, either by title or in principle, the doctrine of Stevens v. Irwin upon the sufficient delivery of personal property as against the claims of attaching creditors. As illustrative of these cases, we cite Engles v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 329; Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 201; Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316; Woods v. Bugbey, 29 Cal. 472; Hesthal v. Myles, 53 Cal. 624; Bell v. McClellan, 67 Cal. 283, 7 Pac. 699; Kelly v. Murphy, 70 Cal. 563, 12 Pac. 467; Bunting v. Saltz, 84 Cal. 172, 24 Pac. 167; Etchepare v. Aguirre, 91 Cal. 295, 27 Pac. 668; Murphy v. Mulgrew, 102 Cal. 547, 36 Pac. 857. Upon an examination of the aforesaid authorities, it will be found that the law of Stevens v. Irwin stands impregnable and unassailable. In some exceptional cases presenting hard law, the court, in its construction and interpretation of the facts, may have leaned a little too far towards the administration of substantial justice; but beyond this it has never gone, and the law of this question stands to-day exactly as it did 38 years ago.

POPPER v. BRODERICK, County Auditor.
(S. F. 1006.)<sup>1</sup>

MUNICIPALITIES—ORGANIZATION—CONTROL—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended in 1895, authorizes cities theretofore organized to organize under the general laws, and provides that cities theretofore or thereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of the constitution, except "in municipal affairs," shall be controlled by general laws. Act March 8, 1897, regulates salaries of firemen and policemen in cities of the first class. Held, that the act relating to municipal affairs did not apply to the county and city of San Francisco, which did not incorporate as authorized by the constitution, but under private charter.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Max Popper against William Broderick, as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, and from a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Raymond Robins, for appellant. Garber & Garber and G. W. McEnerney, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. At the session of the legislature in 1897, an act was passed, approved March 8th, to regulate the salaries of certain officers of the police department within municipalities of the first class, as follows: "In every municipality of the first class in this state, salaries shall be allowed and paid to the following officers of the police department of such municipality, as in this act provided: To the chief of police, five thousand dollars per annum; to the captain of detectives of the police department, three thousand dollars per annum; to six (6) captains of police, twenty-five hundred dollars per annum each; to the clerk of the chief of police, and board of police commissioners, twenty-five hundred dollars per annum; to the property clerk of the police department, twenty-five hundred dollars per annum; to fifteen (15) police officers, who shall be known and designated as detectives, detailed as such by the chief of police, of the police department of such municipality, to perform detective duty, one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum each. * * * All of the salaries provided for in this act shall be paid at the same time and in the same manner, and out of the same fund as they have been paid to members of the police department prior to the passage of this act." By another act relating to fire departments of municipalities of the first class, approved March 3d, it is declared: "In municipalities of the first class the following officers of its fire department shall receive the following salaries: Chief engineer, five thousand dollars; assistant chief engineer, three thousand six hundred dollars; secretary, or clerk, three thousand dollars; assistant engineers, two thousand one hundred dollars each; veterinary surgeon, one thousand eight hundred dollars. Said salaries shall be paid in the same manner as is now provided by law." St. 1897, pp. 54-72. Said acts, by their terms, were to take effect immediately.

On the 30th of March following, this action was brought, for the purpose of enjoining the defendant, as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, from auditing or paying these increased salaries. The complaint, after setting forth in substance the provisions of these two acts, alleges that the salary payable to each of such officers in the city and county of San Francisco is as follows: "President of the board of police commissioners, two hundred and fifty dollars per month; police commissioners, one hundred dollars per month; chief of police, four thousand dollars per annum; captains of police, one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month; clerk of chief of police and board of police commissioners, one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month; chief engineer of fire department, two hundred and fifty dollars per month; assistant chief engineer, two hundred dollars per month; assistant engineers, one hundred and fifty dollars per month; clerk, one hundred and fifty dollars per month; veterinary surgeon, sixty dollars per month." It is further averred in the complaint that the defendant, as the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, is determined to, and will, audit the demands of the said officials of the fire and police departments of said city and county of San Francisco for the increased amount of their several salaries alleged to be authorized by said acts of the legislature before mentioned, and that such determination by the said auditor is set forth in the communication from said defendant auditor to said plaintiff, in the words and figures following: "Auditor's Office, City and County of San Francisco, City Hall, San Francisco, March 26, 1897. Max Popper, Esq.: In answer to yours of March 24th, wherein you say that you believe the bills passed by the legislature increasing the salary of certain police and fire department officials are unconstitutional, and you desire to know if it is my purpose to audit demands based thereon, I beg to say that from inquiry I am informed that the governor, before signing said bills, gave the question of their constitutionality careful consideration, and, unless prevented by process of law, I purpose to audit the demands on the 31st of March, as all other demands for salary will be. Respectfully yours, [Signed] W. Broderick." Plaintiff further avers that the defendant threatens to, and will, unless restrained by the order of the court, proceed to audit and authorize payment from the treasury of said city and county of San Francisco of said alleged increase of salaries of said officials of the police and fire departments of said city and county, a large sum of money, to wit, $5,000, on the 31st day of March, 1897; and the plaintiff further avers that the defendant, unless restrained, will audit and authorize the payment from the treasury of the said city and county of San Francisco, after said 31st day of March, from time to time, large sums of money, to wit, $5,000 monthly, to pay such alleged increase of salaries of such officers of the police and fire departments of said city and county of San Francisco, amounting in all to a large sum of money annually, to wit, $60,000, all of which expenditures are unnecessary and illegal, and will be, if permitted to be made, a charge against the city and county of San Francisco, and a burden on the plaintiff and all taxpayers therein. To this complaint a general demurrer was interposed. The court below denied the plaintiff's motion for an injunction, sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the action. From such judgment and order the case comes to this court on appeal. In this court the cause was, by stipulation, submitted on briefs, and the last brief of counsel was only filed December 28, 1898.

The legislation here in question, raising the salaries of certain officers of the police and fire departments of the city and county of San Francisco, is sought to be sustained on two grounds: First. That section 6 of article 11 of the state constitution does not apply to the city and county of San Francisco; secondly, that such acts or laws complained of do not fall within the class of prohibited legislation, under the terms of section 6 as amended in 1895.

Respondent's counsel embody in their brief the opinion of the court below, filed there in this case, from which it appears that the learned judge who tried the case relied upon respondent's first proposition. He says: "My conclusion is that the legislature has, since the adoption of the amendment of section 6 of article 11 of the constitution, the same power, by means of general laws, to control cities which have not framed and adopted a charter as it had before." Section 6 of article 11 of the constitution, containing the amendment proposed at the session of the legislature of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 450), and adopted by the people at the ensuing election of 1896,—the amended portion being in italics,—reads as follows: "Sec. 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." While this case has been pending here on appeal, this court, sitting in bank, expressly held, in Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644, that the clause or portion of section 6 of the constitution containing the inserted amendment does apply to the city and county of San Francisco. In that case an order or ordinance of the board of supervisors of said city and county was challenged as being illegal, on the ground, among others, that the said order or ordinance lacked the signature of the mayor of said city. Such signature of the mayor in terms was required by the provisions of the act of the legislature of 1897 entitled "An act to require ordinances and resolutions passed by the city council or other legislative body of any municipality to be presented to the mayor or chief executive officer of such municipality for his approval." St. 1897, p. 190. Continuing, this court say: "Prior to the passage of this act it was not required. Truman v. Board, 110 Cal. 128, 42 Pac. 421. But before this act it had been believed by the legislature and by the people that it would be wiser to relieve charters of cities from the operation of general laws affecting municipal affairs, lest otherwise there would be danger of the charter provisions being entirely 'frittered away.' In accordance with this belief, an amendment to the constitution was adopted in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 450), providing that 'cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.' * * * The act of 1897 unquestionably deals with a municipal affair,—the mode and manner of the passage of ordinances and resolutions provided for in the charter. Under this constitutional amendment, such acts now apply only to cities and to their charters which have organized under the general scheme embraced in the municipal corporation act. St. 1883, p. 93. San Francisco is not one of such cities, and the act of 1897 has therefore no application to it."

Does the salary or pay of firemen and policemen belong to "municipal affairs"? If so, then these acts of the legislature attempting to raise and fix such salaries have no more force in the city and county of San Francisco than the act of the said session requiring the signature of the mayor to ordinances and resolutions; and in Morton v. Broderick it was held that such act had no binding force in said city and county, for the reason that it concerned municipal affairs, and therefore fell within the prohibition against such legislation. The government of the city and county of San Francisco may be said to be dual in its nature; and in Kahn v. Sutro, 114 Cal. 316, 46 Pac. 87, this court distinguished and classified officers that were county and officers that were municipal; and the officers of the police and fire departments are designated as peculiarly and distinctively municipal officers. It may be taken as a matter of law that the people, in adopting the constitutional amendment under consideration at the election of 1896, did so in view of this definition of municipal affairs, as distinguished from county affairs, so decided in that case. The purpose of the amendment is apparent. It was to prevent the constant tampering with matters which concern only or chiefly the municipality, under the guise of laws general in form. "The fundamental purpose in construing a constitutional provision is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the people in adopting it." 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 921. "Generally, it may be said that experience has shown the necessity of organic provisions more exactly defining and limiting the power of the legislature to enact laws which affect the local and private or distinctly corporate rights of chartered cities, and which involve expenditures of money, the creation of debts, and consequent pecuniary burdens, without the consent or against the will of the local authorities of the municipality, or the people thereof." Again: "In many of its more important aspects, a modern American city is not so much a miniature state as it is a business corporation; its business being to wisely administer the local affairs, and economically to expend the revenues of the incorporated community. As we learn this lesson, and apply business methods to the scheme of municipal government and to the conduct of municipal affairs, we are on the right road to better and more satisfactory results." Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) §§ 12a, 15. We are not unmindful of the rule that gives to legislative acts the presumption of validity. At the same time, we are not to overlook the fact that the legislature is a co-ordinate department of the state government, and, like the other departments, its powers are limited and circumscribed by the constitution. In this respect our state legislatures are materially unlike the parliament of Great Britain, from which country our common law and many of our precedents are derived. That body neither owes its existence to a written constitution, nor is it limited or controlled by one. But, notwithstanding the presumption in favor of legislative acts, whenever the constitutional limits are crossed the acts of the legislature, as to such matters, are void, and what is written, although in form of law, is merely waste paper. We are of opinion that the pay of firemen and policemen clearly falls within the term "municipal affairs." Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

CRIMINAL LAW—REVIEW—VERDICT—EVIDENCE—RAPE—CONTINUANCE—JURY—PEREMP-TORY CHALLENGES.

1. The supreme court's appellate jurisdiction is limited to matters of law alone, hence a verdict of guilty, supported by the evidence of the prosecuting witness, cannot be disturbed, unless such evidence is so incredible and false on its face that the court would deal with it as a matter of law.

2. Where a defendant neglected to apply for a continuance of a criminal case, on the ground of the illness of a material witness, until after the jury was impaneled, and then requested a continuance for two months, it was properly refused.

3. Pen. Code, § 1070, provides that, if the offense charged be punishable with death or life imprisonment, defendant is entitled to 20 and the state to 10 peremptory challenges; and section 671 authorizes the court to sentence a defendant convicted of rape to imprisonment for life. Held that, on a trial for rape, defendant was limited to 10 peremptory challenges.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tuolumne county.

James Logan was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Curtin and J. C. Webster, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant has been convicted of the crime of rape, and now appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is first claimed that the evidence is too weak to support the verdict of the jury. If the evidence of the prosecuting witness be true, the verdict has full support therein, and its truth or falsity was a matter essentially for the jury's consideration. In criminal cases this court's appellate jurisdiction is limited to matters of law alone, and the truth or falsity of a witness' statement is essentially a matter of fact. It is possible that evidence might come before this court so incredible, so inherently improbable, so stamped with falsehood upon its face, that the court would deal with it as presenting a matter of law. But such a case would be a most exceptional one, and it is not presented by this record, although it may be said that the circumstances and conditions enveloping and forming the res gestæ of this particular offense are unusual, and not entirely convincing.

The prosecuting witness, a large, strong girl of 14 years of age, testified that she was sleeping with the wife of the defendant at the time she was raped. After the jury was impaneled, and before any evidence was introduced, defendant's counsel asked for a continuance upon the ground that Mrs. Logan, the wife, was sick and unable to be present at the trial. It further appeared by the showing that probably the witness would be sick and unable to testify for the period of two months. If this application had been made before the jury was impaneled to try the case, we have no doubt but that the trial court would have granted it; and, in view of the importance of her testimony, it would have been an abuse of discretion upon the part of that court if it had not been granted. Defendant's counsel should have known the condition of their witness before the jury was impaneled, and should have made their showing at that time. If a continuance of one, two, or even three days, under the present showing, would have enabled the defendant to have secured the presence of this witness at the trial, the court should have granted that time, in view of the importance of her evidence; but here a continuance of two months was asked. Possibly, the jury might have been discharged, and the case again placed upon the trial calendar; but to continue a case for two months, and allow the jurors selected to hear the evidence and render the verdict to roam at large during that long period of time, cannot be countenanced in law. Such an order upon the part of the court would have been reversible error. People v. Dinsmore, 102 Cal. 381, 36 Pac. 661. On the other hand, if the jury had been discharged, and a second trial begun at some subsequent time, the question of once in jeopardy might have presented difficulty. Under these peculiar circumstances, we conclude the court was justified in refusing the continuance.

It is next claimed that the defendant was entitled, under the law, to 20 peremptory challenges, and was only allowed 10. When we consider the fact that section 671 of the Penal Code gives to the court authority to sentence a defendant to imprisonment for life upon conviction of the crime of rape, there seems much force in appellant's position. And, if the question of the construction of the statute pertaining to the number of peremptory challenges to which a defendant convicted of rape is entitled were now before us for the first time, the court might probably agree with defendant's contention. But this is not a new question, and the authorities of this state are the other way. People v. Clough, 59 Cal. 438; People v. Riley, 65 Cal. 107, 3 Pac. 413; People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 259, 41 Pac. 1040. We feel that the law had best stand as it has been heretofore announced.

There is no merit in the remaining contentions of the appellant. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

2. In an action against a railway company for killing deceased at a crossing, it is error to instruct that the plaintiff must establish that "defendant had no knowledge" that the crossing was out of repair, and that such absence of knowledge, if any, was not due to defendant's negligence in examining the crossing.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Mary Heckle against the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Campbell, for appellant. Delmas & Shortridge, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action is brought by a mother to recover damages for the death of her son, who was killed by an accident on the railroad of the defendant. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, but the trial court made an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and the defendant appealed from that order. The motion for a new trial was made upon three grounds: First, that the court erred in sustaining defendant's objection to a certain question asked of the witness W. G. Dudley; second, that the court erred in giving a certain instruction to the jury; and, third, that the court erred in giving a certain other instruction.

1. Dudley was a witness for the plaintiff, and the questions asked him to which objections were sustained related to what Heckle, the deceased, told the witness at the time of the accident. He was asked this question: "At that time did he say anything to you?" and, also, "What did Heckle say to you? What did he say as to the cause of the accident?" It is contended by respondent that these questions were proper, because they were inquiries about declarations which were part of the res gestæ, and defendant claims that they were not admissible as part of the res gestæ. The court concluded that it had erred in sustaining objections to the questions, and the question here now is whether or not the court erred in granting a new trial for that reason. There is no great difficulty in stating the general principles which prevail in determining whether, in a given case, certain declarations or acts are parts of the res gestæ. A declaration, to be admissible on that ground, must be an undesigned part or incident of the occurrence in question. It must be, in a general sense, contemporaneous with the main occurrence; although, in case of a sudden accident or attack, the declaration would not be inadmissible merely because the blow or collision immediately preceded it. It must be the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the main occurrence, and must exclude the notion of deliberation or calculation, or the design to manufacture evidence for future purposes; and, if it be a mere narrative of past events, it then is clearly within the category of inadmissible hearsay, and must, beyond doubt, be excluded. The authorities cited by respective counsel, although apparently somewhat in conflict, will be found, on close inspection, to be based on the same general principle; and their apparent restrictions and extensions of the rule will be found, in the main, to be mere applications of the same doctrine to varying facts. The difficult task always is to apply established principles to the facts of the case in hand. In the case at bar we do not think that the court erred in holding that it should have overruled the objections to the questions asked. The evidence contained in the record makes rather a meager showing of the exact situation at the time of the declarations of the deceased, Heckle, to which the questions asked Dudley referred. It appears, however, that the deceased had been caught under a wheel of one of the cars, and was still under the wheel (held there firmly by the weight of the car) at the time he made the declarations sought to be introduced in evidence. It might be very well said, therefore, that the accident had not been completed, and the occurrence had not ended, at the time of the declarations inquired after. And it does not appear with any certainty how long it was after the deceased had been first caught by the car wheel until he had the conversation with Dudley, but it does appear that the time was very short. Dudley heard the cry of the deceased, and went to him immediately; and it appears that he ran only a short distance, to warn the conductor not to start the train, and immediately ran back to the deceased, when the declarations sought to be proven were made. It is possible that this time was so long that the declarations of the deceased, although he was still under the car wheel, may have been of the character of a narrative of past events; and it may have been that the declarations themselves, if they had been received in evidence, would have shown that they were a mere narrative, and it is possible that they may have been of such a character that it would have been the duty of the court to have stricken them out. Therefore, what we say here would be no guide to the court below, if, upon another trial, the facts should be more fully shown, and it should then appear that the declarations should not be received as part of the res gestæ. But, upon the facts as they here appear, answers to the questions ruled out might have been perfectly proper. We think, therefore, that the court erred in refusing to allow any answer to the questions asked, and did not err in granting a new trial for that reason.

2. As to the two instructions complained of by respondent as erroneous, the point is made by appellant that no exception was properly taken to the giving of said instructions. Before the jury retired, a colloquy took place between the court and counsel on both sides. Respondent claims that this colloquy constituted an exception to the giving of the instructions, and appellant contends that the effect of that colloquy was merely to give to respondent a right to take exceptions which he did not take. As the order must be affirmed on the point hereinbefore discussed, it is not necessary for us to determine whether or not the proper exceptions were taken to the two instructions. But, as the case will probably be retried, it is proper for us to say that both instructions were erroneous. The first instruction complained of, or at least that part of it which is material, is as follows: "Before you can find a verdict for the plaintiff, you must find that the plaintiff has established by a preponderance of all the evidence in the case * * *. Fourth. That the defendant had no knowledge or notice that said crossing was out of repair, and that such absence of knowledge, if any, was not due to defendant's neglect in the matter of examining the crossing." Of course, if the plaintiff were compelled to prove this, she would have to prove that she had no case. Appellant contends that the word "no" before "knowledge" was a mere clerical mistake; but, if the word "no" were left out, the sentence would either have no meaning at all, or would be just as bad as it was before. By the other instruction complained of, the jury were told that the plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of evidence that the deceased was free from contributory negligence, which is not the law. The order appealed from is affirmed.

LINGARD et al. v. BETA THETA PI HALL ASS'N et al. (S. F. 832.)

MECHANIC'S LIENS—PLEADING—ADMISSION.

In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the complaint alleged the date of the completion of the building, and that the lien was filed on April 6, 1894, within 30 days thereafter. The answer denied "that within thirty days from and after the completion of said building, to wit, upon the 6th day of April, 1894, or at any other time, or at all," plaintiffs filed their claim of lien, containing a statement of their demand. Held, that the answer was but a denial of the time of filing the notice of lien, and of its sufficiency, and admitted the allegation of the time when the building was completed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by one Lingard and others against the Beta Theta Pi Hall Association and others to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Garber, Boalt & Bishop and Wm. H. Jordan, for appellants. Thomas F. Graber, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. The only point urged in support of the appeal is that the notice of a claim of lien was not filed in the recorder's office within 30 days after the completion of the building. It is alleged in the complaint that the building was completed on the 13th of March, 1894, and this allegation is not denied. It is also alleged that within 30 days of the completion of said building, to wit, on the 6th day of April, 1894, the plaintiffs filed for record their claim of lien, setting forth its contents. In their answer the defendants "deny that within thirty days from and after the completion of said building, to wit, upon the 6th day of April, 1894, or at any other time, or at all, plaintiffs did file for record their or any claim of lien, containing a statement of their demand," etc. This was but a denial of the time of filing the notice of lien, and of the sufficiency of its contents to create a lien, and cannot be construed as a denial of the allegation in the complaint of the time when the building was completed. This allegation must therefore be accepted as an admission upon the record of the date when the building was completed, and, as the court would not have been authorized to make a finding contrary to this admission, it is unnecessary to determine whether the evidence before it was sufficient to sustain its finding. The court finds that the notice of lien was filed on the 6th day of April, 1894, and the correctness of this finding is not disputed. The judgment and order are affirmed.

WARD v. YORBA. (L. A. 372.)

CONTRACT—REFORMATION—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONSIDERATION.

1. Plaintiff, seeking to reform a contract for the purchase of property, alleged that by mistake it was drawn so as to require a conveyance of the "property," whereas the agreement was for the conveyance of an "interest." Plaintiff proposed to sell only an interest, and his proposition was communicated to defendant's attorney, and assented to by him, but was not communicated to defendant. The attorney only represented defendant in reference to a contract to be made, and not in making a contract, and defendant's only offer was to purchase the property. Held insufficient to authorize a reformation of the instrument.

2. Plaintiff entered into an agreement with defendant for conveyance of land, title to which had been in L. Defendant had instituted suit against L., attached the property, and obtained a judgment, under which the land was sold to him. Previous to such judgment, another judgment was obtained in a pending suit against L., under which the property was sold, and plaintiff acquired title. Held that, as defendant's judgment related back to the date of the attachment, his was the prior lien, and, as plaintiff failed to redeem, he lost whatever interest he acquired; hence the agreement was without consideration.

3. Under Civ. Code, § 3391, specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract, if he has not received an adequate consideration.

Garontte and McFarland, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. For opinion in department, see 54 Pac. 80.

HARRISON, J. The parties hereto entered into an agreement in writing February 24, 1893, by which the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant, for the sum of $4,750, certain property in the city of Los Angeles, and the defendant agreed to buy the same, and pay said sum of money within 30 days thereafter. The circumstances leading up to this agreement are as follows, viz.: The title to the property in question was originally in Francisca D. de Labracco, and in an action by Yorba, the defendant herein, against Labracco, the property was attached March 5, 1892, and judgment was rendered in his favor April 20, 1892. Execution was issued upon this judgment July 10, 1892, and on August 20th the property was sold by the sheriff to Yorba. Prior to March, 1892, an action had been commenced against Labracco by one Bacon, in which a judgment was docketed against Labracco March 31, 1892, and under this judgment the property was sold to one Jarvis, and a sheriff's deed issued to him January 27, 1893. Jarvis immediately took possession of the property, and on January 30, 1893, conveyed the same to Ward, the plaintiff herein. By this conveyance the plaintiff became at its date vested with Labracco's title to the property, subject to whatever rights Yorba had acquired therein by the attachment and subsequent proceedings in his action against Labracco. Prior to February 24th negotiations on behalf of the plaintiff and defendant had been had for an adjustment of their claims to the property, and on the morning of that day Mr. Munday, as attorney for Yorba, and in company with him, visited the office of Mr. Meserve for the purpose of completing the negotiations and purchasing the property from Ward. Munday had previously advised Yorba that Ward's claim was superior to his own, and that his best course was to buy the property; but he saw on that morning that he was mistaken, and it was also conceded by Meserve, after an examination of the abstract, that Yorba's claim was paramount to that of Ward. As a result of the negotiations upon that morning an instrument setting forth the above agreement was prepared and signed by the plaintiff and the defendant. Before the expiration of the 30 days, Yorba was advised that he was not bound to carry out the contract, and gave to the plaintiff a notice of rescission, and afterwards declined to make the payment provided in the instrument. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present action. In his complaint he alleges that the written instrument does not express the actual agreement which was made, and that, by a mistake of the scrivener, it is drawn so as to require a conveyance of the property, whereas the agreement itself was for a purchase and transfer of merely his right, title, and interest therein; and he asks that the instrument be reformed accordingly, and that he have judgment against the defendant for its performance as so reformed. The court found in favor of this claim, and rendered judgment accordingly. This finding and the judgment thereon are assigned by the defendant as error.

1. The plaintiff was not entitled to have the instrument reformed as he had asked, unless he should show by satisfactory evidence that the agreement between him and the defendant was as he had alleged, and was so understood by both the defendant and himself when they signed the instrument. The court could not make a new contract for the parties, but could only cause their actual agreement to be expressed according to its terms; nor could it reform the instrument according to the terms in which Ward understood it, unless it should be shown that Yorba also had the same understanding of its terms. The terms of the written instrument which they signed would prevail over their previous negotiations, unless it should be shown that, by reason of a mutual mistake, it did not express their actual agreement. At the time the instrument in question was signed, Ward was represented by Mr. Meserve as his attorney, and was himself in an adjoining office, and Yorba was represented by Mr. Munday. Yorba could neither speak nor understand English, and the negotiations for the purchase were in fact conducted between Meserve and Munday; Meserve consulting with Ward from time to time, and Munday communicating with Yorba through an interpreter. There is evidence in the record that Ward proposed to sell only his interest in the land, and that this proposition was communicated to Munday, and was assented to by him; but it does not appear that the proposition was communicated by Munday to Yorba, or that it was agreed to by the latter. Munday was Yorba's attorney for the purpose of advising him in reference to the contract to be made, but he did not represent him for the purpose of making the contract. He had no authority from Yorba to make a contract for him, and evidence of his agreement with Ward to purchase his "interest" in the land would not bind Yorba, unless Yorba himself assented thereto. Munday had advised Yorba that he must either buy the property from Ward, or have a lawsuit on his hands, and Meserve testified that they came to his office that morning "with the proposition to buy and close out this property." While there, Yorba authorized Munday to offer $4,500 "for the property," and, after making this offer, it was increased by Munday to $4,750. Neither Meserve nor Ward had any direct communication with Yorba, and there is no evidence that a proposition for the purchase by Yorba of Ward's "interest" in the land, as distinguished from a purchase of the land itself, was ever communicated to him. On the other hand, Yorba and Sanchez, the interpreter, both testified that the negotiations on the 24th, and the offer by Yorba, were for a purchase of the "property." In seeking a reformation of the instrument, it was not sufficient for the plaintiff merely to show that Munday had assented to his proposition. It was also necessary to show that this proposition was communicated to Yorba and was assented to by him; for the court can reform the instrument only for the purpose of having it express the understanding and agreement of Yorba, and not that of Munday. Under these considerations, it must be held that the evidence before the court did not authorize it to direct a reformation of the instrument.

2. Upon the facts as found by the court, Yorba's title to the land at the date of the agreement was superior to that of Ward. His purchase at the sheriff's sale related to the date of the attachment in the action in the judgment under which the sale was made, and antedated the lien of the judgment under which Ward's purchase was made. By this sale to him he acquired all the title that Labracco had at the date of that attachment, subject to redemption within six months from his purchase. The period of this redemption expired February 20th, so that on the 24th his right to the land had become absolute. For the purpose of vesting him with the evidence of his title, he had still to procure the sheriff's deed; but Ward had lost all right or interest in the land by failing to redeem from this sale within the six months, and whatever right in the land he acquired by his purchase at the sheriff's sale was extinguished. Under the agreement with the plaintiff, Yorba would therefore acquire nothing from Ward to which he was not already entitled, and his promise to pay $4,750 was without any consideration. As, under the law, Ward would be under obligation to surrender the property upon the execution of the sheriff's deed, such surrender could form no consideration for the promise of Yorba. The court finds, however, that the consideration to the defendant for the agreement was the compromise of a claim that the attachment under which his purchase was made was invalid. There is no evidence, however, that there had been any question between the plaintiff and the defendant of the validity of the attachment under which Yorba claimed the land prior to the trial of the present action. The only dispute between them at the time of the contract was as to the priority of their respective liens, but the record fails to show that there was any question of the sufficiency of either. At the trial herein the plaintiff attempted to show that the attachment in Yorba's suit was defective, and did not create a lien, but the court found against him on this issue. There was no evidence, however, that any claim of this defect was brought in question prior to entering into the contract of February 24th. No such claim is made in the complaint herein, and the finding of the court that there was is without any evidence to support it.

3. Section 3391, Civ. Code, declares: "Specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract in any of the following cases: (1) If he has not received an adequate consideration for the contract." This provision, however, is but an affirmation of the doctrine by which courts of equity were previously governed. Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 354. As the defendant was the owner of the land at the date of the contract, and as the interest of the plaintiff therein had been extinguished by reason of his failure to redeem from the sale to the defendant, under this section of the Civil Code, the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he seeks. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment, and generally in the opinion of Justice HARRISON. It seems proper, however, to add, with respect to the alleged mistake in the written contract, that the evidence is, in my opinion, sufficient to sustain the view that Yorba fully understood at the date of the contract that he was not bargaining for a perfect title to the property, but only such interest as Ward had acquired by his deed from Jarvis, and that he was to take that title subject to the Davilla claim and the lien of the Bacon judgment, both of which incumbrances he was to take care of. On the other hand, it is clear that, up to the time the parties met to conclude the contract, they all believed that the Ward title was prior and superior to the Yorba title. On that occasion Mr. Munday, Yorba's legal adviser, discovered for the first time that Yorba's title, by reason of this attachment, was prior to the Ward title. This fact he communicated to Yorba's interpreter, but it seems probable that neither Yorba nor the interpreter was made to understand the change thus wrought in the situation; for, notwithstanding the discovery that Ward apparently had nothing to sell, Yorba was still willing to give him a round price for his conveyance. This willingness of Yorba to buy finds its explanation in his assertion that he did not know then, or for nearly a month afterwards, that his own title was the better. If this explanation is rejected, some other reason must be found for his agreement to pay Ward $4,750 for the Jarvis title. The superior court finds that there was a question as to the validity of Yorba's attachment, and therefore, and because Ward was in possession, Yorba was willing to pay this large sum to buy his peace. But there is no evidence in this record that there was then any question as to the attachment, and it is now found that it was regular and valid. It is true, Ward was in possession of the land; but if he exacted an agreement to pay him $4,750 to yield a possession which it was his duty to yield without compensation, he can hardly expect a court of equity, on that showing, to reform a mistake in the contract in order that it may be specifically enforced. Disregarding, then, the mere fact of Ward's possession, and the power of annoyance which that gave him, it appears that Yorba was induced by some mistake to agree to give $4,750 for a worthless title. Aside from the mistake, there was no consideration for his promise, and in such a case equity will not lend its aid to enforce performance.

I dissent: GAROUTTE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent, and adhere to the conclusion reached at the first hearing. 54 Pac. 80. I think that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

JUDGMENT FOR ALIMONY—ENFORCEMENT—SUPERSEDEAS BOND—AMOUNT—STAY OF EXECUTION.

1. A judgment for alimony, which provides for the appointment of a receiver of defendant's real estate, to collect the income thereof and apply it in payment of the judgment, cannot, after a receiver has been appointed, be enforced by execution against other property of the debtor.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941-949, providing that the giving of an undertaking in the sum of $300, conditioned to pay all damages and costs awarded against the appellant on the appeal, shall stay all proceedings on the judgment or order appealed from, except that an appeal from a judgment or order directing the payment of money shall be stayed only by an undertaking in double the amount of such judgment or order, an appeal from a judgment for alimony, which is to be enforced by the appointment of a receiver, to collect the income of defendant's real property, is stayed by an undertaking in the sum of $300.

3. An undertaking in the sum of $300 stays proceedings on the judgment, even though an appeal from the order appointing a receiver had been taken, since the latter does not affect the appeal from the judgment.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 941, an execution on a judgment is stayed by giving the required undertaking on appeal, it being a proceeding thereon.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by Henrietta Anderson against William H. Anderson for divorce. Heard on an application by defendant for a writ of superseas to stay execution on a judgment awarding plaintiff alimony. Writ granted.

Chas. R. Gray and E. R. Annable, for appellant. E. B. Stanton, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Motion for a writ of superseas. In an action for divorce, brought by the plaintiff, the court rendered its judgment, denying the divorce, but awarded to her, for the support of herself and two children, the sum of $1,800 per annum, payable in monthly installments of $150 each, declaring the same to be a lien upon all the real estate of the defendant within the state of California, and directed that a receiver be appointed, to take the said real estate into his possession and management, and out of the net income thereof to pay to the plaintiff the amount of said alimony as it should accrue. Thereafter, on the same day, an order was made appointing a receiver of said real estate, with such instructions and authority. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and also from the order appointing a receiver, giving a bond of $300 in each appeal, and also an undertaking in the sum of $15,000 for the purpose of staying the execution of the order appointing the receiver. Some months afterwards the plaintiff caused a writ of execution to be issued upon the judgment, and levied upon certain moneys owing to the defendant, and the court, having refused, upon the application of the defendant, to recall the execution, the present application is made to stay the proceedings for the enforcement of the judgment pending said appeal.

The plaintiff, having caused the judgment awarding alimony to her to be collected and paid to her through a receiver appointed by the court for that purpose, is not entitled to have the judgment enforced by writ of execution against other estate of the defendant. The judgment does not direct the payment by the appellant of any money to her, but provides that the amount awarded her shall be collected by a receiver out of the rents and profits of the defendant's real estate, and paid over to her by him as the same shall accrue. The case, therefore, falls within the provisions of section 949, Code Civ. Proc., by which the giving of an undertaking in the sum of $300 "stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from." Pennie v. Superior Court, 89 Cal. 31, 26 Pac. 617; McCallion v. Society, 98 Cal. 442, 33 Pac. 329; Painter v. Painter, 98 Cal. 625, 33 Pac. 483; Kreling v. Kreling, 116 Cal. 458, 48 Pac. 383. The fact that an appeal has been taken from the order appointing a receiver does not enlarge the rights of the plaintiff. That appeal, and the effect thereof, are independent of the appeal from the judgment. The attempt to collect the alimony by a writ of execution is a "proceeding upon the judgment," and pending the appeal, is stayed by giving the undertaking required by section 941, Code Civ. Proc. The application for the writ is granted.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1899.)

ESTATES — ADMINISTRATION — WIDOW'S APPLICATION—ABATEMENT—APPEAL.

Proceedings by a widow to have the whole of an estate set aside to her without administration, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1469, abate on her death, where there are no minor children; and hence, where she dies pending an appeal from an order denying her application, the appeal will be dismissed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Application by Louise Bachelder for an order assigning to her the whole estate of her deceased husband, Joseph Bachelder, without administration. From an order denying her application she appealed, but died pending appeal, and a motion to dismiss same was made on that ground. Granted.

T. J. Butts and J. M. Thompson, for appellant. Thos. F. Bachelder, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon the return of the inventory in the estate of the above-named decedent, and it appearing therefrom that the entire value of the estate was less than $1,500, Louise Bachelder, claiming to be the widow of the deceased, made application to the superior court for an order assigning to her, for her use and benefit, the whole of the said estate, averring in her petition that there were no minor heirs of said estate. Upon the hearing the court denied her application, and she appealed therefrom to this court. Subsequent to the appeal she died, and the respondent has moved for a dismissal of the appeal upon that ground.

The provisions of section 1469, Code Civ. Proc., authorize the superior court to set aside the whole of an estate without administration for the use and support of the widow and minor children, but, if there is no widow or minor child, the power does not exist, and the estate is subject to administration. As there is no minor child in the present case, the widow was the only person for whose use and support the estate could be set apart, and by her death the court lost jurisdiction to make such an order. Her death pending the appeal from an order refusing to grant her application had the same effect upon the power of the court as if she had died before the application had been heard. This right of the widow does not survive to any one, and the proceedings therefore abated by her death. See Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064. The appeal is dismissed.

MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—USE IN ARGUMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

1. Deceased, who was drunk, approached accused, a stranger, in a saloon, making an insulting remark, which the latter took to be addressed to himself, and, after pushing deceased away, on his second approach struck him with his fist, once in the face, and several times over the heart. Deceased was unarmed, but accused testified he had his right hand closed, and accused struck him to protect himself, though there was no showing that deceased's manner was menacing, nor that accused's violence was justifiable. Deceased died in two hours of heart rupture, which the evidence showed the blows were sufficient to cause. Held, that the killing was manslaughter, under Pen. Code, § 192, making killing as the result of an unlawful act, committed without due caution and circumspection, such offense.

2. The use of the instructions in the argument to the jury is within the discretion of the court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Jeremiah Denomme was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. Crichton, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

CHIPMAN, C. Defendant, Jeremiah Denomme, was charged by information with the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed upon one C. B. Molbeck, at the county of Fresno. Upon his plea of not guilty a trial was had and a verdict of guilty of manslaughter returned, upon which he was adjudged to punishment for five years in the state prison. This appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

1. Appellant claims that the evidence does not justify the verdict. The homicide occurred in a saloon. Deceased was quite drunk, although able to walk. Shortly before the assault he had been drinking at the bar with two other men, when some trouble arose, and the bartender knocked one of the party down. Defendant was not one of those three, but was in the saloon at the time. Just after this occurred, deceased started to go towards the rear of the saloon, and on his way passed near defendant, who was standing near a safe, talking with another person. A witness, who was sitting at a card table at the time, facing the bar and the parties, saw deceased as he approached defendant, and testified to what deceased said, as follows: "It is a—" I couldn't tell whether he said, 'You are a son of a bitch,' or whether he said, 'It is a son of a bitch of a shame for to hit a man like that.' Something like that. I know the 'shame' was brought in. I don't know whether he called this man [defendant] a son of a bitch, or whether he said it to himself. That was the first time he went over there. This defendant reached up his hand, and he pushed him to one side. He says: 'Go on. I don't want to have no trouble.' Molbeck [deceased] got a couple of steps back, and he walked up towards the man again; and, with this, defendant grabbed him by the neck and hit him. Molbeck was good and drunk. Then defendant came up and hit him like this hard [illustrating over the heart], and Molbeck started back; put his hands up this way over his face. Then the defendant kept hitting him, hitting him like that [illustrating over the heart], I should say about four or five times." Other persons witnessed the assault at different stages. Deceased had no weapon in either hand, and did not strike defendant at any time. One witness asked defendant why he struck deceased, who replied that he stepped on his toes and called him a son of a bitch. Defendant testified that deceased came up to him, and asked the way to the water-closet, and, being told, deceased replied, "You bastard son of a bitch! I know where the water-closet is as well as you do," whereupon defendant pushed him away. He testified: "He came back—he had this hand shut and this open—towards me, and when I see he was near to me I strike him. I strike him in the face. * * * I struck him twice on the body. * * * I was afraid he might hurt me bad or get something." At another place he testified: "I didn't see anything in his hands. He had his left hand open." He also testified that he struck the deceased to protect himself. He was asked if he noticed the condition of deceased, and answered: "Well, I thought the man might have a little liquor in him, but not right drunk, seemed to me. I didn't pay much attention to the man, never having seen him before." Defendant did not testify that the manner of deceased was menacing or threatening, nor did it appear from any of the evidence that defendant was in the slightest degree justified by any conduct of deceased in making so violent an assault under the reasonable belief that his own life or limb was in danger. The reason for the assault given by defendant furnished no justification. The deceased was placed in a chair shortly after the assault, and died in about two hours at the saloon. The autopsy disclosed rupture of the heart, from which death ensued, and the evidence was that blows such as deceased received at the hands of defendant were sufficient to have caused death from rupture of the heart. There was no evidence of defendant having any ill will towards the deceased, or even any previous acquaintance with him, and defendant no doubt spoke the truth when he testified that he had no intention of killing deceased when he struck him, and the circumstances rebut the imputation of malice towards the defendant. But the killing was the result of an unlawful act committed without due caution and circumspection, and, although involuntary, it was manslaughter. Pen. Code, § 192.

2. Appellant assigns error in not allowing defendant's attorney, Mr. Crichton, to argue the law to the jury. The facts are brought to our attention by affidavits and counter affidavits. It appears that the court, on its own motion, interrupted counsel, when about to read an instruction which counsel supposed had been previously settled by the court. It does not seem necessary to state fully the facts set forth in these affidavits. There is nothing in them to distinguish the case from other cases which have arisen and have been decided by this court. In some of the superior courts of the state the practice is to settle the instructions, as far as possible, before argument to the jury, and to allow counsel unrestricted use of these instructions in arguing the case. This practice is by no means universal, however, and is not at all obligatory. It is discretionary with the court whether counsel shall be permitted to use the instructions before the jury. Boreham v. Byrne, 83 Cal. 23, 23 Pac. 212. In People v. Carty, 77 Cal. 213, 19 Pac. 490, it was held that the court properly refused to permit counsel to argue the law to the jury in his opening address. The orderly procedure in criminal trials is laid down in title 7, Pen. Code. It is the duty of the district attorney and the counsel for the accused to place the evidence before the jury, and at its conclusion they may or may not, as they wish, "argue the case to the court and jury." "The judge may then charge the jury, and must do so on any points pertinent to the issue if requested by either party; and he may state the testimony and declare the law." Id. § 1093. Except on a trial for libel, "questions of law are to be decided by the court, questions of fact by the jury; and although the jury have the power to find a general verdict, which includes questions of law as well as of fact, they are bound, nevertheless, to receive as law what is laid down by the court." Id. § 1126. "In charging the jury the court must state to them all matters of law necessary for their information." Id. § 1127. There can be no doubt that the theory of the procedure is that the law which is to govern the jury must come from the court alone. And while it has been held here to be objectionable, either in civil or criminal actions, to read law to the jury (People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65), it has been also held not to be reversible error to permit it to be done, as the matter is wholly within the discretion of the court (People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226, 10 Pac. 502). In Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 13 Pac. 655, it was held not error to refuse to allow defendant's counsel to read law books, or make an argument on the law of the case, or to state what he claimed to be the law, to the jury. In People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 581, it was held error to allow the district attorney to read from "Browne's Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity," against the objection of defendant. It will thus be seen that the contention of defendant cannot be sustained. In the argument to the jury there are certain universally accepted principles of law which naturally and almost necessarily find their way into an argument upon the facts, and the fairness and intelligent discrimination of the court may be relied upon to hold counsel under just and proper restraint in the illustration of facts by calling attention to pertinent principles of law. But, as we have seen, the decisions leave with the court the discretion to limit counsel to a discussion of the facts; and we think this discretion may be exercised by the court upon its own motion, as was done in the present case. The rights of defendant are fully conserved by the provisions of the statute (Pen. Code, §§ 1093, 1127). The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1899.)

ESTATES—CLAIMS—PRESENTATION—DEATH OF PARTY—SECOND APPEAL—LAW OF THE CASE.

1. On the death of defendant, one other than plaintiff filed a claim against the estate, the body of the claim showing it had been assigned to the claimant, but the affidavit thereto being made by plaintiff "for the reason that he was better informed as to the facts concerning the claim than claimant." The affidavit on the reverse side of the claim showed the sum claimed was justly due to claimant, and the claim was stated to be an interest in the property held by the decedent at his death. The action was based on a money judgment founded on an alleged indebtedness of deceased. The claim stated that it was being litigated in an action between the parties. Held, that it was not a proper presentation of a claim against defendant's estate by plaintiff, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1502, requiring plaintiff to present his claim to defendant's estate in like manner and authenticated as in other cases, where defendant dies pending suit, in order to recover on the claim in the action.

2. On a former appeal the court said, "That the claim of plaintiff was one which would require presentation [to defendant's estate], plaintiff does not deny." Held, that the decision that the claim required presentation was the law of the case on the subsequent appeal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by J. W. Faulkner (E. T. Steen substituted) against Joshua Hendy (executors substituted). There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Jordan, for appellant. Boyd & Fifield, W. H. H. Hart, and Nowlin & Fassett, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by E. T. Steen, substituted as plaintiff in place of J. W. Faulkner, from a judgment in favor of the executors of Joshua A. Hendy, deceased, who were substituted as defendants in place of said deceased. This case has been in litigation for many years, and has been several times on appeal to this court. In Falkner v. Hendy, 80 Cal. 636, 22 Pac. 401; Faulkner (Steen substituted) v. Hendy, 103 Cal. 15, 36 Pac. 1021, and Falkner (Steen substituted) v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49, 40 Pac. 21, 386, the history of the litigation and the facts of the case are very fully set forth, and they need not be restated here. In appellant's brief in the case at bar much complaint is made that justice has not been done the appellant; but it is to be observed that under the decisions of this court in the two cases above referred to in 80 Cal., 22 Pac., and 103 Cal., 36 Pac., appellant could have had judgment for the principal sum, which was found to be something over $10,000, and which appellant actually received, and compound interest thereon, which would have amounted to nearly three times as much as the principal sum found due. He refused to accept that amount, however, but contended that in lieu of compound interest he should recover for alleged profits, the amount of which could never be ascertained.

The question involved in the case at bar which is determinative of the case is whether or not there was a presentation of plaintiff's claim to the executors of Hendy, deceased, as required by section 1502 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is as follows: "If an action is pending against the decedent at the time of his death, the plaintiff must in like manner present his claim to the executor or administrator for allowance or rejection, authenticated as required in other cases; and no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of the presentations required." The original defendant, Joshua Hendy, having died, and his executors having been appointed, they made objection to any further proceedings, because there had been no presentation of the claim. It is contended by appellant that there was such a presentation, and the question is whether or not a certain document introduced in evidence constituted such a presentation of the claim as is required by law. The judgment of the court below went upon the theory that this document was not a presentation, and there is no warrant for saying here that the ruling of the court in this respect was erroneous. Many objections are made by respondents to the sufficiency of the document introduced as a presentation of a claim within the meaning of the Code, but it is not necessary to notice all of these objections. In the first place, it is clearly not the claim of the appellant, but the claim of one John Rathgeb, Sr., and he is the claimant. The opening words of the document are these: "John Rathgeb, Sr., creditor of Joshua Hendy, deceased, presents his claim against the estate of said deceased, with the necessary vouchers, for approval, as follows, to wit: 'Estate of Joshua Hendy, deceased, to John Rathgeb, Sr., Dr.'" The body of the claim also shows that it had been assigned to Rathgeb. The character of the claim as one made by Rathgeb is not changed by the fact that the affidavit to it was made by Steen, who says in the affidavit that it is made by him "for the reason that he is better informed as to the facts concerning the claim than the said John Rathgeb, Sr." The affidavit indorsed upon the reverse side of the claim also states that "the sum of four hundred and sixty-five thousand ($465,000) dollars (estimated) is justly due to the said claimant, John Rathgeb, Sr." Moreover, the claim itself attempted to be presented is stated to be "an interest in the property and estate held by the said Joshua Hendy, at the time of his death, in his own name and in the name of the Joshua Hendy Machine Works, a corporation of the state of California, of the estimated value of four hundred and sixty-five thousand ($465,000) dollars"; while the real claim of the appellant, as it appears throughout the litigation, is not "an interest in the property" held by Hendy at the time of his death, but a claim for a money judgment against Hendy founded upon an alleged indebtedness of Hendy to the appellant; and the character of the claim as thus presented is not changed by the statement that the claim is "being litigated in an action" between the parties. For these reasons we are of opinion that the court below did not err in holding that there has been no presentation of the claim to the executors of Hendy. See McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 42 Pac. 466. Appellant makes contention at this late day that, owing to the nature of the claim, no presentation thereof to the executors was necessary; but that contention cannot, upon principle, be maintained, and, moreover, it was determined otherwise, as the law of the case, in Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49, 40 Pac. 21, 386, where the court say: "That the claim of plaintiff was one which would require presentation, respondent [now appellant] does not deny. The matter was fully considered by this court in Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, and in Rowland v. Madden, 72 Cal. 17, 12 Pac. 226, 870." The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BLAKE v. NATIONAL LIFE INS. CO.
(S. F. 868.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1899.)

NEW TRIAL—SPECIFICATIONS—LIFE INSURANCE—CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY—FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUMS—WAIVER.

1. In an action on an insurance policy, where in the defense was forfeiture, and plaintiff alleged a waiver, there was a general verdict for plaintiff. Held, that the verdict did not involve two propositions, viz. authority of the agent to waive the condition, and the fact of waiver, but the facts as to the agent were merely probative; hence the specification in the motion for new trial as to the insufficiency of the evidence was sufficient, without pointing out such propositions as the particulars in which the evidence was insufficient.

2. Life policies were, in terms, to be forfeited by failure to pay premiums on the very day they should fall due. Pursuant to directions, the agents, in their monthly reports, marked as canceled those delinquents whose premiums they deemed uncollectible, while the other delinquents were marked simply as in arrears. If these latter paid their premiums before the next monthly report, and produced a health certificate, they were reinstated. Held, that there was no waiver of the forfeiture, where a delinquent who was transferred to the arrearage sheet died before the next monthly report, without having produced a health certificate and paid the premium.

3. Where life policy provides that failure to pay a premium when due shall work a forfeiture, but that, after three annual premiums shall be paid, the company guaranties: First, without any action by insured, a paid-up policy for a certain sum; second, on surrender of the policy within a certain time, a cash value of a certain sum; and, third, on application within a certain time, to extend the insurance for the full amount of the policy for a certain period,—the policy of a delinquent does not remain in force for the full amount until he exercises an option as to the three provisions, or until the time for exercising it expires.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Martha Foster Blake against the National Life Insurance Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial defendant appeals. Reversed.

Metcalf & Metcalf, for appellant. Rodgers & Paterson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. The defendant appeals from an order refusing a new trial. The action was upon a policy of life insurance issued by defendant December 26, 1889. The defense was that the policy had been forfeited for the nonpayment of premium which fell due December 26, 1893. It was stipulated in the policy that failure to pay any premium, or any part thereof, or any note given therefor when due, should cancel the insurance and contract, and that agents were not authorized to receive premiums after the day when they were payable, and could not give credit or waive forfeiture. The complaint contains two counts or causes of action. In the first full performance of all conditions on the part of the insured is alleged. In the second it is admitted that there was a failure to pay the annual premium which became due December 26, 1893, and it is averred that the condition was waived, and credit was given to the insured.

A preliminary objection is made on the part of respondent that in defendant's motion for a new trial there is "no sufficient specification of the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient." The trial was by jury, which rendered a general verdict for plaintiff. It is said the jury must have found that defendant waived the payment and extended the time. This, it is contended, involved two propositions,—authority on the part of the agent to waive the conditions, and the fact of waiver. But the verdict involved no finding in regard to the agent, but simply that the condition was waived by the corporation. The facts in regard to the agent are merely probative, showing through what means the defendant made the alleged waiver. The specifications are sufficient.

There was no conflicting evidence in the case, the only witnesses being the agent and employes of the defendant. They testified very emphatically that the annual premium due on the 26th day of December, 1890, was not paid, and payment was not waived. Respondent contends, however, that credit had been given to the insured, and the contention is based mainly upon these facts: Dr. Blake was medical examiner for defendant. His fee was $5 for each certificate, and was paid by the corporation. He was not paid in cash in each case, but received credit on the books kept by the agent at San Francisco. He had taken out two insurance policies, on each of which the annual premium was $365. It seems that he never did, during the existence of his insurance, pay at one time the amount of his annual premiums. The agent had been in the habit of taking his notes for some portion, and crediting him with cash payments. The notes were paid partly in cash and partly by the amounts due Dr. Blake from the corporation. On two occasions the corporation itself had taken his notes for a portion of the premiums due. On the day before the premium fell due, Dr. Blake called upon the agent, and proposed to give the "premium note," as he called it. The agent told him positively that the company would not take his note, and he (the agent) could not carry him. On the 29th of the month, which was the last day before the report of delinquents was sent to the home office, the doctor said he could not pay, but would have to let the report go, and he would fix it up as soon as possible. On the very day of his death, which occurred on the 17th of the succeeding month, Dr. Blake again called upon the agent, and endeavored to arrange the matter, and was again told that no credit would be given. Although the policy was in terms forfeited by failure to pay the annual premium on the very day on which it fell due, the practice of the company was, if the insured paid up within a reasonable time, and produced a new health certificate, to reinstate the insurance; and it seems that the agent was directed in his report to mark some as canceled, and others as simply being in arrears. In explanation of this, the agent said: "Dr. Blake was transferred and reported by us to the company on the arrearage sheet. Others were put on the cancellation sheet, and so reported to the company. We transfer premiums to the arrearage sheet when they are not paid, and we make our report, and we think we can collect them by holding them to our next report, the parties giving a health certificate. If an account is transferred to that sheet, before a person can be reinstated and the premium be accepted, he will have to give a health certificate." The company was in the habit of sending to the agents "renewals" in case the premiums were paid before the next monthly report. The insured died without having paid the premium, and without having furnished a new health certificate. There was clearly no agreement to extend the credit of Dr. Blake. The report was a private communication between the agent and his principal. If it could be considered an agreement with Dr. Blake, it could only be a contract to renew if he complied with the conditions. This he did not do.

The policy contained a stipulation that, although failure to pay an annual premium when due would cancel a policy, still, "after three full annual payments have been paid, the company guaranties—First, without any action on the part of the insured, a paid-up policy for one thousand and eighty dollars; second, upon surrender of his policy within two months, a cash value of five hundred and thirty dollars and twenty cents; third, upon application within two months, to give extended insurance for the full amount of this policy for three years, two hundred and fifty-eight days." Necessarily, these were alternative propositions. Dr. Blake took neither, as, no doubt, his fixed intention was to have his policy renewed. It might be plausibly argued that, upon his failure to pay, the policy was at once transferred into a paid-up policy for $1,080; but I see no plausibility whatever in the contention that, until Dr. Blake exercised his option, the policy remained in force for the full amount. The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. SCOTT. (Cr. 478.)

HOMICIDE — COMPETENCY OF JURORS — INSTRUCTIONS—SELF-DEFENSE—REASONABLE DOUBT.

1. The ruling of the trial court on a challenge to a juror for bias cannot be disturbed unless the testimony adduced on the voire dire is so clear that the court can say, as a matter of law, that the juror is disqualified.

2. An instruction under which the jury cannot acquit on a plea of self-defense, unless they believe from the evidence certain facts, is erroneous, since it eliminates the right to acquit if they have a reasonable doubt as to whether or not defendant acted in self-defense.

3. An instruction that if the jury believe that deceased was the aggressor, but he had in good faith endeavored to decline any further trouble before defendant shot him, there was no self-defense, is erroneous, since the aggressor must not only decline further strife, but must make known such declination to his adversary.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

L. A. Scott was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Ahern, Laird & Packard, and W. A. Harris, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. The defendant, informed against for the crime of murder, was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals from the judgment and from the order denying him a new trial.

Objection is first made to the court's disallowance of challenges for actual bias interposed by defendant to two of the jurors. While this court may review an order denying a challenge to a juror upon this ground, it may only do so when the question presented is one of law, over which questions alone this court in criminal cases has appellate jurisdiction, under the constitution. A reading of the testimony taken upon voire dire discloses, as is usual, conflicting and contradictory statements by the jurors. They had formed opinions touching the guilt or innocence of the defendant. They would carry those opinions with them into the jury box. It would take evidence to remove them. Nevertheless, they could and would give to the defendant a fair and impartial trial. They could and would be governed by the law as delivered by the court, and by the evidence as received in court. It is the state of facts commonly presented where, upon the question of bias, the evidence would have justified a finding either way. Under such circumstances, we are powerless to disturb the ruling of the trial court. People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 554, 39 Pac. 944. We recognize that, with the increased facilities for the dissemination of news, it is far more difficult than formerly it was to obtain a jury of men ignorant of the circumstances of the charge which they are called upon to try. But, because of the attendant difficulty, the judge should be the more careful to see that the jurors are in fact unprejudiced and unbiased; for it is as much a defendant's right now to be tried by such a jury as it was when Lord Coke delivered his famous aphorism that a juror "should stand indifferent as he stands unsworn." But, unless the testimony adduced upon voire dire is so clear upon the question of actual bias that this court can say, as matter of law, that the juror is disqualified for that reason, we cannot disturb the ruling of the trial court.

Certain objections are urged to the court's rulings in admitting and rejecting evidence. We have examined them, and are convinced, after such examination, that the rulings were not erroneous, nor to the prejudice of the defendant.

But upon the instructions given the court fell into errors which necessitate a reversal of the judgment. The jury was instructed: "Before you can acquit the defendant upon the ground of self-defense, you must believe from the evidence that at the time of the firing of the fatal shot (if you find that the fatal shot was fired by defendant) that the defendant honestly believed that his life was in danger and that he was about to receive great bodily injury from the deceased." By this the jury was instructed that the defendant could not be acquitted upon his plea of self-defense unless the jury believed from the evidence certain facts. But this eliminates, to defendant's great disadvantage, his right to an acquittal if the evidence, even though the jurors did not believe it, yet created within their minds a reasonable doubt as to whether or not he had acted in self-defense. Even without the belief, if that doubt existed, the defendant was entitled to an acquittal.

Again, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant and Charles Richards engaged in an altercation at or near Scott's tent, and that in said altercation the defendant was the aggressor, or even if you believe from said evidence that the deceased, Richards, was the aggressor, and if you further believe from said evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that said Richards had honestly and in good faith endeavored to decline any further trouble before the fatal shot was fired, then I instruct you that the evidence shows no self-defense." This instruction, too, was erroneous and prejudicial to the defendant, in that it failed to recognize the proposition that the first aggressor must not only decline further strife, but must make known his declination to his adversary. See People v. Button, 106 Cal. 628, 39 Pac. 1073; People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 451, 42 Pac. 307.

We note no other alleged errors that call for a special consideration, but, for the reasons given, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

PACIFIC PINE LUMBER CO. v. WESTERN UNION TEL. CO. (S. F. 902.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1898.)

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE—ACTION FOR DELAY—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—DAMAGES.

1. A complaint alleged that, owing to defendant's delay in delivering a telegraph message from a customer accepting plaintiff's offer of a vessel to carry a cargo of lumber, his customer suffered a loss, payment of which he demanded from plaintiff, and for which he also threatened to sue. Held insufficient, since it did not show that plaintiff was injured.

2. Civ. Code, § 3283, providing that "damages may be awarded in judicial proceedings for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future," has no application to the facts alleged, since no detriment certain to result in the future could be inferred therefrom, and the other detriment referred to in said section relates to cases, such as for personal injuries, where expenses may be incurred after action brought for medical attendance, nursing, and the like.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Pacific Pine Lumber Company against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for defendant, entered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Jordan, for appellant. R. B. Carpenter, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for damages to plaintiff, alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence in failing to deliver a message with due promptitude. The complaint was twice amended. The court sustained the demurrer to the last amended complaint, without leave to further amend, and gave judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

The complaint shows: That defendant is engaged in the business of transmitting and delivering messages and cablegrams for hire, and has an office in San Francisco, near the plaintiff's place of business, which was and is well known to defendant by reason of plaintiff's registering with defendant its address; and that defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff promptly all messages coming over defendant's wires directed to plaintiff. On August 18, 1894, plaintiff telegraphed one Snethlage, a customer of plaintiff at Shanghai, China, offering him a vessel to convey a cargo of lumber from Puget Sound to Shanghai upon certain terms. On August 19, 1894, Snethlage replied by defendant's wires, accepting plaintiff's offer. By reason of the gross and inexcusable neglect of defendant, Snethlage's message was not delivered to plaintiff until September 13, 1894. On the receipt of plaintiff's message by him, Snethlage sold the cargo of lumber at a price netting him $1,071; but that plaintiff, through defendant's said negligence, was ignorant of Snethlage's acceptance, and did not dispatch the vessel laden with said lumber, by reason of which Snethlage lost his sale, and the party to whom he had sold was obliged to purchase in the open market, thus causing a loss to Snethlage of $1,071, which he demands from plaintiff, and that the payment of which he threatens plaintiff with suit. "That, owing to the facts set forth, plaintiff has no defense against such demand and threatened suit, and will be compelled to pay the same. That plaintiff has requested defendant to assume and discharge said liability to Snethlage, but defendant has refused so to do." The ground of demurrer relied upon by defendant goes to the sufficiency of the complaint.

Plaintiff claims that the action is founded upon tort, but it makes no claim for direct injury to it through defendant's alleged negligence. Its sole claim is that because Snethlage was damaged, and might by suit recover from plaintiff, therefore defendant is liable to plaintiff. It seems to me to be immaterial what plaintiff may call its damages,—whether founded upon tort or a contract; it must recover, if at all, because of plaintiff's contract liability to Snethlage, for it claims no other damage. The statute imposed a duty upon defendant to promptly deliver Snethlage's message to plaintiff (Civ. Code, §§ 2161, 2162); and the failure on defendant's part was an injury to Snethlage and to plaintiff. But no injury is alleged to have accrued to the latter, except that, as Snethlage was injured, he has a possible action against plaintiff, which he may in the future seek to enforce. Defendant's direct liability to plaintiff need not therefore be considered.

Appellant cites section 3360 of the Civil Code to show that, "when a breach of duty has caused no appreciable detriment to the party affected, he may yet recover nominal damages," and hence argues that it was wrong to deny a trial even if plaintiff had not paid Snethlage,—citing, also, Mentzer v. Telegraph Co. (Iowa) 62 N. W. 1; Parks v. Telegraph Co., 13 Cal. 422; Treadway v. James, 57 Cal. 137. Appellant's contention would have force if the alleged cause of action was for defendant's breach of duty to plaintiff, and damages were claimed as resulting from that breach. But, as we understand the complaint, nothing whatever is claimed except for plaintiff's breach of duty to Snethlage. Why, then, should plaintiff be permitted to go to trial to show damages where none are claimed? It seems to me that plaintiff should be held to the manifest purpose and object of his suit, which is to recover for a liability incurred by plaintiff to Snethlage. Conceding, but not deciding, that under the provisions of Civ. Code, §§ 1565, 1582, 1583, when Snethlage sent his message of acceptance of plaintiff's proposal, the minds of the contracting parties from that moment must be deemed to have met, and the contract then become obligatory upon plaintiff, although the acceptance was not known to plaintiff, the complaint shows that plaintiff has not discharged its liability to Snethlage, nor has the latter taken any steps to enforce it, further than to make demand. He may never do so. Under such circumstances, we do not think that the complaint states a cause of action against defendant. The rule, generally stated, is that there must be actual loss before there can be actual compensation; and it cannot be said in the case we have here that actual liability is equivalent to actual loss. Snethlage has a right of action against defendant for his damage. He also has a right of action against plaintiff. But he cannot recover against both, for that would give him double the damage he has suffered. For the same reason that Snethlage cannot recover twice for his injury, the defendant cannot be subjected to payment twice for it.

Appellant contends that, as plaintiff's liability to Snethlage is the direct result of defendant's tort, it is wholly immaterial whether or not plaintiff has discharged this liability to Snethlage, because there is reasonable certainty of its having to pay. Section 3283 of the Civil Code is relied upon, which provides as follows: "Damages may be awarded in judicial proceedings for detriment resulting after the commencement thereof, or certain to result in the future." This section has no application. It cannot be said that a suit by Snethlage against plaintiff "is certain to result in the future"; and the other part of the section refers to a class of cases, such as for personal injuries, where expenses may be incurred by the plaintiff after action brought for medical attendance, nursing, and the like. Such was the case of Wilson v. Southern Pac. Co. (Utah) 44 Pac. 1040; Donnelly v. Hufschmidt, 79 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 546; Hicks v. Herring, 17 Cal. 566; and other like cases cited by appellant. The rule, as stated by Mr. Greenleaf, is that the proof of damages in such cases may extend to all matters up to that period which are the natural result of the previous injury. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 268. The "detriment" complained of here was not "for detriment resulting after the commencement" of the action. De Costa v. Mining Co., 17 Cal. 613, was an action to abate a nuisance and for damages, caused by digging a ditch on plaintiff's land. The trial court awarded as damages a sum sufficient to pay the expenses of filling up the ditch, and restoring the land to its original condition. It was held here that the basis was incorrect; that the plaintiff could recover only for the injury sustained; and it was improper to award compensation for an expense which might never be incurred. In actions upon injunction bonds, it has been frequently held in this court that damages cannot be recovered for the fees of an attorney employed to resist the injunction, although the plaintiff is liable to his attorney, without showing actual payment to him. Wilson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 170, citing Sedg. Dam. p. 307, where, in speaking of liability on a bond, it was said: "The rule should be considered cardinal and absolute that actual compensation should be given for actual loss." Even where a bond expressly indemnified against "any liability incurred," and judgments had been obtained for breach of the bond, a complaint was held bad, on demurrer, because it did not allege that the judgment had been paid. Gilbert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550. We perceive no reason why a different rule should be applied in the case before us; for, after all, plaintiff's alleged damage is none other than plaintiff's liability to pay Snethlage for breach of contract; and, until plaintiff has discharged this liability, how can it be said that defendant owes plaintiff anything, or that plaintiff has suffered loss?

Respondent claims that the case resolves itself into the question whether a plaintiff can recover against a defendant for injury done by the latter to a third person, although the injury causes a loss to the plaintiff by reason of his contract relations with or for such third person. Cases are cited in support of a negative answer to the question. One of these was where plaintiff, a life insurance company, sued a railroad company for wrongfully causing the death of a person insured by plaintiff. It was held that "in the absence of any privity of contract between plaintiff and defendant, and of any direct obligation of the latter to the former growing out of the contract or relation between the insured and defendant, the loss of plaintiff, although due to the acts of the railroad company, being brought home to the insured only through the artificial relation of contractors with the party immediately subject to the wrong done by the railroad company, was a remote and indirect consequence of the misconduct of the defendants, and not actionable." Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 25 Conn. 265.

Appellant claims that in the case here the statute made it the duty of, and the complaint alleges an agreement by, defendant to deliver to plaintiff any messages which might be received by it in its office at San Francisco, failing in which was the direct cause of plaintiff's liability to Snethlage, and therefore the case is taken out of the rule in cases cited by respondent. The question, however, need not be considered, for the reason that in no event is defendant liable to plaintiff until plaintiff shows that he has been injured, which we think it has not done by merely alleging a liability to Snethlage. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

PATTERSON v. POLICE COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
CO et al. (Cr. 387.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 3, 1899.)

JUDGE—DISQUALIFICATION—BAR TO PROSECUTION.

1. The causes enumerated by Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended in 1897, are the only ones disqualifying a judge; and hence the formation or expression of an opinion as to the merits of a matter he is to determine will not disqualify him, it not being included therein.

2. Pen. Code, § 999, provides that an order to set aside an indictment or information is no bar to a future prosecution for the same offense. Section 1387 provides that an order for the dismissal of an action before or after an indictment is a bar to any other prosecution for the same offense, if a misdemeanor, but not if a felony. Held, that several successive dismissals of informations against one charged with a felony, and a grand jury's neglect to consider the charge after investigation, are not a bar to a further prosecution for the same offense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition by R. H. Patterson for a writ of prohibition against the police court of the city and county of San Francisco and Charles F. Conlan, judge thereof. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Hoff Cook, for appellant. Clarence Gray, for respondents.

GRAY, C. This is an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to a petition for a writ of prohibition. Appellant sets out in his petition that after three successive criminal proceedings had been instituted in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, in each of which appellant was charged with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon upon one Barney Ward, and after one of these proceedings had been dismissed by the judge of the police court, and the two others had each successively culminated in an order of the superior court granting appellant's motion to dismiss the information in the same, and after the grand jury had investigated and ignored a charge against appellant of this same offense, a fourth complaint has been filed against him on this same charge in the said police court, and that, unless restrained from so doing, Judge Conlan will proceed with a preliminary examination of such complaint. The petition also states that the respondent declared in open court that his mind was so fully made up in relation to the charge set forth in the complaint that he felt disqualified to act upon said charge.

It is contended by appellant that respondent is disqualified for the reason that he has a fixed opinion as to the merits of the case, and intends to hold him to answer. The fact that a judge of the police court has formed and expressed an opinion as to the merits of the matter that he is to determine does not disqualify him to hear and determine such matter. A judge is disqualified to act as such in an action or proceeding only (1) when he is a party to or interested in the action or proceeding pending; (2) when he is related to either party or to his attorney, or agent within the third degree; (3) when he has been an attorney in the action or proceeding; or (4) when it appears from affidavits that either party cannot have a fair trial before any judge of a court of record by reason of the bias and prejudice of such judge. "These are the only causes which work a disqualification of a judicial officer." McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 524; In re Jones, 103 Cal. 397, 37 Pac. 385; Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended in 1897. Appellant's petition fails to disclose any of the foregoing causes of disqualification.

The dismissals of the various charges against appellant constituted no bar to a further prosecution against him. Pen. Code, §§ 999, 1387; Ex parte Clarke, 54 Cal. 415. The police judge therefore had jurisdiction of the last proceeding before him. The office of the writ of prohibition is to restrain a judicial officer or other person from doing that which he has no jurisdiction to do; and, it appearing that Judge Conlan had the power, as judge of the police court, to hear and determine the matter before him, the demurrer to the petition was properly sustained by the superior court. We therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: PRINGLE, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CAPPOLA. (Cr. 497.)<sup>1</sup>

ROBBERY — IDENTIFYING DEFENDANT — EVIDENCE.

There is evidence to identify defendant as the person who committed the robbery, prosecuting witness testifying that he was one of the persons who robbed him, though defendant and his witnesses testified that he cut off his mustache a month before the robbery, and had not worn one since, and prosecuting witness, who testified that he had seen defendant after, as well as a year before, the robbery, said that when he "previously met" him he wore a mustache; the jury being at liberty to hold that the time thus referred to was when he met defendant a year before the robbery.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

One Cappola was convicted of robbery, and appeals. Affirmed.

P. J. Mogan, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery, and has appealed from the judgment thereon upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to identify him as the person who committed the robbery. At the trial the prosecuting witness testified that the defendant was one of the persons by whom he was robbed, and also testified that he had seen him on two occasions subsequent to the robbery; and, although the defendant and witnesses on his behalf testified that he was not present at the robbery, but was at that time in another place, the verdict of the jury shows that they gave credit to the prosecuting witness rather than to the others. The prosecuting witness also testified that he had met the defendant several times, a year or more before the robbery, and on cross-examination he testified that when he "previously met" him he wore a mustache. The defendant, and several witnesses on his behalf, testified that he cut off his mustache about a month prior to the date of the robbery, and had not worn one since, and it is urged that for this reason the testimony of the prosecuting witness as to his identity must be disregarded. The jury, however, were at liberty to hold that the time referred to by the witness in testifying that the defendant wore a mustache when he "previously met" him was the time when he met him the year before the robbery. The judgment is affirmed.

ACTION ON CONTRACT—PLEADING—ANSWER—CONTRACT IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE—VALIDITY—DAMAGES.

1. Complaint in action on an agreement of defendant not to engage in business in certain territory, by which he bound himself to plaintiffs in the penal sum of $2,000, as liquidated damages, should he fail to keep his agreement, must allege that he has not paid the $2,000, thus entitling him to resume business.

2. Only a defective allegation of the complaint, not one entirely omitted, can be cured by the answer.

3. An agreement not to engage in business "within a radius of 10 miles in either direction" of a certain point, under penalty of $2,000 liquidated damages, though void as to the part of the territory in a county outside that in which is the central point (Civ. Code, § 1674, allowing the restriction only as to "a specified county, city, or a part thereof"), described with sufficient definiteness the territory within the county embracing the central point, and is valid as to it.

4. The entire amount provided as liquidated damages for a person engaging in business within a certain territory, embracing parts of several counties, is recoverable for engaging in business in the part of the county within which is the place where he formerly conducted business, though the agreement is void as to the other counties.

Commissioners' decision.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by Frank Franz and another against Frank Bieler. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. H. Smith and Mortimer Smith, for appellant. Alfred Fuhrman, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Judgment was entered for the plaintiffs upon the verdict of a jury, and the defendant appeals therefrom on the judgment roll, contending that the complaint does not state a cause of action. The complaint sets out an agreement by which the defendant agreed with the plaintiffs that he would not engage in the wine and liquor business within the radius of 10 miles in either direction from 809 East Fourteenth street, in the city of Oakland, for the period of 10 years from the date of the agreement,—April 19, 1890,—and bound himself to the plaintiffs "in the penal sum of two thousand dollars, as liquidated damages," to be paid by the defendant "should he fail to keep these covenants and agreements." The complaint then alleges that on January 15, 1895, the defendant resumed the said wine and liquor business within the defined territory, to plaintiffs' damage in the sum of $2,000, and judgment is prayed for that sum.

Defendant's obligation was to pay plaintiffs the sum of $2,000 in case he should resume the designated business within the defined territory before the expiration of 10 years. It does not appear that he has not performed the condition upon which he was entitled to resume said business, viz. upon the payment of $2,000; and such breach, the nonpayment of the money, must be alleged. See Richards v. Insurance Co., 80 Cal. 505, 22 Pac. 939; Grant v. Sheerin, 84 Cal. 197, 23 Pac. 1094; and numerous other cases. This question being conclusively settled in this state, it is not necessary to examine the cases cited by respondents, all of which are from other jurisdictions.

Nor is this defect cured by the answer, as contended by respondents. A defective allegation of a fact may be aided by allegations in the answer; but here there is no allegation that the money has not been paid, and the defect is fatal. There was no allegation to be aided or cured. See Grant v. Sheerin, supra, and cases there cited.

It is also contended by appellant that the complaint does not state any consideration for the agreement set out in the complaint. It is true, the agreement set out in the complaint does not show any consideration to support it, or that it was made under such circumstances as to give it validity under the provisions of sections 1673 and 1674 of the Civil Code; but I think the allegations immediately preceding the agreement as set out are sufficient to show a good consideration.

Appellant further contends that said contract is void for uncertainty, in that the territory "within a radius of ten miles in either direction" from the point named would include a part of Contra Costa county and a part of the city of San Francisco, as well as a portion of Alameda county, in which the central point is located. I think, however, that the description of the territory is good as to all of it that lies within Alameda county, such boundaries being capable of exact ascertainment, the Code permitting the restriction to extend to "a specified county, city, or a part thereof." Civ. Code, § 1674. In Carpet-Beating Works v. Jones, 102 Cal. 506, 36 Pac. 841, it was held that the covenant is divisible as regards space, and void only to the extent to which it departs from the provisions of the Code. In that case the covenant extended to three counties, and it was held valid as to the county in which the place of business was situated.

Appellant further says: "The contract embracing portions of three counties is not divisible so far as the amount of liquidated damages is concerned." The argument based upon this proposition is not quite clear, but it seems to be that as the restriction imposed upon the defendant was void as to a portion of the territory, and the penalty for a breach being indivisible, no recovery can be had either for the whole of the penal sum or any part of it. The question here presented is new, at least so far as the authorities in this state are concerned. It has been held, as we have seen, that the inclusion of territory greater than that sanctioned by the Code is void only as to the excess. In Potter v. Ahrens, 110 Cal. 674, 43 Pac. 388, there was no excess of territory, and it was held that the parties may properly stipulate a specified sum as liquidated damages for a breach of the covenant, and that the plaintiff is not required to prove anything more than a breach of the contract in order to recover such stipulated damages. In Carpet-Beating Works v. Jones, supra, the contract included three counties, and it was held that it was valid as to the county in which the business was conducted, and void as to the others; but in that case the plaintiff on the trial waived damages, on account of the insolvency of the defendant, and prosecuted the suit to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from conducting the business in the city and county of San Francisco, and the judgment of the lower court granting such injunction was affirmed in this court, with a modification as to the time of its continuance. In Brown v. Kling, 101 Cal. 299, 35 Pac. 995, it was said: "The contracts which are here declared void are not declared unlawful. Certain contracts not made in a certain mode are declared void by the statute of frauds, but they are not therefore illegal. This contract is not against public policy. At common law such a contract would have been valid. A contract restraining one from following a lawful trade or calling at all is invalid, because it discourages trade and commerce, and prevents the party from earning a living; but the right to agree to refrain from his calling, within reasonable limits as to space, may have the contrary effect. It encourages trade, for it gives value to a custom or business built up by making it vendible."

Here, however, there is an obligation fixing a specified amount as liquidated damages to be paid for a violation of a contract not to conduct the specified business within a given territory, which territory exceeds the limits prescribed by law. Doubtless, the parties entered into the principal contract supposing they had the right to include all the territory described, and that the prohibition extended to the whole of it, and it may be argued that the stipulated damages were fixed in view of that supposition. If the defendant resumed business within a portion of the described territory which is excluded from its operation by the statute, it is obvious that he would not have incurred any liability under his covenant, though within its express terms; but, if he resumed business within that portion of the territory described in the agreement to which the statute limits it, we see no sufficient reason why it should affect the stipulated damages, since it is not only within the letter of the covenant, but it is clear that the nearer the place where the defendant resumes business is to the place where he formerly conducted business, and to the place where plaintiffs still conduct the same business, the greater the actual damage they would sustain. The mere fact that the covenant embraces a larger territory than that authorized by the statute would not seem to justify us in holding that the stipulation as to damages for a breach should be held void, and that plaintiffs should be put to proof of their actual damages. In Price v. Green, 16 Mees. & W. 346, the covenant was that the covenantor would not carry on the trade of perfumer, toyman, and hair merchant "within the cities of London or Westminster, or within the distance of six hundred miles from the same respectively," and for the observance thereof bound himself in the sum of £5,000 as liquidated damages. The covenantor resumed the prohibited trade in London. It was held that, so far as regards the distance of 600 miles from said cities, the covenant not to engage in said business was void, but not illegal, and was good so far as London and Westminster were concerned. The court of exchequer chamber affirmed the judgment for the whole sum stated, saying: "Here, however, there is but one thing to which the five thousand pounds relates, viz. the restriction of trade, though extended to two different districts; and it is plain that the parties intended that, if the restriction was violated in either district, the sum should be paid, and not that inquiry should be made as to the actual damage and loss sustained." Because of the insufficiency of the complaint, the judgment should be reversed, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend; and I so advise.

We concur: BRITT, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court to sustain the demurrer to the complaint, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend.

PEOPLE v. OWENS. (Cr. 461.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1899.)

JURORS — COMPETENCY — CHALLENGE — CRIMINAL LAW — HOMICIDE — INSTRUCTIONS — OBJEC-TIONS — REVIEW — RECORD.

1. A challenge to a juror "for cause" merely, without specifying the ground, is insufficient.

2. A challenge to a juror, "under subdivision 2 of that section," is insufficient, there being nothing to show what "that" section was.

3. That one is exempt from jury duty is not cause of challenge to him.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 198, 199, and Pen. Code, § 1072, requiring that a person, to be competent as a juror, must be assessed "on property belonging to him," it is enough that he and another, constituting a firm, were together assessed on the firm property.

5. The overruling of a challenge to a juror for "actual bias" is proper, the bias consisting in newspapers or on public rumor, and he stating that he could and would, notwithstanding such opinion, act impartially and fairly on the matters to be submitted to him; that is, would be influenced and guided solely by the law and evidence.

6. Allowing a challenge to a juror for actual bias can be reviewed only where there is such an absence of evidence to sustain the decision that the matter becomes a question of law.

7. That an instruction is indorsed by the court "Given as modified" does not show that part of it was refused, so as to require the court, as provided by Pen. Code, § 1127, in such case, to make an indorsement showing the part given and the part refused, as the modification may have consisted in something added by the court by way of correction or otherwise.

8. Irresistible impulse is not of itself a defense to a charge of felony.

9. An instruction that the fact that defendant attempted to commit suicide is to be taken as evidence of insanity is properly refused, as it makes such fact of itself evidence of insanity, whereas it is only one phase of the evidence, to be considered together with all the other evidence.

10. Objections to a dying statement because it was not read over to deceased after it was written, and was only the substance of the questions and answers, and because, after it was admitted, testimony was given tending to show that, when the statement was made by deceased, she did not have the sense of impending death, are not covered by an objection that it is "immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Stanislaus county.

George C. Owens was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

L. J. Maddux and P. H. Griffin, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

VAN DYKE, J. Defendant was informed against for the murder of his wife. He was tried, and convicted of murder in the first degree, the jury fixing the penalty of death. His motion for a new trial was overruled; and, being sentenced, he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The story in reference to the commission of the crime is told by his daughter Mrs. Tiedeman, who was the only witness of the murder, excepting the defendant. She says: "George C. Owens is my father. I have been married about two months. My mother, Ruth E. Owens, had been living with me and my husband all but about one week of our married life. She came to live with us about a week after we were married. I was married at my sister's, Mrs. Charles Daunt. I was not married at home. My father always said he opposed my marriage. Prior to the time that my mother came to live with me, she had commenced proceedings for a divorce against my father. I saw my father on the 13th of December, 1897, in the morning. He came to my house. I first saw him as he came in the gate and up to the steps. My mother and myself were in the kitchen at the time. We were cooking breakfast. Nobody else in the house except me and my mother. My father came into the house. He came into the side door. I opened the door for him. There was a table in the room there; a small table in the kitchen. There is a window there, and the table was right between the table [window] and the door. My father sat right near the stove. The stove was in the corner of the room. At that time my mother was lifting the mush, and we both sat down to the table then to eat our breakfast. When my father came in, I said to him, 'Good morning, pa.' He said, 'Good morning.' He said it pleasantly, — seemed to. I removed his hat for him, and hung it on a nail back of him. He then began to talk to mamma; asked her if she was ready to go home to him. I had asked him before this to remove his overcoat, as it was a little warm in the room, and he got up, and took his overcoat off, and laid it down on his chair, and sat down again. Then he asked her if she had thought of coming back to him, and she said she had not been thinking of anything of that kind yet; and then I said to him I thought, being as they were both happier apart, I thought they had best live apart, and be friends, and live apart. I thought it would be better for them. They both looked better. I said that in as pleasant a way as I knew how. He jumped up then, and I thought he was going to slap me for what I had said, and I ran out of the back door. There was a screen over the door, and I had to open the screen to get out. It was a spring screen, and it slammed back.

Mamma and I both jumped up from the table, and I ran out of the door. I turned round to look, and he pulled his pistol, and commenced to shoot. He pulled his pistol from his pocket,—from his right side somewhere. I saw him pull his pistol, and mamma said, 'Oh, George, don't shoot!' and [he] did not pay no attention, and shot her through the stomach. He was right close to her. He held the pistol pretty near to her. She said, 'Oh, George, don't shoot!' She said that before he shot. After he fired, she said, 'Oh, George, how could you do that?' At that time I was out on the porch, looking in. He then came to the door, and fired at me,—fired at me the width of the porch; fired through the screen at me. It struck me through the left breast. It came out behind. The ball struck me about here, and came out behind about here (indicating). Then he commenced to load up his pistol again, and I thought— Well, mamma fell after he went back, and shot her a second time. He went back from shooting me, and shot her through the breast. I saw him put the pistol up to her,—right to her, right up close to her breast,—and fire, and then he commenced to load up again. He commenced to load before she fell; commenced to load as she fell. I thought she was dead, and I saw him commence to load, and I ran around on the side of the porch. She fell across the back door. She was coming towards me when she fell. She fell right up close to the door. She was attempting to come towards the back door when she fell, and, when she fell, I thought she was dead, and, seeing him load up again, I ran. I stood on the side porch, and jumped up and down for a while, and hollowed for help. Then I saw one of the ladies coming running, and that gave me courage to run, and, as I went out of the gate, he shot two more shots. I stood there after he had shot me, for my mother's sake. I could not run. I was sort of transfixed to the spot. After that I ran across the street, to Mrs. Reinhart's. I have now told everything that transpired before the shooting at the house,—everything that was said that I can remember of. My mother gave him no cause whatever to do the shooting. Nobody attempted to strike him or injure him in any way." The defense was insanity on the part of the defendant. The points urged for a reversal are technical, and do not go to the merits. Many of them are in reference to the impaneling of the jury, disallowing challenges on the part of the defense, and allowing challenges on the part of the prosecution.

It is claimed that the court erred in disallowing defendant's challenges to 10 of the jurors impaneled, to wit, Dudgeon, Delemater, Corson, Hill, Cogswell, Laughlin, Keaton Howard, Donkin, and McDonald. Juror Cogswell was challenged "for cause" merely. As to Laughlin the transcript shows, "Thereupon the defendant challenged him;" as to Keaton the transcript shows, "The defense thereupon challenged him for cause;" as to Howard, "Thereupon the defendant challenged him for cause." These challenges were manifestly insufficient. A challenge of a juror must specify the particular ground of challenge. People v. Dick, 37 Cal. 277, 279; People v. Renfrow, 41 Cal. 37, 38, 39; People v. Buckley, 49 Cal. 241, 242; People v. Cotta, Id. 166, 169; People v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548, 549.

The challenge to Juror Delemater was, "We challenge the juror under subdivision 2 of that section." There is nothing in the transcript to show what "that" section was, and the challenge was not specific enough, and was properly disallowed, under the authorities already cited. If it was the intention, however, to challenge the juror for actual bias, as defined in subdivision 2 of section 1073 of the Penal Code, then the challenge is not sufficient, and was properly disallowed.

Juror Cogswell, in addition to the challenge for cause already stated, was challenged "on the ground of being an officer in the county, under section 200, Code Civ. Proc."; it appearing on his voir dire that he was a director of the Turlock Irrigation district. The section of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to relates to persons exempt from jury duty, to wit, a person holding a county, city, and county or township office. If a director in an irrigation district were considered as holding an office designated in said section of the Code, still "an exemption from service on a jury is not a cause of challenge, but the privilege of the person exempted." Pen. Code, § 1075.

In addition to a challenge for "actual bias," Juror M. E. McDonald was challenged "upon the ground that his name does not appear upon the assessment roll,—last assessment of the county for property assessed to himself." It appeared that the assessment roll showed an assessment to J. R. and M. E. McDonald, and the juror was M. E. McDonald. The law requires that a person to be competent as a juror must be "assessed on the last assessment roll of the county or city and county on property belonging to him." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 198, 199; Pen. Code, § 1072. The challenge was based upon the fact that it did not appear by the assessment roll that the property was assessed to the juror separately. The law does not require the name of the juror to be separately placed upon the assessment roll, but requires that he should be assessed on the last assessment roll "on property belonging to him." The juror, as a member of the firm of J. R. and M. E. McDonald, was assessed on property belonging to him. "The interest of each member of a partnership extends to every portion of its property." Civ. Code, § 2402. See, also, U. S. v. Hackett, 29 Fed. 848.

Jurors Dudgeon, Corson, Hill, Donkin and McDonald were challenged for "actual bias."

"This court is only allowed to review an order denying a challenge to a juror upon the ground of actual bias when the evidence upon the examination of the juror is so opposed to the decision of the trial court that the question becomes one of law, for it is only upon questions of law that this court has appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases." People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 554, 39 Pac. 944, and also People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 227, 34 Pac. 718. The transcript shows that from the examination of the jurors it appears that the bias complained of was opinions founded upon statements in public journals, or upon public rumor, and each juror in effect stated "that he could and would, notwithstanding such opinion, act impartially and fairly upon the matters to be submitted to him; that is, that he would be influenced and guided solely by the law and the evidence. None of them were disqualified within the rule.

The court allowed the challenges of the prosecution to Jurors Bennett, Spencer, Gilbert, Cox, Bailey, Baer, Turpin, and Hutchins. Bennett testified, in substance, that, owing to his friendship for the defendant, he would be inclined to favor him "just as far as possible," and that he would be affected by that friendship to a certain extent. Gilbert was excused because he thought that his friendship for the parents of the defendant would influence him in arriving at a verdict. Cox testified that his friendship for certain members of the family of defendant (defendant's brothers) would influence him in arriving at a verdict. The same is true of Juror Bailey. Baer was an intimate friend of defendant's near relatives, and was certain that such friendship would affect his verdict. The court, after challenge, found that Juror Turpin was not upon the assessment roll of the preceding year. It was shown by the examination of Hutchins that he would disregard the instructions of the court on the law of irresistible impulse. This court can only review the decision of the lower court in allowing a challenge for actual bias where there is such an absence of evidence to sustain the decision that the matter becomes a question of law. Pen. Code, § 1170; People v. Fredericks, supra; and the other cases cited in connection therewith.

Juror Spencer was excused for cause after he had been sworn in to try the case, but before the completion of the jury. He voluntarily asked to be excused, giving the following among his reasons: "Well, for one or two reasons; the family—Mr. Owens' family—are members of the congregation where I preach quite often, and I might be somewhat favorable to them. And then, again, this feature of capital punishment. When it was asked me, if it was proved beyond the shadow of a doubt,—that doubt business there,—I was a little undecided about it yesterday, and still my mind is; yet at one time I said that I wasn't in favor of hanging a man if there was any possible way of getting around it. Of course, if it is a sure thing, and I know a thing, why, then I would not be against it, of course." And upon further examination, conducted by the court and counsel, it was shown that the juror, in arriving at his verdict, would be influenced by his friendship for the relatives of the defendant. The court may for cause permit a juror to be challenged after such juror is sworn, and before the jury is completed. Pen. Code, § 1068; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 197, 48 Pac. 75.

Pen. Code, § 1127, says: "Either party may present to the court any written charge and request that it be given. * * * If part be given and part refused, the court must distinguish, showing by the endorsement what part of the charge was given and what part refused." It is claimed by counsel for the defendant that the court below violated this provision in instruction 3 requested by defendant, and instructions 3 and 9 requested by the prosecution. Each of these instructions was indorsed by the court "Given as modified." "Modified" does not necessarily import that part was given and part refused. The modification may have consisted in something added by the court by way of correction or otherwise, and, as every intendment in favor of the correctness of the court's action must be indulged, it may be presumed that these particular modifications did consist in something added, and not in refusing part and giving part.

It is also complained on the part of the defendant that the court erred in refusing instructions 7, 8, and 9 requested by the defendant. These offered instructions embody the doctrine of irresistible impulse, which is not recognized in this state. People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 54; People v. Hoin, Id. 120; People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 335, 343, 38 Pac. 945; Marceau v. Insurance Co., 101 Cal. 340, 35 Pac. 856, and 36 Pac. 813. In the latter case it is said: "We cannot recognize the so-called 'plea of irresistible impulse' of itself as a legal defense to any charge of felony."

Instruction 11 requested by defendant, and refused by the court, is as follows: "You are instructed that the fact that the defendant attempted to commit suicide is to be taken as evidence of insanity." The case of People v. Messersmith, 61 Cal. 246, cited by defendant's counsel, does not support his contention. There it was said: "But where a court unqualifiedly tells a jury, as matter of law, that an assumed fact does not prove a fact in dispute, it is error. Such a charge should not be given when it is necessary to draw an inference of fact. An inference of fact, where it does not arise as a presumption of law, must be drawn by the jury whose duty it is to pass upon the insufficiency of the evidence." The instruction requested and refused was improper, as it made the mere fact of an attempt to commit suicide in itself evidence of insanity, whereas it is only one phase of the evidence, to be considered together with all the other evidence in the case.

Counsel for defendant contend that error was committed in the admission of the dying statement of the deceased, because it was not read over to her after it was written, and was only the substance of the questions and answers, and because the witness for the defense called after the admission of this statement gave testimony tending to show that, when the statement was made by the deceased, she did not have the sense of impending death. The only objection that was urged to the admission in evidence of the dying statement was "on the ground that it is immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent." This does not cover any of the objections now urged against its admission. It was material, relevant, and, in the absence of any more specific objection, was competent. "We have repeatedly held that counsel must make their objections in such a manner as to leave no doubt as to the precise ground upon which it is placed. We do not think that that was done in the present case, and we do not think that we should be justified in reversing the judgment on this ground." People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 519. See, also, People v. Mahoney, 77 Cal. 532, 20 Pac. 73; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 507; Mayo v. Mazeaux, 38 Cal. 442; Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 421, 427, 33 Pac. 271; Water Co. v. Swartz, 99 Cal. 278, 284, 33 Pac. 878. In People v. Foo, 112 Cal. 23, 44 Pac. 455, this court, after referring to a number of cases on the point in question, say: "The consensus of opinion, as illustrated by these cases and many others, is that, where the proffered evidence is imperfect by the lack of preliminary proof which may or may not be supplied by the party offering the evidence, the objector must specifically point out the defect by his objection; and, if he fails to do so, it is waived, and the general objections of 'immaterial, inadmissible, irrelevant, and incompetent,' made when the evidence is offered to the jury, are not sufficient to warrant an investigation on appeal of the insufficiency of such preliminary proof." There was no motion to strike out this dying declaration after the defendant's witness gave testimony tending to show that it was not made under a sense of impending death, which testimony, however, only had the effect to raise a conflict in the evidence as to the state of decedent's mind at the time referred to. This court cannot say that the ruling of the court below in this behalf was not correct.

From the examination of the whole record, we see no error on the part of the trial court, and the judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.; TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment of affirmance, and also in the opinion of Mr. Justice VAN DYKE, except that part thereof which discusses the subject of the allowance of challenges of the prosecution to certain jurors. I do not object to the correctness of what is said on that subject; but the allowance of a challenge by the prosecution is not a subject of exception, under section 1170 of the Penal Code. That section gives no exception to a decision allowing a challenge; and although it was held in People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 227, 34 Pac. 718, following a concurring opinion in People v. Wong Ark, 96 Cal. 135, 30 Pac. 1115, that a defendant has a constitutional right to except to an order disallowing a challenge for actual bias interposed by him, still that ruling does not give him the right to except to an order of the court allowing a challenge by the prosecution. He is entitled only to a fair jury.

I concur: HENSHAW, J.

LOUPE v. SMITH. (S. F. 757.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1899.)
STATUTES—IMPLIED REPEAL—MARRIED WOMEN—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEEDS.

1. By Civ. Code, §§ 1186, 1191, a certain form of acknowledgment was required of a married woman to conveyances of her separate property. Section 1187 provided, "A conveyance by a married woman has the same effect as if she were unmarried, and may be acknowledged in the same manner (except as mentioned in the last section, but such conveyance has no validity until so acknowledged)." Section 1093 provided, "No estate in the real property of a married woman passes by grant purporting to be executed or acknowledged by her, unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her in the manner prescribed by sections 1186 and 1191." By Act March 19, 1891, sections 1186 and 1191, and the parenthetical clause of section 1187, were expressly repealed. Held, that section 1093 was not thereby repealed by implication, and hence a married woman must acknowledge her deed.

2. Civ. Code, § 158, providing that either husband or wife may enter into any engagement with the other, or with any other persons, respecting property, which either might, if unmarried, does not dispense with the requirement of section 1093 that a married woman shall acknowledge a deed of her separate real property.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by Amalia Loupe against Sidney M. Smith. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for appellant. J. J. Roche and W. A. Bowden, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from judgment. Action to quiet title brought by the respondent, a married woman. The appellant answers, and files a cross complaint, setting up a contract in writing between the parties for the exchange of the land described in the complaint for lands of his own, with bonus of $15,000 to be paid by him. The consideration is the mutual covenants of the parties. The contract is signed by both parties; the husband of the respondent signing her name as her attorney to the first contract, and the respondent affirming it by a supplemental agreement signed by herself. But the contract was never acknowledged by the respondent. The court below held for that reason that it was not her contract, and gave judgment in her favor. The case is an exceptional one, growing out of the transition state of the law in reference to married women, when the Code was gradually throwing off the disabilities which were meant as a shield for her, but were often used by her as a sword. The appellant by his cross complaint claims specific performance of the contract, and damages for its breach. But, deferring to the ruling of this court in the cases of Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695, Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 521, and Mathews v. Davis, 102 Cal. 202, 36 Pac. 358, which denied the relief of a specific performance when there was no acknowledgment by the married woman, he urges now only his claim for damages. His contention is that a denial of the gracious equitable remedy of a specific performance does not necessarily involve a denial of the legal remedy in damages. His main contention, however, is that the cases above cited were decided before the amendments to the Civil Code of 1891, and that, as a result of those amendments, the necessity of any acknowledgment by a married woman was removed. The contract was executed in December, 1894, between the time of the amendments of March 19, 1891, and the amendment of March 14, 1895. The respondent's position is that the true effect of the amendments of 1891 was to repeal all the provisions requiring an acknowledgment by a married woman to a conveyance of her property. If he is right in this position, he would be entitled to a specific performance. The argument is based upon the implication of repeal attending the express repeals of 1891. The argument is necessarily technical; and, in order to appreciate the scope and intent of the repeals of 1891, it is best to put the sections before the eye as they stood before and after the repeals. Before 1891 they stood as follows (Civ. Code):

"Sec. 1186. The acknowledgment of a married woman to an instrument purporting to be executed by her must not be taken unless she is made acquainted by the officer with the contents of the instrument on an examination without the hearing of her husband; nor certified unless she thereupon acknowledges to the officer that she executed the instrument, and that she does not wish to retract such execution.

"Sec. 1187. A conveyance by a married woman has the same effect as if she were unmarried, and may be acknowledged in the same manner (except as mentioned in the last section, but such conveyance has no validity until so acknowledged).

"Sec. 1191. The certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman must be substantially in the following form." (Then follows the special form of acknowledgment apart from the husband.)

"Sec. 1093. No estate in the real property of a married woman passes by grant purporting to be executed or acknowledged by her, unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her in the manner prescribed by sections eleven hundred and eighty-six and eleven hundred and ninety-one."

By this system a certain form of acknowledgment was required of a married woman to give validity to conveyances of her separate property. By the act of March 19, 1891, sections 1186 and 1191, and a part of section 1187, as italicized, were repealed. But section 1093 was left unrepealed and unamended. Undoubtedly there was careless legislation, for the effect was to leave section 1093 with references made wholly meaningless by the repeal of the sections referred to in it. But the question presented is whether the section was left without meaning when these references were left without meaning. That the legislation was careless and awkward is no reason why the courts should not seek for a meaning in the fragment left. If by reasonable interpretation there is any force or significance discernible in the section, there is no repeal by implication. If there is no meaning in what the express repeals have left standing, they must be held to have repealed it by implication. The argument of the appellant is that the repeals of sections 1186 and 1191 and of the latter part of 1187 leave no form or manner of acknowledgment provided for, and that the intention is apparent to require no acknowledgment at all. Consolidate the provisions which survive the repeals of 1891, and the sections will read substantially as follows:

"Sec. 1093. No estate in the real property of a married woman passes by grant purporting to be executed or acknowledged by her, unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her."

By this collocation it is apparent that there is meaning left in section 1093, in spite of the amendment of section 1187, section 1187 as amended providing that a married woman may acknowledge, and section 1093 providing that no estate shall pass unless she does acknowledge, the instrument. Thus, section 1093 can well exist, and be read in conjunction with section 1187 as amended. A certain meaning, indeed, is obvious. The Code provides for the certification of an instrument, either upon acknowledgment by the party or upon proof by subscribing witness. It may be that in 1891 the Code, in gradually removing the obstructions by which the law had protected the conveyances of a married woman, still designed to require of her to appear before an officer and make her personal acknowledgment. That formality might assist her to escape fraud, undue influence, or over-persuasion. It allowed some little locus poenitentiae before the instrument took effect. But, even if the effect of the amendments of 1891 were the result, not of design, but of careless legislation, the courts cannot amend what the legislature left unamended. So long as a definite and intelligible scheme is left, deduced from reading the two sections together, one does not efface the other. The position of the appellant that the repeal of the prescribed form of acknowledgment involves a repeal of the requirement of any acknowledgment is unsound; for section 1187 still provides that "a conveyance by a married woman, * * * may be acknowledged," while section 1093 provides that no estate of a married woman passes "unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her." There is certainly no difficulty in reading the two together. We cannot relegate 1093 to the waste basket as the "lifeless fragment" the appellant calls it, when we find a decided meaning still surviving in it. By the amendment of 1895 section 1093 was made to read as follows: "A grant or conveyance of real property made by a married woman may be made, executed and acknowledged in the same manner and has the same effect as if she were unmarried." But this throws no light upon the question under consideration; for we cannot read the intention of the legislative repeals made in 1891 by the reflex light of a repealing act passed four years later. The appellant cites three New York cases which, he claims, have a bearing on the question: Blood v. Humphrey, 17 Barb. 660; Andrews v. Shaffer, 12 How. Prac. 441; and Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 271. But they will be found to have no analogy. The Revised Statutes contain the general provision that the acknowledgment of a married woman residing in the state shall not be valid unless taken apart from her husband, etc., and no estate shall pass unless so acknowledged. The statutes of 1848 and 1849 provide that any married woman may take by gift, grant, devise, or bequest from any person other than her husband, and hold and convey in the same manner and with the like effect as if she were unmarried. The cases hold that "when a married woman has received a grant in fee of lands since the passage of the act of 1848 and the amendment of 1849, she may convey the same in the same manner, and with the like effect, as if she were unmarried." It was simply the application of the new statute to property acquired and held under it. The conclusion thus reached in reference to the effect of these amendments must defeat the appellant's claim for damages, as well as for specific performance. He founds his claim for damages upon Civ. Code, § 158, which is as follows: "Either husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried: subject, in transactions between themselves, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, as defined by the title on Trusts." The purpose of this section is to release the wife from servitude to her husband, and to give her a larger power to contract than she had at common law. It is in the chapter on Husband and Wife, and not in the chapter on Transfers, and while the old forms of acknowledgments were in force this section was never held to relieve the wife from the necessity of complying with those forms in contracts affecting her real estate. It had its own existence, while the other sections had theirs. It has its application to the wife's capacity of contracting, while the others provided forms for the acknowledgment of her contracts. And since the repeals of 1891, section 158 does not dispense with the use of whatever forms survived those repeals, any more than it did before the repeals took effect. If the contracts of a married woman relating to her lands were invalid, unless she used the forms of acknowledgment prescribed by section 1191, they were invalid in 1894, unless she made the acknowledgment required by section 1093; and it must follow that the respondent's contract of December, 1894, was invalid for every purpose. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—GIFT OF PUBLIC MONIES—EXEMPT FIREMEN'S RELIEF FUND.

St. 1895, p. 107, which requires every municipal corporation in which an exempt fire company exists to annually set apart a sum to be devoted to the relief of disabled exempt firemen residing therein, without restricting the benefits to such as have performed service in the particular municipality providing the fund, is contrary to Const. art. 4, §§ 31, 32, which prohibit the legislature from making or authorizing a gift of public moneys.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Petition by George Taylor against F. K. Mott and others, as members of and composing the council of the city of Oakland, for a writ of mandate. From a judgment granting the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

GRAY, C. Appeal from final judgment and order granting plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandate to compel appellants, in their capacity as the city council of Oakland, to set apart from the funds of that city money, not exceeding $12,000, sufficient to pay all warrants issued by the board of trustees of the exempt firemen's relief fund, and audited by the auditor of said city. The action is based upon an act of the legislature entitled "An act to create an exempt firemen's relief fund in the several counties, cities and counties, cities and towns of the state and relating to the enrollment, formation into fire companies, and services as firemen of such exempt firemen," approved March 26, 1895. See St. 1895, p. 107. The case was tried on an answer to the petition, and the appeal is taken on the judgment roll, from which it appears that the court found that no incorporated exempt fire company existed in the city of Oakland on March 26, 1895, the date of the approval of said act, and the time when it took effect, and this is the first ground for reversal contended for by appellant. The second ground for a reversal of the judgment stated by defendant is that the act known as the "Exempt Firemen's Relief Fund Act" is unconstitutional. It will be best to examine this ground first, because the first ground stated by appellant involves an interpretation of the language of the act; and, if the act is decided to be unconstitutional, it may not be necessary to interpret its language in the respect pointed out in appellant's brief.

The act in question is mandatory in its terms, and requires the governing authority of any city and county, city, or county, or town of the state in which an incorporated exempt fire company exists to appoint five exempt firemen as a board of trustees of the exempt firemen's relief fund. Then it provides for the setting apart from the municipal funds of a sum not exceeding $12,000 annually, to be devoted by such board of trustees to the relief of disabled, sick, injured, and infirm exempt firemen. It also provides for the enrollment of exempt firemen, and that they shall be assigned to and perform certain duties as firemen, in cases of great public emergency, under the direction of the chief of the fire department, without compensation therefor other than the relief in case of disability already mentioned. Sections 31 and 32 of article 4 of our constitution prohibit the legislature from making or authorizing the gift of any of the public moneys, state or municipal, to any person, association, or corporation; and it would seem that the provisions of the act in question are in conflict with these sections of our constitution. Section 3 of the act provides that: "The board of trustees of the exempt fireman's relief fund shall enroll every exempt fireman who has received, or may hereafter receive, a certificate under the laws of this state that he is an exempt fireman and who is a resident of the county, city and county, city or town, and who desires to avail himself of the benefits of this act and to render the services herein mentioned." Section 5 of the act provides further that "said fireman's relief fund shall be applied to the relief of such enrolled exempt firemen who, after their enrollment as herein provided, shall become disabled from injuries, sickness or the infirmities of age to earn a livelihood, and said board shall grant relief from time to time to such enrolled member during the disability as it deems just," not exceeding $25 per month. A careful inspection of this statute will disclose that it creates a liability on the part of a municipality where no legal liability existed before, and that by its terms the funds of such municipality may be disbursed among those who have never performed fire service, or any other service, for that particular municipality. Individuals become exempt firemen and receive certificates as such under the provisions of sections 3337 and 3338 of the Political Code, and they are now to be found residing on farms and in the towns all through the state. Some of them are already aged and infirm, and from that and other causes are unfitted to perform any service as active firemen; yet, if this act is upheld, all such from the four corners of the state might congregate in a single city, establish a residence there, compel the local governing authority to enroll them as exempt firemen, and, without ever doing anything as a legal consideration therefor, claim and receive a part of the funds of such city. A comparison of the act in question with an act passed for a similar purpose by the legislature of 1889, will direct the attention at once to the want of consideration for the gift contemplated by the act of 1895. See St. 1889, p. 108. This act of 1889 provides that no person shall be entitled to share in the funds of the municipality unless he shall have served in the fire department of that particular municipality for 15 years, or shall have received injury in the actual discharge of fire duty therein. No such condition or restriction as this is to be found in the act of 1895, but, on the contrary, all exempt firemen, by becoming residents and being enrolled, must be permitted to participate in the funds of the municipality when they become disabled, whether they have ever performed any service for such municipality or not. This constitutes a gift, and makes the statute subject to the constitutional objections already pointed out, and which have already been laid down by the supreme court in the following cases: Conlin v. Board, 99 Cal. 17, 33 Pac. 753; Patty v. Colgan, 97 Cal. 251, 31 Pac. 1133; Bourn v. Hart, 93 Cal. 321, 28 Pac. 951. The act on which the petition for the writ was based being unconstitutional and void, it follows that the judgment granting the writ must fall. For these reasons we advise that the judgment be reversed.

We concur: PRINGLE, C.; HAYNES, C.

HARDIN v. DICKEY. (Sac. 301.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—JOINT OWNERS—RIGHTS—NOTES—MATURITY—PAYMENT—FINDINGS—PREMATURE ACTION—JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

1. Plaintiff's assignor and defendant were joint owners of a mortgage, payable to defendant, who executed a note to the former for his interest, "to be paid pro rata out of any sum paid on said mortgage, and not to be paid until that time." With the consent and under direction of plaintiff's assignor, the mortgage was foreclosed, and defendant purchased the property in his own name, without any intention to profit thereby, but for the interest of both parties. A sheriff's certificate was executed to defendant, and he receipted for the purchase money, but nothing was in fact paid. Held, that as nothing was paid on the mortgage, and as the purchase and execution of the receipt did not constitute payment thereof, defendant was not liable on the note.

2. A receipt given an officer to make up his record in a foreclosure suit may be explained by parol evidence showing that no money was in fact received.

3. A finding that defendant did not collect a note in gold coin does not imply a collection in other moneys, where it also stated that defendant did not collect the sum in gold coin "or in any manner or sums or at all."

4. A finding that defendant held property purchased at a foreclosure sale for the use of himself and plaintiff subject to the same rights as he held the mortgage is proper, where defendant purchased with plaintiff's knowledge and consent, for their protection, and each agreed to share all expenses jointly, until it was disposed of.

5. The fact that defendant bought property mortgaged to himself and another, at foreclosure sale, in his own name, does not alone constitute an appropriation thereof to his own use.

6. Where an action for the collection of a note is commenced before its maturity, it is no bar to a subsequent action; hence a general judgment for defendant is proper.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by James A. Hardin against W. J. Dickey. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Meux & Johnston, for appellant. H. H. Welsh and F. H. Short, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial, and from judgment. Action brought to recover $1,180 upon an instrument in writing. The defendant answered, making denials, and setting up affirmative matter in defense. Demurrer to the answer was interposed, chiefly on the ground of alleged insufficiency of the denials. Demurrer was overruled, and the parties went to trial, and judgment passed for defendant. The overruling of the demurrer is assigned as error. It is claimed also that the evidence does not sustain the findings, or the findings support the judgment. For the more convenient solution of these questions it will be well to reverse the order of considering them, and ascertain—First, whether the findings support the judgment; second, whether the findings are sustained by the evidence; and, third, whether the answer is sufficient to support the findings.

1. Do the findings support the judgment? They are substantially as follows: On November 8, 1889, W. J. Dickey, the defendant in this action, and one M. J. Donahoo, were entitled to collect and receive from D. R. McKenzie and Frank Rule the sum of $3,376.58; and, for the purpose of securing the indebtedness, McKenzie and Rule gave a note and mortgage for that amount. The defendant Dickey was entitled to about two-thirds of the amount, and Donahoo to about one-third thereof. And it was agreed between them that the note and mortgage should be taken in the name of the defendant, and be by him collected or foreclosed for the benefit of the defendant and said Donahoo in the proportion aforesaid. In evidence of this agreement, Dickey gave to Donahoo, on the same 8th day of November, the written instrument set forth in the complaint, which is the foundation of the action. The following is the instrument: "$1,180. Fresno, Cal., Nov. 8, 1889. Twelve months after date, without grace, for value received, I promise to pay to M. J. Donahoo or order the sum of eleven hundred and eighty dollars, said amount now included in mtg. of Rule & McKenzie to W. J. Dickey, of even date, and to be paid pro rata out of any sum pd. on said mtg., & not to be paid until that time, with interest thereon at the rate of one per cent. per month from date until paid, both principal and interest payable in gold coin of the government of the United States, said interest payable —, and, if not so paid, the interest to draw interest the same as the principal; and, if this note is collected by suit, — agree and promise that the court having jurisdiction allow a reasonable attorney's fee, together with all legal expenses, to be made a part of the judgment. W. J. Dickey." Thereafter an action was brought to foreclose another mortgage on these mortgaged premises, and Dickey, defendant herein, was made a defendant. Dickey, with the knowledge and consent of Donahoo, and under his direction, filed a cross-complaint in the action, setting up his mortgage, which was on the trial adjudged to be prior and superior to the other; and the result was that the mortgaged premises were sold under foreclosure, and bought in by the said Dickey at the sum of $6,118.20, the amount due on his mortgage, no other person bidding at the sale. Sheriff's certificate was executed to Dickey, who receipted to the sheriff for the purchase money; but no money was in fact received by Dickey, nor any property or thing of value, except what was so conveyed to him under the foreclosure. Dickey holds the mortgaged premises conveyed to him in the same manner and subject to the same rights and obligations as he had held the note and mortgage of McKenzie and Rule.

Upon these facts, the plaintiff, who sues as the assignee of Donahoo, is not entitled to recover upon the instrument set forth in the complaint. Nothing has been paid on the mortgage. Wallace v. Randol (Cal.) 54 Pac. 842. There can be no mistaking the intention of the instrument given by Dickey to Donahoo when read in the light of the surrounding circumstances. It was to sink or swim with the mortgage of Rule and McKenzie. "I promise to pay the sum of eleven hundred and eighty dollars, said amount now included in mortgage of Rule and McKenzie to W. J. Dickey of even date, and to be paid pro rata out of any sum paid on said mortgage, and not to be paid until that time," etc. The appellant contends that the buying in by Dickey of the mortgaged premises, and the receipt given by him to the sheriff, constitute a payment within the meaning of the instrument. But, between the two joint owners of the Rule and McKenzie mortgage, it cannot be that it was intended that one should take the chances of collection, and not the other. Even if the words were less explicit than they are, a court would resist the conclusion that, when the collection of the mortgage was to be made for account of both owners, the buying in by the nominal party at the foreclosure sale, in default of other bidders, and in the absence of any apparent intention to profit by the purchase, would make him liable to the co-owner. To foreclose a mortgage is merely to subject the property to the satisfaction of the lien. And in this case the foreclosure seems to have been forced upon Dickey by the aggression of the other mortgage on the same property, claiming priority. There are no legal objections to this conclusion. The appellant claims that it was error to permit the respondent to contradict his receipt to the sheriff. There is no force in this contention. A receipt may always be explained, and never so well as when it is given to the officer to make up his record in a foreclosure sale. This disposes of the main question on the judgment roll.

Criticism is made of the finding that the defendant did not collect the sum of $6,118.20 in gold coin, on the ground that there is, by negative pregnant, an implication that it was collected in other moneys. But the criticism is not just. The entire finding is: "That the defendant did not * * * on the 24th day of September, 1895, or at any other time, or at all, collect or receive from the said Rule and McKenzie note and mortgage, or from either of them, or at all, the sum of $6,118.20 in gold coin of the United States, or in any manner or sums or at all." The appellant, in his criticism, omitted the words in italics.

Objections are made to the verbal accuracy of the findings in reference to the assignment and to the title of plaintiff. But, in view of the affirmance of the judgment in favor of the defendant, they may be disregarded.

2. Does the evidence justify these findings? No objection is made to the finding that the note and mortgage were owned by Dickey and Donahoo in the proportions alleged; nor to the findings that it was agreed between Donahoo and Dickey that the note and mortgage should be taken in the name of Dickey, and be by him collected or foreclosed for their joint benefit; nor to the finding that, with the knowledge and consent and under the direction of Donahoo, before his assignment to the plaintiff, Dickey filed his cross complaint to foreclose the mortgage. None of these material facts are attacked. Objection is made only to the general findings that the defendant did not collect the note of Rule and McKenzie, and that there is nothing due to the plaintiff; and upon them the chief argument of the appellant hinges. Objection is also made to the finding that the defendant holds the property for the use and benefit of himself and of Donahoo, or the plaintiff as his assignee, in the same manner and subject to the same rights and obligations as the note and mortgage were held by him. But this is a conclusion clearly justified by the circumstances under which the purchase was made by the defendant. The findings show the knowledge, consent, and direction of Donahoo to the foreclosure. And the plaintiff says that in the fore part of June, 1894, he notified Dickey that he had the note. "I called at his office, and had a pleasant interview with him, and told him I had this note, and how I came by it. He explained to me the situation of things, but did not tell me whether or not he would ever get anything out of the Rule and McKenzie mortgage and note. I spoke to him about the mortgage. At that time Mr. Meux was fighting the mortgage, which turned out to be a second mortgage, against this mortgage, and that had not been decided; and Mr. Dickey told me he was positive that our mortgage would take precedence, and he wanted the first mortgage. He was confident we would win the case, and no trouble about it, only took time." The defendant says: "Donahoo and myself were to jointly share all the expense; pay all the taxes and other moneys that were necessary to keep the property in repair until we could get rid of it. We were to jointly bear our proportion of the expenses. I did not receive any money; simply bid in the property to protect myself and Mr. Donahoo. No money was passed of any kind. I saw Colonel Hardin in my office a year or so ago; I disremember the date. He came in, and introduced himself, and told me what he came for. He told me he had a note from Mr. Donahoo, and he says: 'Well, I would like to sell it to you.' 'Well,' I says, 'I don't know yet whether we will ever get anything out of it or not. If we don't, it ain't worth anything.' * * * Well, the colonel made me an offer in regard to what he would take on it, and I told him that there might be a possibility of nothing ever coming out of it. I says, 'It may be that we will never get anything out of it, and I don't wish to buy it,' and I told Mr. Donahoo,—he offered to sell it to me at the time it was taken originally,—and I told him I wouldn't have it, I had enough in there, that I would protect what I had of course, and try to get it out. That is the import of the whole thing."

The strenuous contention of the appellant is that the buying in of the property by the respondent in his own name was an appropriation of it to his own use, and forced a maturity of the instrument sued on. Counsel says: "The only proposition, we think, that is presented to this court for consideration in this regard, is, did the plaintiff ever authorize the defendant to buy in the property in the manner it was purchased at the foreclosure sale?" It is shown that all the foreclosure proceedings, up to and including the decree, were had with the knowledge and consent of Donahoo, who was then the owner, and that, after the assignment to the plaintiff, he (the plaintiff) was in pleasant relations with the defendant, who says, "I explained to him about the foreclosure suit." Counsel complain that the defendant bought in his own name, and not in the joint names of himself and plaintiff, and that he has never tendered a declaration of trust, nor a conveyance to plaintiff of his interest in the property. But in the absence of any evidence tending to show any demand for such a declaration of trust or conveyance, or any refusal, the argument of the appellant comes with an ill grace in the same breath in which he takes exception to the very finding which declares a trust in his favor. He must submit to having a trust thrust upon him; for, there being no evidence whatever tending to show a denial of the rights of the plaintiff, the question is reduced to the single point whether the fact of buying, in the absence of any other bidders at the foreclosure sale, and of buying in his own name, is an appropriation to his own use, so as to constitute payment as between the plaintiff and himself; and on that point the question is of easy solution. The cases cited by counsel as to what is payment as between debtor and creditor have no bearing upon the question arising here between the two joint owners. The action of this defendant seems to have been for the best interest of both parties. It was not in any respect aggressive, but wholly defensive. It does not appear that he could have postponed the foreclosure sale with any prospect of a better result. By his purchase he put the property in a better position for a resale in the interest of himself and his associates, for he avoided the incubus of an equity of redemption. In view of the facts proved and of the law resulting from the situation, there can be no doubt that the rights of the parties were not affected by taking the property in satisfaction of and as a substitute for the lien of the mortgage upon it.

Another question which presents itself is whether the rights of the plaintiff in the property purchased, or to some subsequent proceeding, are prejudiced by the entry of a general judgment in this case in favor of the defendant. But it is well settled that this action, having been brought before the maturity of the obligation, is no bar to any subsequent action or proceeding by the plaintiff. Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266. And the plaintiff is at liberty to elect whether to await a conversion of the property into money by the defendant, and then collect his proportionate share at law, or to pursue such equitable remedy as he may prefer. As his action in this case was at law for the collection of the amount claimed to be due on the instrument, a general judgment for the defendant was proper.

3. Some of the denials in the answer are artificial and insufficient; but the matter set up affirmatively is a denial, and is sufficient to support the findings. I advise that the order denying the motion for new trial, and the judgment, be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.; GRAY, C.

NASH v. KRELING. (S. F. 937.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1899.)

CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—INSTRUCTIONS—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

1. One about to enter the employ of another demanded $100 per week for the term of two years. The employer offered him $75 a week for the first year, and $100 for the second. He declined, but agreed to contract for $90 a week for the first year, and, if business should not then warrant the $10 raise, he would wait until it did. This was accepted. Held, that this was a contract for one year only.

2. In an action for salary as stage manager of a theater, the court charged that if plaintiff agreed to devote his whole time to the theater, and to the duties of his employment, and to advise with defendant during business hours, and when requested, regarding the stage or business affairs, but failed and neglected any portion of his duties, he could not recover. Held, that the charge was not prejudicially erroneous, as allowing the original written contract to be varied by parol, or as implying, without evidence to support it, that his employment included other duties than that of stage manager; the evidence showing that his duties included the alleged additional promises, and the court having also charged that defendant employed plaintiff as stage manager, and could not require of him any formal contract differing from that shown by the original correspondence, nor to perform any duties not appertaining to his employment, and that the employer was entitled to the employee's services during reasonable hours of his employment, and that the jury must determine plaintiff's duties as stage manager, and whether he had neglected them.

3. A verdict on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by John E. Nash against Ernestine Kreling. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, for appellant. H. H. Lowenthal, for respondent.

BRITT, C. The trial of this case resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant. Plaintiff avers that defendant employed him for a term of two years, beginning August 6, 1894, to be stage manager of a theater conducted by her, known as the "Tivoli Opera House," in the city of San Francisco, at a salary of $90 per week for the first year, and $100 per week for the second. On June 2, 1895, she discharged him from said employment; and he sues in this action for alleged damages sustained by reason of such discharge during 12 weeks, beginning July 1, 1895, amounting, at the alleged rate of salary for that period, to $1,150. The defense is that plaintiff was employed from week to week only, and also that he so neglected the duties of his employment as to justify his discharge, even if his contract was for the fixed period alleged by him.

To establish the terms of the contract, plaintiff produced in evidence a series of letters and telegrams which passed between himself, at various points in the Eastern states, and defendant, in San Francisco. From these it appeared that their negotiation related at first to an employment of plaintiff as stage manager of said theater for two years, plaintiff's first demand being $100 a week for the entire term. At length defendant offered him $75 a week for the first year, and $100 a week for the second. Plaintiff replied declining the proposal, and added: "I will sign a contract for ninety dollars a week for the first year, and, if at the end of that time business should not warrant the ten-dollar raise, I would wait until it did,"—to which defendant rejoined: "Your terms, ninety dollars a week, accepted, * * * which you can consider a contract until you get here, and then I will draw up proper one to suit." No other, however, was drawn up at any time. Plaintiff came to San Francisco, and entered upon said employment, and received, it seems, compensation at $90 per week from August 6, 1894, until he was discharged, as stated. The court instructed the jury that said letters and telegrams constituted a contract upon the part of defendant to pay plaintiff for one year, but no longer.

On the issue whether plaintiff habitually neglected the requirements of his position of stage manager, and so warranted the defendant in discharging him (Civ. Code, § 2000), it became necessary to prove what his duties were, and on this point the evidence was discordant. The testimony for plaintiff tended to show that the duties of his employment "were entirely behind the curtain." There was other evidence, however, tending to show that, besides supervising the immediate production of plays and operas, it was the duty of the stage manager at said theater to keep informed of new attractions of that character, and of disengaged actors and actresses who might be available for the house, and negotiate for both new pieces and new people, subject to the control of the general management, and otherwise to assist the management "both on and off the stage." There was also evidence that, when plaintiff arrived in San Francisco, he told defendant that he would "look out generally for the Tivoli, get new people and new plays, and devote all his time to the Tivoli," and consult with her about its affairs. Among the instructions given by the court to the jury was the following: "I charge you that if you find, from the evidence, the plaintiff agreed with Mrs. Kreling, upon his arrival in San Francisco, to devote his whole time and attention to the Tivoli, and to the duties of his employment, and he then promised and agreed with the defendant to advise and consult with her during business hours with regard to the stage affairs or business affairs of the Tivoli Opera House, and agreed to advise with her when requested to do so, in consideration of the receipt of ninety dollars per week, and if you are satisfied from the evidence that he habitually failed and neglected any part or portion of said duties, then plaintiff cannot recover in this action." The court also charged the jury, in substance, that defendant employed plaintiff to be stage manager of her theater; that she was not entitled to require of him the execution of any formal contract differing from that shown by the letters and telegrams, nor to perform any duties not appertaining to his employment; that an employer is entitled to the time and services of the employé during the reasonable hours of his employment; and, further, with considerable iteration, that they (the jury) must determine from the evidence in the case what were plaintiff's duties in the capacity of stage manager, and whether he habitually neglected any of them.

1. Plaintiff complains of the instruction that the contract of employment evidenced by said letters and telegrams was for a term of one year only. As the jury found that plaintiff was not entitled to recover at all, not even for loss of the contract during the closing weeks of the first year, it is not apparent that he could have been injured by this instruction. But the view of the court was correct. Plaintiff's final proposal was for one year's service, at $90 per week, stating also a willingness to continue the employment at the same compensation until "business should warrant the ten dollars raise." This was a modification of his previous demand of $100 a week for a second year. But we do not find that plaintiff has anywhere alleged or claimed that defendant agreed to such modification. She accepted his terms of $90 a week for one year, but there was no agreement as to wages for another year, and hence no employment beyond the first year; for there is nothing in the correspondence between the parties to indicate that the defendant had in mind any period of service for which the rate of compensation was not fixed in advance.

2. The instruction which has been quoted above at length, relating to what plaintiff agreed to do, is strenuously attacked. Plaintiff contends that the instruction ignored the existence of a contract before his arrival in San Francisco; or, at least, that it allowed the terms of such prior contract, which was evidenced by writing, to be added to by parol, and that it implied, without evidence to support the assumption, that duties other than those of stage manager were included in his employment. The hypothetical statement in the instruction of duties which might be found to pertain to plaintiff's position did not, as modified by other parts of the charge, transcend the evidence which tended to attribute those duties to such position, irrespective of any agreement he might have made after reaching San Francisco; that is to say, there was evidence that, to perform properly the duties of stage manager at the Tivoli Theater, plaintiff should have done those things, whether he specifically so promised when he came to San Francisco or not. The contract evidenced by the writings was, as the court held, a continuing one, good after plaintiff reached San Francisco, as well as before; and the continuance of its provisions is probably what the court meant by reference in the instruction to plaintiff's agreements upon his arrival, treating those agreements as particulars of plaintiff's existing obligation; and, in view of other instructions given, we do not think the jury could have understood that the contract created by the letters and telegrams was to be at all disregarded, or that plaintiff was under obligation to serve defendant, except within the terms of that contract. They were told, in effect, that the written communications between the parties amounted to a contract, and that plaintiff was not required to sign any contract at all different therefrom, nor to perform any duties not included therein; also, that it was for them to determine from the evidence before them what constituted his duties as stage manager, and whether he neglected such duties. The reference in the instruction to the obligation of plaintiff to devote his whole time and attention to the Tivoli was qualified by the words following, "and to the duties of his employment," and by the charge elsewhere that "an employer is entitled to the time and services of an employé within all the reasonable hours of his employment." From the whole charge the jury can hardly have inferred, as supposed by plaintiff, that he was required to "be continually at the beck and call of the defendant."

In reviewing the charge to a jury, it must be held in mind that its different parts are to be considered in their mutual bearings, and as explanatory of each other, and that the jury is presumed to be capable of understanding the proper connection of the several parts, and their application to the facts. If, thus construed, the charge fairly and correctly states the law necessary for the guidance of the jury, the judgment founded on their verdict should not be reversed, because some portion of the charge does not in its detached form contain all necessary qualifications which are made sufficiently prominent elsewhere. This is elementary doctrine. People v. Bagnell, 31 Cal. 409; Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 290; Cousins v. Partridge, 79 Cal. 224, 21 Pac. 745; Davis v. Button, 78 Cal. 247, 18 Pac. 133, and 20 Pac. 545. While, therefore, the instruction under criticism was carelessly drawn, and went to the verge of error, we feel satisfied that, upon the whole charge, the jury were not misled to plaintiff's prejudice.

3. The argument that the evidence of plaintiff's neglect of his duties was not sufficient to sustain the verdict does not much impress us. The evidence on this issue was at least conflicting, and the verdict is conclusive. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: PRINGLE, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

NASH v. KRELING. (S. F. 1013.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1899.)

CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

Defendant, in California, had been in communication with plaintiff, in Connecticut, looking to his engagement as stage manager. Plaintiff wrote, declining previous offers, but stated he would sign a contract for a certain sum for the first year, and, if at the end of that time business should not warrant a certain raise, he would not ask it. Defendant replied by telegram, "Your terms, $90 a week, accepted," and, in a letter, wrote that she had sent a telegram, which plaintiff could consider a contract until he arrived, when a proper one would be drawn up. Plaintiff became stage manager, and defendant suggested that a contract should be drawn up, but he stated it was unnecessary. Held to create a contract between the parties.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by John E. Nash against Ernestine Kreling. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. H. Lowenthal, for appellant. Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, for respondent.

BRITT, C. This action is founded upon the same alleged breach of a contract of employment which is considered in the opinion rendered in the case of the same title (S. F. 937) 56 Pac. 260. In the present case, which was begun earlier than the other, plaintiff proceeded for the salary he would have earned under his contract, at $90 per week, during the four weeks next following his discharge, and ending June 30, 1895; and, contrary to the result in the other case, he obtained a verdict and judgment for the amount demanded. The defense was substantially the same in both actions.

On the trial of this case it appeared in evidence that sundry communications were sent between the parties—plaintiff at the East, defendant in San Francisco—looking to an engagement of plaintiff as stage manager of defendant's theater. Finally, in a letter dated at New Haven, Conn., May 11, 1894, plaintiff declined defendant's terms previously offered, and continued: "I will sign a contract for ninety dollars a week for the first year, and, if at the end of that time business should not warrant the ten dollars raise, I would wait until it did." On May 18th defendant replied by wire: "Your terms, ninety dollars a week, accepted. Letter follows." In the letter thus mentioned, she said: "Yours of the 11th received, and, in answer, sent telegram, which you can consider a contract until you get here, when I will draw up a proper one to suit." In reliance on these messages, plaintiff came to San Francisco, and became stage manager of defendant's theater, and received wages at the rate aforesaid, from August 6, 1894, to June 2, 1895. Defendant testified that she suggested to him about the time his salary began that a contract should be drawn and signed, but he said it was unnecessary; and so the matter rested. The court below ruled that the several letters and telegrams constituted a contract for the employment of plaintiff as stage manager at defendant's theater, for the period of one year, at a salary of $90 per week. Defendant urges that they were ineffectual to create any contract at all.

We differ with defendant. After endeavors to reach an agreement, which had continued by letter and telegram, for a month prior to May 18th, it is hardly credible that the parties, or either of them, intended that plaintiff should come from the East to San Francisco to find that no agreement at all existed, or that what defendant declared to be a contract—by its terms wholly performable after plaintiff's arrival in San Francisco—should, upon his arrival, become a nullity. Rather, we hold, the circumstances considered, the remark in defendant's letter as to "drawing up one to suit" had reference merely to a more formal and detailed statement of the mutual obligations of the parties, and not to the rejection or suppression of what was already agreed in writing. Defendant relies on Spinney v. Downing, 108 Cal. 666, 41 Pac. 797. It may be true, as held in that case, that, when parties to a contract intend that it shall be reduced to writing and signed by them, it is not obligatory upon either until evidenced in the manner contemplated; but that is not saying that a contract already reduced to writing, and signed, is of no binding force merely because it contemplates a subsequent and more formal instrument, as the repository of the terms of the agreement. In a recent case, involving a contract, which, as here, rested in letters and telegrams, it was held (we quote from the headnote) that "a stipulation to reduce a valid written contract to some other form does not affect its validity, and the stipulation may not be used by either of the parties for the purpose of * * * evading the performance of any of the provisions of the contract." Sanders v. Fruit Co., 144 N. Y. 209 (s. c. 39 N. E. 75). The doctrine is reasonable, and we have no doubt of its just application to the case before us. See, also, cases collected in 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) pp. 140, 141.

Defendant asserts that the evidence did not justify the verdict. The main question of fact was whether plaintiff neglected the duties of his employment. Upon this issue, as at the trial of the case determined in S. F. 937 (56 Pac. 260), the evidence was conflicting; and, as the verdict there was conclusive of the question for defendant, so here it is conclusive against her. The order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: PRINGLE, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

HARRON v. HARRON. (S. F. 1443.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1899.)

APPEAL—SUITS IN EQUITY—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY—DIVORCE—ORDERS AFTER FINAL JUDGMENT.

1. Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that the supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity, except such as arise in justices' courts, and also in all cases at law in which the demand amounts to $300, places no limitation as to value on appeals from suits in equity.

2. An order made after a judgment granting a divorce, requiring defendant husband to pay the wife a certain sum for counsel fees and costs to contest the motion for a new trial, though a special order made after final judgment, is also an order made in a case in equity, so as to be appealable, under Const. art. 6, § 4, irrespective of the amount involved.

McFarland and Garoutte, JJ., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Annabelle Harron against Howard Harron. From an order requiring defendant to pay a certain sum to plaintiff, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss the appeal. Denied.

G. W. McEnerney, for appellant. S. H. Regensburger and Dunne & McPike, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Judgment was rendered in this action in favor of plaintiff for a divorce from the defendant; and, the defendant having appealed therefrom, the superior court made an order requiring him to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $100 as and for counsel fees, and $40 as and for costs, to enable the plaintiff to contest motion for a new trial in said court. From this order the defendant has appealed. The plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal, by reason of the fact that the value of the property in controversy—that is, the amount of money required by the order to be paid—is less than $300.

"The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity except such as arise in justices' courts; also in all cases at law * * * in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars." Const. art. 6, § 4. Under this provision of the constitution, this court has appellate jurisdiction in "all cases in equity," irrespective of the value of the property in controversy. It is only in a case at law that the value of the property forms an element in determining its jurisdiction; and it was held in Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 7 Pac. 456, 635, and 8 Pac. 709, that the jurisdiction of this court in an action of divorce comes from the fact that such action is a case in equity. As the appellate jurisdiction of this court extends to all cases in equity, it also includes all questions in a case in equity upon which a review of the action of the superior court is sought.

The order appealed from is a special order, made after final judgment; but it is none the less an order made in a case in equity, and is equally within the appellate jurisdiction of this court as is the judgment itself. Such an order is made appealable by an express provision of statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 939); and the jurisdiction to entertain the appeal is not dependent upon the amount of money named in the order, any more than it is determined by the amount involved in an action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, or for a street assessment. In Langan v. Langan, 83 Cal. 613, 23 Pac. 1084, the court dismissed an appeal from an order allowing $150 as counsel fees, assigning as the reason therefor that the amount in dispute was too small to give the court jurisdiction; but it does not appear that this provision of the constitution was presented to the court, or considered by it. We are satisfied, however, that the reason there given is not justified by a proper construction of the provision; and, as no rights have grown up by reason of the decision, we feel authorized to disregard it in favor of the proper construction to be given to the constitutional provision. The respondent also cites the case of Fairbanks v. Lampkin, 99 Cal. 429, 34 Pac. 101,—an action at law, in which an appeal from the judgment of this court, but in which an appeal from an order after judgment taxing the cost bill at less than $300 was dismissed, upon the ground that such appeal was an independent proceeding, and that the amount in controversy was not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction,—and urges that, as the constitution makes no distinction in the jurisdiction of this court to entertain an appeal from an order after judgment directing the payment of money, whether such order be in a suit

In equity or in an action at law, the present appeal should be dismissed upon the authority of that case. Fairbanks v. Lampkin was, however, decided mainly upon the authority of Langan v. Langan, supra, and was based upon the proposition that the amount of money involved in the appeal was determinative of the jurisdiction of this court; but, as we hold that the appellate jurisdiction of this court includes all appealable orders that may be taken in a "case" which is within its jurisdiction, it must follow that the amount of money involved in an appealable order is not the test for determining its jurisdiction. The correctness of the decision in Fairbanks v. Lampkin was, moreover, never brought before the court in bank; and, as it established no rule of conduct or of property, we have less hesitation in holding that, to the extent that it is inconsistent with the views here presented, it is not to be regarded as authority. See, also, Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 653; Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 596, 22 Pac. 1126, in which principles are laid down at variance with Fairbanks v. Lampkin. The motion is denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. This appeal involves a distinct and independent order for the payment of money only. Such an order has been held to be a final judgment, from which an appeal lies, irrespective of the general course of the main action for divorce. In Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 195, 7 Pac. 462, this court, speaking of such an order, said: "Nothing remained to be done except to enforce it, and for that purpose an execution might issue and be proceeded on as if the judgment had been rendered in an ordinary action for the recovery of money. Although the pendency of an action for divorce constituted the basis of the order, it was no part of the relief demanded in the complaint;" and, further, quoting from another case: "While it may be true that a petition for alimony and attorney's fees could not be brought as a separate and independent suit, yet it is also true that such an application and order for an allowance pendente lite, especially such a one as is made in this case, is, so far as it affects the rights of this appellant in its consequences, wholly independent of the suit for divorce." Being an independent final judgment for money only, upon which a common execution will issue, I think it should be treated as any other ordinary money judgment, where the whole amount involved is less than $300; and particularly should this be so since this court in bank so held many years ago, in Langan v. Langan, 83 Cal. 618, 23 Pac. 1084, which case has never before been questioned. Certainly, the position taken in this case is not so clearly right as to warrant and overthrow the rule heretofore established; and appeals from money judgments involving less than the minimum prescribed by the constitution are not to be unnecessarily encouraged.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSUR. CORP. v. ROSS.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 21, 1899.)

NEW TRIAL—RES JUDICATA—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. A denial of an ex parte motion for a new trial on the ground that the jury had disregarded the evidence so as to show prejudice is not res judicata, precluding a hearing on a motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, after service of notice, on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, there being no statute authorizing the former motion, though the court may, on the grounds alleged therein, grant a new trial on its own motion, under section 662.

2. Defendant appealing from an order granting a motion for a new trial cannot complain that plaintiff was ordered to pay costs as a condition to the granting of the order.

3. A disposition of a motion for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of evidence will be sustained in the absence of a manifest abuse of discretion.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Anglo-Nevada Assurance Corporation against William Ross, J. F. Bigelow and others were substituted as plaintiffs. From an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Towle, Jr., for appellant. R. H. Countryman, for respondents.

GRAY, C. This is an appeal from an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. The action is based on a promissory note. On the trial the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant, and was discharged. Thereupon, without notice, counsel for plaintiffs moved the court to vacate and set aside said verdict, and to grant a new trial in said action, upon the ground that there had been such a plain disregard by the jury of the evidence in the case as to satisfy said court that said verdict was rendered under the influence of passion and prejudice, and upon the further ground that there had been such a plain disregard by the jury of the instructions of the court as to satisfy the court that the verdict was rendered under a misapprehension of such instructions. The court denied this motion, and thereafter the plaintiffs served notice of intention to move for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of evidence, that the verdict is against law, and for errors of law occurring at the trial. The court made an order granting this motion upon the payment by plaintiffs of the sum of $76.50 costs.

I think the first motion of plaintiffs for a new trial was made without any express authority therefor to be found in the statutes, and should be treated as nugatory, or at best as merely calling the attention of the court to the right existing under section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure to order a new trial on the court's own motion. It will be observed that the grounds mentioned in the first motion of plaintiffs for a new trial are those contained in said section, that no preliminary notice of intention had been served, and that none of the grounds for a new trial contained in section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure are mentioned in such motion. So that really the only motion for a new trial authorized by the Code of Civil Procedure that the plaintiffs made was their last motion, which was based on the grounds mentioned in section 657 of said Code, and conformed to the other provisions of the Code respecting motions for a new trial. Defendant's objection, therefore, that the court's action on the first motion was res judicata, and brings the case within the rules laid down in Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 27 Pac. 22, and Thorne v. Finn, 69 Cal. 251, 10 Pac. 414, is deemed to be not well taken.

The condition that plaintiffs pay a certain amount as costs, attached to the order granting a new trial, is not a thing of which the defendant can be heard to complain, because it is not a condition imposed upon him; nor can it be said to show in any way that the act of the court in granting a new trial was erroneous. Brooks v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 173, 42 Pac. 570.

The disposition of a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and this court has universally refused to interfere except where it manifestly appears that such discretion has been abused. One of the grounds of the motion for a new trial being the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, I cannot say, after an examination of the evidence, that the court did not act within the limits of its discretion in granting a new trial. I therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

HALL v. GLASS et al. (S. F. 923.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1899.)

CHattel Mortgage — Validity — Duration of Term — Consideration — Insolvency of Mortgagor — Declaration of Homestead — Foreclosure — Judgment.

1. A chattel mortgage on crops to be grown "during the continuance of a mortgage" is sufficiently definite as to the term, there being, under the decisions of the court, a limit to the continuance of such a mortgage as against subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers.

2. A certain chattel mortgage on crops to be grown provided that the mortgagor should carefully tend and take care of the same, and harvest them for the benefit of the mortgagee. Thereafter, before the crops of a certain year were planted, the mortgagor went into insolvency, and the debt was, in proceedings under the insolvency act, discharged. Held, that the services to be rendered by the mortgagor were not the debt which the mortgage secured, so that there was no debt to sustain any lien which might arise when the crops began to have an existence, the mortgage providing that, on failure of the mortgagor to perform his part of the contract, the mortgagee could enter, and take necessary measures to protect the crops.

3. A chattel mortgage securing a debt on crops to be grown was not rendered invalid by declaration of homestead made by the mortgagor's wife after the mortgage, and before the crops were planted.

4. In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on growing crops, where the rights of the wife of the mortgagor were protected in the decree, and she was a party to the suit, and answered as the mortgagor's wife, failure to make a specific finding that she was such wife was not prejudicial error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county.

Action by Ernest E. Hall against Albert W. Glass and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Albert W. Glass and Jane Roe Glass appeal. Affirmed.

W. S. Tinning, for appellants. Snook & Church, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from judgment, with bill of exceptions. Action brought to foreclose a chattel mortgage upon crops growing and to be grown. Mortgage made to secure the payment of a note for $1,550, bearing date January 24, 1895, payable one day after date, and also such other sums as the mortgagee might advance to the mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage, provided that such advances shall be at the exclusive discretion and option of the mortgagee. The mortgage covers "all the crop and products of whatever nature which are now standing or growing, or which shall or may hereafter at any time be sown, planted, cut, or harvested by the said party of the first part during the continuance of this mortgage, on the following described lands and premises, and every part and portion thereof, to wit." Now follows description of two parcels of land, one owned by the mortgagor, A. W. Glass, and known as the "Glass Ranch," and the other held by him under lease. "This mortgage is intended to cover all the land farmed by the said A. W. Glass." The mortgagor covenants that "he will carefully tend, take care of, and protect the said crop while growing and until fit for harvesting, and then faithfully and without delay harvest, thresh, clean, and sack all the grain of every description raised upon said premises, and bale all the hay raised thereon in bales of approved and merchantable sizes, and put all the other products raised upon said premises in shape for market, and immediately deliver all said products into the possession of the party of the second part in the town of Pleasanton," etc. A. W. Glass, the mortgagor, filed his petition in insolvency on October 23, 1895, and was discharged from his debts on March 11, 1896. "Prior to the filing of the petition in insolvency, but subsequent to the making of note and mortgage," L. B. Glass made a declaration of homestead upon the Glass ranch, and the same was set apart as homestead by the insolvency court by order of December 7, 1895. A. W. Glass has always continued in possession of the Glass ranch. In the foreclosure proceedings a receiver was appointed to take possession and manage the crops of the year 1895; and another receiver was appointed to take possession and manage the crops of 1896. A decree was entered in favor of the plaintiff, directing the receivers to apply the proceeds of the crops of those two years in their hands towards the payment of the amount found due to plaintiff. No other relief is granted. Appeal from the judgment is taken by A. W. Glass and L. B. Glass, who answered, as the wife of A. W. Glass. The defendant Veale, sued as sheriff of Contra Costa county, and appointed assignee in insolvency of A. W. Glass, does not appeal. There is no contest over the proceeds of the crop of the year 1895. The contention of the appellants is that the mortgage is not a lien upon the crop of 1896.

The first point made by the appellants is that the crops to be grown after 1895 are not designated with sufficient certainty to create a lien thereon, against the homestead right of the appellants or the insolvency of A. W. Glass. There is no serious contention that a chattel mortgage cannot cover crops unplanted. That point was directly decided in Arques v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620. The contention is that the subject of the mortgage must be clearly defined, and that this mortgage does not define same with sufficient certainty, there being no defined limit to the continuance of the mortgage during which the lien is to continue. In support of this position, counsel cite several cases from Iowa and one from Nebraska. The leading case in Iowa is Pennington v. Jones, 57 Iowa, 37, 10 N. W. 274. The mortgage covered sundry acres of grain of different kinds, "to be sown and raised on the land leased of Barber McDowell, and now occupied by said W. A. McDowell (the mortgagor), lying and being in section 17," etc. The court held the mortgage invalid, because it did not state "that all the crops to be grown for any specified number of years were mortgaged," saying that "before a mortgage on crops to be sown or planted can be regarded as valid, as against third persons, the year or term the crops are to be grown must be stated." In Muir v. Blake, 57 Iowa, 622, 11 N. W. 621, the mortgage said: "All the crops raised by me in any part of Jones county for the term of three years." The court held that this was a "roving description, with nothing in the way of identification to suggest inquiry where the crops may be found except the body of the county." In Eggert v. White, 59 Iowa, 465, 13 N. W. 426: "All and the entire crop of flax and wheat and other grain or produce raised on the east half of * * *." Held invalid, "because the year the same was to be grown is not stated." In Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 554, 26 N. W. 598: "Seventy-five acres of corn to be planted, fifty acres of broom corn to be planted, tended, and delivered in June," etc. Held, that "to be planted" would apply to all corn "which might thereafter be found in Adams county." In all of these cases there are elements of uncertainty, either in the place or time of the planting. In the present case the description of the premises is specific. The alleged element of uncertainty is the term "during the continuance of the mortgage." The appellants contend that the provision in the mortgage that it is intended to secure any future advances which mortgagee may make to mortgagor introduces an element of uncertainty, in this: that by such advances the mortgage may be kept alive indefinitely beyond the statutory time of the note. There is, however, under our decisions, a limit to the continuance of a mortgage as against subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers. In a line of cases in this court, beginning with Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482, it has been well settled that subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers may rely upon the apparent expiration of the mortgage, and will hold against a prior mortgage in spite of an extension or renewal of the debt beyond its statutory life. By the same reasoning, subsequent advances, although contracted for by the mortgagor, cannot extend the apparent maturity of the mortgage against subsequent purchasers. This rule, in reference to future advances, as laid down in the cases, is a limit to the life of a mortgage. It is said in Tapia v. Demartini, 77 Cal. 387, 19 Pac. 641, that, where a mortgage is given to secure future advances, the mortgagee cannot safely make such advances where he has actual notice of a sale or incumbrance made by the mortgagor. And in Jones, Chat. Mortg. (3d Ed.) § 97, it is said: "The general rule is that a prior mortgagee is affected only by actual notice of a subsequent incumbrance, and not by constructive notice; but there are numerous authorities which hold that if the mortgagee has the option to make the advances or not, as he chooses, the mortgage, as to each advance made upon it, is to be regarded as a fresh mortgage, and is subject to the lien of any incumbrance which has been duly recorded at the time the advance is made, whether the mortgagee has actual notice of it or not." In view of these authorities, the term "during the continuance of this mortgage" has a defined meaning. It cannot be said, as claimed by the appellants, that the mortgage could be continued ad infinium. In any event, the mortgage is good to the extent of the crops planted during the life of the note. The uncertainty of description insisted upon by appellants is in the doubtful period beyond the life of the note. There can be no question that the mortgage may be good to the extent of what is certain and definite, even if it be bad for the rest. In one of the cases cited by the appellants (Luce v. Moorehead, 73 Iowa, 499, 35 N. W. 598), it was said: "An instrument may be valid as to the property sufficiently described, and void for the uncertainty of the description of other property." This view of the present case is sufficient to sustain the ruling of the court below, which extends only to the crops of the first two years.

Another contention of the appellants is that, the proceedings in insolvency having been instituted in 1895, there was then no lien upon the crops of 1896 which were then unplanted, and, the debt being discharged by the insolvency, there was no debt to sustain any lien to arise thereafter when the crop began to have an existence. They cite the case of Mayer v. Taylor, 69 Ala. 403, to the effect that the lien actually attaches only when the property comes into existence. But the case recognizes the equitable lien attaching to the potential existence, by virtue of which the mortgage of an unplanted crop is valid. The case holds that this equitable mortgage was superior to a subsequent mortgage made after the crop was planted. And our case of Arques v. Wasson, supra, rests upon the same ground,—that there is in such cases a potential existence which sustains the lien of the mortgage. After this lien is created, insolvency proceedings cannot affect the debt to the impairment of the lien. In Arques v. Wasson this lien prevailed against an attachment and execution. In Mayer v. Taylor it prevailed against a mortgage made after the crop was planted. Certainly, proceedings in insolvency have no stronger legal or equitable force than purchasers for valuable consideration. But, say the appellants, this is a contract for continuing personal services; and they cite the case of Mooney v. Detrick, 85 Cal. 549, 26 Pac. 280, which holds that the debt due by one who engages the time and services of another is discharged by the insolvency. Conceding, without deciding, that the converse of this is sound,—that a covenantor is released from his contract for service by insolvency,—yet the personal services in this case are not the debt or of the essence of the debt. The covenant of this mortgage that the mortgagor should tend, protect, and take care of the crop, and deliver it to the mortgagee, is merely collateral to the real indebtedness, and for the better enforcement of the lien. By virtue of the debt and the lien, the mortgagee is entitled to hold all the crops grown and tended by the mortgagor; and the mortgagor covenants to tend and protect the crops, and deliver them to the mortgagee. That his services in that respect are not the debt which the mortgage secures, nor of the essence of the debt, is made clear by the fact that provision is made in the mortgage that, in case of his breach of this covenant, the mortgagee might enter upon the premises, and take all measures necessary for the protection of the crops and products, and expressly appointing the mortgagee the attorney of the mortgagor for that purpose. The covenants in that respect are very significant: "And the party of the first part does hereby covenant and agree to and with the said party of the second part, its successors and assigns, that he and they will carefully tend, take care of * * *; that, in default of any or either of the above acts to be done by the said party of the first part, the party of the second part, his successors or assigns, may enter into or upon the said premises, and take all measures necessary for the protection of said crops or products or his interest therein, etc. * * * And the said party of the first part does, for the purpose aforesaid, make, constitute, and appoint the said party of the second part, or his successors or assigns, his true and lawful attorney irrevocable, with full power to enter upon said premises and take possession of said crops and take care of, protect, thresh, clean, and sack or bale the same in case of any default on the part of the covenants herein contained." It would be unreasonable to hold that a release of the mortgagor from these subsidiary services would destroy the lien which is so carefully guarded against any injury to arise from the absence of the subsidiary services. And the case is stronger, if possible, against an insolvent who himself institutes proceedings to disqualify himself.

Substantially the same argument is urged by appellants in reference to the declaration of homestead made after the mortgage, and before the crop of 1896 was planted. But the argument has no greater force in favor of a homestead right than in favor of a sale for value or proceeding in insolvency. Establish the fact that there is sufficient potential existence in the coming crops to sustain a legal or equitable lien upon them, and the lien must prevail against subsequent purchasers of every kind; otherwise, it is no lien at all. The objection made in all the cases to the descriptions is that they are not sufficient to impart notice. In one of the cases cited by appellants the certainty of description required is said to be "sufficient if it be such as to enable third parties, by inquiries, which the instrument itself indicates and directs, to identify the property covered by it." Muir v. Blake, 57 Iowa, 665, 11 N. W. 623. As the alleged element of uncertainty in this case was the continuance of the mortgage, the fact that it was in force in 1895 and 1896 was within the knowledge of one homestead claimant, and easily ascertained by the other.

Appellants insist that there is error in not making a specific finding that L. B. Glass is the wife of A. W. Glass. But her rights were protected. She was a party to the action.

She answered as the wife, declaring herself to be his wife. It is found that she made a declaration of homestead upon his property; and she set up in her answer the homestead which she had declared upon the land of her husband. Under these circumstances, the absence of a special finding has done her no harm.

Criticism is made of the form of the decree, the point of objection being that it contains the usual clause that the defendants and those claiming under them are barred and foreclosed of all equity of redemption in or claim to "the mortgaged property," but that no sale of property is ordered. The operative words of the decree are that the moneys which have come into the hands of the receivers from the sales of the crops of 1895 and 1896 be applied towards the payment of the ascertained debt. These sales appear to have been made by the receivers under orders of court presumably correct, as no objection to them appears in the records. The clause by which the defendants are barred and foreclosed of any right of redemption "in the mortgaged property" cannot be appropriately applied to any future crops not sold or ordered to be sold, but may properly be referred to what have been sold by the receivers, and the proceeds of which are ordered to be applied towards the payment of the debt. The respondent, in his points and authorities, declares that he "is satisfied with the decree"; and, as there is nothing in the decree reserving any right to further proceedings in the action, the jurisdiction is exhausted, and the clause in question, if error, is not prejudicial. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

VAN ALLEN et al. v. FRANCIS et al. (S. F. 740.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1899.)

CONDITIONAL SALES—RIGHT OF RECAPTION—NOTES
—SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER—NOTICE—ESTOPPEL.

1. An agreement to sell provided that on the payment of the price, or the execution of a mortgage, the seller was to execute a bill of sale, in the meantime title to remain in him, and on default in any payment he had the right of recaption. Held, that the sale was a conditional one, and this though the promise to pay was absolute, and notes for the price were given.

2. A transferee of property sold conditionally cannot object to recaption by the seller because he failed to restore the unpaid notes given for the price by the buyer, the transferee not being a party to them.

3. Where the buyer of goods, sold conditionally, incorporated, and transferred them to the corporation, which, not knowing of the seller's right of recaption, paid several of the purchase-price notes, the action of the seller in accepting payment while knowing of the incorporation did not estop him from retaking the goods, he having a right to suppose the payments were made with knowledge of the contract.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by G. W. Van Allen and others against D. B. Francis and others. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Gordon & Young, for appellants. Selden S. & Geo. T. Wright and Geo. C. Sargent, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiffs sued defendants in conversion. The facts were stipulated, and judgment upon them was given for plaintiffs. Defendants appeal.

Plaintiffs had entered into a contract with one William M. Langton, the essential terms of which are as follows: "Van Allen and Boughton hereby agree to sell, at the sum of seventeen hundred and fifty dollars, to William M. Langton," a printing press. "* * * William M. Langton hereby agrees to buy said press as above specified, and to pay therefor, on receipt of press, cash three hundred and fifty dollars, and the balance in payments evidenced by seven notes bearing legal interest, seven per cent., as follows: * * *." These promissory notes were each for $200, and were payable 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, 18, and 21 months, respectively, after the receipt of the press. "It is also agreed that the deferred payments above mentioned shall be secured by first mortgage on the property herein contracted to be sold. It is further agreed that the title to said property shall remain in the sellers until such mortgage be given, or until the purchase price and interest have been fully paid; and, in case of any default in any of the terms of this contract, the sellers shall have the right to take immediate possession of said property. Upon the execution and delivery of the aforesaid mortgage, or the payment of the purchase price in cash, Van Allen and Boughton agree to execute and deliver a good and sufficient bill of sale of the above-described property." Langton received the press and made the cash payment provided for, and also delivered the notes. On July 9, 1891, Langton was in default. The William M. Langton Printing Company was then organized for the purpose of carrying on the business formerly conducted by Langton. This was a corporation, and shares in it were subscribed and paid for by people who had not been previously connected with Langton in the conduct of the business. Langton transferred and assigned "all his right, title, and interest in and to the property" in question to the corporation. The property was delivered to the corporation, which "had no knowledge nor notice that said contract was in existence in regard to said press and said property, but only had knowledge that it appeared from the books of said William M. Langton that an indebtedness of fourteen hundred dollars was due to Van Allen and Boughton." Van Allen and Boughton had full knowledge and notice of the organization and existence of the corporation to carry on the business formerly conducted by Langton. The corporation paid and discharged the moneys due upon the three promissory notes made by Langton maturing, respectively, three, six, and nine months after receipt of the press. No demand was made by plaintiffs for a mortgage upon the property, as contemplated by the contract. In January, 1892, the corporation assigned and conveyed to Hansbrow all of its property for the benefit of its creditors. Before the commencement of this action, Hansbrow assigned, sold, and conveyed the press to defendants. Neither the corporation nor Hansbrow nor the defendants had any knowledge of any claim of the plaintiffs to be the owners of the property.

The nature of the contract between plaintiffs and Langton first invites consideration. By appellants it is insisted that it shows an absolute sale of the property; by respondents, that the contract is one of conditional sale. We think the latter construction is the true one. Conditional sales are recognized in this state to the fullest extent (Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 151; Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455; Hegler v. Eddy, 53 Cal. 597; Sere v. McGovern, 65 Cal. 244, 3 Pac. 859; Lowe v. Woods, 100 Cal. 408, 34 Pac. 959); and it is well settled that even bona fide purchasers from the person to whom personal property is delivered under an executory contract of sale get no valid claim to the property (Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 Pac. 858). The rules governing, or at least aiding, the construction of contracts such as this have been succinctly formulated. In Lord Blackburn's treatise on the Contract of Sale two rules are laid down: First, that where, by the agreement, the vendor is to do anything to the goods before delivery, it is a condition precedent to the vesting of the property; second, that where anything remains to be done to the goods for ascertaining the price, such as weighing or testing, this is a condition precedent to the transfer of the property. Blackb. Sales, 152. Benjamin on Sales adds a third rule which is generally recognized: Third, where the buyer is by contract bound to do anything as a condition either precedent or concurrent, on which the passing of the property depends, the property will not pass until the condition be fulfilled, even though the goods may have been actually delivered into the possession of the buyer. Benj. Sales, par. 320. The question whether or not a given contract is or is not a contract of conditional sale is to be determined wholly by the intent of the parties, expressed in and deducible from the contract itself. In arriving at the solution of the question the whole contract is to be considered, and no detached term or condition is to be given prominence or effect over and above another. So that, if the legal effect of the whole contract be to establish a mortgage or a lease or an option to purchase between the parties, the mere negation or denial in another part of the contract of that legal effect will not control. But if, upon the other hand, the intent be clear that title shall not pass until the performance by the vendee of a condition precedent or concurrent, such a contract becomes a conditional sale, and not repugnant to any principle of justice or equity, even though possession of the property be given to the proposing purchaser. Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51; Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 552, 42 Pac. 448. Looking at the terms of this agreement either singly or collectively, it is quite clear that one and all contemplate that there shall be no transfer of title to Langton saving upon the performance by him—First, either of the condition precedent, the payment of the moneys; or, second, upon performance of the condition concurrent, the execution of a mortgage. It is not a contract under which Van Allen and Boughton have sold, as was the case of Cattle Co. v. Mann, 130 U. S. 69, 9 Sup. Ct. 458, where the determination that the contract was a sale absolute was rested mainly upon the use of this language, but it is a contract by which Van Allen and Boughton agree to sell. Langton agrees to buy, and to pay upon receipt of the press $350 in cash, and to make other payments at stipulated times. Promissory notes are given. But under this contract the question cannot be said to arise as it arose in Heryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, as to whether or not the notes were received in payment of the property, for this contract expressly declares that the payments to be made shall be evidenced by the notes, thus negating the idea that the notes themselves constituted payment. Deferred payments were to be secured by mortgage, a right to the vendor which he could waive, and which he did waive; but in this regard title was to pass only upon the giving of the mortgage, and this Langton never gave. It cannot successfully be argued that the circumstance that Langton was to give a mortgage demonstrates the fact that title to the property must have passed to him, because it is clear from the context that the giving of the mortgage and the passing of the title were interdependent and concurrent. The contract further provides that the title shall remain in the seller until the mortgage be given, or until the purchase price, with interest, has been fully paid. Unless there be found in the contract some term, clause, or condition nullifying or modifying this clear provision, this language in itself is of controlling force, for it is of the very essence of a contract of conditional sale that the title shall so remain in the seller until compliance with the condition. Again, in case of default the right of recaption is reserved to the seller, but there is no condition for the sale of the property, and the payment of any surplus over to the purchaser, —a condition which, when found, is always strongly persuasive that the contract is one of absolute sale, with a reserved lien or mortgage back. Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 Pac. 858. Finally, provision is made for the execution of a bill of sale to the property upon delivery of the mortgage or payment of the purchase price, itself a circumstance indicative of the conditional nature of the transaction. See Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455, and Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 552, 42 Pac. 448. The significance which appellants seek to attach to the use of the phrase "purchase price" does not, we think, belong to the language. The declaration is that the title to the property "shall remain in the sellers until such mortgage be given, or until the purchase price * * * has been fully paid." A sale is a contract by which, for a pecuniary consideration called a "price," one transfers to another an interest in property. If there were not in this contract a purchase price, it could not be a sale, either absolute or conditional. "Sale" is a word of precise legal import. * * * It means at all times a contract between parties to give and to pass rights of property for money, which the buyer pays or promises to pay the seller for the thing bought and sold." Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 495.

Nor can appellants' further contention be sustained, namely, that the fact that Langton's promise to pay is absolute is determinative and conclusive that the sale itself was absolute. In Palmer v. Howard, supra, a like circumstance is mentioned, but not discussed. In Rodgers v. Bachman, supra, the consideration is adverted to, but, while such a matter may be a circumstance in determining the nature of the contract, it is a circumstance, and no more. It never has been held to be a determinative characteristic, and it cannot be so held without undoing all the law upon the question. There can be no sale at all without an agreement, express or implied, to pay. Lacking such a promise, the contract is a mere option. Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198. If the circumstance that the purchaser's promise to pay was absolute made the contract an absolute sale, the determination of the nature of such contracts would be so simple a matter as to have rendered entirely superfluous the vast amount of legal research and acumen that have been displayed by all the courts of this country and England in construing them. In truth, the purchaser's promise is usually an absolute promise. It was such a promise in Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 151; Parke & Lacy Co. v. White River Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442; Dunn v. Price, 112 Cal. 46, 44 Pac. 354; Hervey v. Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664; Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51; Preston v. Whitney, 23 Mich. 260; The Marina, 19 Fed. 760; Quinn v. Machinery Co. (Wash.) 31 Pac. 866. Many other cases could be cited where the promise was absolute, and where the sale was held to be conditional, or, if found to be absolute, the finding was never placed upon the ground that the absolute promise determined the question.

It is urged that plaintiffs may not maintain this action without restoration first made of the unpaid promissory notes still in their possession. If it were debatable whether or not the notes were taken in payment, either absolute or conditional, as was the case in Segrist v. Crabtree, 131 U. S. 287, 9 Sup. Ct. 687, it might well be argued that, as the plaintiffs were not entitled both to the property and to the purchase price of the property, they would be put to their election, and, if they insisted upon recaption of the property, they could only take it after surrender of the notes; or, upon the other hand, as was discussed in Parke & Lacy Co. v. White River Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442, if they brought an action to recover upon the notes, or to recover the purchase price of the property, it would be in ratification of the sale, and they would not be allowed to maintain a subsequent action for the recovery of the property itself. In this case the plaintiffs insist upon a recovery of the property. As these defendants are in no way held upon the notes given by Langton, it cannot matter to them that they are still unpaid, in the possession of plaintiffs. Had the plaintiffs sought to take the property while in the possession of Langton, he could have been heard to insist that they must first deliver to him his promissory notes; but with Langton's rights in this regard defendants have nothing to do, after a determination that the notes were neither given nor received in payment of the purchase price.

The further contention of appellants that plaintiffs are estopped, by their conduct, from asserting their rights under the contract, cannot be upheld. The facts upon which appellants rely in support of this estoppel in pais are disclosed by the stipulation. They amount to no more than this: that Langton was in default under his contract of conditional sale, that a corporation was organized for the conduct of Langton's business, and that to this corporation Langton conveyed his title and interest in the printing press conditionally sold to him. The corporation had no knowledge nor notice that the contract was in existence, but merely had knowledge that it appeared from the books of Langton that an indebtedness of $1,400 was due to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had knowledge of the organization and existence of the corporation for the purpose of conducting the business which had formerly been Langton's. The corporation paid to the plaintiffs three of the Langton notes as they matured. Plaintiffs were guilty of no affirmative acts of misrepresentation, nor of any negative acts of concealment. They did nothing but to receive the moneys from the corporation as those moneys became due. It is not to be supposed that Langton misrepresented to or concealed from the corporation the true condition of his business; but, even if he did so, it is still less to be supposed that the plaintiffs were parties to the deception. They had the unquestioned right to suppose that the corporation took from Langton with full knowledge of the contract, and the subsequent payment by the corporation to them could have served only to strengthen that belief. The case, then, lacks several of the essential elements necessary to the proof of an estoppel in pais. Plaintiffs made no admissions with intent to deceive, or with such carelessness as to amount to constructive fraud. The corporation, even if destitute of knowledge of the true state of its title, was certainly not destitute of the means of acquiring such knowledge, for it could have learned the facts by inquiry either from Langton or the plaintiffs. Still more, it is not shown that the corporation relied directly upon any declarations or admissions of these plaintiffs. The asserted estoppel is all of these particulars comes far short of the oft-affirmed requirements of Boggs v. Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

AGAR et al. v. WINSLOW et al. (S. F. 916.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1899.)

ELECTION OF REMEDIES—EFFECT OF ELECTING WRONG REMEDY—LANDLORD AND TENANT—EFFECT OF EJECTMENT AS EVICTION.

1. Where a lessor mistakes his remedy, and brings ejectment against his lessee, such action is not an election of remedies which will bar a subsequent action for unlawful detainer.

2. The bringing of ejectment by a lessor against a lessee does not amount to an eviction, relieving the latter from the obligation to pay rent, where the lessor had advised tenants of the property to continue to pay rent, pending the suit, to their landlord, who was a sublessee, and who, although he refused to pay rent to the lessee, on account of said suit, had given security for such rent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Agnes M. Agar and another against James Winslow and others. From a judgment against defendant Winslow, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Chapman and E. P. Cole, for appellant. Freeman & Bates, for respondents.

GRAY, C. This is an unlawful detainer case. The defendant Winslow appeals from a judgment against him for the possession of the property, and for $1,000 rents unpaid, so far as said judgment awards to plaintiffs said sum of $1,000, and from an order denying said defendant's motion for a new trial.

Joseph Macdonough, being the owner of the premises in controversy, made a will in which he appointed the plaintiffs herein as his executors and trustees. Thereafter, in 1895, he died, and plaintiff John G. Agar was appointed by the court as sole executor of his said will; and on October 15, 1895, he alone, both as trustee and executor, leased said premises to Winslow for the term of five years from October 15, 1895, at the monthly rent of $250, payable in advance. This rent was paid by Winslow to Agar for all the time up to and including July 15, 1896, since which time no rent has been paid to plaintiffs. The plaintiffs herein began this suit on October 20, 1896, and, after stating in their complaint the foregoing undisputed facts, say that the said premises were by the superior court distributed to the plaintiffs on May 12, 1896, to be by them held in trust according to the terms of the will; that since the date of such distribution they have been entitled to receive the rent due for such premises; that on October 9, 1896, plaintiffs served a notice on defendants, informing them of the decree of distribution, and that because of such decree Winslow thereafter had held said premises as tenant holding over from month to month under said lease, that there was then due under said lease $750, and that they pay that sum within three days, or quit and surrender possession of the property; and that, defendants having done neither of these things, plaintiffs demand restitution of the premises, and judgment for the $750, together with $250 for each month thereafter that defendants shall withhold possession of said premises. The defendant Winslow in his answer denies that he is a tenant holding over after the expiration of the lease, or that the lease terminated with the entry of the decree of distribution, but, on the contrary, says that the said lease is in full force and effect for the term of five years from July 25, 1895. The answer then alleges an eviction from the premises of defendant by plaintiffs on the 13th day of July, 1896; that Winslow had subleased to one George Sesnon, and that Sesnon had again subleased to the other defendants; that plaintiffs on the said 13th day of July, 1896, wrongfully brought an action against defendants in ejectment to recover rent and the possession of the said premises, on the ground that the said lease had expired; that by said action defendant's rights of possession had been slandered, and he had been unable to collect any rents since the said 13th day of July, 1896; and that he had been harassed and disturbed in his possession thereby. A trial was had, and the court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, and that there had been no eviction by plaintiffs, but that plaintiffs did sue defendants in ejectment on July 13, 1896. The defendant, to support his answer, put in evidence the pleadings and papers on file in the case of Agar against Winslow et al., begun in the superior court July 13, 1896. The complaint in that case shows that it was an action to recover possession of the same premises involved in this suit, and for the value of the rents, issues, and profits, on the ground that the lease (which is the same lease mentioned in this case) was void, and that the defendants were trespassers. It appeared on the trial that this ejectment suit was still pending, and that Sesnon, to whom Winslow leased the premises, was a party defendant in the ejectment suit, but is not a party to this suit. It further appeared at the trial that on the advice of plaintiffs the tenants in possession paid to their lessor, Sesnon, all rents due from them, and that Sesnon had refused to pay Winslow, because, as he alleged, of the possibility of the lease from Agar to Winslow being declared void or forfeited, but Winslow had, however, taken no legal proceedings for the collection of the rent from Sesnon, and that Sesnon was away on the high seas at the time of the trial.

On this condition of the case the appellant contends: "(1) That the remedies of ejectment and unlawful detainer are inconsistent, and that, having chosen their option to bring ejectment, plaintiffs' election is final, and they cannot pursue the other remedy of unlawful detainer." The rule contended for by appellant is stated by the court of appeals of New York in Rodermund v. Clark, 46 N. Y. 354, as follows: "Where there exists an election between inconsistent remedies, the party is confined to the remedy which he first prefers and adopts." Before one can exercise an option or preference between two things, both those things must have an actual existence. The defendant therefore cannot defend in this action of unlawful detainer on the theory that plaintiff, in beginning the suit in ejectment, exercised his right of election between two remedies, unless he makes it appear that both these remedies were open to plaintiff. If plaintiff was mistaken, and undertook to avail himself of a remedy that he was never entitled to, this does not prevent him from subsequently availing himself of a remedy that he is entitled to under the facts of the case. Bunch v. Grave, 111 Ind. 357, 12 N. E. 514. The defendant should have shown by the allegations of his answer and his evidence that the remedy of ejectment was available to plaintiffs. Mackubin v. Whetcroft, 4 Har. & McH. 135. On the contrary, the facts appearing in defendants' answer, as well as in the evidence at the trial, tend to negative the idea that plaintiff had any right to institute the ejectment suit. The action of ejectment is always based on the theory that the defendant is wrongfully in possession, and a trespasser on the premises sought to be recovered. It appears in this case that Winslow went into possession of the premises under a lease from plaintiff, and that his rent was paid in advance to a time subsequent to the date of the commencement of the ejectment suit. The defendant in his answer alleges that this lease is in full force and effect. If that be true, then the defendant was rightfully in possession, and certainly the action of ejectment would not lie; but even ignoring this affirmative statement of the answer, and treating the lease as having been terminated by the decree of distribution, the defendant has nevertheless remained in possession, paying rent to plaintiff, entitling him to hold the possession, as against plaintiff, to a date after the commencement of the ejectment suit, and creating a tenancy from month to month at the rent reserved in the lease. Civ. Code, § 1945. There was no notice given to terminate this lease until long after the beginning of the ejectment suit; nor is there any fact alleged or proved to show that the relation of landlord and tenant ever ceased to exist between plaintiffs and defendant up to the giving of the notice to pay rent or quit, just before the commencement of the present action. I have examined all the case cited in appellant's brief to show that, where a party elects between inconsistent remedies, he is limited to the one he first seeks to avail himself of, and find, in all those cases where they refer to that doctrine at all, it appeared that the first remedy sought was a real remedy available to the plaintiff. Manufacturing Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 356, 42 Pac. 435, is a case of that kind, and is in consonance with all the other cases cited on the subject. No case has been called to my attention, nor do I believe that any can be found, which holds that a person is estopped from pursuing a remedy that he is entitled to, because he has endeavored to avail himself of another remedy that he never was entitled to. If this were the rule, then a mere mistake of judgment would result in depriving one of valuable rights. In the language of respondents' brief: "As we understand it, where an election is claimed the facts must be such that the rights of the parties may be mutual. In other words, the circumstances must be such that each may be bound by the election, and, if one of them is not bound, the other cannot be. Plaintiffs cannot be bound to treat defendant as a trespasser while defendant retains the right to compel them to treat him as a lessee." It would therefore seem that the ground for a reversal of the judgment, based on the principle that where a party is entitled to two inconsistent remedies his election between them is irrevocable, is not well taken in this case, because it does not appear that plaintiffs were entitled to the first remedy sought for by them.

The next and only remaining ground of reversal contended for by defendant is stated by him as follows: "(2) That the acts of plaintiffs were such as to evict defendant, and that the rent was suspended, and hence they could not maintain this action while the eviction continued." Appellant's principal contention as to this eviction is that the ejectment suit had the effect to prevent his subtenants from paying their rent. The finding of the court on this subject, which is fully sustained by the evidence, reads as follows: "That, notwithstanding the commencement and pendency of the action hereinbefore described, the defendants Siebe, Waltz, Christensen, and Jorgensen have continued in the full and entire possession and enjoyment of all the premises described in the plaintiffs' complaint, and have, with the consent and upon the advice of plaintiffs, paid to their lessor, George H. Sesnon, all rents accruing and due from them to him, according to the terms of their lease from him; and the plaintiff has not in any way interfered with the collection of the rents from any tenant or subtenant of the defendants, but, on the contrary, has at all times advised such payments to be made, and the rents have been paid, as above set forth, to the said George H. Sesnon, who has received monthly the rents accruing to him from his said tenants, Siebe, Waltz, Christensen, and Jorgensen; but he has not paid the same, or any part thereof, to said Winslow, nor has said Winslow taken any proceedings whatever for the collection of the same." It also appears from the evidence in the case that Winslow has a bond or contract from Sesnon in the sum of $2,500, executed by three sureties, for the payment of the rent by Sesnon. I fully agree with the learned counsel for appellant that it is not necessary that there should be an actual ouster, to constitute an eviction, but that any act of the lessor which results in depriving his lessee of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises constitutes an eviction. To this effect is the case of Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 299, and some other cases cited by appellants. But it appears that Winslow has not been deprived of the beneficial use of the premises, at least by any act of plaintiffs, as they have advised the payment of the rent, and the rent in full has actually been paid by the subtenants to Winslow's lessee; and though Winslow has not received it from Sesnon, his lessee, he has a right of action against both him and his sureties for it, and, whatever may be the result in the case at bar, he can collect his rent, if his lessee and sureties are able to respond to a judgment. It will be seen by an examination of the case of Levitzky v. Canning, supra, that the acts complained of as amounting to an eviction had the effect to make the tenants of the lessee quit the premises, leaving them vacant. Another case cited by appellant is Leadbeater v. Roth, 25 Ill. 478. In that case the subtenant was forbidden to pay any more rent to his lessor, and thereafter the first lessee had nothing more to do with the premises, and the subtenant paid the rent directly to the landlord. The case of Skaggs v. Emerson, 50 Cal. 3, decided simply that while a landlord, in violation of his lease, withheld part of the premises from the possession of his tenant, he could have no remedy in the courts against him. In the other cases cited by appellant the interference relied on as constituting an eviction was in every instance of such a character as to interfere with the lessee's enjoyment of the premises, by depriving him of his right to collect rent, or in some way rendering it inequitable for the landlord to collect rents from his lessee; and in none of them is the lessee freed from his obligation to his landlord, where he remains in possession and enjoyment of the premises, either personally or through his subtenants, with the power to collect rent from them. It will be unnecessary to consider respondents' point that the appeal should be dismissed. For the foregoing reasons, we advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PHELAN. (Cr. 421.) 1

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1899.)

HOMICIDE — SELF-DEFENSE — INDICTMENT — EVIDENCE — EXPERTS — THREATS — NEW TRIAL — MISCONDUCT OF JURY AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEY — NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Defendant admitted a voluntary killing, but alleged self-defense. There were no eyewitnesses, but one who heard the shooting corroborated defendant's account, to the effect that there were two light shots, followed by one heavy one; deceased using a pistol, and defendant a rifle. The state's theories were unsupported by the evidence; their only force being negative, as furnishing a possible explanation of circumstances and testimony, which, viewed otherwise, tended to establish innocence. In a letter written by defendant shortly before incarceration, containing a brief account of the affair, he made no mention of deceased's attempt to draw his pistol, as he testified to on the trial. At the autopsy he stated that he stood on deceased's right, while on the trial he stated that he stood on the left, side. The autopsy surgeon first concluded that the ball entered on the left side, but afterwards testified that it entered on the right. The evidence on this point was conflicting. Held, that the jury might disregard the claim of self-defense, and return a verdict of guilty.

1 Rehearing denied March 25, 1899.

2. Where the prosecution claims that defendant lay in wait for deceased, evidence, consisting of maps and photographs, showing the topography of the place of the homicide, is admissible.

3. Where an objection is made to evidence as irrelevant, it is proper for the court, in overruling the objection, to state the fact to which the evidence is relevant,—especially when the court states that it is for the jury to determine whether the fact is proved.

4. Where one, expecting to meet another at a certain place, goes there with the sole purpose of creating, and does in fact create, appearances justifying the latter in making a counter attack in self-defense, the killing of the latter is without justification, unless the former in good faith abandoned the contest, and so notified deceased; and, if there was no time after the counter attack for such notification, the former must take the consequences.

5. Where defendant was convicted only of murder in the second degree, error in charging, without evidence, that if defendant went to the place of the homicide with the sole purpose of creating appearances justifying deceased in making a counter attack, so that defendant might slay him, the homicide was unjustifiable, is immaterial.

6. A physician who has taken a course of lectures on medical jurisprudence, studied the standard authorities on gunshot wounds, read army surgeons' reports, and conducted the autopsy in the case at bar, is competent to testify as to the entrance and exit of the bullet, though in his 15 years' practice he has had but one case of gunshot wound, and that was only one of entrance.

7. A witness testifying to threats made by deceased against defendant should be allowed to state what was said by himself during the conversation, if necessary to show the significance of what was said by deceased.

8. Error in ruling otherwise was harmless, where the part excluded was not essential to understand deceased's remarks, and part was irrelevant, and witness managed, in spite of the ruling, to tell the whole story.

9. Where defendant, though he had not been held to answer, was in custody, charged with a crime, under a sworn complaint, and was brought into court before the grand jury were sworn, and offered the privilege of challenging, which he refused, it was proper to overrule his subsequent motion to set aside the indictment because he had not been held to answer, and to refuse to entertain challenges to the panel and to an individual juror.

10. On a motion for a new trial, an affidavit was made that, on the day before the trial closed, one of the jurors was seen in earnest conversation with deceased's brother; the conversation being out of hearing. Defendant's counsel also made affidavit five days after the verdict that he had been informed that another juror had publicly stated during the trial that defendant ought to be hanged, but no one was named who heard the statement. Held, that the discretion of the court in refusing to examine the jurors or to order a new trial would not be interfered with.

11. On a trial for homicide, where it was claimed that after the shooting defendant had filled deceased's pistol with rifle cartridges of the same caliber, with the bullets trimmed down so as to let the cylinder rotate, deceased's cabin mate testified that there were no cartridges in the cabin which "would fit" deceased's pistol, except the ones with which it was loaded. On a motion for a new trial, he testified that there was in the cabin a box of rifle cartridges of the same caliber as deceased's pistol. Held that, as such testimony could have been brought out on cross-examination, a new trial was not justified.

12. Where testimony was given relating to sounds in the nighttime in the vicinity of the place of homicide, evidence, in contradiction thereof, of experiments in that vicinity conducted in the daytime, was admissible, though the atmospheric conditions were not shown to have been the same.

13. Where the prosecuting attorney believes a witness has testified falsely, he may discredit the testimony on cross-examination by questions implying a low estimate of the witness' character.

14. If the prosecuting attorney is guilty of misconduct in attempting to discredit a witness, and, from the circumstances, the jury must see it, the error is harmless.

15. The prosecuting attorney cannot be charged with misconduct in urging a theory as to defendant's acts or motives, though such theory has slight, if any, evidence to support it.

16. Misconduct of the prosecuting attorney while cross-examining a witness, if not objected to at the time, cannot be considered on appeal.

17. Where defendant claimed that on the day of the homicide he started to town, to put deceased under bond to keep the peace, a remark, in interrogatory form, made by the prosecuting attorney on cross-examination, that defendant knew what it was to be put under bonds himself, was improper.

18. It was not ground for reversal, however.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county.

Richard Phelan was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edw. J. Banning, Barclay Henley, and F. D. Soward, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

BEATTY, C. J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, but recommended by the jury to the mercy of the court. He was sentenced to be imprisoned for 25 years, and appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying him a new trial. Various errors are assigned upon the rulings of the superior court, misconduct of the district attorney is charged, and it is also contended that the evidence adduced at the trial was entirely insufficient to warrant or sustain the verdict.

The voluntary killing was admitted by the defendant, but the claim was made that it was done in necessary self-defense. This plea rests mainly upon the testimony of the defendant himself, for there was no eye-witness to the encounter, in which the deceased was instantly killed, save the parties; and the defendant's account of what then took place is corroborated by the direct evidence of only one witness, who heard the shooting, and testifies to the number of shots fired, and the order in which the lighter and heavier reports occurred. Aside from this, the case for the defendant consisted in the proof of numerous and recent threats by the deceased against his life. Upon this point it is conceded by counsel for the people that the threats were clearly proven, and this concession goes none too far, in view of the evidence contained in the record. It seems that the defendant had formerly been superintendent for a mining company which had failed, leaving some wages due to the deceased. In an attempt to recover these wages by suit, the deceased complained that defendant had not properly seconded his efforts. The defendant would not attend as a witness at the trial, unless subpoenaed, and he appears to have found fault with the plan of operations adopted by deceased, all of which seems to have produced more or less ill feeling on the part of the latter. Another grievance was the discharge of the deceased from the employ of another mining company, of which defendant continued to be superintendent. In this way the deceased had been aroused to a state of violent hostility towards the defendant, and during the three or four months prior to his death had frequently threatened his life. Some of these threats had been communicated to the defendant, and he knew that deceased habitually went armed with a pistol, in the use of which he was supposed to be expert. The defendant was superintendent of the Hilda Mine, situated five or six miles above Sierra City, and occupied a cabin there, in company with two miners and a cook. The route from the mine to Sierra City was down a trail to the Leary wagon road, and along this and the Sierra Valley road to town. The deceased lived in a cabin at a place called "Milton," beyond the Hilda Mine, and in going from Sierra City to his home usually passed over the route to the mine as far as a point beyond the junction of the Hilda trail with the Leary wagon road. This being the general situation of affairs, the parties met early on the morning of the 19th day of October, 1897, in front of Thomas Devine's place, about a half mile above Sierra City. The defendant had been to town with a couple of pack mules for the purpose of transporting to the mine some iron water pipe which he had previously ordered cut into convenient lengths for packing. The pipe not being ready, he was returning to the mine without it. The deceased was on his way to town, and was engaged in conversation with Devine when defendant came up. According to the testimony of defendant, in which he is corroborated by Devine, the deceased commenced upon the sore subject of the suit for wages, with the result of the usual disagreement; but the defendant in other ways made several friendly and conciliatory overtures, which were angrily rejected by deceased. Devine also made an effort to bring about a reconciliation, but deceased refused to shake hands. Defendant then left, and, in leaving, stated in the hearing of deceased that he was coming back in the evening to get the water pipe which he had failed to get that morning. The deceased was thus advised that, on his road home in the afternoon, he might meet the defendant coming to town. According to the testimony of the defendant and four other persons who were there on that day, he returned to the mine about 10 o'clock a. m., and remained until after dinner,—about 1 p. m. During that time he announced his intention of going back to town for the purpose of having Dan O'Connor (the deceased) put under bonds to keep the peace. While waiting for dinner, defendant learned that one of his miners (White) had quit work. This led to some warm words between them, after which White started to town. Defendant says that, being apprehensive that White would get to drinking and return in an ugly mood, he directed all the firearms about the mine to be secreted, or put out of the way, to prevent mischief. There were at the mine a Winchester repeating rifle, 44 caliber, a muzzle-loading shotgun, a breech-loading shotgun, a large pistol, 44 caliber, and a Smith & Wesson revolver, 38 caliber, the last being a pistol habitually carried by defendant in his pocket. The muzzle-loading shotgun and large pistol were hidden away. The breech-loading shotgun was put in charge of the remaining miner (O'Conna), who was directed by defendant to take it with him down the trail where he was set to work mending the road. The defendant took the small pistol and the Winchester rifle, and followed O'Conna down the trail. He says that his purpose in taking the rifle as well as the pistol, which he usually carried, was partly to keep the rifle out of the way of White, and partly to defend himself in case he should meet Dan O'Connor on his way to town, and he should attempt to carry out his threats. In the meantime, deceased had proceeded to town, made some small purchases, and started home on foot. He took dinner with the Sharkeys, two of whom testify that they saw him exhibit a loaded pistol (imitation Smith & Wesson, 38 caliber), and heard him boast of his skill in using it. One of them says that deceased declared to him that he expected he might meet defendant on the road, and, if he did, he would bring him down. From Sharkey's he proceeded to Devine's, where he met defendant in the morning; and Devine testifies to seeing his pistol, and hearing similar threats against the life of defendant. He left Devine's about 2 o'clock, going in the direction of the junction of the Hilda trail with the Leary road. This point being only

Returning to the defendant, he says that he passed on down the trail beyond the point where O'Conna was at work, took note of the places on the trail requiring repairs, did some work himself until about a quarter to 4, and then started to town. Arriving at the junction of the trail with the road, he stopped to make an estimate of the amount of grading required in order to construct a "turnout" for wagons hauling supplies for the mine to the foot of the trail. While so engaged, he happened to look up, and discovered Dan O'Connor standing about 30 feet distant on the road. At the moment he was carrying his rifle across his shoulder, with the muzzle in front, and was grasping it by the barrel. He says they eyed each other for an instant, and he was hesitating whether or not to speak to the deceased, when he saw him make a motion with his hand towards his pistol pocket, and, fearing for his life, he proceeded as quickly as possible to get his rifle into a position for use. Before he could do so, deceased had drawn his pistol and fired twice, during which time he (defendant) was dodging and ducking across the road to a position on the other side. The deceased was prevented from firing a third shot before defendant could use his rifle by some difficulty in revolving the cylinder of his pistol, and, while he was endeavoring to cock it, defendant dropped on his knee and fired, his bullet passing through the neck of the deceased, from side to side, severing the spinal cord, and killing him instantly. This is substantially the account of the killing given by the defendant in his testimony at the trial, and he is directly corroborated by O'Conna in one particular: O'Conna testifies that he heard the shots at the point where he was at work on the trail, and that they came in this order: Two light reports, followed by one louder and heavier. If this account is true, the defendant was, of course, innocent of any crime. He shot only to defend his life against a felonious assault, and under circumstances that would have induced any reasonable man to believe his life to be in danger.

But were the jury bound to accept the statement of defendant as the truth? It is contended on the part of the people that not only were the jury free to reject the testimony of the defendant in his own favor, but they were abundantly justified in so doing by numerous and serious discrepancies between the different accounts of the transaction given by the defendant at different times, by the discrepancies in the testimony of his witnesses, and by various circumstances inconsistent with the facts as testified to. Most of these discrepancies appear to be trivial and unimportant, and fairly referable to the incapacity of the most honest and well-meaning of witnesses to carefully observe and accurately recount the details of any transaction. But some of them are more serious, and deserve consideration. The theory of the prosecution is that defendant, on account of the threats of the deceased, deliberately resolved to kill him, and, in order to give the killing the appearance of an act of self-defense, arranged and contrived the circumstances upon which he now relies to give an air of plausibility to his account of the fatal meeting. They contend that the secretion and removal of the arms at the mine for the alleged purpose of keeping them out of the reach of White was a mere pretense to screen the real motive of the defendant in taking the rifle down the trail where he expected to meet the deceased; that no work was needed on the trail, nor any turnout at the foot of it; that the supplies for the mine were all in for the winter, and the season during which the trail could be used at an end; that, while work on the trail was entirely needless at that time, work in the mine was an urgent necessity to prevent caving. They seem to claim that O'Conna was armed with the breech-loading shotgun, and stationed in convenient proximity to the spot where the defendant lay in wait for his victim, in order to have his assistance in some form. They ask why the defendant should have abandoned his purpose of returning to Sierra City with his mules for the load of water pipe, and why he should have made up his mind on that day, of all days, to put O'Connor under bonds to keep the peace. They say that O'Connor must have reached the junction of the trail and must have been killed about an hour before the time when defendant says they met, and, consequently, that it is not true that defendant spent the afternoon directing and assisting in the repair of the trail. Having, as they claim, demonstrated the falsity of his showing in this particular, they argue that, in order to make sure of his victim, he went directly from the mine to the foot of the trail, concealed himself behind a hollow stump near the junction, waited the arrival of O'Connor, and, as he turned from the road to ascend the trail, shot him in the side of the neck,—rather from the rear than from the front. Then, they say, he remained near the spot for an hour or two, arranging appearances to support his plea of self-defense. It was shown that the pistol of the deceased was handed by defendant to the magistrate into whose custody he surrendered himself after the killing; that defendant requested those present to examine it, and it was found to contain two whole cartridges and three exploded shells, upon one of which the hammer rested. These cartridges and shells, though of the right caliber for the pistol, viz. 38, were what is known as "long cartridges," or Winchester rifle cartridges, which, when placed in a Smith & Wesson pistol, are too long to admit the rotation of the cylinder, unless the ends are first trimmed off, as these had been. The prosecution claims to have proved that deceased had no such cartridges, while defendant did have a supply of them, from which his own pistol was loaded; and it is a part of their theory of the case that, after killing O'Connor, defendant filled his pistol with cartridges taken from his own, and then discharged three of them, to make it appear that deceased had fired that often at him. Some of the witnesses testified that, at the time he gave himself into custody, defendant stated that deceased had fired three times. Afterwards he testified that he had heard but two shots before he returned the fire, and could only account for the three empty shells by supposing that the deceased succeeded in cocking his pistol and fired the third shot simultaneously with the discharge of his rifle, or that deceased had shot away one of his five cartridges previous to their meeting. In stating to the magistrate that deceased had fired three times, he was only stating his conclusion drawn from the three empty shells, and based upon his theory that the third shot being discharged simultaneously with his own was indistinguishable. The prosecution rejects this explanation, and contends that the defendant only changed his statement as to the number of shots fired by deceased after Jesse O'Conna had testified to two light reports followed by a louder one, in order to make their stories agree.

This is by no means an exhaustive review of the various contentions of counsel as to the effect of the evidence, but it presents the salient points of the controversy between them; and it will be seen that it involves questions of fact, rather than of law,—questions, in other words, to which the jurisdiction of this court does not extend. We have nevertheless carefully examined the evidence in the case, and, while we cannot help regarding several of the theories of the prosecution in respect to the motives and acts of the defendant as fanciful and unfounded, we are at the same time convinced that it cannot be held, as a proposition of law, that there is no evidence to support the verdict.

The theory of the prosecution that the defendant went directly from the Hilda Mine to the junction of the trail, and there lay in wait behind a hollow stump for an hour or two, finds no support in the evidence, and seems to be utterly opposed to the testimony of some of the most intelligent and trusted witnesses for the people, to the effect that a careful examination of the ground on the day following the killing disclosed no track or other disturbance of the soil behind or about the stump. Considering the nature of the soil in our mountain forests, it seems incredible that a man could crouch for an hour or more in one spot, and leave no trace of his presence on the ground.

The theory of the prosecution as to the hour of the shooting is equally unsupported by direct evidence. The claim is that the deceased must have arrived at the junction of the Hilda trail about 3 o'clock p. m., and that he was shot from ambush as he turned into the trail. This claim is rested mainly upon an elaborate calculation as to the time that must necessarily have elapsed between the discovery of the dead body by Sam Devine and his return to the spot from Sierra City, at 6 o'clock p. m. In this calculation it is assumed that Devine did not discover the body until some time after the shooting; that it took him more than an hour to reach Sierra City, at least half an hour to get a team and look up the magistrate and two others who accompanied him on his return, and nearly an hour to drive three miles and a half. These are all assumptions, without any positive evidence to support them. For aught that appears, Devine may have arrived at the scene of the shooting within 10 minutes after it occurred; and, as to the time it took him to get to Sierra City, his evidence is that at the request of the district attorney he went over the same route again at about the same speed that he traveled on the day of the homicide, and it took him "about an hour." Considering that it was a prime factor in the theory of the prosecution that it must have taken him considerably more than an hour, the fact that the district attorney contented himself with this vague and indefinite answer from a witness who had made the experiment at his request justifies the inference that the time actually consumed was less rather than more than an hour; and this conclusion is corroborated by the admitted fact that on the day of the homicide Devine was excited and scared, and may have traveled faster than he was aware of. The other circumstances relied on to prove a greater lapse of time between the killing and the hour of 6 o'clock than would consist with defendant's story may possess a significance that is not apparent from any evidence in the case, for there is nothing to show that the blood would not have flowed as far as it did flow, or that the body would not have become as cold as it was, within the two hours between 4 and 6 o'clock.

The theory that defendant loaded the pistol of deceased with cartridges taken from his own pistol, in order that he might fire them off, and thus make it appear that deceased had participated in the shooting, assumes, in the first place, against the positive evidence of several unimpeached witnesses, and against all antecedent probability, that deceased was traveling with an unloaded pistol along a road where he had every reason to expect an encounter with an armed man, whom he had constantly been threatening to kill; and this, too, when it clearly appeared that the deceased habitually went armed, and that he had, a short time before, borrowed cartridges to load his pistol. But the prosecution proved that there remained in the pistol of deceased, when surrendered by the defendant, one or two 38-caliber Winchester rifle cartridges, with the ends trimmed off to make them short enough for the cylinder, and two empty shells of the same class of cartridges. It was also proved that, a week after the homicide, part of a box of such cartridges was found in the cabin of the defendant at the Hilda Mine; and Davis, the roommate of the deceased, testified that they had no cartridges that would fit the pistol of deceased at their cabin, aside from those with which it was loaded. As against this evidence, the defendant points to the fact that there was no gun or pistol at his mine that a 38-caliber Winchester cartridge would fit, and claims that the box found in his cabin a week after his incarceration was put there to be found. And Davis, in support of the motion for a new trial, made an affidavit that there was at the cabin occupied by him and deceased a box of 38-caliber Winchester cartridges,—a statement not inconsistent with his testimony that they had no cartridges that "would fit" the pistol of deceased, since they required to be reduced in length in order to make them fit. But the strongest circumstance against the theory of the prosecution is the failure to produce any evidence as to the condition of defendant's pistol at the time he surrendered himself into custody. Was it loaded, or unloaded, or partly loaded? If loaded, what was the kind of cartridges? There is no answer to any of these questions, although the pistol was in the hands of the state's officers, and the evidence necessarily within their power. The defendant's claim is that his pistol was loaded at the time of the homicide with cartridges expressly adapted to it, viz. 38-caliber pistol cartridges; and, if so, it must have been in that condition when handed to the sheriff. If it was not in that condition, the fact could easily have been shown, and the theory of the prosecution established, or at least corroborated, by evidence to a contrary effect. It was of the greatest importance to the theory of the prosecution to prove that defendant's pistol, when surrendered to the sheriff, was unloaded, or loaded with Winchester cartridges that had been reduced in length, or partly so loaded. In the absence of such proof, the theory of the prosecution seems wholly untenable.

Other theories—such, for instance, as that respecting the supposed attempt of the defendant to mutilate the dead body by running a loaded wagon over it, for the purpose of obliterating the wound, and thus making it impossible to determine the points of entrance and exit of the fatal bullet—depend upon evidence and inferences equally inconclusive. The most that can be said of them is that they may be true,—just as it may be true, as argued, that the deceased had no intention of carrying out his threats against the life of the defendant, and that the absence of any threats by defendant against the deceased and his efforts at reconciliation are only evidence of a deeply-meditated scheme of murder, with a defense prepared in advance. We think it evident that the theories and arguments above outlined have but little, if any, positive force or value as tending to establish the guilt of the defendant; but some of them may have a negative value, as offering a possible explanation of some circumstances, and much positive testimony, which, viewed in another light, would tend to establish his innocence.

The case, then, so far as the sufficiency of the evidence is concerned, reduces itself to this: The voluntary killing of deceased is established by sufficient proofs, and is admitted by the defendant. This being so, a prima facie case of murder in the second degree was made out, and it devolved upon the defendant to show facts which would justify, excuse, or mitigate the killing. If his account of the transaction given at the trial was true, it was clearly a case of justifiable self-defense; but the jury were not obliged to accept his account, and evidently they refused to do so. Their action in this respect was due, no doubt, to a belief that the testimony of the defendant was inconsistent with former statements by him, or with facts which they found to be satisfactorily established by the evidence. Among such former statements was a brief account of the affair contained in a letter from the defendant written shortly after his incarceration. In this letter he makes no mention of the fact testified to at the trial, that the deceased made an attempt to draw his pistol before he made any attempt to bring his rifle into position for firing. Another statement made to the surgeon who performed the autopsy was that he stood on the right side of deceased when he fired the fatal shot. This statement he subsequently corrected, and at the trial testified, in effect, that the left side of deceased was turned towards him during the affray. The first opinion of the autopsy surgeon was that the ball had entered from the left side; but he afterwards concluded, and at the trial testified, that it entered from the right side,—the right side of the neck instead of the left lower jaw. This was a very important point, and the evidence upon it conflicting; but if the jury believed, as they probably did believe, that the point of entrance was on the right side, they may for this reason alone have rejected the defendant's version of the affair. There were some other circumstances, of very slight importance in themselves, but of similar tendency; and, such being the case, this court cannot set aside the verdict upon the ground that there is no evidence to support it.

In regard to the errors assigned upon the rulings and actions of the superior court, we note, in the first place, a charge, more than once repeated in appellant's brief, that the trial judge first suggested and announced the theory of lying in wait behind the stump, which it is said was thereafter adopted by the prosecution. This complaint appears to us wholly unfounded. The evidence in the record shows that the district attorney had made elaborate preparation before the trial to prove the facts upon which the ambush theory was founded, and we entertain no doubt that it was fully developed in his opening statement of the case. Moreover, it was clearly indicated in the examination of the witness Thomas, which occurred before the court made any reference to the matter. This is a reflection upon the trial court which counsel should not have permitted themselves to make.

It is contended that the superior court erred in overruling objections of defendant to the admission in evidence of maps and photographs of the scene of the homicide, and especially of the evidence given in that connection as to the position of the hollow stump, as to the relative elevations of the stump and junction of the trail, as to the fact that there was an unobstructed view from the one point to the other, etc. The court did not err in admitting this evidence, the manifest purpose of which was to sustain the theory of lying in wait. The facts surrounding the killing were certainly material, and the topography of the spot where the killing occurred was clearly relevant. It was not for the court, but for the jury, to determine what theories could be justly founded on such facts. Neither did the court err in the remarks made in overruling these objections. When objection is made to offered evidence, that it is irrelevant, the court cannot overrule the objection without saying, in effect, that the evidence has some tendency to prove some material fact; and we cannot see that the defendant is injured by a mention of the fact to which the evidence is relevant,—especially when, as in this instance, the court clearly states that it is the sole province of the jury to determine whether such fact is proven.

With respect to all these matters it may also be said that the verdict of murder in the second degree conclusively shows that the jury must have discarded the theories of the prosecution as to lying in wait, etc., for upon those theories the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree. It is more likely that the verdict was based upon some such hypothesis as that stated in the following passage from the charge of the court: "If, on the contrary, you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant went to the scene of the homicide, expecting and intending there to meet the deceased, with the sole purpose then and there of creating appearances justifying the deceased in making a deadly counter attack in self-defense, and that he did in fact then and there create such appearances, and that the deceased did in fact then and there make a deadly counter attack in self-defense, and the defendant then and there slew him, such killing was without justification under the law, unless the defendant, before so killing deceased, had first, and in good faith, declined further combat, and fairly notified deceased he had abandoned the contest. And if the circumstances were such, arising from the suddenness of the counter attack, that he could not so notify him, it was defendant's fault, and he must take the consequences." It is contended on the part of appellant that it was error to give this instruction, not only because there was no evidence upon which to base it, but because the principle is not correctly stated. We do not think the instruction misstates the law of the case supposed, but it is not so easy to say that there is evidence to sustain the hypothesis. Defendant, it is true, admits that he armed himself with a rifle because he apprehended that he might meet the deceased on the road, and might be called upon to defend his life; and in the letter above referred to he seems to admit that his own movement to bring his rifle into a position for ready use is what caused the deceased to commence firing. But there is no direct evidence that he went to the scene of the homicide with the sole purpose, or with any preconceived purpose, of creating appearances which would bring on a conflict. That particular part of the instruction, however, which supposes a deliberate purpose on the part of defendant to create appearances, becomes immaterial, in view of the verdict acquitting him of murder in the first degree; and it is only important to consider whether the court was justified in submitting an instruction based upon the hypothesis that the defendant, without any preconceived design, did in fact create appearances justifying a deadly counter assault by deceased. Upon this point it cannot be said that there was a total lack of evidence to sustain the court in submitting the question to the jury.

It is claimed that the superior court erred in allowing Dr. Igliek to give his opinion as an expert upon the question of exit and entrance of the bullet. The doctor had been a practicing physician and surgeon for 15 years, but had never had but one case of gunshot wound, and in that case there was only a wound of entrance; but he had taken a regular course of lectures on medical jurisprudence, had studied the standard authorities on the subject of gunshot wounds, had read the reports of our army surgeons on the subject, and had himself conducted the autopsy in this case, so that he was not only able to express a general opinion in answer to a hypothetical question, but was able to state the particular grounds upon which his opinion in this case was founded. There was, we think, a sufficient foundation laid to warrant the court in admitting his testimony. Its value was a question for the jury.

There was perhaps a technical error in the rulings of the court with respect to the witness Ring. He was called for the purpose of proving threats by deceased made in the course of a conversation with the witness. The court sustained objections to the proof of what the witness had said in the course of the conversation, upon the ground that only what the deceased had said was material. This is not strictly true, for it was not only material to show what the deceased actually said, but much more material to show the true meaning and significance of what he said, and this would not always appear with one-half of the conversation suppressed. But in this case the particular portions of the conversation which the court succeeded in excluding do not seem to have been essential to an understanding of all that deceased had said, and parts of it were clearly irrelevant. The witness contrived, in spite of the rulings of the court, to tell the whole story, so that, whatever the error in the ruling, there was no prejudice to the defendant.

The defendant at the proper time moved to set aside the indictment upon the ground that he had not been held to answer at the time the grand jury was impaneled, and in that connection challenged the panel, as well as an individual grand juror, upon statutory grounds. But the court denied his motion, and refused to entertain the challenge, upon proof of the fact that, although the defendant had not been held to answer at the time of the formation of the grand jury, he was at that time in actual custody, charged with the murder by sworn complaint, and had been brought into court before the grand jurors were sworn, and offered the privilege of challenging, which he had declined to exercise. The ruling of the court in refusing to entertain the challenge or dismiss the indictment is fully sustained by the construction given to the statute in People v. Geiger, 49 Cal. 650, from which we do not feel at liberty to depart.

Defendant's motion for a new trial was based partly upon the ground of misconduct of some of the trial jurors, and of newly-discovered evidence. It seems that the jurors were allowed to separate during the trial, and it was shown by affidavit that one of the jurors was seen in "earnest conversation" with a brother of the deceased on the day before the trial closed. The evidence is conflicting as to whether the conversation was in a public place, but it appears that it was out of hearing of any third party. One of defendant's counsel also made an affidavit five days after the verdict that he had been informed that another of the jurors had publicly stated during the progress of the trial that the defendant ought to be hanged. Upon these affidavits he moved for a postponement of the hearing of the motion for a new trial, and for the issuance of subpoenas for the jurors referred to, in order that they might be examined as to their alleged misconduct. This application was denied, and the motion for a new trial overruled. We cannot say that this ruling was error calling for a reversal of the judgment, although we do think it would have been a wise exercise of the discretion of the court to investigate fully these charges of misconduct. It was not legal misconduct in a juror to engage in conversation with a brother of the deceased upon a subject disconnected with the case on trial; but it was a grave impropriety, exposing the juror to suspicion, and reflecting upon the administration of the law. It is not going too far to say that his conduct called for explanation. But this was a matter resting in the discretion of the trial court, and, since it does not appear that the conversation related to the case on trial, we cannot hold that there was abuse of discretion. As to the other juror, the evidence was hearsay, and, considering the time that had elapsed subsequent to the alleged public declaration of his opinion, and the fact that no person was named who had heard it, the court was justified in disregarding the charge.

The newly-discovered evidence was that of Davis, with reference to the box of Winchester cartridges above referred to. This was a matter so closely related to the evidence given by Davis at the trial that the court may reasonably have concluded that it should, as it clearly might, have been called out upon cross-examination at that time.

Exception was taken to certain rulings of the court admitting evidence of experiments made by direction of the prosecution for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of some of defendant's witnesses. The testimony related to sounds heard in the nighttime in the vicinity of defendant's cabin. The experiments were conducted at the same place, but in the daytime; and it was not shown that the atmospheric conditions—such as humidity, temperature, etc.—were the same. The court did not err in admitting this testimony. The principal conditions were the same, and the jury could weigh and make allowance for the differences referred to. They affected the weight, but not the competency, of the evidence.

The last point to be considered is the alleged misconduct of the district attorney. It is charged that the district attorney was unfair to several of defendant's witnesses, that he was uncandid in his presentation of evidence, that he persisted in charging and insinuating acts and motives upon the part of defendant which were wholly unsustained by the evidence, and that he endeavored to prejudice the jury by asking defendant himself, on cross-examination, questions which he must have known he had no right to ask, and the only design of which was to insinuate charges against the defendant which could not have been proven on a trial of this indictment, even if true. It is true that the district attorney asked some of the witnesses for defendant questions which implied a low estimate of their character, but they were in the line of a cross-examination, the evident purpose of which was to discredit their testimony. It was the privilege, and even the duty, of the district attorney to discredit these witnesses, if he believed they had testified falsely. If he abused his privilege, the jury must have seen it, and the prejudice was to his own case, not to that of the defendant. The same thing may be said with reference to the offer to prove the finding of a cartridge box in a valise belonging to deceased. It is quite possible that the district attorney was himself deceived in that matter. If it was clear that he was not deceived, the jury must have seen it, and he must have suffered all the prejudice. The acts and motives charged against defendant were a part of the theory or theories of the prosecution. We have indicated in our opinion that several of those theories found but slight, if any, support in the evidence, but the prosecution had a right to urge them. It was for the jury to pass upon all such matters. The district attorney had no right to read the telegram from the sheriff of Placer county while cross-examining the witness Zuver, but the defendant had an opportunity of objecting to it, which he failed to do. It seems to have been read with his tacit consent, and there was no protest or exception at the time.

The most serious fault committed by the district attorney was in his cross-examination of the defendant with reference to his testimony to the effect that he started to Sierra City on the day of the homicide for the purpose of having the deceased put under bonds to keep the peace. The following extract from the record will show what then occurred: "Q. But you would want to get to Sierra City before it was dark, and back home again, if you were afoot? A. That depends—yes, sir, if I was going home; if not, I might stay in Sierra City. I made up my mind to put him under bonds that day, on account of the recent occurrences and of his actions, and I had an opinion back in July to do so, and I determined to do so. Q. Then, why didn't you? A. Well, I had reasons that I didn't care to do it. Q. You knew what it was to be put under bonds? A. I did. Q. You knew what it was to be put under bonds yourself? Judge Soward: We object. I also charge misconduct on the part of the district attorney. Mr. Wehe: You are awful tender of this defendant. Judge Soward: I charge that as misconduct, also. You want to try this case, and no other. The Court: I don't think it is proper to inquire whether the defendant had been under bonds." The questions here asked appear to us, as they evidently appeared to the trial judge, to contain an insinuation that the defendant was himself a man of violent character, who required at times to be put under bonds. If so, the questions were highly improper, and ought to have been known to the district attorney to be improper. But the offense was not so flagrant as in itself to constitute ground for reversal. The judgment and order of the superior court are affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; TEMPLE, J.; HARRISON, J.; HENSHAW, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment, and in the opinion of the Chief Justice. I desire to say, however, that if the testimony were to be considered simply as it stands in the cold, printed record, without any reference to the appearance, manner of testifying, etc., of the witnesses, I would not feel sure in holding that it warranted a conviction. But the credibility of the witnesses rests with the jury, and, as it depends upon many things which cannot be reproduced here, I do not feel that this court would be justified in setting aside the verdict on the ground of want of evidence. I agree with the Chief Justice that there were no errors of law calling for a reversal.

EDWARDS v. BERLIN. (S. F. 1,080.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1899.)

STREET IMPROVEMENT—ASSESSMENT—VALIDITY—SUPERVISORS' MINUTES—PRESUMPTION—RESOLUTION OF INTENTION—JURISDICTION—BURDEN OF PROOF—EVIDENCE—OPENING AND DECLARING BIDS.

1. A street improvement sufficiently describes the work to be done, though the resolution of intention calls for curbing where not already done.

2. The minutes of a board of supervisors relating to a resolution of intent to improve a street, the order directing it to be done, and orders giving extensions of time, refer to them as relating to "certain street work," and as having, on motion, been adopted and numbered by certain numbers. In books produced from the clerk's office, they were found under corresponding numbers, describing the work to be done with the clerk's name printed at the end, but not otherwise authenticated. Held that, the board not being required to keep its minutes in any one book, failure to perform acts essential to the validity of the assessment was not thereby sufficiently shown to overcome the burden of proving its invalidity, arising on the prima facie case of validity made by proof of the assessment.

3. The description in an order extending the time for completing a street improvement need only indicate, as between the board of supervisors and the contractor, what contract was intended, so far as it is essential to jurisdiction to make assessments.

4. When minutes of the board of supervisors do not show that a bid for the work of a street improvement was opened and declared publicly, as the statute requires, it is prima facie proof that it was not done.

5. A failure to comply with section 5 of the Vrooman act (St. 1889, p. 161), requiring that bids for the work of street improvements shall be opened and declared publicly, invalidates assessments therefor.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by William Edwards, administrator, etc., against F. A. Berlin. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. A. Berlin, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. In this case, which is an action to foreclose an assessment lien, defendant contends that the assessment is void for 18 specified reasons.

The first two points depend upon the alleged lack of power because the resolution of intention calls for curbing where not already done. The objection was overruled in Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877. It is held that, under such a contract or resolution, nothing is left to be determined, as to the amount of work to be done, by the street superintendent. The board exercises its own judgment in the matter, and delegates nothing to others. McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 34 Pac. 71; Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877.

The third, fourth, and fifth points are all founded upon the mode of entering orders in the minutes by the clerk of the board of supervisors. For the purpose of overcoming the prima facie case made by the assessment, the defendant called the clerk, and introduced the records kept by him. All that the minutes disclose in regard to the resolution of intention is as follows: "Supervisor Day also offered a resolution declaring the intention of the board to order the performance of certain street work, which was on motion adopted, and numbered 9,950. Supervisor Denman voting, 'No.'" The resolution is not entered on the minutes, and it was not even shown that it had been filed. The direction to the clerk to cause the resolution to be posted and published is not entered on the minutes at all, but it is customary to include that in the resolution of intention. In rebuttal, plaintiff produced a book which was found in the office of the clerk of the board, entitled "9,306 to 10,114-43, Resolutions, No. 43." This book contained blank printed forms of resolutions of intention, with spaces left for whatever was peculiar to each contract, and with the name of the clerk printed at the end of each. Some of the blanks had been filled out, and among them one which included a description of the work for which this suit was brought. None of them are certified or authenticated in any mode whatever; for, of course, the printed name of the clerk under such circumstances performs no one purpose or function of an authentication. But, while it must excite our special wonder that important records of the city and county are kept in this loose way, we do not feel like holding that the proceedings are therefore void. A legislative body is not required to keep its minutes in any one book. Unless the law requires it, their enactments need not be there entered at all, but the minutes certainly should show what action was had upon them; that is, that they were enacted, and the enactments themselves should be authenticated in some mode. No special mode of authentication seems to have been provided, and although a mere reference by number to what is assumed to be a book of resolutions kept by the board is an unsatisfactory mode of identification, we cannot say that the resolution is thereby made invalid. The assessment, being put in evidence, makes a prima facie case. To rebut it, the defendant must prove affirmatively the failure on the part of the board to perform some act essential to its validity. The minutes show the requisite action on the part of the board. Some resolution corresponding in number was passed. It is a question simply of identification, and I think the prima facie case has not been rebutted.

Similar objections are made to the order directing the work to be done, and to three several orders granting extensions of time, and the objections may all be similarly answered. To the resolutions extending time, the additional objection is made that the resolution does not sufficiently describe the work. These resolutions were, however, not jurisdictional in the absolute sense, but were acts in the exercise of jurisdiction which it is assumed had been vested in the board. The description is sufficient as between the board and the contractor to indicate what contracts it was intended to extend, and nothing more was required.

The next objection made cannot, I think, be so readily disposed of. It is provided in section 5 of the so-called "Vrooman Act" that bids shall be invited for doing the work, and that each proposal or bid shall be accompanied by a check, and that "said proposals or bids shall be delivered to the clerk of the said city council, and said council shall in open session examine and publicly declare the same," etc. St. 1889, p. 161. The allegation in the complaint is that the bids were opened and publicly declared on the 2d day of October, 1894. The minutes of the board were put in evidence, and they showed that no such proceedings were had on that day or at any other time. Prima facie, at least, this is proof that the statute was not in this respect complied with. What the minutes do not show to have been done we must conclude was not done. No argument is needed to show that this requirement is imperative. It was intended thereby to secure to the property owners, the public, and the rival bidders, fair play and an honest deal. At the same time, it affords some degree of security to the board against unjust charges. It is enough, however, that it is required by the statute, and compliance may be of advantage to the property owners. For this reason, I think the assessment cannot be upheld. Other points need not be noticed. Judgment and order reversed.

PEOPLE v. VALLIERE. (Cr. 449.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1899.)

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—DEADLY WEAPON —INTENT—EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

1. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, committed by a prisoner upon the jailer, evidence that defendant was in jail awaiting sentence for a burglary of which he had been found guilty is admissible to show motive.

2. Since, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, the prosecutor must show that the weapon used was a deadly weapon, a question asked a witness, "Could a man be killed with that weapon?" while inclusive, is not irrelevant.

3. Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, a witness testified that the weapon used, which was a stocking filled with salt and plaster, was capable of producing death, a question on cross-examination, whether a "billy" was a deadly weapon was properly excluded.

4. Evidence that defendant assaulted a jailer with a deadly weapon for the purpose of obtaining his keys, and escaping from the jail, is sufficient to sustain a verdict that the assault was with intent to kill.

5. Where the testimony is that whether a weapon with which an assault was made is capable of producing death depends upon the manner of its use and the portion of the body on which it is used, the question whether it is a deadly weapon is a mixed one of law and fact, to be submitted to the jury under proper instruction.

6. Testimony of a physician that a stocking filled with salt and plaster, with which defendant had assaulted his jailer in an attempt to escape, was capable of producing death if used on certain portions of the body, is sufficient, when submitted with proper instruction, to sustain a finding that it is a deadly weapon.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

John J. Valliere was convicted of an assault with intent to kill, and from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. E. Gardner, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HAYNES, C. Appellant was tried upon an information charging him with an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to murder one John Boyle, was found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment for the term of 14 years; and he appeals from the judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial. Appellant specifies several rulings of the court upon questions of evidence, and that the evidence does not justify the verdict, as the grounds upon which he seeks the reversal of the judgment and the granting of a new trial. At the time of the commission of the alleged offense, appellant was confined in the county jail, and committed the assault charged in the information upon the deputy sheriff in the evening, when the deputy was about to lock him up in his cell for the night. The instrument with which the assault was committed was a stocking, loaded with salt and plaster, which had been hardened by wetting.

The prosecution offered evidence to show that appellant, at the time of the assault, had been tried on a charge of burglary, had been found guilty, and was in jail, awaiting sentence therefor; and this evidence was received over appellant's objection, the court ruling that it was admissible as tending to show motive for the assault, his purpose being to make an escape. For the purpose of showing motive and intent, this evidence was properly received. People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 36 Pac. 16, and cases there cited.

Dr. Gates was called by the prosecution, and, after being shown the instrument with which the assault was committed, was asked by the district attorney: "Could a man kill another with that bag?" Defendant's objection to the question was sustained. The witness was then asked by the prosecution: "Is that a deadly weapon?" Answer: "I presume that would depend altogether on the portion of the body that it came in contact with, and the force used." Question: "Could a man be killed with that weapon?" Defendant's objection was overruled, and exception taken. The witness answered: "There are portions of the body which, if struck, would produce death, or produce a condition from which death would ensue." Question: "Is the temple one portion of the body where if a man were struck with that it might produce death?" Answer: "Yes; if you could strike him with sufficient force." The question objected to, "Could a man be killed with that weapon?" was, to say the least, inconclusive, since there are many things with which a man may be killed which could not be classed as a "deadly weapon." A "deadly weapon" is defined to be one "likely to produce death or great bodily injury." People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245; People v. Franklin, 70 Cal. 641, 11 Pac. 797; People v. Leyba, 74 Cal. 407, 16 Pac. 200. The question, however inclusive it might be, was not irrelevant, since, if it was an instrument with which life could not be taken, it could not be classed or considered as a deadly weapon, and the prosecutor might first show that life could be taken with it, and then proceed to show how it could be done, and thus proceed to establish the fact that it was an instrument likely to produce death when used in the manner the evidence shows it was; and the evidence touching the manner in which it was used, in connection with the testimony of this witness, was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that it was a deadly weapon. The fact that defendant's objection to the same question, when first put to the witness, was sustained, does not make the second ruling erroneous; and, as the first ruling was in defendant's favor, he cannot complain that it was erroneous.

The respondent's objections to the several questions put to this witness by the defendant upon cross-examination as to a "billy," what it is used for, and whether the witness would call it a deadly weapon, were properly sustained.

It is further contended by appellant that his motion for a new trial should have been granted, because the evidence does not justify the verdict—First, because the evidence shows that the sole intent with which the assault was committed was that of escaping from jail; and, second, that the evidence does not justify the finding of the jury that the instrument used was a deadly weapon.

As to the first of these grounds, there can be no question that the purpose intended to be accomplished by means of the assault was to escape from jail; but, to accomplish this, it was necessary to secure the keys of the doors through which the sheriff entered, and to prevent alarm, interference, and pursuit. If defendant had snatched the keys from the deputy, he might still have been prevented from reaching the door, or, if he succeeded, the deputy could give alarm and pursuit; but, if he killed the deputy, alarm and pursuit might be prevented; and therefore the ultimate purpose or object to be accomplished is not the question to be decided, but whether he intended to kill the deputy in order that he might escape. For the purpose of determining whether the assault was made with intent to murder, the character of the instrument, the manner in which it was used, and the purpose to be accomplished, are all to be considered.

It is urged, however, that the instrument with which the assault was made is not a deadly weapon. The testimony of Dr. Gates would seem to show that whether the instrument used was such as would likely produce death depends upon the manner of its use and the portion of the body upon which it was used, and therefore it becomes a mixed question of law and fact, which the jury must determine under proper instructions. People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245; People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 601, 11 Pac. 481; People v. Leyba, 74 Cal. 407, 16 Pac. 200. The blow given by the defendant was upon the side of the face and temple, and knocked the deputy down, but did not disable him. The jury saw the defendant, and the instrument with which the assault was committed, heard all the evidence touching the circumstances and manner of the assault, and, under proper instructions from the court, found that the instrument used was a deadly weapon. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that their conclusion was wrong, or that the verdict for any reason was not justified by the evidence. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

FOX v. MACKAY et al. (S. F. 1,016.)

CONSPIRACY — FRAUD — EVIDENCE — FINDINGS OF FACT.

Where directors of a corporation paid a large sum to its superintendent for special services rendered, which payment plaintiff, a stockholder, alleged to have been fraudulent, a judgment in favor of a defendant claimed to have conspired with the directors in inducing such payment is supported by findings of fact stating that defendant was not a member of the board of directors; that he in no way profited by, and was a stranger to, the whole transaction.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Theodore Fox against John W. Mackay and the Consolidated California & Virginia Mining Company to recover a fund paid by the company to its superintendent in fraud of stockholders. From a judgment in favor of defendant Mackay, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. G. Sieberst, for appellant. W. E. F. Deal and Edmund Tauszky, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This action is brought by Theodore Fox, a stockholder of the Consolidated California & Virginia Mining Company, against John W. Mackay and the aforesaid corporation. The action is prosecuted by Fox, as he alleges, in the interest and for the benefit of the corporation. The gist of the cause of action alleged against Mackay is that he conspired to defraud, and did defraud, the mining company, with the aid and connivance of its board of directors, out of the sum of $50,000. It is now sought by this appeal to compel him to replace that amount of money in the treasury of the company. The basis of plaintiff's claim is found in the payment to one W. H. Patton, an employé of the company and superintendent of the mine, of the sum of $50,000, in four monthly installments of $12,500 each. This money was paid to Patton under a resolution of the board of directors reciting that it was done in consideration of the extraordinary and valuable services rendered to the company in the extinguishing of a fire of long standing in the lower levels of the mine. The denials of Mackay's answer to these various charges of fraud were full and complete, and, upon the submission of the case under the evidence and argument, findings of fact were made by the trial judge supporting all along the line the position of defendant Mackay. This appeal is now prosecuted by plaintiff from that judgment.

Upon this appeal there appears to be but a single point urged for the reversal of the judgment, and that point is somewhat vaguely made, and pressed with but little enthusiasm. We assume the point to be that the findings of fact do not support the judgment. But, upon an examination of those findings, we see nothing to justify this contention; and appellant's counsel has failed to particularize in that regard. The findings of fact are full and substantially contain a detailed history of the transaction of which complaint is made. If the claim of appellant be that the superintendent was already an employé of the company at the time these services were performed in extinguishing the fire, and that for such reason the services were done under his original and ordinary employment, then a complete answer to such claim is found in the finding of fact that "said services of said Patton in extinguishing said fire were valuable, efficient, unusual, and extraordinary services, and were outside of his ordinary duties as such superintendent." But, aside from this fact, we find other findings which cut away below any question of the power of the board of directors looking towards an appropriation of this large sum of money for the payment of services, and that, too, whether those services were real or fancied. Those findings of fact are to the effect that Mackay committed no fraud; that he was not a conspirator; that he was not a member of the board of directors of the mining company; that he in no way profited by the transaction, and was an entire stranger to the whole matter from start to finish. Upon this state of facts, a judgment of nonliability upon his part has ample support, and should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

CONSPIRACY—EVIDENCE.

Where a defendant, claimed to have successfully conspired to induce the directors of a corporation to vote a large sum to its superintendent in fraud of stockholders, was absent from the city for a long time, both prior and subsequent to the action of the directors, and knew nothing of the matter until long after it was entirely completed, a judgment dismissing the action as to him was supported by the evidence.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Theodore Fox against John W. Mackay and the Consolidated California & Virginia Mining Company to recover a fund paid by the company to its superintendent in fraud of stockholders. From a judgment in favor of defendant Mackay, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. G. Sieberst, for appellant. W. E. F. Deal and Edmund Tauszky, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This cause is S. F. No. 1,040, but it is the same cause as S. F. No. 1,016, decided this day (56 Pac. 434), and was argued jointly and upon the same briefs. No. 1,016 is an appeal from the judgment. No. 1,040 is an appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and is now before us upon a separate record. Upon this appeal it is contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of fact. A brief summary of various facts which gave rise to the present litigation is set forth in the opinion of the court upon the appeal from the judgment. Mackay was a director in the Nevada Bank, and the Nevada Bank was treasurer of the mining company defendant. Patton, superintendent of the mine, was indebted to the Nevada Bank by note in the sum of about $50,000. It may be said that the theory of plaintiff's case is that Flood and Mackay formed a conspiracy to get the payment of Patton's note by inducing the directors of the mining company, whom they controlled, to vote Patton a gratuity of $50,000, it being understood that the money when paid should be applied to the payment of Patton's indebtedness to the bank.

Upon the case, measured by the record before the court, we do not find it necessary to discuss the legal proposition involved in the question as to the right of the board of directors of the mining company to pay Patton from the treasury of that company the sum of $50,000. If there was fraud in that transaction, if legal wrong to the company was done there, it could only be material here if the defendant Mackay was a party to it. However much that payment may have been unauthorized in law, and however much it may have been a fraud upon the stockholders of the mining company, still if the defendant Mackay was not a participant therein, either directly or indirectly, no liability can be put upon him. As to his connection with the transaction, the findings of fact are all one way. By these findings it is declared that he had nothing to do with it, and the evidence is in full accord with the findings of fact. It is not even contradictory. Mackay was not in the state when the board of directors of the mining company resolved to pay this money, and had not been in the state for a long time prior thereto. He knew nothing whatever of the matter until long after it had become a thing of the past. He in no way attempted to influence the board of directors in voting the money. The $50,000 indebtedness of Patton to the bank was amply secured by collateral; hence, as a stockholder of the bank, the payment of the loan from the treasury of the mining company was no benefit to him; but, upon the contrary, as a stockholder of the mining company, it was a substantial injury. He in no degree received any pecuniary benefit from the transaction, and in no sense was a conspirator to defraud the company out of the money. The findings of fact exonerate him from all liability, and the evidence does the same. For the foregoing reasons, the order is affirmed.

WHYTE v. ROSENCRANTZ. (S. F. 847.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1899.)

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—VENDOR AND PURCHASER—INFANTS—DISAFFIRMANCE OF CONTRACT—NOTES —DELIVERY—PLEADING—EVIDENCE—CONTRACTS
—RESCISSION—MONEY RECEIVED.

1. One to whom a loan is made in consideration of a promise to secure it by a conveyance of real property is, on his refusal to make the conveyance, liable for the amount of the loan as for money had and received, though the promise was void under the statute of frauds.

2. A complaint for money had and received alleged that defendant executed a note for the sum due, and attempted to deliver it to the payee, but she refused to accept it, whereupon he left it at her residence, and that the note never was in fact delivered; and it offered to return it. Held that, by offering to return the note, the complaint did not show an acceptance of it.

3. Under Civ. Code, § 35, authorizing the disaffirmance of a contract because of minority only on restoration of the consideration or payment of its equivalent, where at the time of its execution the minor was over 18 years of age, a minor to whom a loan was made on his oral promise to secure it by a conveyance of real property on coming of age is, on his refusal, after attaining his majority, to make such conveyance, liable as for money had and received, unless he offers to return the amount received, though he no longer has the identical money loaned him.

4. A loan was made in consideration of a promise to secure it by a conveyance of realty as soon as the debtor became of age, and two demand notes were given for it. Shortly before the time when the conveyance was to be made, the debtor obtained the notes from the payee, stating that he intended to use them in settling with his guardian, and to make the promised conveyance. Some time thereafter he came back with a new note for the amount of the debt, and threw it on the table, saying that, unless the payee took this, she would never get a cent. She refused to accept the note, and tried to get him to take it back, but he went away, leaving it; and she took it to her attorney, indorsed it, and left it with him. Thereafter the maker paid interest on it to her, but prior to its execution he had been paying the interest on a debt due from her to a third person, under the original agreement by which the loan to him was made, and she understood it to be interest to apply on such debt. Held, that a finding that there was no delivery of the new note was warranted.

5. There never having been an acceptance of the new note, no rescission by the payee was necessary to permit her to sue, as for money had and received, on the debtor's refusal to make the conveyance.

6. In a suit against the debtor as for money had and received, an offer was made to return the note, and it was brought into court to be canceled. Held a sufficient rescission, under Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2, requiring a person rescinding a contract to restore to the other party everything of value received thereunder.

7. To make the rescission effective, it was unnecessary to return interest paid by the debtor, since it was voluntarily paid by him under the agreement under which he obtained the loan.

8. Since the interest paid was but a reasonable compensation for the use of the money, the debtor was not entitled to a return thereof.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by A. C. Whyte against H. Rosencrantz. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. Rosencrantz, for appellant. J. F. Fleming and C. S. Peery, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for money had and received. Plaintiff is assignee of Adele Hesser, from whom it is alleged that defendant received the sum of $5,000, under a verbal agreement, "upon the express condition that said defendant would immediately, upon meeting his majority, make, execute, and deliver to said Adele Hesser, as security for the payment of said sum, an assignment of all the right, title, and interest in and to" certain property situated in the city of San Francisco, of which defendant was the owner of an undivided one-eighth interest. It is alleged that at this time defendant was over the age of 18 years; that prior to the commencement of the action defendant came of age, and said Adele Hesser demanded that defendant execute said assignment, but he failed and refused to do so, and wholly failed to secure said sum. On or about January 20, 1895, defendant signed a promissory note for said sum, with interest at 7 per cent., payable 11 months after date, "and attempted to deliver the same to said Adele Hesser, and left the same with said Adele Hesser at her residence; but said Adele Hesser then and there refused to accept the said note, * * * unless said defendant would secure payment of the same by said assignment of said interest on said real property as aforesaid, and said note was not in fact delivered." Said Mrs. Hesser, prior to the commencement of the action, offered to return said note to defendant; but he refused to accept the same, and refused to return said sum of $5,000 or any part thereof; and no part of said sum has been paid, but the whole thereof is due. Plaintiff is now willing and ready to return said note to defendant, and "brings the same into court for said defendant." The complaint is verified. Defendant denies the alleged or any agreement or conditions as attaching to the receipt of the money; admits making the $5,000 note; denies that it was not accepted by Mrs. Hesser, and alleges that it was received by her in payment of said sum; denies the offer to return the note, and denies the alleged assignment to plaintiff; alleges that about September 20, 1894, he borrowed of Mrs. Hesser $2,000, and gave his note therefor to her, payable one day after date, at 7 per cent. interest; that on December 26, 1894, he borrowed from her $3,000, and gave his note to her for that amount, payable one day after date, at 7 per cent. interest; that at these times defendant was over 18 years old, and under 21 years, and on January 6, 1895, defendant came of age, and about January 20, 1895, executed and delivered to Mrs. Hesser his note for $5,000, payable 11 months after date, at 7 per cent. interest, which she accepted to secure the payment of said sum; alleges that Mrs. Hesser surrendered to defendant said two notes first given (when they were surrendered is not alleged); and, when the $5,000 note was given, Mrs. Hesser and defendant agreed that it should be received in payment of the first two notes, and that it was so received by her, and that said last note was not due when this suit was commenced.

The cause was tried without a jury, and the court found: That defendant received the $5,000 under the verbal agreement as alleged in the complaint. It was paid as follows: $2,000 about September 26, 1894, and $3,000 about December 2, 1894. And that defendant gave his two notes for these amounts, bearing date as alleged in the answer, but that they were not accepted "as absolute or conditional payment, but were intended by and between the parties, and it was so agreed and understood, that said notes should be taken merely as evidence of the said indebtedness until said defendant should arrive at his majority, and would make, execute, and deliver the said conveyance of said real estate as security for said indebtedness as hereinbefore set forth, and were the only written evidence said Adele Hesser had of said indebtedness." About January 1, 1895, defendant obtained possession of said two last-mentioned notes from Mrs. Hesser, upon the promise of defendant "to thereafter immediately deliver to her said conveyance of said real estate as aforesaid, and the said notes were, while in the possession of said defendant, marked 'Paid' by him, and retained by him, but the said Adele Hesser did not deliver the said notes up to be canceled, nor were the same then paid or the indebtedness evidenced then thereby released or discharged." That about January 20, 1895, defendant signed a promissory note for $5,000 (the note as above referred to), and offered to deliver the same to Mrs. Hesser, "and showed the same to her, and left the said note upon a table, in the presence of said Adele Hesser, at her residence; but said Adele Hesser then and there refused to accept said note in settlement or payment of the said indebtedness, and refused to accept the same in any manner without the security for the payment of the same which she claimed the defendant had promised her; and the said defendant then said, 'You can have the said note or nothing.' Thereupon the said Adele Hesser demanded the said conveyance and the said real property as security for the said sum of $5,000, and at the same time offered to return the said note to defendant, and insisted that he should take the same, and make the said conveyance; but defendant refused to take the said note away, and refused to make the said conveyance, and refused to return to the said Adele Hesser the said sum of $5,000 or any part thereof. That said Adele Hesser was inexperienced in business, and, although she retained the said note in her possession thereafter, she had no intention at any time of accepting the said note as a conditional or absolute payment of said indebtedness." That Mrs. Hesser did not sell this note, but assigned it for the purpose of producing the note at the trial to be canceled, and the same was delivered to the clerk of the court for that purpose. That Mrs. Hesser mortgaged her property to obtain the money loaned to defendant, and he agreed to pay the interest thereon, and that the interest money alleged by defendant to have been paid by him was in fact paid to the mortgagee, and not to Mrs. Hesser on said notes first executed by defendant. The court also found that defendant owned the interest in certain property as alleged in the complaint; that defendant came of age January 5, 1895; and that Mrs. Hesser frequently thereafter demanded that he execute said conveyance, but on said January 20, 1895, he refused, and ever since has refused, to make said conveyance or secure said loan, and thereby disaffirmed said contract and agreement entered into by him when he received said money. Judgment passed for plaintiff, from which, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

1. Appellant claims that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, but "does state facts which effectually dispel the legal theory upon which it is framed." The basis of the action is that defendant has received money which, under the circumstances, it would be inequitable for him to retain. The complaint alleged that defendant obtained from Mrs. Hesser $5,000, upon a promise to give a certain security therefor at a certain time. The condition was not complied with, and, being void, it could not be enforced. This void feature of the transaction does not preclude recovery. An action on quantum meruit or quantum valebat will lie where money is paid or services performed under a contract void by the statute of frauds; and we see no difference in principle where the action is for money had and received and the contract is void for other reasons. In Buck v. City of Eureka, 109 Cal. 504, 42 Pac. 243, where the action was on a void contract, this court held that an action would lie for services rendered on quantum meruit. Upon the proposition, see, also, Day v. Railway Co., 51 N. Y. 583; 89 N. Y. 616; Cook v. Doggett, 2 Allen, 439; Jarboe v. Severin, 85 Ind. 496; Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 340. But it is further said that, although the complaint averred nondelivery of the note, and refusal to accept it by Mrs. Hesser, it is alleged that an offer was made to return it, which shows delivery, else how could there be an offer to return? We think the explanation made of the circumstances attending the attempted delivery, and the reasons for retaining the note and offering to return it, relieve the pleading from the charge of inconsistency or of being felo de se.

2. Appellant's next five points may be summarized and treated together: Defendant's agreement to secure the money was void. If he made it, he had the right to, and did, disaffirm. And under the provisions of section 35, Civ. Code, he was not bound to restore the money unless he had the identical money he had received, the burden of proving which was on plaintiff. That the $5,000 note was a substitution for the first two notes, and changed the time of payment, and was acquiesced in by Mrs. Hesser; and hence it became a new contract on conditional payment, and operated at least to postpone payment, and as full performance of defendant's agreement. That Mrs. Hesser could not hold the note, and at the same time demand payment of the money, and she did not rescind or attempt to rescind. The evidence tended to show that defendant obtained the money as alleged and as found by the court, and upon the agreement as found by the court. A few days before defendant came of age, he got from Mrs. Hesser the two notes first given for the purpose, as he said, to use them in settling with his guardian, "and to give her a transfer of his property." He came of age January 5th, and the next day he came to Mrs. Hesser, as she testified, and said to her: "I will be up in the evening, and I can bring you the deed to my property, and you can sell it, and make me paid." He said: "'You are my mother' and that he would treat me as a mother." These notes were never paid, and were not returned to Mrs. Hesser, but were marked "Paid" by defendant. She did not see him again until about the 20th of January, "when," as she testified, "he rang the bell, and came in in a passion. I said, 'Hilly, what is the matter with you?' He said, 'Here,' and he flung that $5,000 note on the table, and he said, 'If you don't take this, madam, you will never get a cent.' I said, 'What is the matter, Hilly?' He said, 'I will make myself execution proof, like my brother, Isidor Rosencrantz, and you will get nothing.'" There was evidence corroborative of this meeting. She testified that she did not accept the note, and the evidence tends to show that she tried to get him to take back the note, and insisted on having the deed to his property, but that he threw the note on a table, and left the house, and she saw him no more. In February, Mrs. Hesser handed the note to plaintiff, with the right to sue; and she put the matter in the hands of her attorney, Mr. Fleming, and he took the note, and she indorsed it in his presence, and he has had it ever since. It appears that defendant paid some interest directly to Mrs. Hesser, and some to the bank on her mortgage given to secure the money she borrowed to loan to defendant; but Mrs. Hesser testified that she understood it to be interest money to apply on her mortgage, as defendant had promised to furnish the money for that purpose. It appears, however, that she did receive some interest money on the $5,000 note, as to which her attorney, in March, informed defendant it was without the attorney's knowledge; and an offer was made to return it, and a new demand made for the deed. The evidence is conflicting, but I think there is some evidence tending to support the findings.

It is conceded that the verbal agreement to convey the property was void; and, being void by the statute of frauds, and not because of defendant's minority, it may not have been necessary for him to disaffirm, and possibly his disaffirmance or nondisaffirmance would not affect the case. He did, however, disaffirm the agreement to convey. The action is not upon this void agreement. It arises out of the relations of the parties, and rests upon the rule that, while the law will not give the action on the agreement, it regards it as morally binding, and for that reason will not give relief against a party not in default, nor in favor of a party who is in default in his performance of the agreement; and where a party, who has received money under such an agreement, has refused to perform it, the law, to do justice to the other party, will imply an assumpsit. This being the rule between parties ordinarily, does it apply to a minor over the age of 18 years, under our Civil Code? There are certain obligations, not here involved, which the minor may not disaffirm. Civ. Code, §§ 36, 37. In all other cases the contract of the minor, "if made whilst he is under the age of eighteen, may be disaffirmed," etc.; but, "if the contract be made by the minor whilst he is over the age of eighteen, it may be disaffirmed in like manner upon restoring the consideration to the party from whom it was received or paying its equivalent." Id. § 35. Appellant relies upon Craig v. Van Bebber, 100 Mo. 584, 13 S. W. 906, and 18 Am. St. Rep. 571, for the proposition that this section applies only when, upon his majority, the minor has the money.

It may be true, as appellant claims, that the law elsewhere is that no restitution is required "unless the appellant had the identical money he had received." But whatever may be the law under other statutes, we think our Code is too plain to admit of any such interpretation, and was so made to obviate perplexities existing where the statutes had not made the law clear. See Code commissioners' note to section 35. The consideration here was the $5,000 received by defendant. Conceding, but by no means admitting, that the duty of the minor only goes to the extent of returning the identical money received, if he have it, as seems to be held under some statutes, our Code adds the words "or paying its equivalent," which clearly implies that, if he cannot restore the identical consideration received, he must pay its equivalent. In this case defendant received money, and that or other money is its only equivalent. See note to Craig v. Van Bebber, 18 Am. St. Rep., at page 694 (s. c. 100 Mo. 584, 13 S. W. 906); Combs v. Hawes (Cal.) 8 Pac. 597.

The claim that the $5,000 note was a substitution and a new contract in place of the first two notes is not borne out by the evidence, and the finding is to the contrary. It seems that defendant obtained possession of these latter notes under pretense that he wanted them for a particular purpose, and not to be canceled, which he assumed to do after getting possession of them. They were one-day notes, and were not received as payment, but mere evidences of the debt until Mrs. Hesser could get the deed promised her. The $5,000 note was thrust upon Mrs. Hesser under circumstances justifying the finding of the court that she did not retain it with any intention of accepting it as conditional or absolute payment of the indebtedness evidenced thereby. That she received some interest was some evidence of acceptance, but it was not conclusive. Nor can appellant claim that payment was postponed because this note was made payable 11 months after date, for Mrs. Hesser did not accept the note. I do not think that her retention of the note, under the circumstances, and turning it over to her attorney, is at all conclusive of her acceptance of it as a new contract substituted for the earlier notes. It was evidence of the fact merely, but open to explanation. As defendant got possession of the earlier notes apparently under a false pretense, and still retained them, the burden was on him to make clear the proof of delivery and acceptance of the new note. The evidence on the point was conflicting, of which there was sufficient to justify the finding against defendant's contention. Upon the point that Mrs. Hesser failed to rescind or offer to rescind, the obvious answer is that there was nothing for her to rescind, as she did not receive and accept the note as conditional or absolute payment of the indebtedness. Besides, the offer to surrender the note and bringing it into court at the time to be canceled was sufficient. Defendant was thus fully protected against any other action on that note. Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 213; Civ. Code, § 1691, subd. 2.

There was no offer to return the interest money paid by defendant, but this was voluntarily paid by him to apply to Mrs. Hesser's mortgage according to agreement, and, furthermore, was but the reasonable compensation for the use of the money, to the return of which defendant was not entitled. Wilson v. Moriarty, 77 Cal. 596, 20 Pac. 134.

3. Appellant makes an omnibus objection that "each and every ruling of the court below, which was made the object of objection and exception, was erroneous"; citing many folios of the transcript, but not pointing out why error is claimed as to any one of these numerous assignments. This method of presenting errors would, under the practice of this court, justify ignoring them altogether. We have, however, looked through the transcript, in obedience to the learned counsel's request, but can discover no error prejudicial to defendant.

We are of the opinion that the judgment and order should be affirmed, and so advise.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing, the judgment and order are affirmed.

123 Cal. 666

CITY OF EUREKA v. MCKAY & CO.

(S. F. 915.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1899.)

DEDICATION OF STREETS—WHAT CONSTITUTES—ESTOPPEL.

1. St. 1856, p. 103, incorporates the town of Eureka, describing its boundaries as commencing at a certain point north of A street, and running south to its corner, and thence south-erly along A street to a certain point. A street had previously been designated as such on a map of Eureka, and the land occupied by it was owned by the state. Held, that the land occupied by A street was not dedicated as a street by the act incorporating the town.

2. St. 1857, p. 76, grants to the town of Eureka the lands within its limits owned by the state, including what is known as the "water front," extending from high-water mark into the bay to a point where the water is not over six feet at low tide, the trustees of the town being required to plat the water front into lots, and to sell such of them at a certain price to persons who were bona fide occupants thereof at the time the act was passed. Thereafter the trustees passed an ordinance employing a surveyor "to run off and set stakes at the corners of all the blocks lying between A and N streets and the bay." Pursuant thereto, a map was made of a part of the town, including A street, which was placed in the recorder's office. This map contained no names of streets. Thereafter an occupant of part of the water front applied for a deed, and the town conveyed to his successor, the deed including a part of A street; and in another street, which was also conveyed, a right of way to the bay was reserved for the original occupant. Held, that the municipal authorities had not dedicated as a street the part of A street conveyed by them.

3. A conveyance by a municipality included a portion of a street which was not being used as such; and the grantee and his successors took possession, and paid taxes thereon, and inclosed it with a substantial fence. Held, that the city was not equitably estopped from claiming the land as a street.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Ejection by the city of Eureka against McKay & Co., a corporation. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. B. & Geo. H. Mastick, for appellant. A. G. Monroe, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action in ejectment, brought by the city of Eureka, to recover from defendant a piece of land alleged to be a public street of that city, described and known as "A Street." The answer denied the allegations of the complaint, and affirmatively pleaded the statute of limitations and an estoppel against plaintiff. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts. Judgment passed for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

In 1850 a settlement was made on the site of what afterwards came to be the town of Eureka, now the city of Eureka. In that year one Ryan made a map entitled "Map of Eureka." Before the 18th day of April, 1856, this map was deposited in the office of the recorder of Humboldt county, and has since remained in the office of the recorder. It bears upon it no marks of filing. The map represented blocks, lots, and streets,—those streets running generally north and south being named from the letters of the alphabet; those running at right angles to them by numbers. "A street," as delineated, forms the western boundary of the town, and extends from the waters of Humboldt Bay southerly beyond Third street. On April 18, 1856, the legislature passed an act incorporating the town of Eureka. St. 1856, p. 103. The boundaries of the town were thus delimited: "Commencing at a point one hundred yards north of A and First streets, in Humboldt Bay, and running south to the corner of A and First streets; thence southerly, along A street, to 16th street; thence easterly, along 16th street, to S street," etc. In the following year the state ceded to the town of Eureka all of the land which by virtue of its sovereignty it owned within the corporate limits of the town. St. 1857, p. 76. Of the land so owned by the state, and so granted to the municipality, a part was the "water front" of the town, defined in the act to be the land within the corporate limits of the town "extending from high-water mark to a point in the bay where the water shall not be over six feet deep at low tide." The other land which passed to the town by this grant was the marsh land lying between this water front and the upland proper. The land here in controversy is a part of this marsh land. The act contained the following provision: "Sec. 2. The board of trustees of said town are hereby authorized and required to lay off the said water front in lots of such size and in such manner as will accommodate and subserve the interest of the present 'mill owners' and other occupants, and shall proceed to sell such lots as are now in the bona fide possession of such 'mill owners' and other occupants, at a price not to exceed one dollar per front foot, and extending from high-water mark to a point in the bay where the water shall not be over six feet deep at low tide." Upon the 17th of August, 1857, the board of trustees, following this act, adopted an ordinance known as "Ordinance No. 9," as follows: "The board of trustees of the town of Eureka do ordain as follows: That Mr. Murray be employed to run off and set a stake at the corners of all the blocks lying between A and N streets and the bay and Third street, on the most reasonable terms." In the following month, by resolution, the trustees declared that "the board employed Mr. Murray to survey the town as provided in Ordinance No. 9, for the sum of seventy-five dollars, the board to furnish assistance." In December, 1857, the minutes of the board of trustees show the following: "James Dawson applied for the water front in the rear of lots Nos. 20 and 21, on the map of Eureka, to be deeded to him as the occupant thereof," etc. John Vance claimed to be the sole occupant of the water front in part of the lot No. 16 on the map of Eureka. Upon the 4th day of January, the minutes of the trustees show the following: "On motion of Mr. Simpson it was voted that a deed be executed to W. P. Duff as a bona fide occupant for a water front lot on the east side of B street, and extending from Third street to a point in the bay where the water is not more than six feet deep at low tide, and sixty feet wide, at the price of one dollar per front foot, the streets and alleys running across the said lot to be reserved by the town as they are laid out on the map of Eureka, and surveyed by Mr. Murray in September last." On the 15th day of January, 1858, Ryan, on behalf of Ryan & Duff, made application to the trustees for a deed to a lot of land. On the 16th day of January, 1858, the board determined that Ryan & Duff were bona fide occupants of the "water front" claimed by them, and ordered "that a deed be executed to James T. Ryan and James R. Duff for the water-front lot commencing at the northwest corner of A and Third streets; from thence running northerly to a point in the bay where the water is not more than six feet deep at low tide; thence easterly to the east side of B street; thence southerly to Third street; thence westerly, along the north side of Third street, to the place of beginning,—reserving a right of way to the bay, in B street, to W. R. Duff." A deed to this land from the city was duly made to William I. Reed, who had succeeded by purchase to the rights of Ryan & Duff; and the defendant derails title by mesne conveyances from Reed, each successive grantee having paid full value for the property. Between the date of the passage of Ordinance No. 9 and the date of the application of Ryan & Duff for a deed, Murray set stakes, as contemplated by Ordinance No. 9, at the corners of the blocks, and, in particular, staked the corners of the blocks on A street, between First street and Third street. He also made a survey of A street between First and Third streets, and there was placed in the recorder's office a map called "Map of a resurvey of a portion of the town of Eureka, scale one hundred and fifty feet to the inch, by Joseph Seely, county surveyor. J. S. Murray, Deputy." This diagram represents blocks, lots, and streets; but it contains no names of streets, nor names or designations or numbers of lots or blocks, and bears no indication of the points of the compass. A comparison of it with the Ryan map discloses that it is but an enlarged and incomplete copy of that drawing. The land affected by this controversy is a part of the land conveyed by the city to Reed. It is marsh land, and (assuming A street to be a street) comprises that portion of A street between Third street and Second street. This land was not, and never has been, open to travel, nor used as a street. Taxes have been paid upon it by defendant and its grantors regularly and continuously; and for many years it has been inclosed by a substantial fence.

The legal questions presented under these facts are the following: (1) Was the land in controversy dedicated as a public street by the act of the legislature incorporating the town of Eureka? (2) Was it dedicated as a public street by the municipal authorities of the town of Eureka? (3) If a dedication was made, is an estoppel in pais raised against the city by reason of its deed, its subsequent conduct, and circumstances of an exceptional nature which would render it inequitable to permit the city to claim a street against this defendant?

1. We think it quite clear that the act of the legislature incorporating the town of Eureka did not operate as a dedication of A street. Dedication is always a question of intent, and the acts of the owner of property are sufficient to prove a dedication only when they are evincive of such intent, or, what amounts substantially to the same thing, when they are such as to estop him from denying that such was his intent. The act of 1856 was an act "to incorporate the town of Eureka," and as essential to that incorporation to fix the boundaries of the town, and thus limit the territory over which the municipality could exercise corporate jurisdiction. In defining these boundaries, it made reference to streets. The streets named in the act were those which formed the boundary streets upon the Ryan map. It would be unreasonable to say that by the act of incorporation the legislature meant to dedicate as public streets these boundary streets, and yet that it entirely ignored all of the other cross streets and connecting streets, as shown on the map. In truth, the legislative mind was not directed to the dedication of public highways at all. That might well be left, and in fact was left, to the municipal authorities. The case upon this proposition is like those of People v. Kruger, 19 Cal. 411, and People v. Dana, 22 Cal. 11, where the same contention was made as to the dedication by the legislature of a street in San Francisco, and this court said: "This phrase was not designed to lay off a street or to protract the line of a street already existing. The legislature might well trust the city with such police and municipal regulation. The only object was to fix the boundary in order to show what was conveyed. This could as well be done by giving the course or the imaginary or real line of the given street as by opening and establishing the street to the desired point, and making it the boundary."

2. Do the acts of the municipal authorities amount to a dedication of A street? The Ryan map, being the unauthorized act of a person having no interest in the land, could not amount even to an offer of dedication. City of Eureka v. Croghan, 81 Cal. 524, 22 Pac. 693. The act of the legislature incorporating the town contained, as already stated, no dedication, much less an adoption of the Ryan map, to which no reference whatever is made. This portion of A street has never been used by the public as a street. If, then, a dedication of it as a highway was ever made, that dedication is to be found in the acts of the municipal authorities directed to that end. Here respondent places much reliance upon Ordinance No. 9 and the acts of Mr. Murray in placing his survey stakes, as contemplated by that ordinance. But Ordinance No. 9 is not a dedication of proposed streets. The utmost that can be allowed for it is that it was a recognition by the munality of pre-existing streets. Murray had no authority from the board to lay out new streets, nor any authority to prepare or file a map showing new or any streets. The crude and imperfect drawing which was placed in the recorder's office, and which was made by Murray, contains no reference for its authority to Ordinance No. 9. It does not disclose that it was made by the authority of any one. It contains no names or designations of streets or lots. So incomplete is it that it is not such a diagram or plat as could be made the foundation of an offer to dedicate by map, even if the desire so to dedicate were in the mind of the owner of the land. Nor is the mention of A street in Ordinance No. 9 any evidence of an intent upon the part of the municipal authorities to dedicate it as a street. Murray was to survey and stake off the blocks "between A and N streets." If A street was not, previous to the date of that ordinance, a dedicated street, this language would not make it such. The case would be very like that before this court in Cerf v. Pfeiging, 94 Cal. 131, 29 Pac. 417. There a plat had been made by one other than the owner, and without the owner's authority. The owner conveyed by reference to the lines of streets designated upon the plat, and the land conveyed was described "as being a part of Pacific street." This court said: "A mere statement of the owner of land that it constitutes a part of a street is certainly not an offer to dedicate, although it may be a probative fact of some value in determining whether he had not previously dedicated it." The grants by the city to other persons of the so-called "water-front lands," made prior to the grant of the land here in question, do not affect the question. There is in them no reference whatsoever to A street. Thus, all the acts of the city up to the time of the grant to Reed are insufficient to show a legal dedication of the land in controversy. When we come, however, to the proceedings of the trustees by which the deed to Ryan & Duff was authorized to be made, there is strong internal evidence to combat the theory of a dedication, and to prove that the intent to dedicate this portion of A street was never in the mind of the municipal authorities. The authorization, it will be noted, was for a deed to Ryan & Duff of certain specifically described and bounded lands. Within the boundaries thus defined were included the portion of A street in controversy, and a portion of the next adjoining street to the east, B street. The trustees were careful to reserve "a right of way to the bay in B street to W. R. Duff." B street stood, so far as dedication by Ordinance No. 9 was concerned, in precisely the same condition as did A street. Manifestly, the trustees did not consider that B street was a public way, or they would not have been guilty of the folly of reserving a private right of way to an individual in a public street. From the full fee in B street which they granted to Ryan and James R. Duff, they reserved a private right of way to W. R. Duff. No such reservation was made as to the land embraced in A street. It seems a natural—indeed, a most inevitable—conclusion that the municipal authorities at that time did not believe A street or B street to be public streets, and least of all did they believe that they themselves had dedicated them to public use.

3. The conclusion thus reached that there was no dedication of "A street" renders unnecessary any extended consideration of the question of estoppel in pais invoked against the city. Suffice it to say that this court has recognized such an estoppel in cases of peculiar hardship where, saving for its aid, grave injustice would result. Fresno v. Irrigation Co., 98 Cal. 179, 32 Pac. 943; Los Angeles v. Cohn, 101 Cal. 373, 35 Pac. 1002. But the facts in this case present not nearly so strong a motive for the invocation of the doctrine as was presented by the facts in the case of City of Sacramento v. Clunie, 120 Cal. 29, 52 Pac. 44. Yet in this latter case it was held that the proof fell far short of establishing this exceptional estoppel.

The agreed statement of facts was made subject to such objections, in point of law, as either party might make on the trial. Upon the trial the court overruled defendant's objection to the admission and consideration of certain facts set out in sundry paragraphs of the stipulation. We have preferred, however, to consider the questions of dedication and estoppel in the light of all of the admitted facts. The conclusions which we have reached render unnecessary any detailed consideration of the objections made to the introduction of the evidence.

As the facts in this case are stipulated, and the appeal is from the judgment, it is unnecessary to order a new trial. Upon the determination by this court that no dedication of "A Street" is proved, defendant is entitled to judgment upon the stipulated facts. The judgment of the trial court is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions that, upon the facts stipulated, judgment be entered for defendant.

FORGERY—EVIDENCE—VARIANCE.

Where experts testified that a check defendant was charged with forging was signed by the name charged in the indictment, and the jury so found, a conviction will not be reversed on appeal on the ground of variance, though the name appearing thereon might be deciphered slightly differently.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Henry Oubridge was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. O'Brien, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant has been convicted of the crime of forgery, and now prosecutes an appeal to this court.

It is contended that a fatal variance exists between the allegations of the information and the proof, in this: that it is alleged the forged signature to the check is "Ned Forester," while the check, upon its face, shows the signature to be "Ned Forestns." There is no merit in the contention. It is not at all apparent from an inspection of the check that the signature is "Ned Forestns." It might readily answer to the call of other signatures equally with that of "Forestns." There was expert testimony tending to show that the signature was "Forester," and, in addition to that testimony, the jury had the check before them for personal inspection. Under this evidence of the expert, and from personal inspection, the jury, by their verdict, declared the signature was "Forester," and this court will not disturb that finding of fact. No other point is made by defendant upon his appeal, and for the foregoing reasons the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HILL. (Cr. 457.)

HOMICIDE — EVIDENCE — HEARSAY — PREJUDICIAL ERROR — EXPERIMENTS — ERRONEOUS ADMISION — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Deceased's wife testified that she saw defendant and deceased in conversation, and soon after was attracted by the loud voice of her husband, and saw him lying on the ground, and defendant standing over him with an uplifted club, but was unable to designate the point where she saw her husband lying, nor to point it out on a diagram. Some days after the homicide, she pointed out the place to a witness, who was permitted, over defendant's objection, to testify to that fact, and to point out the place on the diagram. Held, that the evidence was hearsay, and its admission prejudicial error, since it permitted the jury to determine the place of the conflict from evidence based on the unsworn information of another.

2. Where deceased was killed in a corral by being struck on the head with a smooth stick, and there was no evidence identifying a stick found in the corral as the one with which deceased was struck, or in any manner connecting it with defendant, and the wound could have been produced by any large smooth implement, it was error to permit the stick found to be introduced in evidence, and exhibited to the jury.

3. Where it was admitted that defendant got over a wire fence before striking deceased, and it appeared that one of the wires at the post where he got over was bent, the admission of evidence that a witness put his weight on the wire next to another post, to observe its effect, and that the wire was bent in the same manner, without showing the conditions to have been the same in both cases, while erroneous, was not prejudicial, since it was immaterial how defendant got over.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county.

Robert L. Hill was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Reversed.

Blackstock and Ewing, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

HARRISON, J. The appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree in killing Theodore R. Parvin, and has appealed from the judgment thereon. The circumstances attending the homicide are as follows: The appellant had leased to Parvin certain premises, known as the "Hill Place," and had also sold him certain personal property for use in the cultivation of the land, upon which he had taken a chattel mortgage as security for the payment therefor. Becoming dissatisfied with the manner in which Parvin was cultivating the land, he was anxious to buy him off, and for that purpose went to the place in company with his father on the 8th of February, 1898. Very soon after his arrival, he approached the deceased, who was working within a corral upon a fence at the westerly side thereof; and while upon the outer side of the corral, and talking with the deceased respecting the purchase, hot words ensued between them, followed by a mutual assault, which resulted in the defendant striking Parvin across the head with a stick, from the effects of which he died the same night.

The only person who witnessed the altercation was the father of the defendant, and at the trial he testified that he was at work about 20 or 30 feet away from where they were standing, while on opposite sides of the fence, and, having his attention drawn to them by hearing Parvin speak in a loud tone of voice, saw him approach the defendant with uplifted hands, having a saw in one and a hammer in the other, and strike at him. Thereupon the defendant stooped down, and picked up a stick from the ground, and got over the fence into the corral. Parvin still had the saw and hammer uplifted in his hands, and, while striking at the defendant with the hammer, the defendant struck him across the head with the stick which he had picked up, which caused Parvin to fall to the ground, from which he almost immediately got up, and walked over to the barn, against which he rested for a few minutes, and then went to another part of the corral, and sat down. He also testified that the point in the corral at which Parvin was standing when the defendant struck him was about 3 feet east of the west fence of the corral, and about 25 feet from the barn; that he fell towards the west with his head about a foot from the fence. Mrs. Parvin, the wife of the deceased, was in the dwelling house, and saw the defendant and her husband while they were in conversation upon opposite sides of the fence, but did not see the defendant strike her husband. She testified that, very soon after she had seen them thus talking, she was attracted by the loud voice of her husband, and went out upon the porch, and saw her husband lying on the ground, and the defendant standing over him with a club raised as if to strike him, when his father came up and grabbed his arm. She said that, in seeing this, she looked through the cracks of a pig pen which stood between her and the corral, and which was shown to be 92 feet from where she stood; but she was unable to designate the point in the corral at which she saw her husband lying on the ground, or to point the same out upon the map or diagram which was before the jury; but she stated that on the 16th of February she had pointed out the place to Mr. Graham as near as she could locate it. Thereupon the prosecution called Mr. Graham as a witness, and asked him whether on the 16th of February Mrs. Parvin had indicated to him the point in the corral at which she had seen her husband lying on the ground on the 8th of February, and, if so, to point out same on the diagram. Defendant objected to these questions, on the ground that the testimony sought thereby was hearsay and incompetent, but the objection was overruled, and the witness testified that Mrs. Parvin did point out a place where she said she saw her husband lying on the ground, and the place so pointed out the witness located at a point 165 feet from the porch, and about 20 feet from the place at which the other witness had testified that Parvin fell. The father had also testified that the defendant did not stand with a club raised over the deceased, or attempt to strike Parvin after he fell, nor did he grab defendant's arm or attempt to prevent him from striking Parvin.

The testimony thus given by Graham was clearly hearsay, and the court erred in admitting it. It permitted the jury to determine the point at which the conflict took place by the statement of a witness based upon information derived from another not under oath, and the correctness of whose statement was not subject to a cross-examination by the defendant. The evidence was material, both for the purpose of illustrating the theory of the prosecution in conducting the trial, and for establishing the charge against the defendant by its corroboration of other evidence introduced against him; and that it was deemed material by the prosecution is shown by its efforts to secure its admission, notwithstanding the objections of the defendant. Another witness for the prosecution (McClure) testified that in the afternoon of the 8th of February, about an hour after the occurrence, and after all the parties had left the corral, he went into the corral, and searched for weapons, or what he could find therein, and found a two by four scantling about three feet long, lying on the ground; and, in answer to a question whether he observed any indications on the ground of a struggle, he said that near where he found the stick he saw toe prints that looked as if his toes had pushed the dirt and straw back. This place, he testified, was about north of the middle of the barn, and about 15 feet from it. The barn was shown to be 48 feet in length. The place in the corral at which the altercation took place became, therefore, important for the purpose of determining whether the defendant struck the deceased while defending himself from the assault against him, or whether he pursued the deceased after he got over the fence, and struck him while retreating.

The court also erred in permitting the club which McClure found in the corral to be received in evidence, and exhibited to the jury. There was no evidence identifying the stick as the one with which the defendant struck the deceased, or in any way connecting the defendant with it. Both of the witnesses who testified to having seen the defendant and the deceased together in the corral stated that they were unable to recognize it as the stick which the defendant had used; and the only other testimony relating thereto was that of the physician, who stated that the blow upon the head of the deceased must have been made by some rather large and smooth instrument, and that it could have been produced by such a stick. But, as it is evident from the description of the physician that the blow could have been produced by any other large and smooth implement, it was necessary that there should be some evidence identifying this stick as the one with which the blow was given before it could be offered in evidence; otherwise, the jury could only conjecture that it had been used by defendant. See Tayl. Ev. § 557.

The witness Graham testified to some measurements made by him of the fence on the 16th of February, and that he noticed that the top wire on the north side of the third post, at which it was claimed the defendant got over the fence into the corral, was bent downward about an inch and a half. He then testified, over the objections of the defendant, that he put his weight on the wire next to another post, for the purpose of observing its effect, and that it made the downward appearance just about as it did at the third post. Under the principle stated in People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 204, 52 Pac. 833, this evidence should have been excluded. See, also, Gillett, Ind. & Col. Ev. § 66. If it were intended thereby to show that the kink in the wire at the third post had been made by the defendant, it was not shown that the conditions of the experiment by Graham were the same. The relative weight of the two persons, the tension of the wire at the different posts, and the force with which each stepped upon the fence, were elements to be considered before the experiment could illustrate the supposed act of the defendant. It cannot be said, however, that the defendant was prejudiced by this testimony. It was conceded that he did get over the fence before striking the deceased, and whether he leaped over without touching the wire, or stepped upon the wire in order to get over, was immaterial for the purpose of determining the character of the affray between them.

Objections are made to certain instructions to the jury; but as these objections relate to the form rather than to the substance of the instructions, and may be obviated upon another trial, it is unnecessary to discuss their correctness. The motion to set aside the information was properly refused. People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE ex rel. CUFF v. CITY OF OAKLAND. (S. F. 1,589.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1899.)
MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—INCORPORATED SANITARY DISTRICT—AMENDMENT OF CHARTER.

1. St. 1891, p. 223, authorizes the creation of sanitary districts, and provides for their dissolution by proceedings for that purpose, except that there shall be no dissolution for the purpose of paying outstanding bonded indebtedness, and that the property of the district shall vest in any incorporated city or town occupying a portion of the territory of the district. St. 1889, p. 358, authorizes the annexation of new territory to towns or cities not forming part of any incorporated town or city, and provides proceedings for that purpose. Held, that an incorporated sanitary district, or a part thereof, may be annexed to an incorporated town or city by proceedings under St. 1889, p. 358.

2. St. 1883, p. 97, classifying municipalities according to population, and providing a charter for each class, and authorizing the consolidation of contiguous municipal corporations, does not authorize the annexation of an incorporated sanitary district, or a part thereof, to an incorporated city or town.

3. Under Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that cities shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, except in municipal affairs, Oakland City Charter, § 25 (St. 1889, p. 524), requiring the city council to divide the city into seven wards in the year 1890, and every tenth year thereafter, making the same as nearly equal in population as possible, does not supersede St. 1889, p. 358, authorizing the annexation of territory to incorporated towns and cities, and providing (section 2) that a city annexing such territory shall by ordinance alter the boundaries of wards so as to include the annexed territory, or make a new ward thereof; and the annexation of territory to the city of Oakland under the provisions of St. 1889, p. 358, is not void as depriving the qualified electors residing in the annexed territory of their elective franchise.

4. The annexation of new territory to an incorporated city is not an amendment of its charter, within Const. art. 11, § 8, permitting the amendment of a city charter only at intervals of not less than two years, and with the consent of three-fifths of the qualified electors of the city.

5. Under St. 1889, p. 358, § 1, requiring the city council, on receiving a petition for the annexation of territory to the city, to submit the question whether such annexation shall be made, without delay, to a vote of the electors of the city and of the territory to be annexed, the city council has jurisdiction of a petition for the annexation of territory, even though it has not yet taken final action on a prior petition for the annexation of the same territory, where the second petition included all the territory covered by the first, and every one entitled to vote on the first was also entitled to vote on the second.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by the people, by W. F. Fitzgerald, attorney general, on the relation of Thomas Cuff, against the city of Oakland. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion on motion to dismiss, see 55 Pac. 772.

Fitzgerald & Abbott and W. F. Fitzgerald, for appellant. W. A. Dow, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The purpose for which this action is prosecuted is to determine the validity of certain proceedings under which the defendant claims that certain territory lying between the northerly charter line of said city and the southerly line of the town of Berkeley has been annexed to it, and that said territory is now a part of said city. Findings were filed and judgment entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

There is no controversy as to the facts. Nearly all were stipulated, and are incorporated in the findings; nor is it questioned that the requirements of the statute under which the proceedings were taken were complied with; but, upon the grounds hereinafter stated, appellant contends that said proceedings were unauthorized and void, and that the judgment affirming that the annexation of said territory was accomplished thereby should be reversed.

1. The annexed territory includes the whole of Adeline sanitary district, and part of Golden Gate sanitary district; and appellant contends that sanitary districts cannot be annexed to an incorporated town or city under the act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358), under which the proceedings in question were had. This contention is based upon the proposition that two public corporations cannot exist in the same territory when the powers conferred upon each conflict one with the other, and that the powers conferred upon each do conflict; that a sanitary district cannot be dissolved by annexation proceedings under the act of 1889, but only in the special way provided by the sanitary act under which they were organized (St. 1891, p. 223), and, if they can be annexed to the city, it must be under the statute providing for the consolidation of municipal corporations. It may be conceded at the outset that sanitary districts are public corporations, though not designated as corporations by the statute, and that all their powers, duties, and privileges are such as are incident to municipal corporations formed under the municipal government act, or existing under freeholders' charters, though not possessing many of the important powers, duties, and privileges of the latter, and that the same powers could not, after annexation, be exercised by each in the same territory. But, if the statute permits territory embraced in or covered by a sanitary district to be annexed to a city,—a municipal corporation of a higher class, and capable of exercising the same functions, as well as others essential to municipal government,—such statute contemplates, ex necessitate rei, a cession of the powers of the inferior corporation to the greater, and a consequent dissolution of the former as a result of the annexation. If the territory embraced in these sanitary districts had chosen to incorporate under the statute as a town or city, instead of becoming annexed to the city of Oakland, it certainly could not have been necessary, as a preliminary to such incorporation, to disincorporate as such sanitary districts, since by the incorporation they would have preserved every right and privilege they had before, and would at the same time acquire other rights and additional powers, which would enable them the better to preserve and secure all the rights they had as sanitary districts; and, if they might incorporate as a town or city without first dissolving the prior corporation, no reason is perceived why they could not accomplish the same thing by becoming annexed to an existing municipal corporation under the act of 1889, which provides: "The boundaries of any incorporated town or city, whether heretofore or hereafter formed, incorporated, organized or reorganized, may be altered, and new territory annexed thereto and incorporated and included therein, and made part thereof, upon proceedings being had and taken as in this act provided. * * * No territory, which at the time such petition for such proposed annexation is presented to such legislative body forms any part of any incorporated town or city, shall be annexed under the provisions of this act." This statute unquestionably authorized the annexation of the territory here in question, unless appellant's further contention can be sustained, viz. that these districts were municipal corporations, and the proceedings to accomplish the union of this territory with the city of Oakland should have been taken under section 8 of the act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 97). That act is commonly known as the "Municipal Government Act," which classifies the different municipal corporations according to population, and provides a charter for each class, as required by the constitution, and section 8 provides for the "consolidation" of contiguous municipal corporations. But it must be apparent that the municipal corporations there intended were those, or such as those, which might be organized under that act, or existed under special charters granted by the legislature under the former constitution, or under charters permitted to be framed under the new constitution, and which were designated as towns and cities. As sanitary districts could not be formed under the municipal government act, it would seem to be clear that they could not be consolidated with a city or town, under its provisions; and as any "territory" may be annexed to a town or city to which it is contiguous, unless it is part of an "incorporated town or city," territory embraced in a sanitary district may be annexed.

It is also suggested that difficulties may arise out of the division of Golden Gate sanitary district, a part of which is not annexed. That district, as such, is not a party to this proceeding, nor is any fact stated in the record showing that a controversy will arise; and no question of that character can be pertinent here, unless it tends to show that a division of the district by the annexation of part of it is contrary to law, and that, therefore, the annexation of such part is not accomplished. It is sufficient to say that section 21 of the act under which these districts were organized, which provides for their dissolution, would seem to be comprehensive enough to point the way to the adjustment of all controversies that may be reasonably anticipated, and that the anticipation of controversies that may be thus adjusted cannot make the annexation unlawful. Said section, however, provides that, if there be any outstanding bonded indebtedness, the vote to dissolve such district shall dissolve the same for all purposes, excepting only the levy and collection of taxes for the payment of such indebtedness. It also contains the following provision: "Upon such dissolution the property of the district shall vest in any incorporated city or town that may at said time be in occupation of a considerable portion of the territory of the district, and, if there be no such incorporated city or town, then the property shall be vested in the board of supervisors of the county until the formation of such a city or town." These provisions would seem to make it clear that there are no legal obstacles to the annexation, either of such districts, or parts thereof, to an incorporated city, and no other question is here considered or decided.

2. Appellant's second point is: "There is no law under which to add the annexed territory to any wards, so as to enable the duly-qualified electors residing in the annexed territory to use the elective franchise to which they are entitled under the constitution." Section 25 of the charter of the city of Oakland provides: "The council shall in the year 1890, and every tenth year thereafter, re-district the city into seven wards, making the same as nearly equal in population and as geographically compact as possible; but the city shall not be re-districted within ninety days previous to any municipal election." St. 1889, p. 524. Section 2 of the act of 1889, under which the territory here in question was annexed, provides: "The legislative body of any incorporated town or city which is or shall be divided into wards, and to which territory has been or shall be hereafter annexed, must by ordinance either so alter the boundaries of the wards of such municipal corporation as to include such annexed territory in one or more wards adjoining such annexed territory, or make of such annexed territory one or more additional wards; provided, that the number of wards shall not be so increased as to exceed the number which such municipal corporation may according to law have. In altering the boundaries of wards, or creating new wards, regard must be had to the number of inhabitants, so that each ward shall contain, as near as may be, an equal number of inhabitants, exclusive of persons incapable of citizenship in this state." The agreed statement of facts on this point is, in substance, that the said new territory adjoined the Second ward of said city, and no other; that on September 20, 1897, the council adopted an ordinance altering the boundaries of the Second ward so as to include the annexed territory; that it was approved on September 28th, and has ever since been in full force and effect. Appellant's argument is that section 2 of the act of 1889, above quoted, conflicts with said section 25 of the charter, and that under section 6 of article 11 of the constitution, as amended in 1893, the charter provision must control. Said constitutional provision, so far as material, is as follows: "Cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." The words in italics constitute the amendment to said section; and appellant's contention seems to be that the city had no power to change the boundaries of any of its wards, except at the times and in the manner specified in said section of its charter, and that, as said section 2 of the act of 1889 relates to municipal affairs, the city cannot avail itself of its provisions to change the boundaries of a ward, or be in any manner controlled by it. I do not perceive any ground upon which it can be said that the act providing for the annexation of territory to an incorporated town or city is obnoxious to said section of the constitution as amended. It permits territory not within the city limits or under its control to become annexed to and incorporated with the city, by the mutual action of the city and the inhabitants of such territory,—a thing that could not be accomplished through any provision of the charter of the city of Oakland, or otherwise than under the statutory authority given by said act; and therefore such relation as said act has to "municipal affairs" is not within the constitutional exception. It does not compel action contrary to the provisions of the city charter, but authorizes action, at the pleasure of the city, which could not otherwise be taken. As the legislature alone has the power to authorize such annexation, it must have the power to prescribe the terms, conditions, and mode of annexation, and especially to provide that the inhabitants of the annexed territory shall not be deprived of any constitutional right; and it is therefore enacted that the boundary of the adjacent ward or wards shall be changed so as to include the added territory, or that it shall be made into one or more wards, if thereby the number of wards to which the city is restricted shall not be exceeded. As the city of Oakland is limited to seven wards by its charter, the annexed territory was properly added to the Second ward. This I think could be done without a violation of its charter. Section 25 of the charter, while requiring that the city shall be redistricted into seven wards every tenth year, does not prohibit a change of boundaries at other times (unless within 90 days previous to a municipal election), and therefore the electors residing within the added territory were not deprived of the right to exercise the elective franchise, and the annexation cannot be declared void upon that ground. Whether the city should at that time have been redistricted into seven wards of as nearly equal population as possible is not a question affecting the validity of the annexation, and need not be considered. Appellant's contention that the voters of the annexed territory could not participate in the election of city officers is not sustained. What has been said also disposes of appellant's third point.

4. Appellant's fourth point is, "The annexation is void because section 1 of the act of 1889 is unconstitutional, when considered in connection with section 8 of article 11 of the constitution." Appellant's argument is that the charter of the city of Oakland (commonly known as a "freeholders' charter"), framed and adopted under the provisions of said section of the constitution, can only be amended at intervals of two years, and in the manner in said section provided, which includes the approval of such amendment by the legislature, and that the effect of annexing new territory is an amendment of the charter in a mode which does not conform to the constitution, since a description of the territory covered by the charter is an essential part of it; and cites People v. City of Oakland, 92 Cal. 611, 28 Pac. 807. This contention is conclusively answered by the case of People v. City of Coronado, 100 Cal. 571, 35 Pac. 162. There the city of San Diego had a freeholders' charter also, and the charter included the city of Coronado within its boundaries. Proceedings were taken under the act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 356), to exclude the city of Coronado. It was there contended, as here, that the exclusion, if effectual, constituted an amendment to the city charter. It was held that said act of 1889 authorizing the change of boundaries was constitutional and applied to cities having a freeholders' charter. The case of People v. City of Oakland, 92 Cal. 611, 28 Pac. 807, was there noticed, and shown not to be in point.

5. Lastly, it is contended that the city council had no jurisdiction to act on the petition under which the annexation proceedings were had. The petition under which the proceedings to annex the new territory were had was presented to the city council on April 19th. On March 9th the council received a petition to annex certain territory therein described, but which was different from that described

In the second petition. Said first petition was on March 22d referred by the council to the ordinance and judiciary committee, which consisted of five members. That the relator herein, and other residents and property owners within the territory sought to be annexed, filed with the council a protest against said petition first presented, and alleged, as the ground of such protest "that the description of the new territory asked to be annexed is incorrect, and cannot be located, and that said petition does not conform to the law, and is void." On April 19th the said committee reported in writing to the council, recommending that no action be taken on said petition first presented, which report was received by said council and filed; and on the same day the second petition, under which said territory was annexed to the city, was presented. Touching said first petition, the court below found that the description of the territory sought to be annexed thereunder was sufficient to identify it, and was sufficient for the purpose of annexation proceedings. It is contended by appellant that "section 1 of the act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358) makes it mandatory upon the council, upon receiving a written petition containing the requirements of the statute, to submit, 'without delay,' to the electors of the municipal corporation, and to the electors of the district proposed to be annexed, the question whether the new territory should be annexed." But it is clear that the sufficiency of a petition presented for such purpose must first be passed upon by the council, before an election is ordered. The protest against said petition, above mentioned, will illustrate this proposition, viz. that the description of the territory proposed to be annexed "is incorrect and cannot be located." If that were true, the council could neither determine who, outside of the city, should be entitled to vote upon the question of annexation, nor whether a majority of those actually voting upon the question of annexation were entitled to vote; and, if the council should come to the conclusion that the boundaries were uncertain or could not be ascertained, it would certainly be their duty not to submit the uncertain proposition to an uncertain and indefinite body of voters. Having jurisdiction to pass upon that question, it is immaterial whether the council erred upon the question of its sufficiency. But, however, that may be, the second petition embraced all the territory described in the first, and additional territory not described in the first. It was presented before final action was taken by the council upon the first, and, as no one who was included in the first petition as a resident of the territory proposed to be annexed was excluded by the second, it could not be necessary to submit both to a vote of the electors. No one could be injured by the failure to submit the first to a vote, since every one affected by the first, and entitled to vote thereon, was entitled to vote upon the second.

No other questions are discussed, or require consideration. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of the court, with this exception: I do not think the constitutional amendment of 1896 affects the construction or validity of the annexation act of 1889, or in any wise limits its operation upon the Oakland charter. In other words, I do not think it has any retroactive operation. Under numerous decisions of this court, the annexation act of 1889, as a general law, controlled all charters at the time it was passed, and the subsequent adoption of the amendment of 1896 did not have the effect of undoing what was then fully accomplished.

In re DISBARMENT OF COFFEY.

DISBARMENT—DEFENSE—CRUEL OR UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT—MISDEMEANOR INVOLVING MORAL TURPITUDE.

1. That a certified copy of the record of the conviction of an attorney for an offense warranting his disbarment was not transmitted to the supreme court within 30 days after conviction, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 288, is no defense to the disbarment proceeding.

2. A judgment of disbarment for a misdemeanor in addition to a fine is not cruel or unusual punishment, within the constitutional prohibition.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 287, declaring that an attorney may be disbarred on conviction of a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, a disbarment is warranted for a conviction of unsuccessfully attempting by any verbal threat, such as are specified by Pen. Code, § 519, to extort money or other property from another, and expressly made a misdemeanor, under section 524.

In bank. In the matter of the disbarment of John J. Coffey. Removal from office, and revocation of license ordered.

For rule to show cause, see 53 Pac. 1128.

Jos. F. Coffey, for the prosecution. John J. Coffey, in pro. per.

GAROUTTE, J. Section 518 of the Penal Code reads: "Extortion is the obtaining of property from another with his consent induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right." Section 524 provides: "Every person who unsuccessfully attempts, by means of any verbal threat, such as is specified in section five hundred and nineteen, to extort money or other property from another, is guilty of a misdemeanor." Section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares: "An attorney and counselor may be removed or suspended by the supreme court or any department thereof, or by any superior court of the state, for either of the following causes arising after his admission to practice: (1) His conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction shall be conclusive evidence."

John J. Coffey, an attorney of this court, has been convicted of the offense of attempted extortion, as outlined by the aforesaid section 524. A certified copy of the record of his conviction was placed before this court, and, upon an order to show cause why he (Coffey) should not be removed as an attorney and counselor at law, he made answer as follows: (1) A certified copy of the record of conviction was not transmitted to this court within 30 days after the conviction was had, as required by section 288 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (2) A judgment of disbarment in addition to the fine imposed upon respondent would be violative of the constitutional provision that cruel or unusual punishment shall not be inflicted. (3) It does not appear, and it is not true, that the misdemeanor of which this respondent was convicted involved moral turpitude, within the provision of section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon which this proceeding is based. (4) The police court in which this respondent was convicted had no jurisdiction to try the respondent for the alleged offense, and its proceedings therein were coram non judice.

We see no merit whatever in the first, second, and fourth defenses made by respondent in his answer, and they require no extended consideration. By the third defense it is insisted that the misdemeanor of which the respondent has been convicted does not involve "moral turpitude." This contention presents the only important question in the case. It must be true that, if the actual commission of an offense involves moral turpitude, then an attempt to commit that offense likewise involves turpitude. It therefore follows that, if the crime of extortion by any of the threats enumerated in section 519 of the Penal Code involves moral turpitude upon the part of the extorter, then the attempt of this respondent to extort also involves moral turpitude. Bouvier defines turpitude as "everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals." This definition is so broad that we are not compelled to approach its exterior limits in holding that turpitude is an ingredient of the crime of extortion. No one would contend that moral turpitude was not involved in the crime of robbery; yet extortion is but one degree removed from that crime. Under the statutes of England, extortion by a private individual was termed "robbery," and punished as such; and an attempt to "extort," under the Penal Code of this state, by the statutes of some other states, is made an "attempt to rob." In People v. Barondess, 61 Hun, 576, 16 N. Y. Supp. 438, it is said: "Robbery is the unlawful taking against the will by means of force or violence or fear of injury, immediate or future, to one's personal property, while extortion is the obtaining with consent by similar means." In a note by the commissioners found under section 484 of the Penal Code, annotated, in speaking as to robbery, embezzlement, larceny, and extortion, it is said: "All four include the criminal acquisition of the property of another. In robbery this is accomplished by means of force or fear, and by overcoming or disregarding the will of the rightful possessor. * * * In extortion there is again a taking. Now, this is with the consent of the party injured, but it is consent induced by threats or under color of some official right. * * * Thus, extortion partakes in an inferior degree of the nature of robbery, and embezzlement shares that of larceny." In People v. Griffin, 2 Barb. 430, the court said: "Before the statute, the act of obtaining money or property without a color or claim of right through means of threatening letters was not a subject of criminal recognizance; and yet it is apparent that such acts were as dangerous and accompanied with as much moral turpitude as the crime of robbery. In declaring the act a crime, and providing for its punishment, the legislature have with great propriety placed the offense in the same class with that of robbery; and, in giving the statute an interpretation, I think we should apply the same rule in respect to the intent with which the act is committed as we would in a case of the common-law offense of an intention to rob, in which the lucri causa must always characterize the act." It is thus apparent that extortion is not an act innocent in itself, and only wrong because prohibited by the statute law. But, upon the contrary, it is an act inherently bad and vicious. It is a crime against property, and by the Penal Code of the state is so classified. By the provisions of the Code, we find it in the company of arson, burglary, counterfeiting, larceny, and embezzlement. They are bad and wicked companions, and, by the company it keeps, it must be judged.

For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that respondent, John J. Coffey, be removed from his office as attorney and counselor at law, and that his license to practice law in the courts of this state be revoked and set aside.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HARRISON, J.; HENSHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.

MACOMBER v. BIGELOW. (S. F. 835.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1899.)

BUILDING CONTRACTORS—SUITS BY SUBCONTRACTORS—PRIOR DETERMINATION—CONTRACTOR'S ACTION—CONTINUANCE—QUANTUM MERUIT—RECOVERY—INTEREST.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1193, requiring a building contractor to defend, at his expense, actions brought against the property which was the subject of the contract for work done or materials furnished by subcontractors, the owner is entitled to set off the expense incurred in defending lien foreclosure suits by subcontractors against the contractor's claim based on a quantum meruit, where the contract was invalid because of the contractor's failure to record it as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, and hence it was error for the court to refuse to continue the contractor's action until the subcontractors' suits had been determined.

2. In an action on a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services and materials furnished by a builder, it was error for the court to allow plaintiff interest on the amount recovered from the date the services were performed and the materials furnished, since the claim was not liquidated, and its amount could only be established by evidence in court, or by an accord between the parties.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by C. A. Macomber against L. M. Bigelow. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henley & Costello, for appellant. Knight & Heggerty and W. M. Madden, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This action was brought by the assignee of Belyea & Rogers for services performed and materials furnished by plaintiff's assignors for defendant under a building contract, which was void for failure to comply with the requirements of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to recording before work commenced, etc. The defendant answered, the case was tried before the court without a jury, and the plaintiff had judgment for the reasonable value of the services performed and the materials furnished, together with interest thereon from the date that the same were so performed and furnished. The defendant moved for a new trial on the grounds, among others, that the court erred in not continuing, staying, and abating this action, and the trial thereof, until certain other actions, which had been begun against defendant by subcontractors to enforce their liens against the property which was the subject of the void contract, could be tried and determined. Another ground of the motion for a new trial was that, the claim sued upon being an unliquidated demand, no interest could be recovered with it. I think the new trial was properly granted on these grounds. There was no privity of contract between these subcontractors and the defendant herein, they having furnished the materials and performed the labor on the building under a contract with plaintiff's assignors only. The defendant, therefore, was not personally liable to them, but they were entitled merely to enforce their liens against his property. It became necessary, as a measure to his own self-protection, to defend these foreclosure suits of the subcontractors, that the sums due under them might be ascertained and fixed by the judgment of the court. This was the best way he had of ascertaining whether the claims of the lienholders were valid or not.

And it was also the duty of the contractor, under section 1193 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to bear the burden and expense of defending these actions of foreclosure. Appellant says that this section 1193, and the requirement thereof that the contractor defend at his own expense any action brought against the property which is the subject of the contract for work done or material furnished to him, the contractor, applies only in cases where the contractor has a valid contract, which has been recorded in compliance with the mechanic's lien law, and he himself has a lien on the property. This contention can have no controlling force in this case. That identical argument was made before this court in bank in a case where the building contract was void in the same way that it is in the case at bar, and the court held that the defendant was entitled to set off the costs and attorneys' fees incurred in defending the foreclosure suit of the subcontractor against the claim of the contractor on a quantum meruit. Covell v. Washburn, 91 Cal. 560, 27 Pac. 859.

In the case at bar it was pleaded in the answer and admitted at the trial that there was then pending in another department of the superior court of San Francisco a suit brought by plaintiff herein against defendant herein to foreclose a claim of lien for $5,907.19, originally in favor of one Madigan, but assigned to this plaintiff before he brought such suit, and that such claim of lien was for work and materials furnished at request of Belyea & Rogers upon the same property that was the subject of the void builder's contract mentioned above. It was also pleaded and admitted that two other similar foreclosure suits against such property and against this defendant were pending. To properly protect the right which defendant had, under section 1193 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to require the contractor to bear the expense of these foreclosure suits, and to secure to defendant the right to "deduct from the amount due from him to the contractor" the amount of any costs that might accrue in such foreclosure cases, it was necessary that this action should have been continued until the amount of those costs was ascertained. These could have been ascertained at the conclusion of the trials of those cases, and not before, and to that time should the trial of this case have been continued. If it be urged that this would result in great delay in the collection of plaintiff's claim, the reply is, that is the contractor's fault. He might have avoided all delay by paying his debts to these lienholders. These were and are his debts, and not the debts of this defendant. It follows, then, that, for the reason of the refusal of the court to continue the cause until the amount of the costs and attorney fees in the foreclosure suits could be determined and set off against plaintiff's claim herein, it was proper for the court to grant the new trial.

The appellant himself does not contend that the court could properly allow interest to be recovered in the case, and the suit being on a quantum meruit "for the reasonable value of services and materials, the amount, character, and value of which could only be established by evidence in court, or by an accord between the parties, and which are not susceptible of ascertainment either by computation or by reference to market rates," it would seem that the court erred in holding that interest might be recovered prior to the decision of the case (Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100; Swinnerton v. Development Co., 112 Cal. 375, 44 Pac. 719), and for this reason alone the court properly granted a new trial. The order granting a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order granting a new trial is affirmed.

DAUPHINY et al. v. RED POLL CREAMERY CO. (S. F. 900.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1899.)

SALES—PAROL CONTRACT—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—ACCEPTANCE AND RECEIPT BY BUYER—PROOF—EVIDENCE—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. No recovery can be had on a contract for the sale of goods, within the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1739), which is not in writing, in absence of clear and unequivocal proof of acceptance and receipt by the buyer.

2. Plaintiff orally contracted to sell to M. & Co., defendant's assignors, wood, the value of which exceeded $200, to be measured and paid for after defendant consumed wood then on hand, purchased of another. The wood was delivered, but the evidence as to whether it was measured was conflicting, and the wood previously purchased was not consumed. About five cords of the wood was used by M. & Co., but afterwards, on the wood being attached as their property, plaintiff claimed title thereto. Held not sufficient evidence of acceptance and receipt of the wood by the buyers to exempt the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1739).

3. Where plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to establish acceptance and receipt of goods by the buyer under an oral contract, void under the statute of frauds, in the absence of such proof the admission of immaterial evidence that certain of the goods were used by the buyer by mistake was not prejudicial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Action by A. C. Dauphiny & Co. against the Red Poll Creamery Company. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Henry L. Ford, for appellants. Buck & Cutler, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from judgment, with bill of exceptions. Appeal taken within 60 days after rendition of judgment. Action brought to recover the price of 180 cords of wood, at $1.75 per cord. Defense, that there was no contract in writing, and no receipt and acceptance of the wood. It is not claimed that there was any contract in writing. The court below found that the wood was delivered upon the lands of the respondent, and near its creamery, but that no part of it was accepted and received, within the meaning of section 1739 of the Civil Code. In such case the acceptance is matter for the jury to determine, and the finding must stand, unless the uncontroverted facts are sufficient in law to constitute an acceptance. The cases, under the clause of the statute of frauds which our Code section has reproduced, hold that, in order to supply the place of a writing, acceptance and receipt are necessary to show the complete consent of the vendee to the existence of the contract. Acceptance and receipt are both necessary. "The acceptance must be clear and unequivocal." Benj. Sales, § 144, where cases are collected. In this case the facts which are without controversy are not sufficient to constitute acceptance and receipt. The well-established facts are that in the fall of 1895 Isaac and Alex. Mosely, the assignors of plaintiffs, agreed with A. M. George, as manager of the respondent, to sell the wood, and deliver it on the lands of respondent, to be measured and paid for after the respondent had consumed 100 cords of wood previously purchased from one Niles, and then on hand. The manager of the respondent was to receive and measure the wood. The wood was cut and delivered on the lands of the respondent some time before the respondent was ready to receive it, the Niles wood being still unconsumed. All that tends to show acceptance by the respondent is the fact that the respondent used about 5½ cords of the wood. There was an effort on the part of the respondent to show that this was done by mistake, the manager supposing the wood consumed to be part of a lot which had been purchased from one Olmstead. But the record of the testimony is evidently very imperfect, and there is nothing to show clearly that fact. Upon the facts shown, there is nothing to explain in one way or the other the use by the respondent of the 5 cords of the wood, and that must remain as a fact in favor of the appellants, tending to show acceptance. It cannot, however, have much significance in that direction, because there is no proof that the wood was measured by the manager with a view to acceptance and payment. Alex. Mosely says that Sage, the manager of the respondent, told him that Cutler, the respondent's secretary, had measured it. But Cutler says: "I never measured the wood. I do not know of any one measuring the wood for the company. I do not know of any one receiving the wood for the company." And, the finding being against the acceptance, we must hold that it was not measured for the respondent. This would take from the use of the 5 cords all its significance as an act of acceptance. Effort is made by the respondent to prove the alleged mistake by which these 5 cords were used as wood supposed to have been bought from Olmstead. But nothing is actually proved, except the fact of a purchase of wood from Olmstead. The alleged mistake in the use is not established. Cutler, the secretary, says: "I did know of the wood having been used by the defendant until this suit was commenced." If we are permitted to insert the word "not," evidently omitted by accident, that would still only tend to show the mistake alleged. There is not, however, affirmative proof enough on the part of the appellants to make out an acceptance, against the finding of the trial court. A fact that weighs strongly against the appellants is that on August 19, 1896, the wood which had been delivered on the lands of the respondent was attached in a suit against the Mosely brothers; and thereupon the appellants served upon the respondent a formal notice, in writing, that the wood was the property of the appellants; the notice ending as follows: "And you are hereby forbidden to use the same, or any part thereof, without your first having obtained consent of A. C. Dauphny & Co." Cutler, the secretary of the respondent, says in reference to this notice: "When Mr. Dauphny served the notice on me that has been introduced in evidence, it was the first time I knew Dauphny & Co. claimed the wood." There is not affirmative proof on the part of the appellants sufficient to overcome the adverse finding of the court.

The appellants claim error at the trial in admitting the testimony of Olmstead and Cutler in reference to the purchase by Olmstead of 29 cords of wood from the Mosely brothers, and his sale of that wood to the defendant. The evidence was offered with a view to establish the alleged mistake of the defendant in using the 5 cords. It will be seen, however, from the above general statement of the case, that, if the evidence was immaterial, it was not prejudicial to the appellants, for the respondent's case is made out without proof of the fact. The evidence of those witnesses is all that was offered on that subject. It did not, as we have seen, prove the mistake contended for. But as the respondent gets its judgment from the weakness of appellants' case, and without proof of the alleged mistake, the error, if any, was not prejudicial. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

ALLSTEAD v. NICOL. (S. F. 855.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1899.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—GUARANTY OF TITLE—REASONABLE TIME FOR PERFORMANCE—MODIFICATION OF CONTRACT—EVIDENCE—APPEAL.

1. A party to a contract for the exchange of land, who guaranties his title to be good, has a reasonable time in which to perfect it if it is found defective.

2. In an action to enforce the specific performance of a written contract for the exchange of land, evidence that, when plaintiff tendered performance, defendant said he would have to go and see plaintiff's land first, and that plaintiff made no objection, is insufficient to show a subsequent parol agreement that defendant was not to exchange, unless satisfied with plaintiff's land after the inspection.

3. An objection to a finding by the court not made in the specification of errors cannot be raised on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Bill by Gustave Allstead against William Nicol for specific performance. From a decree for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. Stafford & Stafford, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Specific performance. Plaintiff and defendant entered into the following written agreement, at San Francisco, on September 14, 1892: "Gustave Allstead and William Nicol agree to exchange property as follows: William Nicol deeds to G. Allstead five lots in gift map No. 3, viz. 1540, 1547, 1548, 1549, and 1550, in exchange for forty-five acres of land in Anderson, three-quarters of a mile from Anderson R. R. station, Shasta county. G. Allstead guaranties his title to be perfect, or no sale. William Nicol has an abstract ordered, for which G. Allstead pays twenty dollars if title proves good. If title of William Nicol is defective, G. Allstead does not have to pay said twenty dollars. William Nicol reserves the right to make title good if it is defective, or annul the exchange. Wm. Nicol, in addition to the lots above, gives Allstead, if the trade goes through, Allstead's promissory note for twenty-five dollars." The court finds the particular description of the property agreed to be exchanged by the parties, and that on October 17, 1892, plaintiff made a written tender personally to defendant of a sufficient deed to the property of plaintiff, and a tender of the $20 referred to in the agreement for the abstract, and also his acceptance and approval of defendant's title to the lots in San Francisco, and in the same paper demanded performance by defendant; that, at the time of said tender, defendant made no objection to the form of the deed or the title of the land of plaintiff, but defendant refused to carry out the agreement of September 14th, and refused to accept plaintiff's deed; that said agreement was fairly entered into by the parties, and was just, fair, and reasonable; and that plaintiff's property was of the value of $1,000, and defendant's property of the value of $900. In his answer, defendant alleged that, after the execution of the written contract, it was agreed that defendant should visit plaintiff's land for purposes of inspection, and, if not satisfied with it, said written agreement should not be carried out. The court found this alleged modification not to be true. The court gave judgment for plaintiff, from which, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, this appeal is here.

1. Defendant claims that, as plaintiff guaranteed his title to be perfect or no sale, defendant, by the terms of the contract, "had the right to declare the trade off" when he found the title defective. It appears that the abstract of plaintiff's title disclosed an unredeemed tax sale for 1891 for the sum of $23.55. On October 6, 1892, plaintiff redeemed from the state; and when, on October 17th, he tendered his deed to defendant, the title was perfect. Defendant testified that he got the abstract on September 20th, and that he told plaintiff he would have to submit it to examination, and would also have to go and look at the land. He went to Anderson, and returned September 24th; and, when plaintiff called to see him, he told plaintiff he would not take the land, because the title was not good, and because the land was not what it was represented to be. The latter of these reasons will be noticed hereafter. As to defendant's right, by the terms of the contract, "to declare the trade off" when he found a defect in the title, we find no clause in the agreement warranting such claim. Plaintiff gave a guaranty of good title, without which there was to be no sale; but plaintiff had a reasonable time within which to remove any defect which the abstract might reveal. He did this within 12 days after the abstract came into defendant's hands. The law upon this point is that even when a time is specified in the contract for its completion, and there is nothing special in its objects or in the subject-matter, and the delay is sufficiently explained and excused, and the delay had not been in itself prejudicial to the other party beyond the means of reparation, specific performance will be decreed. The rule has gone so far in some cases as to hold that if the vendor is able to procure and give a good title at the time of the decree, even though he could not do so at the commencement of the suit, the doctrine of the equity court will be satisfied. Pom. Spec. Perf. Cont. §§ 371, 375, 376, 421, and cases there cited. The case before us is an ordinary one, presenting no special features; and the evidence tends to show that defendant's real and persistent objection did not relate to the defect in the title, and nothing in the case shows the slightest injury or prejudice to defendant by the short lapse of time between the making of the contract and the tender of a perfect title.

2. Defendant attacks the finding that there was no agreement subsequent to the written contract, such as defendant alleged in the answer. Defendant's testimony does not support the alleged defense, conceding that he could change the written agreement by parol. He testified: "He [the plaintiff] told me his title was good and perfect. I was to be satisfied with the title. I got the abstract on September 20, 1892, and on that day I told Allstead that I would have to go and look at the land first, as well as have the abstract examined. He asked me when I would go, and I told him I would go at the end of the week." Plaintiff testified, when asked on cross-examination what he said to defendant at this time: "I did not object to his going and seeing the land." This evidence is far from establishing a supplemental contract, such as is alleged in the answer, or proving any contract at all. The evidence shows no agreement that the trade was to depend upon the result of this trip to Anderson. Nor was there any evidence tending to show that the agreement was not fair and reasonable. The evidence tended to show that plaintiff's land was worth $25 or $30 per acre, and that defendant's lots were worth $1,200 or $1,300. There is no allegation in the answer of fraud or misrepresentation by plaintiff; and the evidence tends to show that the properties were of about the same value. The evidence is not such as to invite a discussion of the rule as to when inadequacy of price will render specific performance impossible.

3. The only remaining point relied upon by defendant is that the contract is too indefinite to be enforced by a court of equity. The amended complaint described specifically the land to be conveyed by plaintiff. This allegation is not only not denied, but the answer avers that title to that particular land "was not clear or good." The case was tried by that description, and it was found by the court as alleged in the complaint, and this finding is not attacked in the specification of errors. It is too late now for the first time to raise the point. We see no error in the record, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

WM. WOLFF & CO. v. CANADIAN PAC. RY. CO. (S. F. 859.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1899.)

JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—MOTION TO SET ASIDE—CONDITIONAL ALLOWANCE—ABANDONMENT—IMPLIED FINDING—LACHES—DISCRETION—TENDER.

1. Granting a motion to set aside a default implies a finding that defendant had not abandoned the motion.

2. Abandonment of a motion to set aside a default cannot be predicated on defendant's laches, unaccompanied by evidence of an intention to abandon it.

3. That defendant resisted a demurrer to his answer to an action on a default judgment for plaintiff, and secured time to file a brief, is no evidence that he intended to abandon his motion to set aside the default.

4. The detriment caused to plaintiff by the death of his chief witness, and the scattering of others, while a motion to set aside a default is pending, and the reasonableness of the time which has elapsed before the motion is disposed of, are matters bearing on the ultimate fact of defendant's laches, to be considered by the trial court, and within its discretion, in deciding whether the motion should be granted.

5. The rule of diligence required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, in "making application" to set aside a default, does not control the subsequent proceedings. If the motion is filed within the time, it may be properly heard at such time as the court may direct.

6. The question of laches, considered in determining whether a motion to set aside a default has been abandoned, is within the sound discretion of the trial court.

7. A motion to set aside a default was granted on condition that defendant pay costs and an attorney's fee within 10 days, which was accordingly tendered and refused. Plaintiff appealed, and the order was affirmed. A tender of the amount was again made and refused within 10 days after the remittitur was filed, and, no subsequent demand being made therefor, defendant deposited it in court before finally moving to set aside the default. Held, that the tender had been kept good.

8. A condition to granting a motion to set aside a default that defendant should pay costs and an attorney's fee within 10 days is not a case in which no relief can be obtained, except by complying with Civ. Code, § 1500, providing for the extinguishment of a money obligation by a tender and deposit in a bank in the creditor's name, and notice thereof; and hence payment of the money into court after refusal to accept is sufficient.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Wm. Wolff & Co. against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. From an order setting aside a default and a judgment entered thereon against defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Augustus Tilden, for appellant. Henry Eickhoff and Edward S. Salomon, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from an order setting aside default and judgment, with bill of exceptions. Judgment by default was entered on July 17, 1888. A motion was seasonably made to set aside default and judgment; and on January 25, 1889, an order was made that the "motion be, and the same is hereby, granted, on condition that defendant pay to plaintiff the sum of sixteen dollars and fifty cents costs and seventy-five dollars counsel fees within ten days." "And ordered that the proposed answer on file stand as the answer." A tender of the whole amount, $91.50, was made within the 10 days to plaintiff's attorney, who refused to accept it, on the ground that his right of appeal from the order might be prejudiced by the acceptance. Thereupon, on application of the defendant to the court below, the order was modified by vacating that portion of it which required the payment of the counsel fees. Plaintiff appealed from both of these orders; and the first was affirmed by this court, and the second reversed. 89 Cal. 332, 26 Pac. 825. The remittitur was filed below on July 1, 1891. The order appealed from recites that the same amount was again tendered to one of plaintiff's attorneys within 10 days from the filing of the remittitur. This recital or finding is not attacked in the bill of exceptions. But exception is taken by the appellant to a statement in the opinion of the lower court that there was no dispute as to the date of this tender. Plaintiff's attorneys refused to accept the tender, and stated by letter of July 20th the following as some of their grounds for refusal: (1) The original tender was not kept good; (2) that more than 10 days had elapsed since the remittitur was filed; (3) that plaintiff contemplated further proceedings, which would be jeopardized by accepting the tender; (4) that the judgment was not set aside, and could not be set aside. On July 17, 1893, plaintiff commenced an action on the judgment. Defendant answered on January 31, 1895, setting up the order of January 25, 1889, and the tender made within 10 days thereafter, and paid into court the amount tendered, $91.50. The plaintiff demurred to the answer. While the demurrer was under submission to the court, on October 1, 1895, the defendant gave notice of motion that the default and judgment be fully and finally set aside. The motion was granted by order of October 25, 1895; and from that order this appeal is taken.

It is conceded that the order of January 25, 1889, granting the motion to set aside the default on condition of payment of counsel fees and costs, was not a complete disposition of the motion; and it would seem to follow necessarily from this, as was held by the court below, that the motion remained pending until finally disposed of in October, 1895, unless it had been abandoned by the defendant.

The following are the points argued by appellant in its points and authorities:

1. The point most relied upon by the appellant is that the motion was abandoned. Appellant's counsel complains that the court below did not pass upon the question of abandonment. By implication it certainly did, by granting the motion of respondent. But, however that may be, there is certainly nothing in the case to justify the conclusion that the respondent abandoned its motion. There is no evidence of any intention to abandon. Abandonment requires an intent, expressed or implied. It requires something more than mere "passivity,"—a term used by counsel. It differs widely from "laches," in this: that, in granting relief on the ground of abandonment, a court assumes to base its action upon the will of the party; in granting relief on the ground of laches, the action is in invitum. Cases showing that the intention is an essential element of abandonment are collected in Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 333. In Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 299, this court said: "The jury was charged that, if the plaintiffs and those under whom they claim had left the premises vacant, unimproved, and without attention for more than five years before the commencement of the action, they were authorized to find therefrom the fact of abandonment. They should have been instructed that such fact must be taken into consideration in deciding the question of abandonment. The essential fact of intention to abandon is not necessarily inferable from the fact stated." In Utt v. Frey, 106 Cal. 397, 39 Pac. 809, the court says: "To constitute such abandonment, there must be a concurrence of act and intent, viz. the act of leaving the premises vacant, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer, and the intention of not returning. [Citing cases.] The mere intention to abandon, if not coupled with yielding up possession or a cessation of user, is not sufficient; nor will the nonuser alone, without an intention to abandon, be held to amount to an abandonment."

Counsel says: "Even admitting that the intent to abandon did not exist, defendant's conduct was so unmistakably that of abandonment as to justify plaintiff in acting in accordance with that theory, and to estop defendant from denying it." But this court held in Marquart v. Bradford, 43 Cal. 526, that it is a confusion of ideas to attempt to found abandonment upon an estoppel in pais, and finds fault with an instruction given to the jury. "The instruction is, in our opinion, objectionable. It mingles together, in such manner as to mislead the jury, two legal propositions, which are quite distinct, and proceed on different principles,—abandonment and estoppel in pais. It appears to treat an estoppel in pais as constituting an element of abandonment, or as one of the circumstances from which it might be found by the jury." This is a logical conclusion from the essential idea on the one side of abandonment, which depends upon the will of the party, and from the idea, on the other side, of an estoppel in pais which operates in invitum. In some instances the delay, inaction, laches, of one party may justify the other party in taking some action adverse to him, and the first party may be estopped from making any defense; but this need not imply any intention of abandoning his rights. As evidence tending in this case to show abandonment, appellant cites the resistance of defendant to plaintiff's demurrer to the answer, in the suit brought on the judgment, and getting time to file a brief. But this would seem rather to negative any intention to abandon the original motion. There is nothing in the conduct of the respondent to warrant a reversal of the implied finding that there was no abandonment.

2. Appellant insists upon the detriment caused by the scattering of the witnesses of the appellant, and the death of its chief witness, during the long pendency of the motion. These are matters which bear upon the ultimate fact of laches determined by the trial court, and within its discretion.

3. And the question of the reasonableness of the time which elapsed before the final disposal of the motion is one of the matters bearing upon the question of laches to be hereafter considered. Before reaching that question, it is only necessary, in answer to a point made by the appellant, to say that the rule of diligence required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, in "making application" to set aside a default, does not control the subsequent proceedings; nor is six months necessarily a measure of reasonable time for the subsequent diligence. If the application is made within the six months, the court is free to dispose of it as the exigencies of business and the circumstances of the case, under the guidance of the court, will permit. Such was the ruling of this court on the appellant's first appeal.

4. Many of the points made by the appellant are embraced in the general question of laches. And upon that question there is no reason to interfere with the discretion exercised by the court below. "The matter is one which is left to the sound discretion of the chancellor in each case." Chapman v. Bank, 97 Cal. 155, 31 Pac. 896. "Laches is a question of fact on the evidence,—an equitable defense, determinable by the particular facts and circumstances of the case." Pike v. Martindale, 91 Mo. 285, 1 S. W. 864. In this case the court below seems to have examined with great care all the circumstances of the case, and its conclusion should be final. It is true that there was an exceptionally long delay before the final disposition of the motion. But many circumstances tended to explain it. The appellant is responsible for the first delay of more than two years from January 25, 1889, to July 1, 1891. Counsel insists much upon what he claims to have been decided by this court,—that the first tender was "rightly refused." But it was not rightly refused in any sense that would justify the delay by the appellant. It was not rightly refused from any defect in the tender. All that this court decided upon the appeal is that an acceptance of the tender would have jeopardized the plaintiff's appeal. But the plaintiff was not obliged to take an appeal from the order conditionally granting respondent's motion; and the affirmance of that order takes from appellant its excuse for the appeal and for the delay incident to it. The erroneous order of the court below, striking out the counsel fee as a part of the condition for relief, was matter arising after and growing out of the appellant's wrongful refusal to accept the tender; and, of course, the appeal from that order cannot be invoked as justifying the appellant's delay.

5. A circumstance tending to explain the subsequent delay on the part of the respondent is the impression that seemed to prevail, at first at least, on both sides, that the order of January 25, 1889, was a final order, or that it became a finality by the performance of the condition. The proper practice would have been to apply to the court for a final order setting forth the performance or the nonperformance of the condition. But appeal was made and entertained, and the court below, in view of the facts, held this to be a circumstance tending to excuse the belief of the respondent's attorneys that their seasonable offer to perform the condition of the order had operated to set aside the default. How far this belief of the respondent's counsel should naturally have been removed by the letter of appellant's attorneys of July 20, 1891, stating that the judgment was not set aside, and could not now be set aside, and that they contemplated further proceedings in the matter, was within the province of the lower court to determine, passing upon the conduct and the good or bad faith of the parties. If the letter had stated only that the judgment was not set aside, and could not now be set aside, it would have been well calculated to arouse the attention of the respondent to the interlocutory nature of the order; but as its first insistence was that the tender had not been made in time, and had not been kept good, the subsequent statement that the judgment was not set aside might not unnaturally have been referred by the respondent to those alleged grounds of infirmity.

6. Without finding it necessary to decide the question, mooted by the appellant, whether the appellant or the respondent was properly the proponent, it certainly cannot, against the ruling of the court below, be said that there was fatal laches on the part of the respondent after its tender was well made and was seasonably renewed, and while the appellant might have brought the matter at any time before the court, if it questioned the status of the judgment. At this point the appellant's position is that this court, by its ruling on the first appeal, justified appellant's refusal to accept the tender, and hence that appellant could stand upon its successful resistance. But we have seen that the appellant gained nothing by its appeal from the order granting respondent's motion, except the ruling that the original tender was well made, but that it must be kept good, and that the appellant was entitled to receive the amount tendered.

The tender was kept good, under this ruling, by a renewal made within 10 days after the filing of the remittitur. It does not appear that, after this renewal of the tender, the money was applied by the respondent to its own use. Certainly, it was not demanded or refused, and it was deposited in court before the application for final relief from the judgment was made. This was a sufficient compliance with the ruling of this court, on the appeal: "That, to constitute the tender a payment, it must be kept good, and the plaintiff is entitled to receive the amount tendered upon the affirmance of the order setting aside the default and judgment." The opinion of the court was addressed to the point whether the refusal to accept the tender was a waiver of the conditions or not. It does not necessarily mean that the account must be deposited in bank; for the decision was that the first tender, which was clearly made without deposit in bank, was "a sufficient performance of the condition to preserve the rights of the defendant under the order opening the default until the question of its validity should be determined."

This is not a case which demands the extinguishment of an obligation under section 1500, Civ. Code. There are, undoubtedly, situations where there is a fixed and recognized obligation, whose extinguishment is necessary to the relief demanded; as, where the mortgagor desires to have his mortgage discharged of record, he must extinguish his obligation. But there are many instances in which a tender of performance without deposit is sufficient to furnish the relief required; where there is no actual obligation to be extinguished, but only some condition to be performed or some option to be accepted; and other instances in which it would be unreasonable to require the extinguishment of an obligation as a condition of the collateral relief sought. The right of purchase under a contract is secured by a tender. Miller v. Cox, 96 Cal. 348, 31 Pac. 161; Haile v. Smith, 113 Cal. 602, 45 Pac. 872; Sayward v. Houghton, 119 Cal. 550, 51 Pac. 853, and 52 Pac. 44. A pledge is released by a tender. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 256, 14 Pac. 369, and 15 Pac. 773. A surety is discharged by a tender. Randol v. Tatum, 98 Cal. 390, 33 Pac. 433. To hold that a deposit in bank, under section 1500, is necessary in all cases of a tender, would make section 1500 wholly inconsistent with sections 1504 and 1498, and would efface those sections. Section 1504 provides that an offer of payment, etc., though the title does not pass, stops the running of interest on the obligation, and has the same effect upon all its incidents as a performance. Section 1498 provides: "When a debtor is entitled to the performance of a condition precedent to, or concurrent with, performance on his part, he may make his offer to depend upon the due performance of such condition." To require him in such case to extinguish his obligation without performance by the other would defeat this section. The tender in this case was effective, as a compliance with the condition imposed by the order of January 25, 1889. The court below found that both tenders were made in due season; this court held on the first appeal that the tender to the attorney was properly made. The sufficiency of the first tender rendered any tender of interest unnecessary.

Apart from the efficiency of the tender, all other matters in the case were within the large discretion accorded to a trial court in such cases. There is nothing in the aspect of the case on this appeal which takes it out of the wholesome doctrines stated on the first appeal: "In the matter of opening defaults, much is confided to the discretion of the court [citing cases]; and, where the circumstances are such as to lead the court to hesitate, it is better to resolve the doubt in favor of the application, so as to secure a trial and judgment on the merits [citing cases]."

The foregoing disposes substantially of all the points argued by counsel. It is asking too much of the court to go beyond this, and to follow seriatim, through 44 folios, 30 exceptions, made, not to findings of fact, but to points in the opinion of the court below. I advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

KENNEDY & SHAW LUMBER CO. v. S. S. CONSTRUCTION CO. et al. (S. F. 934.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1899.)
GUARANTY—CONSIDERATION—ACTION ON NOTE—PLEADING—FINDINGS.

1. Where the complaint is the only pleading in the case which is divided into numbered subdivisions, a finding "that all the allegations contained in subdivisions 1, 3, 4, and 6 are true" is sufficiently definite.

2. Since an allegation in an action by the payee on a note "that plaintiff is still the owner and holder" of the note is mere surplusage, no finding on such issue is necessary, although denied in the answer.

3. A guaranty of a note, made before delivery, is valid, although without separate consideration.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Suit by the Kennedy & Shaw Lumber Company against the S. S. Construction Company and others. From a judgment against defendant Behrend Joost, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

M. H. Gilson, for appellant. Wm. H. Jordan, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Suit upon a promissory note made by the S. S. Construction Company to the plaintiff, and indorsed by the defendants the San Francisco & San Mateo Railway Company and J. G. and I. N. Day, and which also bears words of guaranty signed by appellant, Behrend Joost. Upon the trial the action was dismissed as to all the defendants except Mr. Joost, and findings and judgment were against him, and he appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

The note here in suit was given in renewal of a prior note made by said construction company, and indorsed by the railway company and J. G. and I. N. Day, but to which Mr. Joost was not a party, either as maker, indorser, or guarantor; but upon said renewal note Mr. Joost wrote and signed a guaranty of the payment thereof, and, as appears from the statement on motion for a new trial, "the only contention at the trial was that the said guaranty was given by defendant Behrend Joost after the delivery of the note without a separate consideration from the note itself, or any consideration whatever"; and appellant contends that the findings do not support the judgment, or, if it should be held that they do, that they are not justified by the evidence.

The first finding is as follows: "That all the allegations contained in subdivisions 1, 3, 4, and 6 are true;" and appellant contends that said finding is indefinite and insufficient to support the judgment; that, for all that appears, the subdivisions intended may be of defendant's answer. The findings, when signed and filed, are part of the record (Reynolds v. Harris, 8 Cal. 618), as are also the pleadings and judgment. The findings always relate to matters contained in the pleadings,—that is, they determine the material issues of fact raised by the pleadings,—and as to matters of fact admitted by the pleadings no finding is necessary, and as to such facts the pleadings, in effect, become part of the findings. It is clear, therefore, that the reference in said finding to "subdivisions" can only refer to a pleading, to which we must always look, not only to ascertain what facts are admitted, but to determine whether the findings are within the issues; and on looking at the pleadings we find the complaint contains "subdivisions" corresponding to those mentioned in said finding, while there are no subdivisions or paragraphs numbered in the answer. In Swift v. Muygridge, 8 Cal. 445, it was said: "The findings of fact by the court are like the special verdict of a jury. They must be taken in connection with the pleadings to support the judgment." And in Whitlock v. Manciet, 10 Or. 166, it was held that, "when the language of a finding is equivocal, the construction which accords with the pleadings and supports the judgment should be adopted." See, also, Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 248, and Edwards v. Nelson, 51 Mich. 121, 16 N. W. 261. It is true, the findings should be specific; but, as the record itself removes any uncertainty, we do not feel justified in reversing the judgment upon this ground.

It is also contended that there is no finding upon a material issue. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff "is still the owner and holder of said promissory note," and this allegation is denied by the answer. The allegation in the complaint was surplusage. The complaint showed title to the note in the plaintiff, and the additional allegation that plaintiff is the owner and holder is a conclusion of law. Wedderspoon v. Rogers, 32 Cal. 569; Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 118; Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 302; Pryce v. Jordan, 69 Cal. 571, 11 Pac. 185. The issue was, therefore, immaterial. The findings as made cover all material issues, and show plaintiff's title to the note at the time of the trial.

The third finding, appellant contends, is against the evidence. It is to the effect that the contract of guaranty was made by defendant Joost prior to the delivery of said promissory note, and appellant insists that it was made after its delivery, and without consideration, and it is also insisted by appellant that the finding that the guaranty was given "prior to the delivery" is not sufficient; that it must appear that the guaranty was given "contemporaneously with the acceptance of the note," there being no distinct or separate consideration for it. The note was dated the 5th, and the guaranty was made and the note was delivered on the 7th, but no obligation or liability was incurred by any party to the note until it was delivered, and hence, if the guaranty was written and signed before delivery, the obligation of all the parties to the note, including that of the guarantor, became effective at the same moment, and there was a good consideration for the guaranty; and the only remaining question is whether the guaranty was in fact written and signed after the note was delivered. Upon this point there was a plain and material conflict in the evidence. Mr. Smith, on the part of the defendant, testified that he delivered the new note to Mr. Jordan, the attorney for plaintiff, and received from him the old note, and that the guaranty of Mr. Joost was not on the note when he delivered it; while Mr. Jordan testified that after Mr. Joost had written the contract of guaranty on the back of the note it was lying on witness' desk, and Mr. Smith came in and witness handed Mr. Smith the old note and Mr. Kennedy the new one. There was much other testimony, most of it conflicting, and ample room for argument as to which way it preponderated. I find no error in the record which would justify a reversal, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

ET DE PREVOYANCE MUTU-
ELLE. (S. F. 846.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1899.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — LEGISLATIVE POWERS — CHANGE OF NAME—CORPORATIONS.

1. Const. art. 4, § 25, provides that the legislature shall not pass local or special laws changing the names of persons or places.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1275-1279, provide that a change of name may be made by the superior court, in its discretion, on a petition therefor, stating, among other things, the reasons for such change, and on notice of hearing. Held, that such provisions of the Code are not unconstitutional, as casting upon the court the exercise of legislative power, contrary to Const. art. 3.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1276, providing that any religious, benevolent, literary, scientific, "or other corporation," or any corporation having, or being known by, the name of any benevolent or charitable society, may apply to the superior court for a change of its corporate name, is not restricted in its application to corporations of the kind specially enumerated, but applies to a corporation organized for profit.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application of La Société Française d'Epargnes et de Prevoyance Mutuelle, a corporation, for a change of its name to "French Savings Bank." From a judgment granting the application, Victor Marchebout, a stockholder, appeals. Affirmed.

Warren Olney, Jr., for appellant. Stanly, McKinstry, Bradley & McKinstry, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Said corporation filed in the superior court a petition praying that its name be changed to "French Savings Bank," assigning as reasons therefor that its name is cumbersome, unwieldy, and inconvenient in the transaction of business; that its meaning is only understood by persons having a knowledge of the French language, or by those to whom its meaning has been explained; that it is frequently referred to in the community as the "French Savings Bank"; and that the business and best interests of the bank would be promoted by the change. Said petition was signed by all the officers of the bank, and was approved by nearly all the stockholders. The appellant, Victor Marchebout, also a stockholder, filed an opposition to said petition, in the nature of a demurrer, presenting two questions,—one of constitutional law, and the other of statutory construction. After due notice, the petition was heard, witnesses examined, and findings and judgment granting the petition were made and entered, and Marchebout appeals. This proceeding was had under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1275-1279, and appellant contends—First, that said sections of the Code are unconstitutional; and, second, that, if said provisions are constitutional, the said corporation is not one of those authorized to have its name changed by such proceeding.

1. The ground upon which appellant contends that said Code provisions are unconstitutional is that they cast upon the court the exercise of a legislative power, in violation of article 3 of the constitution, which provides: "The powers of the government of the state of California shall be divided into three separate departments—the legislative, executive and judicial—and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except as in this constitution expressly directed or permitted." General definitions clearly distinguish these several departments or powers of the government, but the lines separating them are often indistinct and difficult to trace. The Code provides, in substance, that applications for change of name must be heard and determined by the superior court, the application therefor to be by petition, in which, among other things, must be stated "the reason for such change of name." Notice of the hearing is provided for, and objections may be filed by any person who can therein show "good reason against such change of name." Witnesses may be examined, and the court "may make an order changing the name, or dismissing the application, as to the court may seem right and proper." It is contended that the change of name of a person or corporation is, in the first instance at least, a legislative act, and that such legislative power has been exercised; citing Bank v. De Ro, 37 Cal. 538, and Wallace v. Loomis, 97 U. S. 146. In the first of these cases the power of the legislature to change the name of a corporation by special statute, in view of the constitutional provision that "corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes," was considered, but not decided; but, under the same provision in the constitution of Alabama, it was held in the second of said cases that the name of a railroad corporation could be changed by a special act, the court saying that "no new corporate powers or franchises were created by the act." Our present constitution (article 12, § 1) provides that "corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act. * * *". And section 25 of article 4 provides: "The legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * * Sixth. Changing the names of persons or places." The constitution does not forbid a change of names, but prohibits the legislature from changing them by special act, which would seem to be the only way by which the legislature by its own exclusive action could effect a change of name in any case, since the reason for the change must be special, and the new name must necessarily be inserted in the legislative act. It would therefore appear that the legislature has done all it could, under the restrictions of the constitution, to prescribe the grounds upon which the court may grant the petition, namely, upon reason for such change being alleged and shown, and further prescribing that the court "may make an order changing the name, or dismissing the application, as to the court may seem right and proper." We do not dispute appellant's contention that the determination of the grounds upon which a change of name may be granted may, in the absence of constitutional prohibition, be the subject of legislative action; but we also think it is one of those questions which the legislature may remit to the judiciary. In Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 46, Chief Justice Marshall, in speaking of the distinction between these co-ordinate branches of the government, said: "The difference between the departments undoubtedly is that the legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes, the law; but the maker of the law may commit something to the discretion of the other departments, and the precise boundary of this power is a subject of delicate and difficult inquiry, into which a court will not enter unnecessarily." In that case it appears that the process act passed by congress in 1789 adopted the state laws regulating the modes of proceeding in suits at common law, "subject, however, to such alterations and additions as the said courts respectively shall, in their discretion, deem expedient, or to such regulations as the supreme court of the United States shall think proper, from time to time, by rule, to prescribe to any circuit or district court concerning the same." It was contended that this clause, if extended beyond the mere regulation of practice in the court, would be a delegation of legislative authority which congress had not power to make. To this contention the court replied: "It will not be contended that congress can delegate to the courts, or to any other tribunals, powers which are strictly and exclusively legislative. But congress may certainly delegate to others powers which the legislature may rightfully exercise itself. * * * The line has not been exactly drawn which separates those important subjects, which must be entirely regulated by the legislature itself, from those of less interest, in which a general provision may be made, and power given to those who are to act under such general provisions, to fill up the details." See, also, Beers v. Houghton, 9 Pet. 355. So, in this state the courts are permitted to make rules and regulations upon many matters, which rules might have been enacted by the legislature in the form of statute law, if it could have anticipated the various circumstances giving rise to their adoption; but the adoption of these rules, as well as the many matters named in the Codes as to which the courts are expressly authorized to exercise their discretion, is based, not upon the supposition that definite enactments in relation to them were not within the legislative power, but because all the facts and circumstances calling for the adoption of such rules, or the exercise of such discretion, could not be anticipated by the legislature, and put in the form of specific enactment covering all cases that could possibly arise. The statute under consideration clearly vests in the superior court a discretion; but, as in all cases where the courts are permitted to exercise a discretion, it is not arbitrary, but guided and controlled by the principles of law and of justice. Indeed, from the very nature of the case, the exercise of the power to change the name of a person or corporation is quite as appropriate to the judicial as to the legislative branch of the government; nor can it be regarded as an encroachment upon the legislative department, which has itself expressly authorized the courts to exercise it. Appellant concedes that, if the Code prescribed the conditions and circumstances upon which the court should grant a change of name, the action of the court would not be legislative. This, we think, the legislature has done, as far as the nature and grounds of such proceedings will permit. Appellant's argument that the power of creating corporations is legislative, that the giving a corporation a name is part of the act creating it, and that the power to amend the creative act is the same as the power to create the corporation, is specious and without controlling force, since the change of name confers no new corporate powers or franchises. Wallace v. Loomis, supra. The Tennessee cases cited by appellant are entirely consistent with the views we have expressed. It was there held that, in order to confer upon the court of chancery the power to grant charters of incorporation, the legislature must specify the terms upon which they should be granted, and the powers to be given; while in the act there considered these were all left to the discretion of the chancellor, and the act was properly held to be void. State v. Armstrong, 3 Sneed, 634; Ex parte Chadwell, 3 Baxt. 98. In forming corporations under a general act, the name is not given by the legislature, but by the corporators; and it is only in the case of corporations organized under special charters where the name is given by the legislature; and, if corporators may in the first instance select and adopt a name under authority given by the legislature, it is difficult to perceive why the legislature may not permit such name to be changed upon their application to the court, a reason being shown therefor.

2. Appellant's second contention is that the statute under which these proceedings were taken does not include corporations formed for private gain. Section 1276, Code Civ. Proc., so far as material, is as follows: "Any religious, benevolent, literary, scientific or other corporation, or any corporation having for its name, or using or being known by the name of any benevolent or charitable order or society, may apply to the superior court * * * for a change of its corporate name. * * * Upon filing such petition on behalf of such corporation, the same proceedings shall be had as upon applications for change of names of natural persons, and no banking corporations hereafter organized shall adopt or use the name of any friendly association." The contention is that the general expression "or other corporation" is limited to include only corporations ejusdem generis with those specially enumerated; and appellant quotes one of the maxims of jurisprudence stated in Civ. Code, § 3534: "Particular expressions qualify those which are general." Section 3509 of the same Code, however, declares: "The maxims of jurisprudence hereinafter set forth are intended not to qualify any of the foregoing provisions of this Code, but to aid in their just application." The cases in which this question is discussed and applied are too numerous to be cited or discussed within the limits of this opinion. There is little, if any, controversy as to the maxim in its application to penal statutes, and of that class is the leading case of Sandiman v. Breach, 7 Barn. & C. 99, and the other English cases cited by appellant; and in this category may also be placed the following cases cited by him, viz.: U. S. v. Garretson, 42 Fed. 22, which imposes a penalty for cutting timber on land reserved by the government for certain enumerated purposes; and Fox v. Mining Co., 108 Cal. 369, 41 Pac. 308, where the liability of the directors of a corporation for moneys "embezzled or misappropriated" was considered. Of a different class is the case of In re Hermance, 71 N. Y. 481, which appellant cites and claims to be "exactly in point." There the question was as to what errors could be corrected by a board of supervisors under statutory authority "to correct any manifest, clerical or other error in any assessments or returns," etc. The court said: "It is evident that the legislature did not intend to subject all assessments to review under the act and upon every question that could arise affecting its legality and propriety. If it had been intended to permit a correction by this new tribunal of all errors of judgment, errors of fact, errors of law, jurisdictional questions, why were certain errors specified and others of more importance omitted?" That case is a good illustration of the application of the maxim "Noscitur a sociis," for it is clear that the errors intended to be corrected were not errors of judgment, since that would be to substitute their judgment for that of the assessor, nor was it within their jurisdiction to correct errors of law, as they were not clothed by the act with judicial powers. But in this case the necessity or desirability of a change of name is as likely to occur in the case of a private corporation organized for profit as any other; and there is no reason suggested why a change of name should not be permitted to such corporations as well as to those specifically named; and especially must this be true since, if such corporations cannot have their names changed under these provisions of the Code, they cannot be changed at all. It could only be done by the legislature by a special act, and that, as we have seen, is prohibited by the constitution. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re ROYER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,439.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1899.)

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS—VALIDITY—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

1. An unincorporated state university, recognized by various state statutes relating to its organization, government, and functions as having an existence distinct from that of its regents, who are incorporated, is capable of taking a devise, notwithstanding that its organic act provides that gifts to it may be made to the regents and to the state.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 1275, providing that corporations organized for scientific, literary, or educational purposes may take testamentary dispositions of property, though not specially authorized by law, the state university can take a testamentary gift, though not specially authorized to receive it.

3. Though the state university is a governmental institution, it is not clothed with state sovereignty, exempting it from the operation of Civ. Code, § 1313, which provides that charitable bequests shall not exceed one-third of the distributable estate.

4. A resolution of regents of a university directing the investment of a fund bequeathed to establish a professorship is insufficient to show that the fund is inadequate to carry out the testator's intent.

5. Under Civ. Code, § 1317, which provides that, if the intention of the testator with respect to a charitable gift cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible, a bequest to establish a professorship is not invalid because the amount is inadequate to establish the professorship.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.
Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

In the matter of the estate of Herman Royer, deceased, the heirs and the Regents of the University of California filed conflicting petitions for distribution. From an order denying the petition of the regents, and ordering distribution to the heirs, the regents appeal. Reversed.

John B. Mhoon, for University of California.
W. F. Williamson, for executors. Jos. Leggett, for certain heirs.

CHIPMAN, C. The controversy arises upon conflicting petitions for distribution filed by the heirs at law of deceased and by the Regents of the University of California, and involves the right to the residue of the estate of deceased under the provisions of his will. After making certain specific bequests, the testator, in the sixth clause of his will, declared as follows: "Sixth. All the rest and residue of my property and estate I do hereby give, devise, and bequeath unto the University of the State of California, for the sole purpose of founding a professorship of political economy, and for no other purpose whatever. If the said gift and devise shall for any reason fail, the same shall revert to my next of kin." The court found that neither the University of the State of California, nor the University of California, is now, or ever has been, a corporation under the laws of this state, and is not a person, and that each is an entity distinct from the Regents of the University of California, which latter are a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state. The court also found that the residue of the estate is insufficient for the purpose of founding a professorship of political economy, and that the gift has failed, and has, by the express provisions of the will, reverted to the next of kin of the testator. The court denied the petition of the Regents of the University of California, and granted that of the heirs at law, and ordered distribution accordingly, from which this appeal was taken.

But little evidence was submitted at the hearing. In addition to the introduction of the will, it appeared that on October 12, 1897, appellant adopted a resolution "that the funds devised to the university by Herman Royer, deceased, together with such other funds as are now available for that purpose, or may become available hereafter, in aid of founding a professorship of political economy, be invested so as to produce an income, and that no part of the principal funds so invested shall ever be expended." It was admitted that the Regents of the University of California are now, and have been since 1868, a duly incorporated and existing corporation under an act of the legislature approved March 23, 1868, and that a chair of political economy of said university was established in 1878, and is now existing. It also appeared that the residue of the estate of deceased amounts to $5,467.10. This was all the evidence. The findings of fact are obviously drawn, not only from this evidence, but also to some extent from the statutes, and are practically findings of mixed law and fact. They are attacked as against both the law and the evidence. It seems to be admitted that the "University of California" and the "University of the State of California" mean the same entity, whatever that entity may be. We shall therefore disregard any distinction between the two designations, and for brevity will refer to the University of California as the "university," and the Regents of the University of California as the "regents." The questions involved are of much importance, as they concern, not only the bequest in issue, but previous gifts and grants, as well as the legal status of the university. This must be our apology for entering somewhat fully into the consideration of the matter.

1. The constitution of 1849 (article 9, § 4) directed the legislature to take measures for the disposition of such lands as had then been, or might thereafter be, granted by the United States, or any person or persons, to this state, "for the use of a university," pursuant to which provision the act of March 23, 1868, was passed. St. 1867-68, p. 248. Section 1 of the act reads: "A state university is hereby created. * * * The said university shall be called the University of California. * * * The said university shall be under the charge and control of a board of directors, to be known and styled 'The Regents of the University of California.'

The university shall have for its design, to provide instruction and complete education in all the departments of science, literature, art, industrial and professional pursuits and general education," and also various special courses of instruction named in the act. The act provides for the establishment of different colleges of which the university is to consist. Section 11 provides: "The general government and superintendence of the university shall vest in a board of regents, to be denominated the 'Regents of the University of California,' who shall become incorporated under the general laws of the state of California by that corporate name and style. * * *" Section 12 provides: "The said board of regents, when so incorporated, shall have the custody of the books, records, buildings and all other property of the university." This section also provides for vesting the title of certain property in the state, where donated for the purpose of the university, and also provides how the regents shall dispose of property donated or conveyed to them, and also for the affiliation of certain colleges with the university, in which case the regents are to have no right of property in or over the same, but "such college so affiliated may retain its own property," etc. Section 13 gives the regents, when incorporated, power "to enact laws for the government of the university, to elect a president of the university, and the requisite number of professors, instructors, officers and employes, and to fix their salaries, also the term of office of each, and to determine the moral and educational qualification of applicants for admission to the various courses of instruction." Section 14 speaks of the income of the university, and when the regents may provide for free tuition. Section 15 makes the president of the university "the president of the several faculties and the executive head of the institution in all its departments, except as herein otherwise provided." This section also provides for the selection of a secretary and a treasurer of the university. Section 20 provides "for the endowment and support of the university and its buildings and improvements." Then follows a designation of the various funds or income arising out of the sales of lands granted to the state by congress. Some of these funds are to be paid over to the regents; in other cases to the state treasury, "and paid over to the treasurer of the university, for the use and behoof of the said university and expended by said board," etc. The section also appropriates contributions to the endowment appropriated by the state "or from public or private bounty." The income of these funds is placed at the disposal of the regents "for the support of the university and of the several colleges and schools thereof," etc. The section also gives the regents authority to appoint persons "to solicit and collect private contributions for the endowment of the university," etc. Section 21 provides "for the current expenditures of the university, and payment is to be made by warrants of the president of the board drawn upon the treasurer of the university." Section 23 refers to the buildings of the university, and section 24 provides that "the collections by the state geological survey shall belong to the university," and directs that they be arranged in a building denominated the "Museum of the University." Section 25 directs the regents to construct "such buildings as shall be needed for the immediate use of the university," and to take steps for the improvement of its grounds, etc. The general appropriation act of March 30, 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 583), appropriated $200,000 of the moneys derived from the sale of overflowed or tide lands, "which shall be paid into the university fund, and paid out therefrom to the regents of the university upon their order, to be by them expended for university purposes as provided by law." The various land grants of the government in aid of the university made necessary a "land agent of the university," and such officer is frequently mentioned in the acts of the legislature (Pol. Code, § 3534; Act March 13, 1874; St. 1873-74, p. 356), who is authorized to select state land, and "issue certificates of purchase and patents." When the act of 1868 was codified and brought into the Political Code (section 1385 et seq.) the university was treated as an institution of the state, having its location in Alameda county. The "endowment" is to the university. Id. § 1415. An academic senate of the university is created. Id. § 1461. By the act of March 19, 1878, certain funds were consolidated, to be known as the "Consolidated Perpetual Endowment Fund of the University of California," and all interest, etc., arising out of the same "shall be placed in the general fund of the university and subject to disbursement to meet the current annual expenses of the University of California." Throughout the entire legislation of the state the university is spoken of as having some sort of an existence, a part of which, rather than distinct from it, are the regents. The latter seem to be a corporation formed in aid of the objects and purposes of the university, but not to displace nor destroy nor to absorb its entity. Acts are found "for the endowment of the university" (St. 1869-70, p. 668); "for the support of the university" (St. 1871-72, p. 554); "concerning university lands" (St. 1873-74, p. 356). General appropriations run in the same way: "For the aid of the State University, eighty thousand dollars" (Id. p. 902); "to reimburse the University of California" (St. 1881, p. 50).

The constitution of 1879 (article 9, § 9) declares: "The University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in the form and character prescribed in the organic act creating the same passed March 23, 1868 (and the several acts amendatory thereof)," etc. It is the university organized by the act of 1868, and not the regents—one of its constituent parts—which the constitution declares to be a public trust. In Foltz v. Hoge, 54 Cal. 28, and People v. Kewen, 69 Cal. 215, 10 Pac. 393, where the status of the Hastings College of Law as an affiliated college of the university was considered, this court seems to have treated the university as a state institution to which a college might be attached under the organic act of 1868. Looking to the origin and purposes of the university, and the constitution and legislation respecting it, we cannot doubt its existence as an entity capable of taking by bequest. It is a governmental agency created by the lawmaking power, and endowed with very important functions, which it has been exercising for a long period of years. It may be unique, but it is nevertheless an instrumentality of the state, created by the legislature acting within its just powers. That the regents are by law made the governing body of the university, and are required to incorporate under the laws of the state, is by no means inconsistent with the continued existence of the university as a public corporation; and the fact that the organic act in terms provides that grants and gifts may be made to the regents and to the state, and does not provide in terms that grants and gifts may be made to the university, does not, in our opinion, indicate that it was intended that the university was to be incapable of taking by gift, grant, or bequest. The organic act leaves the property of the university with it, and only gives to the regents the custody and control of it. Mr. Justice Story, in the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 518, said: "Public corporations are generally esteemed such as exist for public political purposes only, such as towns, cities, parishes, and counties, and in many respects they are so, although they involve some private interests; but, strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government. * * * For instance, a bank created by the government for its own uses, whose stock is exclusively owned by the government, is, in the strictest sense, a public corporation; so, a hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity." And he adds that the reasoning by which private and public corporations are distinguished applies in its full force to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals. Mr. Morawetz describes the difference between private and public corporations as radical, the former being associations formed by voluntary agreement of their members, while of the latter he says they "are not voluntary associations at all, and there is no contractual relation between the corporators who compose them. They are merely governmental institutions created by law for the administration of the affairs of the community." Mor. Priv. Corp. (2d Ed.) § 3. To corporations proper, authors and courts have added a species called "quasi corporations," or "corporations sub modo"; i. e. associations and government institutions possessing only a portion of the attributes which distinguish ordinary public or private corporations. Id. § 6; 2 Kent, Comm. 274. These quasi corporations may be either public or private, and are to be distinguished upon the same principle as ordinary corporations. It would seem clear enough that the university comes plainly within the commonly accepted definition of a "public corporation." It was founded by the state. Its original and primary endowment was by the United States, by grant to the state for this special purpose. All its property is property of the state. It was created by the state, and is subject to the laws of the state as a state institution, within the limits of the new constitution, which has declared it to be a public trust, and that its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in the form and character prescribed by the organic act. This latter act is the charter of the university. In many respects it is modeled after the Dartmouth College charter. But in the Dartmouth College charter all doubt was removed as to what constituted the corporate body, by the terms of the charter itself, in which the trustees were made the body corporate "by the name of the Trustees of Dartmouth College," and the letters patent were to the trustees. 4 Wheat, supra. In the present case the law created the university, and, while it provided for a governing body called "regents," it did not create or designate them as the body corporate, as the charter created the trustees of Dartmouth College. The university was created first, and the trustees became incorporated afterwards, as was directed in the organic act. But the act nowhere provides, in terms or by implication, that when incorporated the regents should become, and thereafter be, the university.

Respondents' counsel seems to think it an absurdity to suppose that it was intended by the legislature to give any sort of corporate existence to an institution officered only by a president, treasurer, secretary, and land agent. It is altogether too narrow a view of the university to say that it is composed only of these officers. The organic act declares that it shall consist of various colleges of arts, letters, and such other professional and other colleges as may be added thereto or connected therewith. Included in these are colleges of agriculture, mechanic arts, mines, civil engineering, medicine, and law. The property previously belonging to the College of California, now the site of the university, was conveyed to the state "for the benefit of the State University," and said college was to go out of existence "as soon as the state shall organize the university." The regents are in fact a part of the university, with specifically defined powers in their custody and control of the property and the management of university affairs. The act designates them "The Regents of the University of California." It may seem anomalous that the law should require the regents to incorporate, or that we should have apparently a corporation within a corporation; but the legislature created the university upon that plan, and, however novel it may be, the power existed in the legislature not only to create the university, but to prescribe the mode and manner of the exercise of its functions. I can conceive of no imperative necessity for the requirement that the regents should incorporate, but that it was so required did not change their relation to the university. It only endowed the regents with certain corporate powers, and prescribed the mode and manner by which they were to exercise the control given them over the affairs of the university. They have no duties or powers beyond the purpose of their creation, which was to take the custody and control of the university property, and to perform certain prescribed duties in the management of the university. The law intrusts "the immediate government and discipline of the several colleges" to their respective faculties, "to consist of the president and the resident professors of the same." These faculties are part of the university, and not of the regents. All endowments are to the university, and all funds, whether coming directly to the regents, to the state, or to the university, are for the benefit of the university. Indeed, the central idea of the law was to create and organize a state university, upon broad lines of expanding usefulness. How this university, when created, was to be managed and controlled—the machinery to be provided in its organization for the purpose of practically carrying out the design—was for the legislature to determine. I cannot regard the regents as a legal corporate entity, except as a part of, and ancillary to, the parent and principal institution,—the public corporation created by law as such, and entitled "The University of California." It cannot be doubted that a legislative appropriation to the university would be a legal appropriation available and enforceable; and, if it is capable of taking by appropriation in that name, it is capable of taking by grant or bequest. A recent and important appropriation to the university is found in the act of February 27, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 44). It provides that, "in addition to all other sources and means of support * * * of the University of California, there is hereby levied, annually, * * * an 'ad valorem' tax of one cent on each one hundred dollars of value of the taxable property of the state * * * for the use and support of the University of California." Section 1. This money must be paid into the state treasury, and "converted into the State University fund" (section 3), and "must be applied only for the uses and purposes of the University of California" (section 5). This money may be drawn out upon the order of the board of regents, but, when paid out by the state treasurer, it must be made "payable to the order of the treasurer of the University of California, out of said 'State University fund.'" Section 4. This is clearly an appropriation of money to and for the uses of the university, and it goes from the state into the hands of the treasurer of the university, and to our minds is an unmistakable legislative recognition of the public corporation created by the act of 1868, called "The University of California."

I have examined the reported cases decided by several states and territories of the Union where the congressional grant has been taken advantage of, and institutions similar to the University of California have been created. These institutions differ in some respects from each other in the machinery of their organization, and in none of them do I find an exact parallel with the university of this state. But everywhere the courts have held them to be public corporations. Trustees v. Winston, 5 Stew. & P. 17; Trustees v. Maultsby, 53 N. C. 241; State v. Knowles, 16 Fla. 577; State v. Regents (Kan. Sup.) 40 Pac. 656; Mechanical College v. Willis (Okla.) 52 Pac. 921; Dunn v. University of Oregon, 9 Or. 357. The Oklahoma court said: "It seemingly needs no argument to show that the public educational institutions of a state are as much a part of its sovereignty as are its counties." In speaking of the university of that state, the Oregon court said: "It is true, the legislature has not declared it to be a corporation in express terms, but this was not essential;" and so the Kansas court spoke of the university "as a public corporation created to carry on special work for the benefit of the state or the public interest."

2. Respondents contend (1) that the university not being expressly authorized by section 1275, Civ. Code, it cannot take by will; and, (2) even if it could take, the bequest, being in its nature charitable, must not exceed one-third of the distributable estate, under section 1313, Id. The university, as we have seen, is a public corporation "formed for scientific, literary or solely educational purposes," and, if the statute includes such a corporation at all, it is by its terms capable of taking by will. In re Bulmer's Estate, 59 Cal. 131. Appellant contends that section 1313, Id., does not apply, because it is a general rule in the interpretation of statutes limiting rights and interests not to construe them to embrace the sovereign power or government, unless the same be expressly named therein, or intended by necessary implication; citing 1 Kent, Comm. 460; U. S. v. Hoar, 26 Fed. Cas. 330; Mayrhofer v. Board, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646; Bish. Writ. Laws, §§ 103, 142; Sedgwick, St. Const. p. 395. There is nothing in the record from which we can determine whether the residue of the estate "exceeds one-third of the estate of the testator." There is no finding on this question of fact. As it will arise hereafter, however, the law governing the point should be stated. We do not think the principle upon which appellant relies should govern in this case. The university, while a governmental institution, and an instrumentality of the state, is not clothed with the sovereignty of the state, and is not the sovereign. As we understand the rule, it is only the sovereign that is exempt from the operation of statutes affecting its interest or rights. We think the statute applies to the university as a public corporation.

3. Respondents contend that the bequest has failed because the fund is inadequate to carry out the testator's original intent, and that the court has so found the fact upon sufficient evidence. The only evidence claimed by respondents to support this finding is the resolution of the regents. We cannot see that this resolution, which directs the investment of the fund, bequeathed by deceased, indicates its insufficiency. It was admitted that there was a chair of political economy of the university established in 1878, and now existing. Nor can we say that the residue ($5,467.10) is necessarily insufficient for the purpose intended by the testator. Section 1317, Civ. Code, provides that, where the intention of the testator "cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible." Conceding that the probate court could nullify the bequest on the ground of inadequacy alone, there is no evidence to justify a finding that the gift has failed for this reason. The decree should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the decree is reversed.

TOZER v. GEORGE et al. (S. F. 997.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1899.)

CONTRACTS—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint in an action to determine the amount unpaid under an agreement, the consideration of which defendant was to pay in monthly installments, with privilege of paying more at any time, and to fix the time within which the amount should be paid, alleging only that defendant had not paid any money in accordance with its terms after a named date, is insufficient, since it should have averred the amount that had been paid, so the court might determine whether defendant was in default.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Action by one Tozer against one George and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. H. Lucas, for appellants. Geo. E. De Golia, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff and the defendants entered into an agreement July 19, 1892, by which the plaintiff agreed to sell and convey to the defendants a certain parcel of land for the sum of $1,500, and in consideration thereof the defendants agreed to pay said sum of money to the plaintiff "at the time and in the manner hereinafter mentioned, to wit, one hundred and seventy dollars upon execution hereof, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the balance of thirteen hundred and thirty dollars payable as follows, to wit, twenty dollars on the first day of each and every month thereafter until said principal sum of fifteen hundred dollars has been fully paid in accordance herewith. The privilege is reserved to second party to pay more than said stipulated payment of twenty dollars at any time during the continuance of this contract." The present action is brought for the purpose of having the court determine the amount unpaid upon the agreement, and fix a time within which said amount shall be paid, failing in which the defendant shall be foreclosed of all interest and right in the land. It is alleged in the complaint that "defendants have not paid any money under said contract, or in accordance with the terms and conditions thereof, since November 2, 1895." No other breach of the agreement than in the payment of the purchase price of the land is charged by the plaintiff. The defendants demurred to the complaint for want of facts to constitute a cause of action, and also for ambiguity, in that "it does not show the amount actually paid on the contract therein set out by said defendants, or the amount due and unpaid, or that the said defendants are in default in the payment of any of the installments provided for in said contract." Their demurrer was overruled, and the cause was heard by the court as upon their default, and judgment rendered determining that the balance due under said contract, April 1, 1896, is the sum of $340, and that there will be $20 further due on the 1st of each month thereafter, and giving to the defendants six months after the entry thereof in which to pay the amount found to be due, failing in which, and in the further payment of $20 on the 1st of each month thereafter, their rights in the premises should be foreclosed.

The court should have sustained the demurrer to the complaint. The only breach therein alleged of the defendants' agreement is that they had not paid any money in accordance with the terms of the contract since November 2, 1895. The complaint does not, however, allege the amount of money that had been paid prior to that date, nor does it contain any allegation from which it can be determined whether at the date of commencing the action the defendants were in default. While the agreement provided for payments of $20 each on the 1st of each month, it also provided that the defendants might at any time pay more than this sum; and the plaintiff should have averred the amount that had been paid, so that the court might determine, upon the face of the complaint, whether the defendants were in default. The plaintiff does not seek by this action to have it declared that the contract is at an end, or that his obligation thereunder has terminated; but by asking the court to determine the amount unpaid thereon, and to fix a time within which the defendants shall pay the same, he treats the contract as still existing and obligatory on him. Treating the action as one to foreclose the rights of the defendants in the land, the plaintiff should have alleged the precise amount of the purchase money unpaid at the date of commencing the action. The defendants were entitled to know the amount of this claim, for the purpose of determining whether they would suffer a default and an entry of the judgment as prayed for, or, by contesting the amount claimed, would protect their rights against a judgment for more than was actually due. The insufficiency of the complaint as against the demurrer is emphasized by a consideration of the judgment which was entered thereon. It does not appear from the record at what date the complaint was filed, but it is recited in the judgment that the demurrer was overruled on the 16th of March, 1896, and the court finds that the balance due from the defendants under the contract on the 1st of April, 1896, was $340. The complaint must be construed as admitting that all the terms of the contract to be performed on the part of the defendants prior to November 2, 1895, had been performed; and, if so, only four installments of $20 each could have accrued between the 2d of November, 1895, and the commencement of the action. The judgment of the court, that $340 was due at the time of the entry of judgment, is largely in excess of the claim made by the plaintiff, and cannot be sustained. The contract is also treated by the judgment herein as still existing, since, after determining the amount already due, it declares that on the 1st of each and every month thereafter there will be due the further sum of $20, and makes provision for the payment thereof by the defendants. Assuming that only four installments of $20 each were due at the commencement of the action, the judgment directing the payment of $340 within six months after its entry would change the obligation of the defendants under the contract, since the installments which had then accrued, together with those which would accrue during the six months after the entry of the judgment, would amount to only $220. The judgment is reversed.

DOWNING v. MULCAHY et al. (S. F. 786.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1899.)

MONEY RECEIVED—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY—APPEAL.

1. In an action for money received it is not essential to jurisdiction of the parties or of the subject of the action to allege where the cause of action accrued.

2. It is not essential to a complaint in an action for money received that it recite every detail out of which the cause of action arises, since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 454, defendant can demand a bill of particulars, if the complaint is too general.

3. The appellate court cannot decide on the weight of the evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by F. O. Downing, doing business as Downing & Co., against R. E. Mulcahy and E. De Kay Townsend, partners as Mulcahy, Townsend & Co. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Henry H. Davis, for appellants. Mastick & Mastick, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for money had and received by defendants, as brokers, for the use of plaintiffs. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying defendants' motion for new trial, this appeal is taken.

1. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds: (1) Insufficiency of facts; (2) want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the parties; (3) for ambiguity and uncertainty. The objections on the last two grounds alone are insisted upon. Want of jurisdiction is claimed because "the complaint does not allege the place where the alleged cause of action accrued." The complaint is in the usual form for money had and received by defendants as brokers for plaintiffs between certain stated dates, and we think the pleading sufficient. It was not essential to jurisdiction of the parties or the subject of the action to allege where the cause of action accrued. The alleged ambiguity is that the complaint is uncertain because it does not show at what place defendants received the money, nor for what it was paid, nor the kind of brokerage defendants were engaged in, nor the times when the payment was made, nor whether paid at one time or several times, nor where demand was made, nor where the debt became due, nor where the parties, plaintiff and defendants, were doing business. These facts were not essential to a good complaint for money had and received. Defendants could have had a bill of particulars had they demanded it. Code Civ. Proc. § 454.

2. It is claimed by appellants that "plaintiff failed to establish his case by a preponderance of evidence." Plaintiff testified to certain statements of account between the parties rendered by defendants to plaintiff from time to time and up to November 1, 1894, which showed a balance due plaintiff at that time of $3,883.40. He also testified to certain credits to which defendants were entitled, leaving an actual balance due plaintiff of $431.45, for which amount the court gave judgment. There is much evidence in the record explanatory of the nature of the brokerage business, out of which the cause of action arose, and the state of the account between the parties. At most this evidence may be said to show its preponderance to be against plaintiff's claim. But we cannot decide upon the weight or preponderance of the evidence. There was sufficient evidence to sustain the findings, and, as the findings sustain the judgment, we think the judgment and order should be affirmed, and so advise.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

DE JARNATT v. PEAKE et al. (Sac. 474.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1899.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—RECEIVER—VIOLATION OF DUTY.

1. Findings of the lower court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

2. Pending foreclosure of a mortgage, plaintiff was appointed receiver. Defendants purchased the note and mortgage from the mortgagee, paying therefor the full face value, with interest and accrued costs. The receiver assisted defendants as their agent, at their request, in bringing about the purchase. There was no evidence that the receiver was, through his official position, seeking any advantage against the purchaser inconsistent with his duties. Held that, in his acting as defendants' agent, he did not violate his duties as receiver, so as to prevent his recovering from defendants for services rendered.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county.

Action by J. B. De Jarnatt against W. H. Peake and Asa Peake, partners as Peake Bros. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. T. Matlock, for appellants. John T. Harrington, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff sues to recover the sum of $771.50, the amount of defendants' check, as follows: "Red Bluff, Cal., Jan. 20, 1897. No. 1. Bank of Tehama County of Red Bluff, Calif. Pay to J. B. De Jarnatt or order ($771.50) seven hundred and seventy-one 50/100 dollars. Peake Bros." The amended complaint alleges due presentation to the bank, its refusal to pay, notice of nonpayment to defendants before action commenced, notice by defendants to the bank before presentation for payment not to pay said check if presented, and nonpayment by defendants. The answer alleges want of consideration for the check, and also sets up facts tending to show that plaintiff obtained the check by fraudulent representations. The court found the allegations of the complaint to be true, and found that the check was not given without consideration, nor was it issued through plaintiff's false or fraudulent representations, and that the allegations of fraud are not sustained by the evidence. Judgment passed for plaintiff, from which, and from the order denying motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

The evidence of plaintiff tends to establish the following facts: One Scoggins executed his note to the German Savings & Loan Society of San Francisco, which he secured by mortgage to it on certain real estate in Colusa county. Scoggins died, leaving the note unpaid, and an administrator was duly appointed. The mortgagee brought its foreclosure suit, making the administrator defendant, and in the action plaintiff herein was appointed the receiver. Pending the action, defendants purchased the note and mortgage from the loan society, paying therefor the full face value and all interest and accrued costs, with the view of acquiring the title to the land by that proceeding. In the negotiations for this purchase, defendants employed plaintiff as their agent, and agreed to pay him 5 per cent. commission on the amount due and paid to the loan society. The check in question was drawn at the same time and place as the check given to the loan society for the note and mortgage, and was delivered to plaintiff by defendants, but defendants not long thereafter stopped payment.

The contention of defendants is that there was an agreement between the parties that plaintiff was to give defendants the benefit of his commissions as receiver, which they affirm were represented by plaintiff to be a sum equal to the amount of the check, and that plaintiff falsely represented the facts to defendants, and that there was therefore no consideration for the check. The court found against defendants, and in favor of plaintiff, upon these issues of fact, and, as the evidence is conflicting, the findings cannot be disturbed.

It is further contended that the contract evidenced by the check was void, under section 1667, Civ. Code, because contrary to an express provision of law, and contrary to the policy of express law, and also contrary to good morals, and therefore cannot support the action. For the reason that there is a conflict in the evidence introduced by defendants to establish the foregoing propositions, we cannot pursue the argument of the learned counsel as to the facts. There is sufficient evidence to support the findings.

The stress of appellants' contention lies in their claim that a receiver appointed by the court in such a case as this becomes a public officer, charged with a trust as such officer, and that he cannot, while holding that office, enter into any contract for private gain respecting the subject of the trust. It nowhere appears that plaintiff did any act as receiver by which defendants were misled. All he did was to assist, as their agent, at their request, in bringing about a purchase by them, from the mortgagee, of its ownership of the note and mortgage, so that defendants might stand in its shoes. No creditors of the deceased mortgagor are complaining, and nothing appears from which it may be inferred that the receiver was, through his official position, seeking any advantage for or against defendants inconsistent with his official duties. The public was in no wise concerned. Stripped of all fraud, as the findings leave the transaction, it is simply a question whether plaintiff, as receiver, could, without violating his duty in his trust relation, act as defendants' agent to bring about the transfer of the mortgage debt and security to defendants. We can perceive no reason why such a transaction is obnoxious to any principles of law or sound morals. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: PRINGLE, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

HAWLEY BROS. HARDWARE CO. v.
BROWNSTONE et al. (S. F. 870.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1899.)

BILLS AND NOTES—ACTION—PLEADING—APPEAL—REVERSAL.

1. A complaint which in the caption describes defendants as two persons doing business as a firm, but in the body of the complaint alleges a cause of action against "above-named defendant," without designating which of the defendants is a firm, or which of them executed the note in suit, is fatally ambiguous.

2. Where a complaint is so defective that it does not support the judgment, the supreme court, after trial on merits, will reverse a judgment overruling a demurrer to the complaint.

3. In an action on a note, the answer alleging that defendant pledged collateral notes which plaintiff failed to collect, though urged to do so by defendant, is insufficient, as it does not allege that the collateral became uncollectible through plaintiff's negligence.

4. Where collateral notes have become barred by limitation through the neglect of the pledgee to enforce them, in an action on the principal note, defendant is entitled to credit for the amount of the collateral, though it is not certain that the maker of the collateral note will interpose limitations as a defense to an action thereon.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by Hawley Bros. Hardware Company, a corporation, against Isaac Brownstone and Joseph Brownstone, partners as I. Brownstone & Co. From a judgment overruling a demurrer to the complaint, sustaining a demurrer to the answer, and a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. L. Cory, for appellants. W. B. Good and Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action upon certain six promissory notes by verified complaint. A demurrer, on the grounds (1) of insufficiency of facts, and (2) ambiguity, was overruled. Defendants answered, denying that they had not paid the notes in suit, and, as a separate defense, alleged that, prior to the commencement of the action, defendants transferred to plaintiff certain promissory notes as collateral security for the indebtedness sued upon; that as to one of said collateral notes, made by one J. S. Branch, for the sum of $602.42, "plaintiff neglected and refused to take proceedings to enforce its collection, and permitted the same, without the consent and against the will of defendants, to become barred by the statute of limitations"; and that, if plaintiff had used reasonable diligence, the said note could have been collected. As to the other collateral notes it is alleged, on information and belief, that plaintiff could have enforced collection sufficient to pay and discharge defendants' indebtedness to plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable diligence; that, at different times before the commencement of the action, defendants demanded of plaintiff to take immediate steps to enforce the collection of the said collateral notes, or return the same to defendants, but plaintiff refused to do the one or the other; that, by reason of plaintiff's gross carelessness and negligence in failing and refusing to enforce collection of said notes, defendants have been damaged in a sum largely in excess of any amount due plaintiff upon the obligations in suit; that all said collateral notes were, when transferred to plaintiff, due, owing, and payable from the parties respectively executing them; "that some amounts have been paid upon said notes, the amount and time of payment being unknown to the defendants." An accounting between plaintiff and defendants with reference to the notes sued upon and the payment made upon said transferred notes is asked, and that plaintiff be charged with the face value of all said assigned collateral notes, and that they be applied in payment of the notes sued upon. A demurrer for insufficiency of facts was interposed to the answer, and on the further ground of uncertainty. The court sustained the demurrer to the answer, and gave plaintiff judgment, from which defendants appeal.

1. It does not appear anywhere in the complaint who are the defendants, except in the caption or title of the cause of action. They are there stated to be "Isaac Brownstone and Joseph Brownstone, partners, doing business under the firm name and style of I. Brownstone & Company, Defendants." The references to defendants in first count in the body of the complaint are as follows: "Comes now plaintiff, * * * and, for a first cause of action herein against defendant, alleges: * * * During all the time in this second amended complaint mentioned, * * * the above-named defendant was a co-partnership, and carrying on business as merchants and traders, * * * under the firm name and style of I. Brownstone & Company, and that the members of said firm of I. Brownstone & Company are residents of the county and state aforesaid." But there is here no allegation as to who constitute the firm. "Defendant, by its firm name, made and delivered to plaintiff its certain promissory note," etc. The note is signed, "I. Brownstone & Co." "The defendant has not paid the said note," etc. The subsequent separate causes of action, of which there are five, read: "For a * * * cause of action in this, its second amended complaint [the words "against defendant," as alleged in first count, are omitted], plaintiff alleges: * * * Defendant, by its firm name, made and delivered to the plaintiff its certain promissory note," etc.; "defendant has not paid the said note." Each subsequent count contains the same allegations. The notes are all signed, "I. Brownstone & Co." "Plaintiff prays for judgment against said defendant for the aggregate principal sum of," etc. The demurrer is upon the grounds (1) of insufficiency of facts; and (2) "each and every cause of action * * * is ambiguous, in that it alleges that the above-named defendant (singular) was a co-partnership, but it does not appear upon the face of the complaint, or any of the causes of action therein stated, which, if any, of the defendants, was a co-partnership, and whether or not said defendants were or either of said defendants was a co-partnership at the time of the commencement of the action"; nor does it appear who, if any, were the members of I. Brownstone & Co.; nor does it appear by whom or by which of the defendants, if any, the note in each cause of action was made or delivered to plaintiff.

It is essential to a good complaint that non-payment be alleged, as failure to pay constitutes the breach. Scroufe v. Clay, 71 Cal. 123, 11 Pac. 882; Notman v. Green, 90 Cal. 172, 27 Pac. 157; Barney v. Vigoreaux, 92 Cal. 631, 28 Pac. 678; and numerous other cases. To allege that "the note nor no part thereof has been paid," or to allege that "defendant (where there is but one defendant) has not paid said note nor any part thereof," is sufficient. The question here is whether it can be ascertained from the complaint who are the defendants, or who is the defendant. The caption is no part of the complaint, unless referred to by appropriate allegation in the body of the complaint. To have alleged that "the defendants above named," etc., would have been a good reference as would have been "the defendants" (plural) without the words "above named." And where the caption shows two or more defendants, and in the body of the complaint the word "defendant" (singular number) is used, but is manifestly a clerical error, which could not have misled the defendants, this has been held good on demurrer for ambiguity. Fay v. McKeever, 59 Cal. 307. The rule generally is that, if the party was not misled to his prejudice, the ambiguity cannot be said to affect his substantial rights, and a judgment should not be reversed by reason of such defect or error; and so held if the pleading is easy of comprehension, and free from reasonable doubt. Gassen v. Bower, 72 Cal. 555, 14 Pac. 206;

No general rule can be laid down to determine the exact degree of ambiguity which will be fatal on demurrer. The case here is wholly unlike that of Fay v. McKeever, supra, where the court thought the error clearly clerical. Here the error is persistent, and runs through six separate counts; and in the use of the possessive pronoun, referring to the defendant, the neuter gender singular number is used, showing that the pleader had in mind the co-partnership as the defendant, and not the persons or one of the persons composing the partnership. It is not possible by any reading of the complaint, without interpolation, to say whether one, and, if one, which one, of the persons named in the caption, or whether both, or whether the partnership by its common name, is the defendant. To make the pleading intelligible and free from ambiguity, we must change the language in several material particulars. We must change the word "defendant" to "defendants" in all the counts, wherever the word "defendant" appears; we must change the word "its" to "their," so that it will refer to the persons sued as co-partners; and we must make the complaint show, what it does not, that they (the defendants named) were co-partners as I. Brownstone & Co., and that the several notes were executed by these defendants in the co-partnership name. To do this would extend the liberal rules of construction beyond reasonable bounds.

The allegation that the "defendant" has not paid said notes, etc., is not an allegation as to both defendants; non constat but that one of them did pay them. The complaint has some semblance of an action under section 388, Code Civ. Proc., by which an association may be sued by its common name; but the caption shows, and respondent says, that this was not the theory of the action. Besides, the judgment is against the defendants, naming the persons, as members of the firm, and runs against them jointly and severally, although the prayer is that plaintiff have judgment against the defendant (singular). Other objections to the complaint might be pointed out, but we deem these to be sufficient.

Respondent cites numerous cases to show the reluctance of the appellate court to reverse a judgment on demurrer for ambiguity. It will be found, I think, that an important difference exists between cases where there was no answer or trial on the merits and cases where the defendant has answered and there was a trial, for in the latter case the court is in better position to judge whether the defendant was misled to his prejudice. Where, however, plaintiff refuses to amend when the imperfection to his complaint is pointed out, and takes judgment on the default of defendant to answer, this court has no guide but the complaint itself by which to determine whether it is so radically defective as to fail to support the judgment, or is so ambiguous as to mislead as to its meaning. In the cases cited by respondent, the answer and the trial were factors which aided the court in determining the essential fact. An example is Alexander v. Mill Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 Pac. 410. The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained.

2. The demurrer to the answer ought not to have been sustained. Appellant claims that the answer denied payment, and, at least, presented that issue. The denial reads: "Deny that the defendant has not paid the said note, * * * but alleges in that behalf that said note has been fully paid, * * * as more fully appears in the separate answer and defense hereinafter set forth." This is not an unequivocal denial, but is a qualified denial, as the separate answer alleges how payment was made. If, however, the facts constituting the alleged payment have the effect to discharge the notes, and are properly cognizable as a defense, we think the demurrer should have been overruled. In substance, the answer is that defendants gave to plaintiff certain notes as collateral security, which plaintiff, through its gross negligence, failed to collect, although urged to do so by defendants; and that as to one note (that signed by J. S. Branch), for $602.42, plaintiff allowed it to become barred by the statute of limitations. As to all of these collateral notes, except the Branch note, the answer fails to show that they were no longer enforceable by reason of plaintiff's neglect, or had thereby become lost to defendants. The allegations as to these securities are insufficient. The securities were but a pledge (Civ. Code, §§ 2986, 2987); and the pledgee could recover the debt for which the pledge was given without first exhausting the pledge. Ehrlich v. Ewald, 66 Cal. 97, 4 Pac. 1062.

As to the Branch note, respondent concedes that defendants have a good cause of action against plaintiff, but that relief must be sought in a separate action; citing Bank v. Middlekauff, 113 Cal. 463, 45 Pac. 840, as conclusive of the question. We do not think this case at all conclusive of the question, nor does the governing principle of that case apply. Defendant had mortgaged real property to plaintiff to secure a debt. He also transferred to plaintiff a fire insurance policy upon the buildings situated on the mortgaged premises as additional security for the debt. The buildings burned. Plaintiff thereafter brought suit to foreclose its mortgage, and defendant answered that he had made due proofs of loss on the policy, and had requested plaintiff to collect the insurance money, and apply it to the mortgage debt, which plaintiff refused to do. But defendant did not allege that the policy had become lost to him. These facts were set up by way of answer and cross complaint. Held here that the trial court properly refused to allow the answer to be filed. The reasons given for the decision do not apply to such a case as we have here. That a pledgee may become liable through his gross negligence or by his tortious dealings with the pledge where the pledgor is injured thereby, and that the pledgee of negotiable paper as collateral security is bound to use ordinary diligence in preserving the legal validity of the pledge, and is answerable for a loss through a corresponding degree of negligence to the extent of such loss, are propositions well established. Coleb. Coll. Sec. § 114, and notes; Lamberton v. Windom, 12 Minn. 232 (Gil. 151), and 90 Am. Dec. 301. The authorities are quite fully presented in this case. Jennison v. Parker, 7 Mich. 355; Griggs v. Day, 136 N. Y. 152, 32 N. E. 612 (see extended note, 32 Am. St. Rep., at page 718); Civ. Code, § 1714. It has been held also that where, by the negligence of the pledgee, the collection of collateral securities has been lost by operation of the statute of limitations, and such statutory defense has become perfect, the pledgor may, by a counterclaim, recover the value of his collateral, even though it be not known that his debtor will, when sued on such collateral, plead the statute in defense. Bank v. O'Connell, 84 Iowa, 377, 51 N. W. 162, and 35 Am. St. Rep. 313; McQueen's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 595, 49 Am. Rep. 592; Miller v. Bank, 8 Watts, 192, 34 Am. Dec. 451, note. The question is fully considered in the foregoing cases, and illustrated in the notes where reported in the American Decisions and Reports. We think it was error to sustain the demurrer to the answer. The judgment should be reversed.

LIFE INSURANCE—PREMIUMS—PAYMENT—FORFEITURE—"PAID-UP INSURANCE"—NONFORFEITURE STATUTE—VIOLATION—EFFECT—DIVIDENDS—APPLICATION.

1. A policy providing that it shall be forfeited and void on nonpayment of any premium within 30 days after due at the office of the company, "or to duly-authorized agents, when they produce receipts signed," etc., does not require the production of such receipt, as a condition precedent to the assured's obligation to pay the premium, but the policy is forfeited if premiums are not paid as provided.

2. Under the provisions of a policy, assured was entitled to a "paid-up policy" after premiums for three years had been received by the company, provided the policy was surrendered by assured while "by its terms in full force." Held, that assured's right to a paid-up policy was dependent on the policy in force at the date of surrender, and that a policy forfeited for nonpayment of premium and surrendered was not valuable, as entitling assured to a paid-up policy.

3. Civ. Code, § 450, requires every insurance contract, unless otherwise specially provided, to contain a stipulation for nonforfeiture after three premium payments, and declares that every insurance company violating such provision shall forfeit its right to do business within the state. Held, that this statute did not become part of a policy issued in violation thereof, nor did it relieve assured from forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums, as provided by such policy, though more than three premiums had been paid.

4. Where a policy became void on failure to pay premiums as stipulated, and provided for paid-up insurance, "without profits," on surrender during the life of the policy, after three premium payments, assured was not entitled to the application of accumulated dividends to unpaid premiums to keep the policy in force.

Action by Laura M. Straube against the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

O. Scribner and Meux & Johnston, for appellant. M. Kellogg and F. E. Cook, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Plaintiff, Laura M. Straube, insured the life of her husband for her benefit in the sum of $10,000, under a contract of insurance known as the "Ordinary Life Dividend Insurance Policy." The premiums upon this policy were paid for several years, when a failure to pay the annual premium occurred. Some time thereafter the plaintiff surrendered the policy to the company for a cash consideration. Thereafter, and within 18 months of the default in the payment of said premium, Straube, the insured, died. This action was thereupon brought against the company by plaintiff, the wife, upon a complaint claiming and alleging damages by reason of fraud and deceit practiced by the company in the procurement of the policy of insurance from her. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and judgment for defendant rendered, no answer being filed.

The single question presented is, does the complaint state a cause of action? As to the special grounds of demurrer, we pass them, as involving questions of no great importance to the disposition of the appeal. It appears to be conceded that the question before the court is, was this policy of insurance of substantial value to the plaintiff at the time the defendant company obtained it from her? It is insisted that the complaint shows the policy to have been of substantial pecuniary value at that time, and four specified grounds are relied upon to support this proposition. We pass to the consideration of these grounds of contention.

1. The policy of insurance provides: "This policy shall become forfeited and void if the premiums shall not be paid, within thirty days of the time they become due, at the office of the company in the city of San Francisco, or to other duly-authorized agents, when they produce receipts signed by the president, vice president, secretary, or assistant secretary." It is now contended that the policy remained in force, because the agent did not produce the "receipt" mentioned by this provision of the contract; it being claimed that the proper construction of the policy did not demand that the premium should be paid until such event had taken place. In other words, it is claimed that the production of this receipt was a condition precedent to the payment of the premium. The language of the policy bears no such construction. No demand for the payment of the premium is nominated in the bond. It is provided that the policy shall be forfeited if the premium is not paid within 30 days after it is due, and the contract then declares that it may be paid either at the office of the company, in the city of San Francisco, or to the authorized agent, when he has produced a receipt of a certain kind. By appellant's construction of the contract, the premium could not be paid at the general office at all, for by the contract the production of a receipt at that place is not demanded.

2. It is next contended that plaintiff was entitled to a paid-up policy, and this contention is based upon the following covenant in the contract: "The assured, if premiums on this policy have been duly received by said company for not less than three years, shall be entitled to a paid-up policy, without profits, for the same amount as is allowed by the rules of the company on the surrender of corresponding ordinary policy: provided, always, that surrender of the policy, duly receipted by the assured, be made to the company at San Francisco, Cal., while this policy is by its terms in full force and effect." It is provided in this policy, and seems to be conceded by appellant's counsel, that the application for the paid-up policy must be made while the policy is in force. Under these conditions, the question presented under this head seems to be immaterial. For, if the policy were in force when the company obtained it from plaintiff, then it was of substantial value, by the mere fact of its vitality; and, even if it be conceded that the right to take out a paid-up policy was present at that time, still it adds no weight to appellant's position, for, as already suggested, this right is dependent upon a policy in force and effect at the time the application is made. In other words, the right to a paid-up policy is dependent upon an original policy, of present, substantial value, and that fact is all that appellant needs to support the sufficiency of her complaint.

3. It is next contended that the policy was in full force and effect by virtue of section 450 of the Civil Code. That part of the section material here is as follows: "Every contract or policy of insurance hereafter made by any person or corporation organized under the laws of this state, or under those of any other state or country, with and upon the life of a resident of this state, and delivered within this state, shall contain, unless specifically contracted between the insurer and the insured for ton-tine insurance, or for other term or paid-up insurance, a stipulation that when, after three full annual premiums shall have been paid on such policy it shall cease or become void solely by the nonpayment of any premium when due" (and further providing that the net reserve shall be applied as a premium). In the latter part of the section it is declared: "If any life insurance corporation or company shall deliver to any person in this state a policy of insurance upon the life of any person residing in this state, not in conformity with the provisions of this section, the right of such corporation or company to transact business in this state shall thereupon and thereby cease and terminate," etc. It is now claimed that by application of the net reserve fund, referred to in this section, as a premium, the policy was alive and in force and effect. As we construe this section, it becomes unnecessary to decide whether or not this policy contracts for "ton-tine insurance, or for other term or paid-up insurance." That question would squarely present itself, if it was sought to enforce the penalty provided by the section for a failure upon the part of the company to insert the nonforfeitable stipulation in the policy. We find no such stipulation in this policy, and, assuming for present purposes only that it is a policy which comes within the scope and intent of section 450, the question presents itself, what is the effect upon the status of the insured by reason of the omission of this stipulation therefrom? It is contended by the appellant that the stipulation should be read into the policy as matter of law. This position is denied, and it is insisted that the penalty fixed by the section itself is exclusive, and a remedy for the violation of the law rests with the state alone. The court is well assured that this statute is no part of the contract. If the statute had contained a flat declaration that no policy of insurance should be forfeitable after three annual premiums had been paid upon it, or a declaration of any such general import, we should then have something which would become a part of the contract. In such an enactment there would be a declaration fixing the rights of all subsequent contracting parties. But there is no such attempt here. The legislature has not said there shall be no forfeitable contract of insurance made in this state, but, in effect, has said, "If you issue such a policy, you are liable to certain penalties for your act." Whether that penalty be a forfeiture of the right to do business, or a fine simply, in no way changes the conditions. Again, appellant cannot take the position that such a policy would be void as violative of an express declaration of law. Indeed, the statute appears to recognize the power of the company to make such a policy, but declares a severe penalty for the doing of the act. It is plain that the legislature never contemplated that the statute should be read into the policy; for, if that may be done, no injury to any one could possibly follow a failure to insert the written stipulation therein, and consequently there would be no reason why a failure to do it should visit upon the company the drastic treatment provided by law. If the law inserts the stipulation in the policy, there is no reason why the company should be required to do it. For all practical purposes, it is immaterial who inserts the stipulation, or how that result is brought about. We find none of the authorities cited by appellant opposing these views. Indeed, we find no statute of any other state similar to the one before us.

4. There is no merit in appellant's final contention, to the effect that the accumulated dividends should have been applied to the payment of premiums upon the policy. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—HUSBAND AND WIFE—AGREEMENT—ENFORCEMENT—EXECUTION—ASSUMPTION—DEED—CONSTRUCTION—REVIEW—QUESTION OF FACT—PREMATURE ACTION.

1. Reformation of a written instrument cannot be had unless it is shown, by clear and satisfactory evidence, that both parties thereto intended to execute it according to the terms of the reformation sought.

2. The decision of the trial court on conflicting evidence is not reviewable.

3. An agreement by a husband, pending a suit for divorce, to convey his wife a life estate in property, remainder to their children, if a decree should be granted, could not be enforced by the children, as being without consideration running to them.

4. A husband, pending a suit for divorce, agreed to convey to his wife a life estate in certain property if a decree was granted, but conveyed her a fee instead, and she accepted the deed, and retained it until her death, with full opportunity to know its contents. Held, that the agreement being executory in its nature, and subject to change, under Civ. Code, § 1698, it would be assumed that he intended to convey a fee, and that she was satisfied therewith.

5. A husband's deed to his wife provided that the property should, on her death, go to their children then living, equally, "and, in the case of the death of any such children, then to their heir or heirs." Held, that the words "heir or heirs" did not refer to children, but included all the heirs of such children as the law appointed to succeed to their estates.

6. Facts averred in the pleadings, on which a claim on appeal that the action is premature is based, unsupported by the findings of the court, or by any fact or evidence in the bill of exceptions, will be regarded as nonexistent.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action of partition by Nathalie G. Hochstein against John G. F. Berghauser and others. From an interlocutory decree, Theodore Blanckenburg and other defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. W. Davidson, Julius Reimer, Otto Tum Suden, and George T. Wright, for appellants. W. S. Goodfellow, W. B. Bosley, and Tobin & Tobin, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Appeal from an interlocutory decree in partition. The property involved herein originally belonged to John Berghauser, who, by an instrument bearing date October 31, 1873, conveyed to his wife, Margarethe, an undivided third part thereof, with the exception of one parcel to be hereinafter mentioned. At that date an action for divorce was pending between the parties, and an agreement was entered into between them providing that, in case the court should render a judgment of divorce, Berghauser should convey to his wife certain described property, including an undivided third of a portion of that involved herein. A judgment of divorce between them was rendered by the court, but no disposition or mention of property was made in the judgment, nor did the above deed of conveyance executed to Margarethe purport to be made in pursuance of the agreement or of the decree. One parcel of the property, known as the "Prescott House," was within the district affected by the opening of Montgomery avenue, then in process of accomplishment; and it was provided by the agreement that Margarethe should be entitled to an individual third of all moneys or bonds which might be received for damages awarded under the statute authorizing this improvement, and that, "as soon as these moneys or bonds are received by defendant, plaintiff shall be entitled to her aforesaid share of the income or interest thereof; and, as soon as said moneys or said bonds are invested in property by defendant, he shall forthwith convey to plaintiff, by a good and sufficient deed, free and clear from all incumbrances, her aforesaid share of the property so obtained." It was further provided in the agreement that the deeds to Margarethe should convey to her only a life estate in the above property, with a remainder in fee to the six children of the plaintiff and defendant, share and share alike, and, in case of the death of any such children, then to their heir or heirs; and in the above deed executed to her the estate conveyed was limited and defined as follows: "To have and to hold the said lots of land, with the improvement thereon, unto the said party of the second part during her life, and upon her death to the children of said parties of the first and second part then living, share and share alike, and, in case of the death of any such children, then to their heir or heirs."

By the opening of Montgomery avenue, a portion of this property was taken for the street, and the sum of $54,000 was awarded as damages therefor. Under a provision therefor in the aforesaid agreement, Berghauser mortgaged the Prescott House property for the sum of $15,000, and with this money, and a portion of the $54,000 received for the property taken for Montgomery avenue, he purchased a parcel of land fronting upon the avenue, and directly west of and adjoining the Prescott House, and constructed thereon an addition to the old Prescott House, and reconstructed the whole upon the line of the new street. After the completion of the improvement, viz. April 1, 1875, he executed to Margarethe a conveyance in fee simple absolute of an undivided third of the lot of land thus purchased by him. John Berghauser died February 10, 1878, and Margarethe died December 9, 1893, leaving a last will and testament, and under proceedings had in the administration of her estate an undivided third of the property conveyed to her by the deed of April 1, 1875, was distributed to four of her six children, the other two having died in her lifetime.

1. It is alleged in the answer of certain of the defendants herein that the deed of April 1, 1875, did not correctly express the intention of the parties thereto, and that by inadvertence and a mistake of both parties, as well as of the scrivener, the deed as prepared and executed conveyed to Margarethe the fee in the property therein described, whereas it was the intention of both John and Margarethe that the deed should convey to her only a life estate, with a remainder over to her six children and their heirs; and these defendants ask that the deed be reformed in accordance with this intention. The court, however, found that there was no inadvertence or mistake on the part of either of the parties to the deed, or of the scrivener, and that it was not the intention of said parties, or of either of them, that the said deed should vest in Margarethe a life estate only. This finding of the court is attacked by the appellants as not sustained by the evidence.

A court is not authorized to reform a written instrument upon the ground of mistake, unless it is shown, by clear and satisfactory evidence, that the instrument as written does not express the intention of both of the parties thereto. Unless the mistake was mutual, or was accompanied by fraud, the parties are to be governed by the terms of the instrument as it is executed. Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 859, 1376. "The party alleging the mistake must show exactly in what it consists, and the correction that should be made. The evidence must be such as to leave no reasonable doubt upon the mind of the court as to either of these points. The mistake must be mutual and common to both parties to the instrument. It must appear that both have done what neither intended. A mistake on one side may be a ground for rescinding, but not for reforming, a contract. Where the minds of the parties have not met there is no contract, and hence none to be rectified." Hearne v. Insurance Co., 20 Wall. 488. The defendants were not entitled to have the instrument reformed as they had asked, unless they should show, by satisfactory evidence, that the conveyance was to be executed as they had alleged, and was so intended by both John and Margarethe at the time of its execution. The court could not make a new deed for the parties, nor could it reform the deed which was executed, in accordance with the claim of the defendants, unless it should be shown that the grantor intended to execute it according to those terms. See Ward v. Yorba (Cal.) 56 Pac. 58.

Whether the evidence in any particular case is sufficient to establish such intention contrary to the terms of the instrument is a question of fact to be presented to, and determined by, the trial court, and, like any other question of fact, its decision upon the weight or conflict of the evidence thereon is not open to review in the appellate court. In the present case the court expressly finds that the evidence is insufficient to show that there was a mistake on the part of either of the parties to the deed in its terms or conditions, and from the evidence presented in the bill of exceptions we are unable to say that its conclusion was incorrect. More than 20 years had elapsed since the transaction and the execution of the instrument. Both of the parties thereto had been dead for many years. The instrument was witnessed by one who had been the legal adviser of John Berghauser in the divorce suit and in the preparation of the agreement for a conveyance of the property, and this witness had also been dead for many years. Margarethe, the grantee in the deed, was absent from the state at the time of its execution, and did not return until after the death of John, the grantor. The deed was executed at the request of her agent, and was delivered to him, and by him placed upon record, and sent to her in Virginia. This agent was a witness at the trial, and was unable to remember the exact conversation between him and John Berghauser when the deed was executed. It is further contended by the appellants that they were entitled to the relief they seek, irrespective of the reformation of the deed, by virtue of the provision in the agreement that the deed should convey to Margarethe only a life estate, with a remainder over to the children of the parties. The agreement of October 31, 1873, was, however, only executory in its character, and so long as it remained executory the parties thereto could change its terms or rescind its provisions, or make such disposition of its subject-matter as they might choose. Civ. Code, § 1698. The children had no interest in the property referred to in the agreement, nor could they enforce its execution. It was entered into without any consideration moving from them, and, so far as appears, without their knowledge. They were not parties thereto, but were only beneficiaries contemplated by their parents as persons upon whom they would bestow their bounty. There was no obligation upon John and Margarethe to adhere to the terms of this agreement, and when on April 1, 1875, he made a conveyance to her in fee of an undivided third of the property, it must be assumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that this was his intention, and as she accepted the deed and retained it until her death, with full opportunity to know its contents and purport, and made no objection thereto, it may be assumed that she was satisfied therewith.

2. The deed to Margarethe of October 31, 1873, provided that upon her death the property should go to the children then living, share and share alike, "and, in the case of the death of any such children, then to their heir or heirs." Two of the daughters died in the lifetime of their mother, each leaving a husband and issue. The court below excluded the husbands of these daughters from any share of the property. It is claimed by the appellants that these husbands are entitled to a portion of the estate thus given to the "heirs" of the deceased daughters, while, on the other hand, it is contended that the term "heirs," as used in the deed, is limited to the "children" of the daughters. The "heirs" of a person are those whom the law appoints to succeed to his estate in case he dies without disposing of it by will. In this state the heirs of a person to whom, under section 1384, Civ. Code, his estate passes when not disposed of by will, are determined by the provisions of section 1386, Civ. Code, and the use of the term "heirs" in an instrument of conveyance to designate the persons in whom the estate granted is to vest will, in the absence of any qualifying terms, be construed to mean his heirs as thus ascertained. "Like all other legal terms, the word 'heirs,' when unexplained and uncontrolled by the context, is to be construed according to its strict technical import, in which sense it designates the persons who would by the statute succeed to the real estate in case of intestacy." Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen, 466. "If there are no words in a deed to indicate that a grantor uses the word 'heirs' any otherwise than in its strict legal sense, then it must be taken in that sense." Jones, Conv. § 232. Many cases have been cited in support of the judgment of the superior court in which it has been held that the term "heirs" was construed as synonymous with "children," but an examination of these cases will show that this construction was given by reason of some qualifying word or some other provision in the instrument by which it could be interpreted or explained. The object of all construction of an instrument is to ascertain the intention of the parties thereto, and thus determine the meaning to be given to the terms; and, if the instrument contains a glossary of its own terms, or if a term used in one part of the instrument can be interpreted by its use in another part, courts will avail themselves of this means of ascertaining the meaning of the term. The intention is to be gathered from a consideration of the entire instrument, but, in the absence of any qualifying term or language in the instrument itself, the words used are to receive their legal significance. In the conveyance of October 31, 1873, there is no language used which in any respect qualifies the direction that, in the event of the children dying before their mother, their share of the property should go to their heirs, or indicating that the term "heirs" was used in any qualified or limited sense; and it must be held that the word was used to describe the persons who on the death of the mother would have succeeded to her estate in case of her dying intestate. Under the provisions of section 1386, Civ. Code, the husband would have been one of these persons (In re Dobbel, 104 Cal. 432, 38 Pac. 87) and the court should therefore have decided that he was entitled to a portion of the estate.

3. The appellants Vocke urge that the action was prematurely brought, for the reason that by the terms of the will of John Berghauser it was provided that the property devised by him to the trustees therein named should be conveyed to his children when the youngest of them should arrive at the age of 21 years, and should be held by such children, or the survivor of them, until the youngest should attain the age of 30 years; that, in pursuance of this provision, the trustees conveyed the land to said children on the 10th day of February, 1891, with the condition that the property should be held in common by them until the 7th day of March, 1898, that being the date at which the youngest child would arrive at the age of 30 years. The answer of these appellants contains averments to this effect, but neither in the findings of the court nor in the bill of exceptions is there any fact or evidence in support of these averments, and, for the purposes of this appeal, the facts thus averred must be regarded as nonexistent.

The order appealed from is reversed, and the superior court is directed to modify the interlocutory decree in accordance with the foregoing opinion. One half of the costs of the appeal is to be borne by the respondent John C. Jordan, and the other half, together with the costs of the plaintiff, by the appellants.

128 Cal. 1

In re WILLEY'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,336.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1899.)

EXECUTORS—DISTRIBUTION—FINDING—WILLS—ATTESTATION—TRUSTS—DEEDS—PROBATE—CONSTRUCTION—VALIDITY—REVOCATION—CHARITABLE TRUSTS—REVIEW.

1. In a proceeding by an heir for the partial distribution of an estate, consisting of land conveyed to trustees by deed, which was referred to and made part of the grantor's will, a finding that the deed, independent of the will, was void, was erroneous, as beyond the court's jurisdiction.

2. Where a will referred to a deed creating a trust of testator's land, it was not necessary, for a proper attestation of the will, that the deed should have been presented and exhibited to the witnesses to the will.

3. It was not necessary, in order to consider the deed in connection with the will, that the deed itself should have been presented to the probate court, and formally and expressly certified as probated.

4. The intention of the testator and grantor, as expressed in a will and deed of trust of his property referred to therein, must be carried out, notwithstanding a defect, where it is possible without contravening some established principle.

5. Civ. Code, § 863, declares that every express trust in real property, valid as such in its creation, vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject, only, to the execution of the trust. Section 2230 provides that a trust may be revoked if the declaration reserves a power of revocation. Held, that a deed of trust conveying the fee to trustees absolutely, subject, only, to a trust for the use of the grantor for life, remainder to the use of other persons and objects declared, was not rendered void by a reservation of a right in the grantor to revoke the trust, which he never exercised, such right amounting to a mere privilege only, in no way affecting the estate conveyed to the trustees.

6. A deed conveying a testator's property in trust required the trustees to pay from the income certain annuities, to various persons for life and to certain charities. A separate clause provided that the trustees, before making any payments, should set aside $25, or other necessary sum, for the care of the testator's cemetery lot. Held that, though this clause was void, not being a bequest for a charity, it being disconnected and separable from the other valid provisions, the deed was not thereby rendered void, under Civ. Code, § 1317, providing that, where a testator's intent to its full extent cannot be given effect, it must be carried out as far as possible.

7. Devises in trust to trustees, for the use of the "widows' and orphans' fund" of certain associations, are valid charitable trusts, notwithstanding such associations are not themselves charitable bodies, since it is not necessary that the trustee of such a trust should be a charitable institution, as it will be presumed, to support the trust, that such trustee will properly apply the funds.

8. A bequest intended as a charity is not void, and will not be legally construed void, if it can possibly be made good.

9. On an appeal from a decree declaring a conveyance in trust and by a will void, and that no bequest or devise of the testator's property was made, the contention that the trust was void because more than one-third of the income was given to charities, in contravention of Civ. Code, § 1313, is not presented by the record.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application by Elisha V. S. Cook, as grantee of Charles W. Willey, against Edwin Wallace Carpenter and William Boericke, executors of the estate of Amasa P. Willey, for partial distribution. From a decree in favor of petitioner, defendants appeal. Reversed.

E. B. & Geo. H. Mastick, for appellants. Timothy J. Lyons, for respondent Cook. John H. Durst, for respondent Willey.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by Edwin Wallace Carpenter and William Boericke from an order of partial distribution to Elisha V. S. Cook, made December 17, 1897. Amasa P. Willey, deceased, made in his lifetime a certain deed of trust to the appellants, Carpenter and Boericke, dated October 27, 1892, and executed and delivered on the next day. Three days afterwards, on October 31, 1892, he made a will, which was properly declared and attested, and in every way duly executed. The will is very brief, and the important part of it is as follows: "I give, devise, and bequeath all the property, real and personal, of what kind and nature soever, and wheresoever situated, of which I may die seised or possessed, or to which at the time of my death I may be entitled, or in or to which at said time I may have any interest, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to Edwin Wallace Carpenter and William Boericke, in trust, however, for the uses and purposes set forth and declared in that certain deed of trust, bearing date the 27th day of October, 1892, made and executed by me to the said Edwin Wallace Carpenter and William Boericke." Carpenter and Boericke are made executors of the will without bonds, and given power to sell any of the property of the estate, etc. They presented the will for probate on the 27th day of February, 1893, and such proceedings were had that the will was regularly admitted to probate by the superior court on the 13th day of March, 1893, and on the 16th of March, 1893, letters testamentary were duly issued to Carpenter and Boericke, who qualified, and have ever since been, and now are, the executors of said will. About four years afterwards, to wit, on February 26, 1897, Elisha V. S. Cook filed a petition for the partial distribution to him, as grantee of Charles Walter Willey, the son and only heir at law of the deceased, of certain lands of the estate, which seem to be all the lands belonging to said estate, and are the lands mentioned in the said deed of trust, dated October 27, 1892, hereinbefore mentioned. The appellants, Carpenter and Boericke, filed a written opposition to the application for distribution, upon the grounds (1) that said lands were not the property of the estate, but were the property of appellants, conveyed to them by the said deed of trust; and (2) that if the property, or any part thereof, was the property of the estate, it had been devised to them by the terms of the last will of said decedent. The court granted the application for a distribution. It made certain findings, from which we gather that it held the will void for uncertainty; and this finding seems to have been based upon the propositions that, when the will was executed, the deed of trust to which it refers was not present, and therefore not attested by the witnesses, and that, when the will was probated, the said deed of trust was not presented to the probate court, and was not, therefore, probated, and that, therefore, nothing can be considered except the words actually contained in the document which was witnessed and probated as a will, and that, as so considered, it is too indefinite and uncertain to pass any rights. We also understand, however, that the decision also went upon the theory that, if the trust deed can be considered as a part of the will, it is void for the reasons stated by counsel for respondent hereinafter noticed.

The validity of the will and the deed of trust is assailed by the respondent from a great many standpoints. The briefs of respondents filed in the present case consist of several hundred pages of printed matter, and in addition they refer to their briefs in an associated case, now pending in this court, of Carpenter v. Cook (No. 1,234) which briefs include several hundred pages more. A great many points are made, and innumerable authorities cited; and to follow the argument in detail, and notice any considerable number of the authorities cited, would extend this opinion to an intolerable length. We must content ourselves, therefore, with briefly stating our conclusions as to the material questions in the case. Case No. 1,234, above alluded to, is an action brought by the appellants herein, Carpenter and Boericke, against the respondent herein, Cook, and Willey, the heir at law, to quiet the title of the plaintiffs therein to the lands covered by the decree of distribution in the case at bar; and in that case the plaintiffs rely upon title derived through the said deed of trust. In the case at bar the court further decided that the land involved here "was not conveyed, nor any part of it, by the said Amasa P. Willey, by his certain deed, or any deed, bearing date the 27th day of October, 1894." But this part of the decision, so far as it refers to the deed of trust as unconnected with the will, and as establishing an adverse title of the appellants as against the estate, was beyond the jurisdiction of the court. The court had jurisdiction to determine to whom, as heirs or devisees under the will, the estate went, but not to determine an adverse and hostile claim. It is apparent, however, that the ultimate rights of these litigants must depend upon the validity of the deed of trust; and, therefore, many points made by respondents on this present appeal, touching probate matters alone, are only of temporary importance.

We think that it was legitimate for the testator to refer in his will to the deed of trust, and that it was not necessary, for a proper attestation of the will, that the deed should have been present and exhibited to the witnesses. We are of opinion, also, that it was not necessary, in order to consider the deed in connection with the written instrument executed and witnessed, that the deed itself should have been presented to the probate court, and formally and expressly certified as probated. Many authorities have been cited to these points, and some of them are conflicting. We think that the correct rule, as to both questions, is stated in Redfield on the Law of Wills (volume 1, *264) as follows: "The effect of a reference, in a duly-executed will, to an extraneous paper, in incorporating that paper into the will, so as to make it, ipso facto, a portion of the will itself, is a highly important point to be borne in mind in determining all questions connected with the mode of procedure in the probate of the will under such circumstances. The cases already referred to show very clearly that a will required to be witnessed by two or more persons, or executed with any other prescribed formalities, may nevertheless adopt an existing paper by reference. And this is true of others, soon to be referred to, many of which were decided during the existence of statutes requiring such formalities; so that we cannot escape from the force of these cases by supposing they had reference, exclusively, to wills of personal estate, where no particular formalities were required under the earlier English statutes. This 'incorporation' of the paper referred to into the will so makes it a part of the instrument that no distinct proof of the paper is required, or even filing, in the probate court. The proof of the will sets up and establishes the paper, as a portion of itself, by proof of the reference to the consequent incorporation." The same principle is announced in 1 Jarm. Wills (6th Ed.) p. 130, par. 14. The principle is also substantially declared in the case of In re Soher, 78 Cal. 481, 21 Pac. 8. Of course, the reference must be certain, and to an instrument then in existence. As to the validity of the trust deed, considered as part of the will, it is to be observed that a will or deed, solemnly executed, which disposes of one's property, is not to be lightly disregarded or held for naught; and the main intention of the testator or grantor must be carried out, notwithstanding a defect in some particular, where that can be done without the clear violation of some established principle.

The first attack made by respondent upon the deed relates to the first trust declared. By the deed the grantor first does "grant, bargain, alien, remise, release, convey," etc., certain parcels of real property, being the same as those included in the decree of distribution to the respondent herein, upon certain trusts. By the said first declared trust it is provided that the trustees are to hold the property, and all its rents, profits, etc., for the benefit of the grantor during his lifetime, and to sell, convey, etc., any part of the property to such person or persons as the grantor shall direct; and it is also provided, in another part of the deed, that the grantor "reserves the right at any time to revoke this trust, or any of the provisions therein contained," or to modify it, the revocation or modification to be made by a deed recorded by him in the recorder's office in San Francisco. The second declaration of trust provides that after the death of the grantor the trustees are to hold the "residue and remainder" of the property, and to receive the income, and distribute it to certain named beneficiaries. Now, it is contended that the first declared trust makes all the subsequent ones invalid, upon the common-law principle that a remainder cannot be limited on a fee simple. It is contended, in some parts of respondent's various briefs, that by the first declared trust a fee simple was created—or rather left—in the grantor, and therefore there was no remainder or residue to be disposed of; and in other parts of the arguments it is contended that there was vested in the trustees two fees: "First, a fee to serve the purposes of the trust during Willey's lifetime; and, second, a fee by way of executory devise, or, more properly speaking, a springing use (being by deed) to serve the trust after Willey's death." Many of the intricacies which attended the creation of estates at common law have been swept away by our Codes (Civ. Code, §§ 772, 773, et seq.); and we are not able to see the effectiveness of respondent's assaults on the deed from the standpoint of the objections now being considered. The deed vested the fee in the trustees, subject, only, to the declared trust. The reserved right to revoke was a mere privilege, and, as it was never exercised, it had no effect upon the estate granted. "Except as hereinafter provided, every express trust in real property, valid as such in its creation, vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust." Id. § 863. Section 2280 expressly provides that a trust may be revoked, if the declaration of trust reserves a power of revocation; and to hold that a power of revocation prevents the vesting of an estate in the trustee would be to throw statutory provisions on the subject into utter confusion. There was, at furthest, nothing more left in the grantor than the equivalent of a life estate; and we think that the contentions of the respondent on this point are fully answered by the opinion of this court rendered by Mr. Justice Henshaw in Nichols v. Emery, 109 Cal. 323, 41 Pac. 1089.

The main point of respondents—at least, the one most extensively argued and most strenuously insisted on—is that the tenth clause of the deed is void, because it creates a perpetuity which is not for eleemosynary purposes, and that, being for an unascertainable portion of the estate, and the other trusts being dependent on it, the whole fails. By prior parts of the deed all the income of the property conveyed is given to the trustees. By the sixth and subsequent clauses of the deed, prior to the tenth clause, it is provided that the trustees, out of the income and profits of the property, shall “pay annually” certain specified sums to various beneficiaries, many of them being private individuals, to whom bequests are given for their own benefit during their lives, and others being certain persons and associations, to whom bequests are given for charitable purposes. By clause 8 it is provided that, if the income of the property in any one year shall exceed or be less than the total amounts directed to be paid annually to the beneficiaries, the amount to be paid each “shall be increased or diminished in proportion to the amount so directed to be paid to them, respectively.” Then comes the tenth clause, which is as follows: “Tenth. The said trustees shall, at all times before making any payments of income under this trust, set aside and retain the sum of twenty-five dollars in each year, and any further sum that may be necessary, to provide for the care and preservation of the cemetery lot of the party of the first part in the Masonic Cemetery in San Francisco.” We will assume, for the purposes of the case, that this trust, being for the preservation of a single cemetery lot, is not for a charity, and therefore invalid; but we do not agree with respondents that this vitiates all, or any, of the other declared trusts. Counsel for respondents repeatedly speak of this tenth clause as establishing “the primary trust”; but we do not see that its relative position in the deed, or its magnitude or importance, or the whole deed construed together, or the evident main purpose of the trustor, to be gleaned from the whole instrument, at all warrants the assertion that the trust declared in the tenth clause should be considered as a primary trust, and it is not so interwoven with the entire deed that it cannot be easily separated from the other trusts, so as not to invalidate the latter.

The rule of construction involved here, as crystallized in section 1317 of the Civil Code, is: “A will is to be construed according to the intention of the testator. Where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible.” The principle which should govern courts in determining questions like the one now under review, whether they arise out of wills or deeds, is expressed by the maxim, “Ut res magis valeat quam pereat.” And, under the inspiration of that maxim, courts have firmly established the principle that valid trusts should not be disregarded because, in the instrument creating them one particular invalid trust is declared, unless the latter is so inseparably blended with the others that it cannot be eliminated without destroying the main intent of the trustor, or working manifest injustice to other beneficiaries. Among the various authorities cited by appellants to this point, Darling v. Rogers, 22 Wend. 483; Van Schuyver v. Mulford, 59 N. Y. 432; Kennedy v. Hoy, 105 N. Y. 134, 11 N. E. 390; and Kane v. Gott, 24 Wend. 641,—may be mentioned as cases where the subject is fully discussed and the principle aptly stated. And the rule is naturally and justly applicable to the case at bar. By the clauses of the deed which precede the tenth, the trustees are to receive all the income of the property conveyed, and to pay it annually to a large number of named beneficiaries; and afterwards it is provided by the tenth clause that there shall be retained from the aggregate amount of the income and annuities $25, or as much more as may be necessary, to care for the cemetery lot. It requires no strained view to see that this provision is incidental and subordinate to the main scheme, and is a mere charge upon the bequests or annuities, and that, if the charge be invalid, the beneficiaries take the bequests free of the invalid charge. The valid trusts can be easily carried into effect, after eliminating the tenth clause, without interfering with what were evidently the main purposes of the trustor, and without doing any injustice whatever to any one of the other beneficiaries. The reservation for the cemetery lot is in an independent and single clause, it appears in the instrument after clauses which dispose of the entire income, it is easily separable from all the other provisions of the instrument, and, therefore, its invalidity does not carry with it, or affect, the trusts which are valid.

It is contended by respondents that the provisions for the payment of certain sums to Corinthian Lodge, Washington Chapter, and Marysville Commandery—all being Masonic bodies—are invalid, because they are not charitable bodies, and because they are not bound to use the bequests for charitable purposes. But, in the first place, it is not necessary to determine whether a Masonic body is or is not a charitable institution; for it is not necessary that a trustee for charitable purposes should be, itself, a charitable institution. It is sufficient if the bequest be for a charitable purpose. In each of the instances the bequest is made to the Masonic body “for the use of the widows’ and orphans’ fund of said lodge,” or chapter, or commandery. This is a compliance with the legal essence of a valid charity; that is, that it is public, and is vague and uncertain as to the individuals to be benefited or relieved.

It is not to be presumed that the Masonic bodies named will not, as trustees, use the trust funds for the purposes expressly declared by the trust; and, on the other hand, for the purpose of making the trust operative, it will be presumed that the trustee will properly apply the funds. As was said in Re Hinckley's Estate, 58 Cal. 457: "Courts look with favor upon all attempted charitable donations, and will endeavor to carry them into effect, if it can be done consistently with the rules of law. A bequest intended as a charity is not void, and there is no authority to construe it to be legally void, if it can possibly be made good."

Counsel for respondents present the point that by the deed, construed as a part of the will, more than one-third of the estate of the testator is given for charitable purposes, in contravention of section 1313 of the Civil Code. With respect to this matter it may be said, in the first place, that it does not appear that more than one-third of the estate is thus given, for the amount of the annuities which go to charitable purposes is less than one-third of the whole income; so that, at least for the present, the excess does not appear, and it is only by speculations leading into the distant future that the result alleged could be in any way arrived at. The point, however, does not arise at all on the record in this appeal. Under section 1313 the only consequences following charitable devises or bequests of more than one-third of a testator's estate are that "in such case a pro rata deduction from such devises or bequests shall be made, so as to reduce the aggregate thereof to one-third of such estate." But, in the case at bar, the petition for distribution and the findings and decree of the court make no reference whatever to any question that might arise under section 1313. It is alleged, and found and decreed, not that appellants are entitled to only one-third, but that they are not entitled to any part whatever, of the estate. It is decided that all attempts to devise or convey any part of the property to appellants in trust are void; "that no bequest or devise is made of any property or estate of the testator in or by said will, or any of its provisions, and no bequest or devise at all was or has been made by the aforesaid testator"; and that by the deed dated October 27, 1892, from the deceased to the appellants, "the said real property was not conveyed, nor any part of it." Moreover, upon the theory that appellants were entitled to one-third of the property, the court could not, in a decree of partial distribution, have segregated appellants' undivided interest in all the property, and set off all the land in severalty to other claimants. But, as before stated, this was not attempted.

The foregoing views make it unnecessary to discuss other points made by appellants, and we have endeavored, as far as possible, to consider those questions upon which the rights of the parties ultimately depend. We see no other points made by respondents which are necessary to be considered, except that it is proper to say that the trust deed was in evidence for the general purposes of the case, and that it was fully identified as the instrument referred to in the will. For the reasons above stated the decree of distribution was erroneous. The order of partial distribution, appealed from, is reversed.

McMULLIN v. McMULLIN. (S. F. 887.) 1

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1899.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—DESERTION—ACTION FOR MAINTENANCE BY WIFE—DEFENSE—MARITAL RELATIONS—OFFER TO RESUME—GOOD FAITH—REVIEW—ACCEPTANCE OF OFFER—WIFE'S FUTURE RIGHTS—PREJUDICE—CONDONATION.

1. Where an action is brought by a wife against her husband for maintenance without divorce, on the ground of willful desertion, as authorized by Civ. Code, § 137, and, while the action is pending, the husband in good faith offers to provide her a home and resume marital relations, which she refused, it constitutes a defense to the action, though made after the period of desertion has exceeded that required to entitle her to a divorce on that ground.

2. Where a wife's action for maintenance against her husband was dismissed because of her refusal to accept his offer to resume marital relations, which the court found was made in good faith, the case will not be reversed on appeal, on the ground that her refusal was justified by his cruelty, which occurred 18 years previously; her refusal not having been made on that ground at the trial, but on a denial of defendant's good faith.

3. Where a husband pleaded a bona fide offer to resume marital relations as a defense to his wife's action for maintenance on the ground of desertion, whether such offer was in good faith is a question of fact; and the finding that it was so made will not be disturbed, on appeal, where there was evidence to support it.

4. Acceptance by a wife of her husband's offer to resume marital relations, made in an action by her for maintenance, does not prejudice her future rights against him.

5. Civ. Code, § 102, declares that if a party to a marriage, who has deserted the other, returns and "solicits condonation," the desertion is cured. Held, that where a husband, who had deserted his wife, offered her a home with him, expressed his willingness for a reconciliation, and asked her to fulfill the marriage contract, and offered himself to do so, he had impliedly requested conditional forgiveness, which section 115 declares is condonation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Virginia McMullin against Thurlow McMullin. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lloyd & Wood and Rodgers & Paterson, for appellant. Chas. S. Wheeler and Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Plaintiff is the wife of defendant. She prosecutes this action against him under section 137, Civ. Code, for maintenance without divorce. The parties were married to each other on February 15, 1871, and defendant deserted the plaintiff November 15, 1877. This action was begun January 4, 1894.

1 Rehearing denied April 3, 1899.

The court found that defendant's desertion of plaintiff was willful, and that it continued until April 10, 1895,—a time above 15 months after the commencement of the action,—but that on said April 10th defendant offered to provide a home for plaintiff "at any reasonable place of her own choosing, and to return and live with her as husband and wife, and also requested plaintiff to return and fulfill the marriage contract; that said offer was made by defendant in good faith"; and that plaintiff rejected it. The court allowed plaintiff certain sums for temporary alimony and expenses of the action, but rendered judgment denying her demand for permanent support.

Willful desertion must continue for one year before it is a ground for divorce. Civ. Code, § 107. And it is provided in section 102, preceding, that if, prior to the expiration of such time, the party deserting "returns and offers in good faith to fulfill the marriage contract, and solicits condonation, the desertion is cured." And in Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467, it was held that an offer to return, made after expiration of the time necessary to give the ground for divorce, will not, if refused, defeat the action of the injured party for divorce. Plaintiff contends, in support of her appeal, that a rule like that in Benkert v. Benkert should obtain in this case, and that the defendant's offer to return came too late. The cases, however, differ materially. See Hardy v. Hardy, 97 Cal. 125, 130, 31 Pac. 306. In Benkert v. Benkert dissolution of the marriage bond was sought. Here the plaintiff, as she testified at the trial, and as her suit shows, desires no divorce, but insists that the marriage relation shall continue. Manifestly, to enforce the duty of support against defendant, when, as the court finds, he seeks in good faith to fulfill his obligations, and at the same time to exonerate plaintiff from the correlative duty of dwelling with defendant at some reasonable place of abode (Civ. Code, § 156), would be the granting of a limited divorce, for which our law makes no provision. Hagle v. Hagle, 74 Cal. 608, 612, 16 Pac. 518; Peyre v. Peyre, 79 Cal. 336, 21 Pac. 838. The cases touching this subject quite uniformly hold or imply that, although the husband may have deserted the wife, yet the door for repentance is open for him, and is not necessarily closed by the fact of suit brought for maintenance; so, not because of any tenderness of the law for delinquent husbands, but because of its aversion to separation of the spouses. Schraeder v. Schraeder, 26 Ill. App. 524; Johnson v. Johnson, 125 Ill. 510, 519, 16 N. E. 891; Taylor v. Taylor, 4 Desaus. Eq. 165; Briggs v. Briggs, 24 S. C. 377; Almond v. Almond, 4 Rand. (Va.) 662, 667; Head v. Head, 3 Atk. 547, 551; Walker v. Lightham, 31 N. H. 111.

It is strongly urged that the plaintiff was justified in refusing defendant's overtures, first, it is said, because of his cruelty to her before the desertion. At the trial plaintiff did not specify cruelty as a ground for her refusal. She claimed only that defendant's offer was not made in good faith. True, the former relations of the parties justly have an influence upon the question of good faith of the husband's offer; but, if there was any cruelty in the case,—which defendant denies,—it occurred more than 18 years before the attempt at reconciliation, and there was no showing in that behalf such as would warrant this court in reversing the decision that defendant's offer was made in good faith, which necessarily implies a finding that he intended to treat the plaintiff with conjugal kindness.

It is also contended that defendant's proposal was made with the expectation and desire that it would be refused, and in a manner to induce that result. The question of the good faith of the offer is one of fact. See, besides the cases cited above, the following: Wagner v. Wagner, 104 Cal. 295, 37 Pac. 935; Olcott v. Olcott (N. J. Ch.) 26 Atl. 469; Musgrave v. Musgrave, 185 Pa. St. 260, 39 Atl. 961; Porter v. Porter, 162 Ill. 398, 44 N. E. 740. To detail the evidence on this issue would unnecessarily extend the opinion. It appeared that defendant repeated his offer, which was made through counsel, varying it to meet plaintiff's objections; that he solicited a personal interview with plaintiff for the purpose of "talking it over"; and that she steadily refused. Indeed, it was conceded at the trial that defendant could have made no offer to live with plaintiff which she would have accepted. It is probably true that the cause immediately moving defendant to endeavor to effect a reconciliation was the pendency of this suit, and the apprehension of a judgment coercing from him performance of the duty to support his wife; but while this consideration might affect, it certainly could not conclude, the question of the integrity of his intentions towards plaintiff. No higher motives than those of convenience, it unfortunately must be allowed, have both induced and preserved multitudes of matrimonial unions. We are satisfied that there was evidence to support the substance of the court's finding; and it follows that the plaintiff should have tested defendant's professions by acceptance. Had he thereafter proved derelict, her complaisance would not have prejudiced her claims upon him. She could not capriciously refuse to be satisfied of the good faith of his offer. Newing v. Newing, 45 N. J. Eq. 498, 502, 18 Atl. 166.

It is said, further, that defendant did not solicit condonation for his offense of desertion (Civ. Code, § 102), and that for this reason plaintiff need not have accepted his offer. We think he preferred such request, in substance and effect. He offered plaintiff a home with him, and expressed his willingness for a reconciliation. He asked her to fulfill the marriage contract, and offered himself to do likewise. These things certainly imply a request for "conditional forgiveness," which is condonation. Civ. Code, § 115. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BUTLER v. SOULE et al. (S. F. 1,168.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1899.)JUDGMENTS — CONCLUSIVENESS — COLLATERAL AT-TACK—VACATION.

1. The judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is conclusively presumed to be correct, unless the record itself of the judgment shows that the court did not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action or of the person of defendant.

2. An order vacating a judgment as having been inadvertently entered cannot be attacked on motion to vacate a second judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by John W. Butler against A. C. Soule and others. Motions of A. C. Soule and another to vacate the judgment rendered therein were denied, and movants appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Ash, for appellants. Joseph Hutchinson, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This appeal is taken from an order of the court below, entered the 15th day of February, 1897, denying the motions of the appellants, said defendant Soule and said Burt, a tenant in possession of said premises under the mortgagor, Soule, to vacate and set aside a judgment and decree of foreclosure made and entered in said court on the 6th of April, 1896. The motion to vacate and set aside said judgment, as stated in the notice for the same, is based upon the ground that it "was and is absolutely void, for the reason that the said court never acquired jurisdiction over the premises described in the so-called decree, or any part thereof, or over the person of the defendant A. C. Soule in said action, who was the owner in fee of the said premises, to give or make said so-called judgment or decree"; and that the right of Burt, the said tenant in possession of the premises described in the judgment or decree of foreclosure, is independent of, and beyond the reach or control of, said judgment or decree. The said judgment or decree of April 6, 1896, recites: "And due proof was made to the court that the defendants, A. C. Soule, Grace N. Soule, Alfred J. Rich, W. J. Adams, San Francisco Lumber Company (a corporation), and Thomas Fanning (sued as John Doe), were each duly served with summons and copy of the complaint herein, and, the time for them to appear and plead herein allowed by law having expired, and none of them except the said Thomas Fanning having made appearance, the default of each of them except the said Thomas Fanning was heretofore duly entered herein;" and further recites that said A. C. Soule and Grace N. Soule, and J. J. Rauer, assignee of A. C. Soule, insolvent, sued herein as Richard Roe, were each duly served with a copy of the answer and cross complaint of the defendant Thomas Fanning, and, the time for them to appear and plead therein allowed by law having expired, and having made no appearance, their default for not answering said cross complaint was duly entered. There is nothing in the judgment to contradict or impeach the recitals contained in the decree, and therefore the facts recited are deemed to be true, and they show that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties. "The judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is conclusively presumed to be correct, unless the record itself of the judgment shows that the court did not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action or of the person of the defendant. When the court has such jurisdiction, its record speaks absolute verity, because it is the court's record of its own acts; and such jurisdiction will be conclusively presumed, unless the contrary appears upon the face of the record." Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478, 26 Pac. 1074. "The maxim of the law is that the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction imports absolute verity, and its truth cannot be questioned either by showing otherwise than by the record itself that the court had no jurisdiction, or that the jurisdiction was fraudulently procured. Both upon the merits of the cause of action and upon all jurisdictional facts the record imports absolute verity in law, and is to be tried by the court on inspection of the record only." Carpentier v. City of Oakland, 30 Cal. 439; Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455. "A judgment void upon its face is one that appears to be void by inspection of the judgment roll. The mere absence from the roll of the paper—for example, the return of the officer showing a service of the summons—cannot invalidate the judgment when the judgment itself recites the fact that the defendant was duly served with process." People v. Harrison, 84 Cal. 607, 24 Pac. 311. To the same effect is Freem. Judgm. § 130.

But it is claimed on the part of these appellants that the judgment in question is void for the reason that it is a second judgment or decree, a former one having been set aside by the court; and it is claimed that said order of the court setting aside the former judgment was void, and that said former judgment still remains in full force; hence the one in question is void. From the bill of exceptions it appears that the action was brought by the plaintiff to foreclose a mortgage covering the premises in question, made and executed on the 19th day of June, 1893, by the defendants A. C. Soule and Grace N. Soule to the plaintiff, to secure their promissory note of even date for the sum of $5,350. The defendant and cross complainant Thomas Fanning held a second mortgage executed by the defendant A. C. Soule, dated June 22, 1893, to secure a promissory note of even date therewith, in the sum of $500, and by the recitals in the last decree, as already shown, Fanning was brought in as defendant on the plaintiff's suit under the fictitious name of John Doe. The first decree was entered June 28, 1895, and it appears therefrom that Fanning, as the holder of the second mortgage, was entirely ignored, and the decree and order of sale was in behalf of the plaintiff only. On October 8, 1895, appears a minute order, reciting that upon motion of the plaintiff's attorney, "and it appearing to the court that the judgment heretofore entered herein was inadvertently entered, it is hereby ordered by the court that said judgment be, and the same is hereby, set aside." Thereupon, November 5, 1895, the defendant Fanning filed an answer, together with a cross complaint, setting up his junior mortgage, and asking for judgment thereon as against defendant Soule, and for a sale of the mortgaged premises. Attached to the cross complaint the following entry was made: "In this action the defendants A. C. Soule, Grace N. Soule, Alfred J. Rich, W. J. Adams, and San Francisco Lumber Company, having been regularly served with process, and having failed to appear and answer the cross complaint of Thomas Fanning on file herein, and the time allowed by law for answering having expired, the default of said defendants in the premises is hereby duly entered according to law," and dated April 6, 1896. And there is nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that the service of the cross complaint recited in the indorsement was not made as stated. No appeal has been taken from this order vacating and setting aside the first judgment, nor was there any motion made by these appellants, or any one, to vacate, set aside, or modify the same. The inadvertence mentioned by the court may have been the fact that the decree did not cover all the controversies involved in the action, to wit, the rights of the defendant Fanning, the second mortgagee, or it may have been for some other reason not disclosed by the record. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and every presumption will be indulged in to support its judgments and orders. "Circumstances may have arisen wherein the trial court would have been justified under the law in setting aside the first findings and judgment, and in filing the second findings and judgment; and, with no showing to the contrary, we must assume that such circumstances did arise." Paige v. Roeding, 96 Cal. 391, 31 Pac. 264. "It is within the jurisdiction of the superior court to vacate a judgment entered by it by other proceedings than a motion for a new trial. If it has committed error in thus vacating the judgment, it can be corrected on a direct appeal; but on a collateral attack the order will be deemed to have been properly made." Storke v. Storke, 111 Cal. 514, 44 Pac. 173. See, also, Water Co. v. Swartz, 99 Cal. 278, 33 Pac. 878.

The decree in question not being void upon its face, and no fraud or imposition upon the court being shown so as to bring the case within the rule of Norton v. Railroad Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 585, and 32 Pac. 452, the motion to vacate and set it aside came too late. The notice of motion was served and filed nearly 10 months after the entry of the decree, whereas the code provision requires it shall be made within a reasonable time, but in no case exceeding 6 months. Code Civ. Proc. § 473; People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197; People v. Harrison, supra; Jacks v. Baldez, 97 Cal. 91, 31 Pac. 899; Wharton v. Harlan, 68 Cal. 422, 9 Pac. 727; People v. Temple, 103 Cal. 447, 37 Pac. 414.

The defendant and cross complainant Fanning was not served with notice, or brought in on the motion to vacate and set aside the final decree in which his junior mortgage is foreclosed, and his rights, therefore, are unaffected. There is no merit in the appeal. Order affirmed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

WILLIAMS v. MARX. (Sac. 608.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1899.)

ADMINISTRATION—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

In an action by a distributee of land, against a purchaser thereof, to compel specific performance, the decree of distribution cannot be attacked because the will was improperly construed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by Thomas H. Williams, Jr., against M. Marx. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, for appellant. Rothchild & Ach, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. On April 11, 1898, the parties to this suit entered into an agreement in writing whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell, and the defendant agreed to buy, certain real estate situate on Grand Island, in the Sacramento river, for a price therein specified. The defendant paid to the plaintiff $1,000 of the purchase money, but it was provided that, if the title to the land should not prove to be good and marketable, the plaintiff should repay said sum of $1,000, but, if the title should be found to be good and marketable, the defendant should pay the remainder of the purchase price. Defendant, claiming the title was not good and marketable, refused to complete the purchase, and demanded a return of his deposit. The plaintiff refused to comply, tendered a conveyance, demanded payment, and brought this action to compel a specific performance. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant appeals. The facts were stipulated, and stand as the findings of the court.

Thomas H. Williams, Sr., the father of the plaintiff, died testate in 1886, leaving a large estate. His will was duly probated, and George E. Williams, the executor therein named, was duly appointed executor thereof, was duly qualified, and administered said estate. On January 5, 1897, upon the petition of the plaintiff herein, a decree of final distribution of said estate was duly made and entered, by which the land agreed to be purchased by the defendant from the plaintiff, and which is involved in this action, was distributed in fee to the plaintiff; and said decree was recorded in the office of the county recorder of Sacramento county on January 27, 1898. The only objections made by the defendant to the title to the land embraced in said contract are based upon the construction which he gives to said will, which construction, he contends, leaves the title questionable. But it is stipulated that more than a year had elapsed after the decree of distribution was entered, and that it remained unmodified, unreversed, and unappealed from. Nor is the jurisdiction of the court which made the decree assailed. The decree was necessarily a judicial construction of the will and of the several interests of the distributees, and cannot be assailed collaterally. There is no doubt or uncertainty in the decree itself, as to plaintiff's title, and to that alone are we permitted to look. In Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 Pac. 38, it was held that the distribution of an estate is a proceeding in rem, and the action of the court making the distribution binds the whole world, and is equally conclusive upon every claimant, whether his claim is presented, or whether he fails to appear, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified upon appeal; and its decree cannot be collaterally attacked for any error committed therein. PENINSULAR TRADING & FISHING CO.
v. PACIFIC STEAM WHALING
CO. (S. F. 886.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1899.)
EQUITABLE MORTGAGES—ESTABLISHMENT—ESTOPPEL —REDEMPTION—TIME—ACCOUNTING—JURISDICTION OF SUPERIOR COURT—EQUITY.

1. The fact that an agreement purports to be a contract of sale, and that it recites that the vendor is the owner of the property, does not estop the purchaser from showing that the vendor acquired and holds the property merely as security; and this, though the vendor is in possession.

2. A debt of a salmon-canning company fell due February 1, 1894, and to secure it the cannery was transferred to the creditor absolutely in March, 1893, upon an agreement for a reconveyance on payment of what should remain of the debt after the creditor should apply thereon whatever profits he might make beyond a certain sum in operating the cannery for the season of 1893. Held, that the fact that time was made of the essence of the contract, and that the debt was not paid when due, did not end the debtor's rights in the property, where the creditor continued to operate the cannery under the agreement during the following seasons.

3. Const. art. 6, § 5, provides that actions in the superior court to recover possession of real estate, to quiet title thereto, and to enforce liens thereon, shall be commenced in the county wherein the property or a part thereof is situate. Held, that an action against a resident to have an absolute conveyance of real property situate without the state declared to be a mortgage, and to redeem therefrom, and to obtain an accounting of profits thereunder, is within the jurisdiction of the superior court, so far as the accounting is concerned, though no accounting can be ordered until the court determines that the conveyance is a mortgage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Peninsular Trading & Fishing Company against the Pacific Steam Whaling Company. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. H. Wakeman and E. P. Pillsbury, for appellant. Geo. W. Towle, Jr., for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for an accounting. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the grounds: (1) Insufficiency of facts; (2) want of jurisdiction of the subject of the action. The court sustained the demurrer, and gave defendant judgment dismissing the action, from which plaintiff appeals.

The complaint sets forth the following facts:

Plaintiff and defendant are corporations organized under the laws of California, having their principal place of business at San Francisco. On and after January 15, 1892, plaintiff was, and now is, the owner of a certain salmon cannery situated in the district of Alaska, and, until possession thereof was given to defendant, plaintiff was operating said cannery. About January 15, 1892, plaintiff made its note to defendant for $25,000, payable January 15, 1893, with annual interest at 10 per cent. At the delivery of said note, and to secure the same, and as part of the transaction, plaintiff executed an instrument in writing purporting to transfer to defendant certain personal property then at or near said cannery, and then being used by plaintiff in operating the same. As part of the same transaction, it was mutually agreed that defendant should take possession of said cannery and of said personal property, and should operate the cannery during the canning season of 1892, "and should pay itself, out of the profits, if any, which it should realize during said canning season of 1892 from the operation of said cannery, the amount which should be due to it from the plaintiff at the end of the said canning season; and that upon being repaid the whole of the said sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, with interest as specified in said promissory note, and also such other sums as should be or become due from the plaintiff to the defendant during said canning season of 1892, the defendant should deliver to the plaintiff the possession of the said cannery, and should retransfer and redeliver to the plaintiff so much of said personal property as should not have been used up in the operation of the said cannery." Defendant went into possession of said property, and operated the cannery for the season of 1892, and at the end thereof rendered an account to plaintiff, from which it appeared that there then remained due on said note, from plaintiff to defendant, the sum of $21,801.43. Thereafter, on March 15, 1893, to secure said balance, plaintiff and defendant executed a certain agreement in writing. This agreement is quite lengthy, and is set out in the complaint. As respondent relies much on the terms of this agreement, it becomes necessary to state them somewhat fully. We quote as follows: "Whereas, the party of the first part [defendant] is now the owner of the residue of that certain property * * * [referring to the property mentioned in the agreement of January 15, 1892]; and whereas, the party of the second part [plaintiff] now desires to repurchase the same from the party of the first part for the sum of $21,801.43 [the balance as above stated in the complaint to be due]; and whereas, the party of the first part is willing to sell said property and all thereof * * * for said sum: Now, therefore, the party of the first part agrees with the party of the second part that it will sell * * * the above-mentioned property * * * to the party of the second part, upon the receipt from it, prior to the 1st day of February, 1894, of said sum, with interest * * * from the 15th day of March, 1893 (the date of said alleged account and balance), until said sum and interest thereon shall be fully paid, and in consideration thereof the party of the second part hereby promises and agrees to pay to the party of the first part, for said specified property, the said sum, * * * with interest thereon as aforesaid, on or before the 1st day of February, 1894. And whereas, the party of the first part desires to operate and use said property during the season of 1893, and the party of the second part consents to such use: Now, therefore, it is in consideration of the premises hereby further agreed that the party of the first part shall bear all the expenses of operating and using such property in canning or salting fish thereat, both or either, and shall assume and shall suffer all loss, if any, incurred or suffered * * * in connection with such use, and that the proceeds of such use, and of the fish caught, canned, or salted thereat, when received by the party of the first part, shall be applied as follows." Then follow provisions for the application of the proceeds—First, to the repayment to first party of all expenses incurred by it in operating the cannery; second, after such repayment first party is to retain $10,000; third, from the surplus of the proceeds, after above payments, "there shall be paid to the party of the first part the sum that shall be due to it as interest from the party of the second part, and, if such surplus shall not be sufficient to pay such interest, then the same, or the deficiency thereof, shall be paid by the party of the second part"; fourth, if any proceeds remain after above payments are made, they "shall be divided between the parties hereto share and share alike." An inventory of the property was attached to the agreement, and it was provided that first party should have the use of such inventoried property without charge therefor. "It is further understood that the expense of keeping said property insured shall be a charge against and shall be paid by the party of the second part. It is further expressly understood and agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement." The complaint then alleges that during the canning seasons of 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 "the defendant continued in possession of said cannery and of said personal property referred to in said agreement, and operated the said cannery under the terms of said last-mentioned agreement, and in each of the said canning seasons realized, as plaintiff is informed and believes, by and from the said operation of the said cannery and use of said personal property, * * * and by and from the proceeds of the fish caught, canned, and salted at said cannery, a sum of money more than sufficient for the repayment to itself of all sums expended by it in connection with such operation, * * * and for the payment to itself of the sum due to it as interest, * * * and of all other sums which, by the terms of the said agreement, the defendant was entitled to pay to or retain for itself"; and upon information and belief alleges "that defendant has realized and received, by and from the operation of the said cannery and use of the said personal property" (during said seasons), "and by and from the proceeds of the fish caught, canned, and salted at the said cannery, a sum of money more than sufficient for the repayment to itself of all sums expended by it in connection with such of its operation of said cannery and use of said property, * * * and for the payment of the said sum of $21,801.43 and all interest due thereon, and all other sums which by the terms of said agreement the defendant is entitled to pay to or retain for itself; but the plaintiff does not know, and without the aid of this honorable court cannot ascertain, the precise sum realized and received by the defendant," etc. The complaint then avers the necessity for an accounting; that plaintiff requested defendant to account before the commencement of the action; avers that defendant is still in possession of all the property; that plaintiff is willing and offers to pay to defendant any balance which upon an accounting may be found to be due defendant; and prays accordingly, and for general relief.

1. Respondent contends that the complaint does not state a cause of action against it. The contention of respondent is that the complaint shows that certain property was mortgaged to secure the payment of $25,000; that after the time fixed in the original agreement for payment the mortgaged property was surrendered to respondent, an accounting was had, and a new agreement made, which recites that the respondent "is now the owner" of the property, and proceeds to state the terms upon which the same would be sold to appellant; that this recital is conclusive evidence of the fact that appellant had, prior to the date of the agreement, transferred the property to respondent; that this recital operates to estop appellant from asserting that respondent was not the owner; that the allegation in the complaint that this agreement was entered into for the purpose "of securing the payment to the defendant of the said sum of $21,801.43, with the interest due thereon," can in no way modify or change the effect of that recital; and, finally, that time was expressly made of the essence of the contract, and, as there is no allegation of payment or tender, the right to purchase terminated February 1, 1894.

As we read the complaint, the averments of which are admitted by the demurrer to be true, defendant came into possession of the property as security for the payment of the original indebtedness of $25,000. No transfer of the property, other than as a mortgage, is alleged, or anywhere in the complaint appears, and plaintiff alleges ownership of the property at all the times mentioned. At the accounting upon the first season's use of the property by defendant a balance was still due defendant. A new agreement was then entered into, which, taken in all its parts, bears, we think, inherent evidence that defendant was not in fact the owner of the property, although the agreement begins with the recital that defendant "is the owner" of the property. But, conceding that the contract bears no visible earmarks of a mortgage, still, if the fact be, as the complaint alleges and the demurrer admits, that it was entered into for the purpose of securing to defendant the payment of the balance then due to it, no form of words, however adroitly used to conceal this purpose, can estop plaintiff from pleading and proving the fact. As was said in Russell v. Southard, 12 How. 139: "To insist on what was really a mortgage, as a sale, is in equity a fraud, which cannot be successfully practiced under the shelter of any written papers, however precise and complete they may appear to be." It is settled beyond controversy that though a deed be absolute in form, yet if in fact it be intended by the parties to it as security for the payment of money or the performance of any lawful act, it is a mortgage; and we know of no principle of estoppel which can be invoked to prevent the fact from being disclosed. It is the real character, not the form, of the instrument to which the court will look. Civ. Code, §§ 2924, 2925; Husheon v. Husheon, 71 Cal. 407, 12 Pac. 410; Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 546, 34 Pac. 113; Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 513, 2 Pac. 399. Possession of the grantee does not enlarge his interest in the property. Murdock v. Clarke, 90 Cal. 427, 27 Pac. 275. See, also, Adair v. Adair, 22 Or. 115, 29 Pac. 193. The complaint distinctly alleges that the agreement of March 15, 1893, was intended as security for the debt then due; and whether that was its real purpose, or whether the object was to establish different relations between the parties, such as vendor and purchaser, is a question of fact which plaintiff, under the allegations of the complaint, is entitled to have tried as an issue of fact upon answer. Wallace v. Johnstone, 129 U. S. 58, 9 Sup. Ct. 243; Smith v. Smith, 80 Cal. 323, 21 Pac. 4, and 22 Pac. 186, 549; Malone v. Roy, 94 Cal. 341, 29 Pac. 712; Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 30 Pac. 1020.

The demurrer admits the allegation that plaintiff is the owner of the property; that the agreement was for the purpose of securing the amount mentioned in it; and that, being so, the argument of respondent, based upon its assumed ownership of the property, is unavailing. The fact may be as respondent claims, but that fact must be put in issue and tried as an issue of fact.

The claim of respondent that, where time is of the essence of the contract, the vendee can claim no right when he has failed to pay or to tender payment within the stipulated time, proceeds upon the assumption that the relation of vendor and vendee exists. But this is mere assumption, based upon the recital of the contract that responent "is the owner" of the property, and that it imports merely a right in appellant to purchase. But the complaint alleges, and the demurrer admits, the fact to be that the relation is that of mortgagor and mortgagee. The clause as to time, being of the essence, cannot "end appellant's rights," as is claimed by respondent, for the reason, if no other, that the complaint alleges that respondent held and operated the property, during the canning seasons following that of 1893, under the agreement as it had done in 1892 and 1893.

2. Respondent contends that the court was without jurisdiction. This contention is made upon the ground that the action is in part to redeem from a mortgage upon land, and therefore is not within the jurisdiction of the superior court of this state, the property being in Alaska (Const. art. 6, § 5); and that no accounting can be ordered until the court shall have first determined that respondent is a mortgagee, which latter it has not jurisdiction to do. The clause of the constitution referred to provides that the process of the superior court "shall extend to all parts of the state, provided that all actions for the recovery of the possession of, quieting the title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon, real estate, shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof affected by such action or actions, is situated." So far as the action may be said to seek to redeem, the reason the superior court would have no jurisdiction, in the present case, rests rather upon its having no extraterritorial jurisdiction than upon this clause of the constitution. But, conceding that plaintiff cannot maintain an action to redeem, the real question is, is plaintiff entitled to an accounting in the superior court of this state, at the principal place of business of defendant? The language of the constitution does not preclude an inquiry into the character of the agreement in aid of such jurisdiction as the court may properly exercise. The provision is "that all actions for the recovery of the possession of, quieting the title to, or for the enforcement of liens, * * * shall be commenced in the county," etc. To ascertain whether the agreement is a mortgage does not necessarily involve the recovery of the possession of the mortgaged land. The facts alleged may be such as to entitle plaintiff to a larger measure of relief, if the action were pending in the courts of Alaska, than can be awarded in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, but the latter court is not for that reason deprived of jurisdiction to grant such relief as may be within its power. Appellant cites an apt case—Cartwright v. Pettus, 2 Ch. Cas. 214 (decided 200 years ago)—in illustration of the principle. The full report is brief: "Cartwright exhibits a bill against Pettus. They were joint tenants of lands in Ireland. The plaintiff prays an account of the profits and a partition of the lands. 12 Feb., 1675. The lord chancellor declared that as to the profits the bill was good, the person being in England, for they are in the personalty; but as to the partition, which was in the realty, he could not here proceed, for he could not award a commission into Ireland; and the bill for a partition was in the nature of a writ of partition at the common law, which lieth not in England for lands in Ireland." See, also, Angus v. Angus (1736) West, Ch. 23. The principle is further sustained in Van Etten v. Jilson, 6 Cal. 19; Howard v. Valentine, 20 Cal. 282; Armstrong v. Paul, 1 Nev. 134; Taylor v. Hollander, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 535. The complaint asks for an accounting, under the direction of the court, as to the operation of the cannery and the use of the personal property, and that defendant pay over any balance found due to plaintiff upon such accounting. We think plaintiff is clearly entitled to this much relief, and that the court has jurisdiction to compel an account of the profits realized from the use of the property.

The principle of equity is that generally the decree operates in personam, and operates in rem only by virtue of some statute conferring jurisdiction; and, if the court has jurisdiction of the person of defendant, the decree may run against him, though it may affect property outside the jurisdiction of the court. In Sutphen v. Fowler, 9 Paige, 280, the court compelled the execution of a deed to land situated outside the jurisdiction of the court where the defendant was within its jurisdiction. In Smith v. Davis, 90 Cal. 25, 27 Pac. 26, this court upheld the appointment, by the decree of a superior court, of a trustee in respect of lands situated in Washington Territory, and directing him to execute the trust. In this case numerous illustrations are given of the decrees of equity courts acting in personam, and only collaterally in rem. In further illustration of the principle, see Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356; Le Breton v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 27, 4 Pac. 777; White v. Adler (Cal.) 42 Pac. 1070. The judgment should be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

BANK OF ORLAND v. FINNELL.
(Sac. 380.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1899.)

FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

Plaintiff alleged an agreement whereby third parties were to summer-fallow land for defendant, and that defendant should pay plaintiff the reasonable value thereof; that, after said plowing had been completed, said third parties directed defendant to pay plaintiff, and defendant agreed so to do. Defendant alleged execution of a two-years lease to such third parties in payment of said agreement, and that plaintiff and such third parties accepted the same in full satisfaction of the claim. Held to require a finding as to whether, after the plowing was done, defendant, for a valuable consideration, promised to pay plaintiff therefor, as alleged in the complaint.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county.

Action by the Bank of Orland against John Finnell. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ben F. Geis, for appellant. Seth Millington, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The complaint sets forth, in substance, that in August, 1894, it was agreed between plaintiff, defendant, and James and William Deveney that the Deveneys should summer-fallow 2,500 acres of land for defendant, and that defendant should pay plaintiff the reasonable value thereof; that in the summer-fallowing season next ensuing, and subsequent to such agreement, the Deveneys did the summer-fallowing; that it was worth $1.50 an acre, or a total of $3,750. Then follows, in the complaint, this allegation: "That at the time of the entering into the said agreement, after the said plowing had been completed, the said Deveneys, for a valuable consideration, directed the said John Finnell to pay to plaintiff, and the said John Finnell agreed to pay plaintiff, for the said plowing, as aforesaid." The pleadings were not verified. The answer contained a general denial; also, an affirmative defense, in the nature of a novation, in which it was alleged that in October, 1894, defendant executed a two-years lease to the Deveneys of the land in question, and that plaintiff and the Deveneys accepted the same in full satisfaction and discharge of the claim set up in said complaint. After a finding of plaintiff's corporate capacity, the findings read as follows: "(2) That on the 9th day of August, 1894, the defendant entered into the following agreement, and no other, with the plaintiff and James O. Deveney and William Deveney, to wit: Defendant agreed to lease certain lands, consisting of five thousand acres, more or less, upon the Capay Rancho, in said Glenn county, state of California, unto the said James O. Deveney and William Deveney, for the term of one year from the 1st day of October, 1894, for a certain rental, and did further agree to pay a reasonable price per acre for any and all summer fallow plowed by the said Deveneys upon said leased land, during said term of leasing, if said lease should for any cause be terminated and cease at the end of the said one year. (3) That defendant did not agree to pay for said summer fallow, in any and all events, as in the complaint set out, but only in case the said James O. Deveney and William Deveney should cease to be his tenants at the end of the said term of one year. (4) That under and in pursuance of said agreement the said James O. Deveney and William Deveney did accept said oral lease, and did occupy said lands as tenants, and did summer-fallow two thousand one hundred and thirteen acres of said land. (5) That the reasonable value or price per acre for said summer-fallowing was and is $—— per acre. (6) That during the pendency of said lease, and before said summer-fallowing was done, the defendant did make, execute, and deliver unto the said James O. Deveney and William Deveney his certain indenture of lease, in writing, whereby he did lease all of said lands, theretofore held by them by oral lease, unto the said James O. Deveney and William Deveney for the term of two years from the 1st day of October, 1894. (7) That the plaintiff and the said James O. Deveney and William Deveney agreed thereto, and did accept said written lease in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims by them against defendant, and of the agreement hereinbefore found and set out, as made by defendant August 9, 1894."

The evidence would seem to be lacking to support that portion of the last finding relative to plaintiff accepting the written lease in satisfaction of the claim of plaintiff for the value of the plowing under the first contract mentioned in the findings; but as there is another ground upon which a new trial must be had, and the evidence may not be the same upon such new trial, it will not be necessary to notice this point any further.

I am of opinion that the point made in appellant's specifications and brief, that the court failed to find on the issue as to whether, after the plowing was done, defendant, for a valuable consideration, promised to pay plaintiff for it, is well taken. The question is whether the finding that, before the summer-fallowing was done, the execution of a lease for two years superseded the agreement for one year, of August 9, 1894, and so rendered any further finding unnecessary. But the record does not show satisfactorily that the situation was such that the defendant could not bind himself by the express contract charged. It is contended by respondent that the allegation of the complaint quoted above is confined, as to its date, to the time of the first agreement mentioned in the complaint, and must be taken as a part of such agreement, and that that agreement was completely disposed of in the findings. This allegation of the complaint seems to be somewhat ambiguous as to time, but there was no demurrer to it on that or any other ground, so it became the duty of the court to determine what it meant; and, if it was material, the findings should have covered it. It may as well be said that the allegation in question refers to a time after the plowing was completed, as to say it refers to any time prior thereto, and this construction must have been placed upon it by both court and counsel on the trial; for much evidence was introduced on behalf of the plaintiff to show that long after the making of the two-years lease, after much of the plowing had been done, and about the last of March or first of April, 1895, the defendant had requested plaintiff to procure a written order from the Deveney, directing him to pay the price of the plowing, and promised to pay the same. This was denied by defendant on the witness stand. Plaintiff put in evidence a written order drawn on defendant by the Deveney, in favor of plaintiff, for the price of plowing. This order was dated in August, 1895; and plaintiff's cashier testified that he had obtained it pursuant to such request of defendant. So that there was a sharp conflict in the evidence upon the question as to whether defendant, after the plowing had been done, had promised to pay plaintiff for it. The reception of all this evidence shows that the allegation was deemed to be material, and perhaps to refer to a time other than that of the first agreement mentioned in the complaint. We will suppose that the court had, in addition to the facts already found, gone on to say, in the language of the complaint, as follows: "After the said plowing had been completed, the said Deveney, for a valuable consideration, directed the said John Finnell to pay to the plaintiff, and the said John Finnell agreed to pay plaintiff, for the said plowing, as aforesaid." Would not a judgment for plaintiff on the findings have necessarily followed? This supposed finding would cover a part of the same page with the actual findings, with the utmost harmony, and, had the court made such a finding, it is doubtful, from the condition of the record, whether it could have been disturbed on appeal; and certainly the judgment on the findings would necessarily have been for the plaintiff, and directly contrary to the way it is now. All this seems to show—First, that the allegation referred to in the complaint is not covered by the findings as they stand; and, second, such allegation is material, and plaintiff is entitled to a finding upon it. And for these reasons I advise that the judgment be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Henry Schwartz and others against William H. Wright. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

F. W. Van Reynegom, P. F. Demand, and J. J. Roche, for appellants. Daniel Titus, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial and from judgment. Action brought upon the following check:

"San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 14, 1894. Union Savings Bank of San Jose, Cal.: Pay to F. W. Van Reynegom, or order, $3,300—three thousand three hundred dollars. Wm. H. Wright, by H. W. Wright, Attorney in Fact. "Anglo-Cala. Bank: Please pay."

The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant. There is a painful conflict of testimony in the case. The defense is that the check was never absolutely delivered, and that there was no completed consideration for it. The facts are peculiar. The testimony on behalf of the defendant is that William H. Wright was anxious to obtain the control of the majority of the stock of the Oceanic Phosphate Company, and for that purpose entered into negotiations with M. C. Chapman, who undertook to put into his hands 2,707 shares of the stock, the requisite majority being 5,070 shares. Chapman and John A. Magee owned 2,461 shares, but they were in the hands of Judge Van Reynegom, who held them in pledge to secure a note of Chapman and Magee to Bayle, Lacoste & Co. They could be released and put into the pool by payment to Van Reynegom, for Bayle, Lacoste & Co., of $3,300. In order to accomplish this, W. H. Wright agreed to obtain the $3,300, if Chapman would secure other stock to make up 2,707 shares, and would complete the pool of 5,070 shares. The negotiations lasted some weeks, and before they were completed W. H. Wright went to the Eastern states, leaving power of attorney with his brother, H. W. Wright, with instructions to complete the transaction. On November 14, 1894, H. W. Wright came from San Jose to San Francisco with W. I. Gill, his attorney, and met Chapman and Magee in the office of Magee. A pooling agreement was prepared in duplicate or triplicate, to be signed by stockholders for 5,070 shares of stock, including Chapman and Magee for 2,707 shares. The arrangement was complicated, and involved the preparation also of two notes by stockholders, which were to aid Wright in obtaining the required $3,300, and also a contract between Wright and Chapman and Magee, by which Wright was to be secured for his advance. The morning was consumed in arranging details, and at 2 o'clock Judge Van Reynegom was sent for to bring the stock held by him in pledge, and complete the transaction. Here the stories diverge. The statement of H. W. Wright and Gill, his attorney, is that the pooling contract was fully and freely discussed in the presence of Judge Van Reynegom and John Lacoste, of the firm of Bayle, Lacoste & Co., as part of the transaction; that Mr. Wright then explained that he had not brought any money, or any certified check, but that he could give his check upon the San Jose Union Savings Bank of San Jose, payable at the Anglo-California Bank in San Francisco, if that would be acceptable, and that he thereupon drew the check in question, and passed it over to Judge Van Reynegom for his inspection; that Van Reynegom took out the certificates of stock held by him, indorsed them, and passed them over to Mr. Gill; that 246 shares were wanting to make up the 2,707 that Chapman and Magee were to supply; that Chapman took from his pocket 83 shares more, and promised to supply the remaining 163; that all the papers connected with the pooling contract were on the table, and while Wright was signing the pooling papers, and Gill was talking with Chapman about making up the deficiency, Judge Van Reynegom took the check, and retired; that just as Mr. Gill noticed that Van Reynegom had gone out with the check, he learned from Chapman and Magee that they both made objection to signing the pooling contract, whereupon Gill said that it was a fraud and a swindle, and called upon Mr. Wright to go with him to the Anglo-California Bank, and stop the payment of the check, which they did, and then went immediately to the office of Judge Van Reynegom, and used the same strong language, tendering back the stock, and demanding the check; that Van Reynegom expressed surprise at the failure of Chapman and Magee to finish the pooling transaction, and promised not to negotiate the check, and not to part with it "until it was all fixed up satisfactorily." On the other hand, the statement of Judge Van Reynegom is that he never promised to hold the check; that he had no knowledge whatever of any other matter being connected with the transfer of his stock, or the delivery of the check; that the delivery was absolute and unconditional, and that otherwise he would never have parted with the stock. John Lacoste fully corroborates him. These are the strong points of discrepancy. There is great conflict. But the story of the defendant does not necessarily involve what Mr. Gill said, "This is all a fraud." It might well be that Judge Van Reynegom took the check and delivered the stock supposing that all matters between the other parties were, or would immediately be, adjusted; and that obstruction on the part of Chapman unexpectedly arose, and changed the aspect of affairs. But, however that may be, the question was fairly submitted to the jury. The court stated the case from both points of view, and said, "The one great point to be determined here is whether or not there was an absolute or conditional delivery of this check." The verdict was in favor of the defendant. There is clearly conflict of evidence. The motion for new trial was denied by the court in which the trial was had, and the verdict cannot be set aside without violating the well-settled rule of this court.

The appellant claims that errors were committed by the court below in the admission of evidence. Most of these errors are charged to be in admitting evidence to show the whole consideration for or inducement to the giving of the check, as has been stated above. It is to be observed that the true question is not whether there was a sufficient consideration for the check, for, if the check had been unconditionally delivered, its payment could not have been defeated if Wright had relied upon the promise of Chapman to furnish the missing 163 shares of stock and the required signatures to the pooling contract, and he had failed to do so. Hence this evidence, touching the consideration, was admissible, not as tending to show insufficiency of the consideration of a check delivered, but as showing, in a consideration unperformed, a circumstance tending strongly to show that the check was undelivered. And the criticism of the appellant that evidence was admitted of negotiations had between Chapman and Wright when Van Reynegom and Lacoste were not present is not just, because the object of those negotiations was to establish the contemplated consideration; and it was sufficient to require, as the court in its ruling very plainly did, that Van Reynegom and Lacoste had notice of all that was to be done before the check was to be delivered. Negotiations uncompleted, with notice to the payee of the want of completion, would certainly be a strong circumstance tending to show that the transaction was not ripe for completion. The payees need not have been present at all such negotiations if they were seasonably affected with notice of them.

Appellant insists also upon the fact that Judge Van Reynegom and John Lacoste were not parties to the pooling contract, and hence could not be affected by any evidence concerning that contract or the two promissory notes that were to be signed with it. But the answer to this is involved in the answer to the last position. The pooling contract was to be a part of the consideration for the check; and the failure to complete it within the knowledge of appellant's assignors was a circumstance tending to show that there was no intention to deliver the check. It is claimed that there was no issue in the pleadings under which this evidence was admissible. But it tended to sustain the averment that there was no delivery of the check.

Appellant contends that it was error to admit the statement of Mr. Gill of his conversations with Chapman and Magee in the office of Magee after Judge Van Reynegom and John Lacoste had left with the check. But those were the conversations by which Chapman and Magee both refused to sign the pooling contract. It became necessary to show them as an important ingredient in the failure to complete the consideration. Connected with this statement of facts is the declaration made by Gill, upon Magee's declining to sign: "Mr. Wright, let us go to the bank and stop that check. This is a fraud and a swindle,"—the admission of which is relied on as error. There was no motion made to strike out this characterization of the transaction. A general objection to allowing the witness to state what happened in the absence of Van Reynegom and Lacoste preceded these statements of Mr. Gill. But the objection was not good, and no objection was made separately to these offensive words by motion to strike them out. Besides, the same expressions were repeated by Mr. Gill in the presence of Judge Van Reynegom and went to the jury without objection. The rights of appellant's assignors were fully protected by the following charge: "I have instructed the jury that, if it was known to Judge Van Reynegom and Mr. Lacoste that something else was to be done at the time of the giving of the check, then it was a conditional delivery, and Mr. Wright would not be liable unless that agreement was carried out. I do not mean to instruct them as to any secret understanding in Mr. Wright's mind or Mr. Gill's mind, but it must have been an agreement that was understood by all of the parties."

Other points are made by appellant, presenting in different aspects objections to the admission of evidence and to the instructions given by the court, but they are sufficiently answered by the above. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BIANCHI v. HUGHES et al. (S. F. 1,165.)<sup>1</sup>
(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1899.)
MECHANICS' LIENS—TIME FOR FILING—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—NOTICE TO OWNER —APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. A "trivial imperfection" in a building, as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, which is "not to be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien," refers to imperfect or defective performance of work claimed to be done therein, not to work not claimed to be completed, and is not determined by its relative cost. If the omitted portion of a building is so substantial a part thereof that the contractor could not recover on his contract, he cannot enforce a lien therefor. Hence a finding that marble steps, by which the basement of a building was to be reached, were a substantial portion thereof, rather than a trivial imperfection, was justified.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1194, provides for service of notice on the owner of a building that a party has performed labor or furnished materials in the construction thereof, stating the value, and requesting the owner to withhold from the contractor sufficient money therefor. Held, that the remedy is limited to cases where the property may be made subject to a mechanic's lien, under section 1183, for the value of the materials furnished or labor performed.

3. Where there is a decided conflict of evidence on a question, the finding of the lower court will not be disturbed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by one Bianchi against one Hughes and others for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount sued for, but not declaring the same a lien on the property, as prayed, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. C. Sargent, for appellant. A. G. Eells, for respondent Vance. W. H. Fowler and Duncan Hayne, for other respondents.

HARRISON, J. Action for the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien upon the Parrott Building, in San Francisco. The court found that the notice of lien was not filed within 30 days after the completion of the building, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the amount sued for, but without declaring the same a lien upon the property. The plaintiff contends that the findings are not sustained by the evidence, and appealed from the judgment within 60 days after its rendition, bringing the evidence here in a bill of exceptions. There was no original contract or with the owner for the construction of the entire building, but the owner made contracts with different persons for constructing different portions of the building. In May, and also in June, 1896, the owner entered into two contracts, each for a sum greater than $1,000, with the San Francisco Furniture Company, for the construction and completion of a portion of the basement of the building. Neither of said contracts, or any memorandum thereof, was filed with the county recorder. The plaintiff furnished to this corporation a portion of the material for the performance of these contracts, and the present action is for the enforcement of a lien therefor.

1. The court found that he filed a notice of his claim of lien with the county recorder on the 16th of September, 1896, but that it was not filed within 30 days after the completion of the building. It appears from the evidence that the building was not actually completed at that date or for some time thereafter, but it is contended by the appellant that the particulars in which it was uncompleted were but "trivial imperfections," which under section 1187, Code Civ. Proc., are "not to be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien." The record upon this appeal does not contain the plans and specifications of the building or of the owner's contracts with the furniture company, from which the extent of this incompleteness can be determined by comparison therewith, but it was shown that certain substantial portions of the basement, including a flight of marble steps thereto, were constructed after the above date; and the finding of the court that the building was not then completed carries with it the additional finding that in its opinion the uncompleted portions were not trivial imperfections. "Trivial imperfection," as used in the Code, relates to the question whether or not there has been an actual completion of the building." Marble Lime Co. v. Lordsburg Hotel Co., 96 Cal. 332, 31 Pac. 164. "What constitutes a 'trivial imperfection' is a question of fact in each instance" (Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering & Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629); and the decision of the trial court cannot be disregarded, unless the party complaining makes it clearly appear to be without any evidence in its support (Harlan v. Stufflebeem, 87 Cal. 508, 25 Pac. 686). The "trivial imperfections" mentioned in the above section refer to imperfect or defective performance of the work upon a building which is claimed to have been completed, and not to a case in which the building is admittedly uncompleted, and workmen are still engaged in constructing substantial portions thereof. See Mill Co. v. Hage, 119 Cal. 376, 51 Pac. 555. Whether an omitted portion of the building is a trivial imperfection, or is a substantial failure in its completion, is not to be determined by its relative cost to that of the entire building. If the omissions are so substantial that the contractor would not have a right of recovery upon his contract, he cannot enforce a lien therefor. See Marchant v. Hayes, 117 Cal. 669, 49 Pac. 840. The court was, therefore, justified in considering that the marble steps by which the basement was to be reached was a substantial portion of the building rather than a trivial imperfection, even though its cost was small in comparison with the cost of the entire building.

2. After the plaintiff had furnished the materials to the furniture company, and before filing his notice of lien, he served upon the owner a notice in writing, under the provision of section 1194 of the Code of Civil Procedure stating in general terms that he had performed labor and furnished material in the construction of the building, and also the value thereof, and requesting the owner to withhold from the contractor sufficient money therefor. It is contended by the appellant that by virtue of this notice he is entitled to recover from the owner the amount claimed therein, irrespective of the notice of lien filed with the county recorder. The notice authorized by this section has the effect of a garnishment of the moneys coming to the contractor which are in the hands of the owner, and, in the absence of any claim upon such moneys in behalf of other lien claimants, the owner will be liable to the material man or subcontractor for the amount of the claim to the extent of his liability to the contractor. Bates v. Santa Barbara Co., 90 Cal. 543, 27 Pac. 438; First Nat. Bank of Bridgeport v. Perris Irr. Dist., 107 Cal. 55, 40 Pac. 45. This right to garnishee the moneys of the contractor in the hands of the owner is limited by the terms of the section to "the persons mentioned in section 1183," and is but a cumulative or additional remedy given for the purpose of enforcing in another mode the right for which, by section 1183, a lien is authorized upon the property upon which the labor has been performed or for which the materials were furnished. It does not confer upon them a right to collect from the owner any claim they may have against the contractor for labor and materials other than is conferred elsewhere in the chapter, but provides that, instead of filing with the county recorder a notice of their claim of lien, and enforcing the same against the property, they may intercept the moneys in the hands of the owner, to the extent of their claim, by giving him this notice. The remedy thus provided is limited to the cases in which, by section 1183, the property may be made subject to a lien, and the owner is not required upon receiving such notice to withhold from the contractor any moneys in his hands, except for materials furnished for, or labor performed upon, the property.

The controversy at the trial in the present case was chiefly upon the claim of the plaintiff that all the materials furnished by him were used in the construction of the building. A portion of these articles consisted of marble tops for counters, which were to be used by the tenant of the basement, and it was claimed by the plaintiff that these counters were so constructed as to become fixtures in the building and a part thereof; whereas, on the other hand, it was contended that they were in the nature of furniture for the use of the tenant, and were no part of the building. The court found that all of the base and "a portion of the other marble" furnished by the plaintiff was so affixed and adjusted to said building as to become a part thereof, and that the value of the part of said materials so affixed to the building was $634.53, and for this amount gave judgment in his favor against the owner. The court also found that there was due to the plaintiff, under the terms of his contracts with the furniture company, the sum of $966.78. The appellant claims that he was entitled to judgment against the owner for this larger amount,

Whether the materials furnished by the appellant were so affixed to the building as to become a part thereof was a question of fact, to be determined by the court upon the evidence before it. It was shown that the floor of the basement was of cement, and that the counters were built upon platforms which were made by laying down strips of wood and nailing the floor to them; that the platforms rested by gravity on the cement floor, and could be taken up and carried away, and that the counters stood upon these platforms; that the floor or platforms to which the counters were nailed was loose, and was not in any way attached to the cement floor of the building. The architect testified that he had examined the work of the plaintiff, and that less than one-half was attached to the building. Other testimony was given upon the subject, the effect of which was to create a decided conflict of evidence upon the question before the court, and we cannot hold that the court erred in its conclusion. The judgment is affirmed.

BUCK v. CITY OF EUREKA. (S. F. 764.) <sup>1</sup>

APPEAL—LAW OF THE CASE—JUDGMENT—CITIES—LIMITATION OF INDEBTEDNESS—IMPLIED CONTRACTS—ATTORNEY'S SERVICES—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

1. Where, on appeal in an action by a city attorney for compensation for services rendered under an express contract, the court declares the contract void, but states that the attorney, if the facts would warrant, should recover on an implied contract for services rendered after his term expired, and directs the lower court to permit the attorney to amend his complaint, the court's statement becomes the law of the case.

2. Where a city council is authorized to employ an attorney to perform special services, the city may be bound under an implied contract therefor.

3. Where a city attorney, after his term expired, continued to perform special services with the knowledge of the council, the members of which at various times expressed satisfaction therewith, and, when the attorney presented his bill, made no objection thereto, there was raised an implied promise to pay for the services.

4. Where, in an action by an attorney for services rendered in a suit, it appeared that a payment therefor had been made, but the attorney testified that the client understood that the case was not concluded, and that the former agreed to continue it without further fee if a bill for other services was paid, and, if not, that he would expect further compensation, and the other bill was not paid, the case was for the jury.

5. In an action against a city for services rendered during a period of several years, the judgment should be in form a general one, and not make the services rendered each year payable out of the funds in the treasury for that year, though the constitution limits the liability for one year to the revenue provided for such year.

6. Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibiting a city from incurring any liability exceeding in any one year the revenue provided for it for such year, includes an implied liability

7. Where an attorney rendered services for a city under an implied contract, the liability was incurred when, from time to time, the services were fully rendered and accepted, so that, in an action therefor, evidence as to whether there were sufficient unappropriated revenues at such times to meet the liability was admissible, the constitution limiting the city's liability for one year to the revenue provided for that year.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Action by S. M. Buck against the city of Eureka. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. J. Monroe, for appellant. F. A. Cutler and F. M. Buck, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action on an implied contract for the value of services as attorney at law. The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict and judgment thereon for $4,700, from which, and from an order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Plaintiff sues on quantum meruit, setting forth in his complaint a claim for services rendered defendant between July 12, 1886, and March 30, 1889, of the alleged value of $10,000, in defending a suit which was then pending against defendant in the circuit court of the United States, at San Francisco, where in one Wing Hing was plaintiff. In a second count plaintiff claims for services rendered on and after August 5, 1889, of the value of $500, in prosecuting an appeal in this court, in a cause entitled "The People vs. Barney Croghan." Plaintiff's prayer is for $7,000, with interest from December 13, 1889. Defendant made a general denial by answer, and to the first cause of action further answered that, if defendant incurred any liability, it was in excess of the income and revenue provided for defendant for any of the years during which the alleged services were performed, and was, therefore, invalid. The same answer is made as to plaintiff's second cause of action. A further defense is made to the first cause of action that on February 8, 1886, plaintiff was the duly appointed and authorized attorney of defendant; that on said day defendant entered into a contract with plaintiff, by an ordinance that day passed, whereby plaintiff was employed to act for defendant in said case of Wing Hing against the city of Eureka; that said contract was illegal and void; and that plaintiff's said services were rendered under said contract, and not otherwise, and said contract has not been rescinded, but is still subsisting.

1. The case, so far as it involves the first cause of action, was here once before. In the complaint at that time plaintiff claimed under an express contract embodied in the ordinance now pleaded by defendant, and which will be found set out in the former opinion. Plaintiff was the city attorney when that ordinance was passed and went out of office July 13, 1886, but continued to manage the Wing Hing case to its conclusion. He sued, however, for services during the entire period of his employment, under this contract. It was held, on the first appeal, that he could not recover, because the contract was void. But the court said "that, if the facts would warrant it, plaintiff should recover, not upon the original or void contract, but upon an implied one, for services rendered after the expiration of his term of office"; and the judgment was reversed, with directions to the trial court to permit plaintiff to amend his complaint. 109 Cal. 504, 42 Pac. 243. The law of the case is thus settled to be that plaintiff may recover upon an implied contract for services rendered after the expiration of his term of office; i. e. after July 12, 1886. The Wing Hing suit was for $132,000 damages alleged to have accrued to 50 or 60 different Chinamen who had been driven out of the city of Eureka by a mob. Plaintiff testified that he continued to manage the defense after July 12, 1886, and to the close of the litigation, March 2, 1889, in which the city prevailed. No notice was given to him by the council, or by his successor in office, that his services were dispensed with. It was known to the members of the council that he was performing the services. The labor performed was in the examination of the facts applicable to each of the 56 counts in the Wing Hing suit, preparation of a brief of the law governing the case, and in making many trips to San Francisco in connection with the suit at his own expense. Three-fourths of the actual labor was performed after July 12th, and was of the value of $7,500. Plaintiff further testified that after he ceased to be the city attorney he had conversations with different members of the council relating to the Wing Hing case, two of whom he named. They desired to know how he was getting along with the case, and, when told, seemed pleased with the progress made. He had conversations with other members of the council, but could not name particularly any but Councilmen Mercer and Monroe. He also explained the situation of the case to his successor in office. He testified, as to one of the councilmen: "He came to know how the matter was getting along, and the council would like to know,—gave me to understand that the council had discussed the matter, and expressed a desire to know something about it, and he wanted to interrogate me for that purpose, and I told him how the matter was getting along." Again, he testified: "I was always given to understand by members of the council that my services were satisfactory. They never made any objection." He further testified: "I never made any report to the council in regard to this suit, and was never asked to, until I finally reported that I had recovered judgment in favor of the city. * * * That was the first written report." He was asked by counsel for defendant if he had any official communication with the council about the matter during the period from July 12, 1886, to March, 1889, and answered: "Only in the way I have mentioned, by speaking to the different councilmen, and giving them information in regard to it." Plaintiff's deposition was taken before the trial commenced. In it defendant's counsel asked the witness to state how the council expressed its satisfaction with his services. He replied: "Members of the council at different times expressed themselves satisfied, and, finally, when the case was terminated, and I presented my bill, there was no expression of dissatisfaction in regard to my services; on the contrary, the services were considered by all the councilmen with whom I conversed at that time very satisfactorily [sic] indeed, and they all expressed themselves willing to pay me; but they never did." Upon cross-examination defendant showed the original employment of plaintiff by the ordinance. A portion of the unverified complaint of plaintiff was introduced, claiming on contract under that ordinance. Some of the testimony of plaintiff at the first trial was also introduced, tending to show that he claimed under contract, and he was searchingly cross-examined as to whether he was not still claiming under that contract, or was ever employed otherwise than through this ordinance—contract—which was held to be void. Witness could not and did not deny that the first trial was based upon his employment by that ordinance. He replied: "I wish simply to add to that, as I said then, that I didn't know whether it was a contract or not, but I considered it an employment under that ordinance; that I was to have full charge of the case * * * until judgment was finally obtained in favor of the city. Of course, after the 13th of July I was discharged as city attorney, and continued in the case with the knowledge and consent of my successor and the city council." There was evidence adduced by defendant tending to contradict plaintiff's testimony, creating a clear conflict upon some points. Indeed, upon some facts the preponderance seems to be with defendant; but we are not at liberty to attempt a reconciliation of this conflict. Plaintiff is not claiming under the original contract at this time, nor does he seek to make it the basis of his implied contract. He now claims under a contract which the law has made for him, and which this court in the former appeal said he may do, although he first claimed under a void contract. The cases cited by appellant arose either where no authority existed to enter into an express contract, or do any acts from which a contract might be implied, or they were cases where the mode was the measure of the power. But where, as here, the authority existed in the council to employ plaintiff after he ceased to be city attorney, he may recover upon an implied contract for the value of his services. Nor is it necessary, as is contended by appellant, that the knowledge or assent of the council be evidenced by some formal corporate act,—as by ordinance. Implied contracts, within the scope of the powers of the council, may be deduced by inference from authorized corporate acts, without either a vote, or deed, or writing. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 463, and cases cited in note 1; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1102. It was recently held by this court in a case where the facts as to the knowledge of the board and its assent to the employment of the attorney were not unlike the facts here, that no resolution of the board authorizing the services was necessary. Power v. May (opinion filed Dec. 23, 1898) 55 Pac. 796. It is not disputed that plaintiff performed services of much value, in good faith believing he was under legal employment. The evidence tends to show that these services were performed with full knowledge of the council, and with their assent as given when plaintiff presented his bill. "Where work done for a corporation purpose without complete legal authorization is for a corporate purpose, and is beneficial to it, and the price reasonable, strong evidence of the assent of the corporation is not required." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 464. We think the evidence is sufficient to raise an implied promise to pay the reasonable value of the services.

2. It is claimed that the motion for nonsuit as to plaintiff's second cause of action should have been granted because of insufficiency of evidence to make a prima facie case for recovery. It appears from the evidence that plaintiff was paid $500 for services in People against Croghan, but he testified that, when this payment was made, it was understood by the council that the case was not concluded, and plaintiff agreed to continue his services to the end in that case without further fee if his bill for other services, rendered at the same time, was paid; but, if not paid (as it appears it was not), he would expect further compensation in the Croghan case. We think there was sufficient evidence for the jury as against a motion for nonsuit.

3. Defendant assumes that plaintiff's services extended over a period of three years from July 12, 1886, and upon that assumption makes an arbitrary division of the judgment into three parts, and asks that it be modified so as to make each of these several parts payable out of the funds in the city treasury for the three years severally. Error is also claimed because the court excluded defendant's evidence that the liability incurred was in excess of the revenues for these years. At the trial an effort was made to agree upon the amount of funds in the treasury from time to time during these years, but it failed, and finally the court refused all testimony on the question, holding that the term "liability," used in section 18 of article 11 of the constitution, does not refer to an implied liability, such as is the basis of this action. When this case was here on the second appeal (see 119 Cal. 44, 50 Pac. 1065), the question related to the form of the judgment, and upon the authority of Higgins v. Water Co., 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, and 50 Pac. 670, it was held that it should be in form a general judgment. This disposes of a part of defendant's objection above stated. In speaking of the question as to whether the liability is within the inhibition of the constitution, Mr. Justice Temple, for the court, said: "If the constitutional restriction is plain, it is not for the court to refuse to obey it because it is unwise or impolitic. If the liability was contracted by the city, it is within the inhibition." It was suggested, however, that the point might not necessarily arise in that appeal, as it was from the form of the judgment only. The question is clearly presented in this appeal. Without entering upon the argument, we think that the term "liability" includes implied contracts, such as the one here involved. The learned trial judge was, therefore, in error in the reason he gave for excluding the evidence.

It remains to consider the materiality of the evidence. In Higgins v. Water Co., supra, the court said: "Our former opinion is also modified as follows: We cannot direct the superior court to enter a judgment upon the findings for the reasonable value to the city of the water company's plant and of water supplied, because it does not appear that the claims of the water company all accrued at a time when there were unappropriated revenues to meet them; and it will be necessary for the court to ascertain, as the basis of its judgment against the city, just when the claims of the water company for reasonable value of use, etc., equaled the amount of unappropriated revenues for the respective fiscal years during which the city had the use of the water company's plant. Claims for use of plant and value of water supplied after such time are like other claims upon exhausted revenues,—they are void, and will not warrant a judgment of any character." In a concurring opinion Mr. Chief Justice Beatty said: "In determining the validity of the obligation it will, of course, always be necessary to inquire whether, at the date of its assumption, there were appropriated revenues to meet it, because, if there were not, there will be no liability resting upon the city, and the claimant will have no right to a judgment in any form." It would thus appear that the validity of the liability depends upon the fact as to whether there were unappropriated revenues when the liability was incurred, and no judgment should be entered until that fact is established. The liability was incurred when, from time to time, the services were fully rendered, and the city, with knowledge, accepted the benefit of them (State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429; McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358); and evidence should be received as to the condition of the revenues at that time. The defendant offered such evidence. We think it was material, and that it was error to exclude it.

To hold otherwise would be inconsistent with holding, as we do, that the liability is within the constitutional inhibition.

Appellant assigns certain errors in the admission or exclusion of testimony, but they do not seem to call for special notice.

It is also claimed that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, and in refusing certain instructions asked by defendant, and in striking out portions of others. We have carefully examined these assignments. They are numerous, and would occupy much space in any intelligent statement of them. Some of the objections arise out of questions already disposed of in this opinion; others upon points as to which the court had in other parts of its instructions fully advised the jury; others where slight, but immaterial, modifications of defendant's instructions were made. Taken as a whole, we think the instructions fairly gave the law of the case to the jury without prejudicial error. For the error above stated, we think the judgment and order should be reversed, and so advise.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed.

OWENS v. McNALLY et al. (S. F. 1,416.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1899.)

RES JUDICATA — IDENTITY OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

A judgment for defendant, in an action to enforce an executory agreement of a decedent to will all his property to plaintiff, based on a certain consideration, is not a bar to an action to establish an executed gift of particular property to plaintiff by decedent, founded on the same consideration.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Action by Maria B. Owens against Alice McNally and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Chamberlain & Wheeler, for appellants. Buck & Cutler, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to have it declared that plaintiff is the owner of a certain lot of land, with a dwelling house thereon, situated in the city of Eureka, county of Humboldt, state of California, and known as lot 13 in block 8. The defendants are the widow, Alice McNally (who is also sued as administratrix), and the other heirs at law of Lawrence McNally, deceased. Judgment in the court below went for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from the judgment.

Some of the facts in the case are stated in the opinion of this court in Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, although there are other facts in the case at bar which do not appear in the former case. In the case at bar, we are concerned only with the first count of the complaint, which states, in substance, the following facts: In the year 1881, plaintiff, who was then 18 years of age, lived with her parents in the state of Michigan. The said Lawrence McNally, deceased, was the brother of plaintiff's mother, and lived at that time in the city of Eureka, in Humboldt county, Cal., where he continued to reside until his death, in 1893. In 1881 the deceased was a bachelor, about 54 years old, and was the owner of considerable property in said Humboldt county; and in that year he visited his sister, Catherine Owens, the mother of plaintiff, and sought to have plaintiff come to California, and live with him and take care of him. In order to accomplish this purpose, he executed and gave to the mother, for the benefit of the daughter, the following written instrument: "I, Lawrence McNally, promise my sister, Catherine Owens, in case of her consenting to allow her daughter, Maria Owens, to return with me to my home in Eureka, California, to remain with me during my life, I promise to provide for her as my own child; and, in case of her remaining single, at my death I promise to bequeath her ($20,000) twenty thousand dollars, and real estate the value of which I am unable to state at present. Lawrence McNally. Detroit, August 25, 1881. Signed witness: Mrs. Henry Owens." Thereupon, in said year 1881, the plaintiff came with the deceased to Eureka, Cal., and lived with and cared for him as a daughter until January, 1893, when he married the defendant Alice McNally. In the same year, on September 16, 1893, he died. He did not devise or bequeath to the plaintiff any property whatever, but died intestate. However, in part performance of his promise "to provide for her as my own child," in 1887 he purchased the lot and house involved in this action, and gave them to plaintiff, although the legal title stood in his own name. The court found the facts to be as averred in the complaint. It found: That in 1887, "in partial performance of the terms" of the written promise, "he purchased the lot in controversy, and gave the same to plaintiff; and during the following year he furnished the dwelling house thereon, and gave the furniture therein to plaintiff, and placed her in actual possession of said premises; and from thence to the present time plaintiff has been, and still is, in the actual possession thereof, claiming the same as her own, under and in pursuance of said gift. That from 1888 until the marriage of said Lawrence McNally, in 1893, he lived with the said plaintiff upon the lot in controversy, and during said time the said plaintiff, in reliance solely upon the said gift as aforesaid, cared for him as a daughter, and attended to his daily wants, cared for him in times of sickness, prepared extra meals for him, was in all things kind, considerate, and affectionate, and generally devoted her time, labor, and energy in caring for his health and comfort. * * * That by reason thereof plaintiff was induced to, and did, so change her situation in life that it would be a fraud upon her if the gift so as aforesaid made by said Lawrence McNally to plaintiff herein should not be enforced." There was sufficient evidence to support these findings.

Appellants contend that respondent is estopped from maintaining this action by the judgment in the former case of Owens v. McNally, which was affirmed by this court, as reported in 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, hereinbefore referred to; but we do not think that this contention can be maintained. The court below, having set forth the complaint in the former case, found correctly as follows: "That the cause of action set forth in the complaint therein was not, nor is not, the same cause, nor the identical cause, of action set forth in the complaint herein, and is not a bar to the maintenance of the cause of action herein." In the former case the plaintiff sought to enforce an executory agreement of the decedent, Lawrence McNally, to will to her all his property; and, for various reasons stated in the opinion of this court in that case, it was held that that executory agreement could not be enforced. In the former case the written agreement set forth in the case at bar had been lost, and averments were made as to the contents of the written agreement therein referred to, and there was a failure to prove any written agreement. But the present action is founded upon an executed gift of the house and lot involved in the case. The two cases therefore present different causes of action.

There are no other points calling for special notice. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

OSBORNE v. HOME LIFE INS. CO. (S. F. 811.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 3, 1899.)

INSURANCE—FORFEITURE—NOTICE—FOREIGN STATUTES.

1. Under Laws N. Y. 1877, c. 321, providing that, before forfeiture of a life policy, notice shall be addressed to the person whose life "is insured," the notice must be given, not to the beneficiary, but to the person whose life is insured.

2. In construing the statute of another state, the decisions of the highest courts will be followed, and not dissenting opinions of the lower courts.

3. As, under the nonforfeiture law of New York, a failure to tender a premium, without the notice specified in the state law to be given by the company, did not work a forfeiture, it is not necessary, in an action on the policy, to allege a tender.

4. Under the nonforfeiture law of New York, as a forfeiture could only occur after notice by the company, and nonpayment within the time specified, a waiver of such notice cannot be shown in order to sustain a forfeiture.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Annie R. Osborne against the Home Life Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Elliott McAllister, for appellant. Van Ness & Redman, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is upon a life insurance policy for $5,000, issued by the defendant, a New York company, in New York, October 4, 1888, insuring the life of the husband of the plaintiff, Elihu C. Osborne, for $5,000, made payable to the plaintiff. The policy called for the payment of an annual premium of $174.70. On issuing the policy, this sum was paid, and the first and second annual payments of the same amount were made. The complaint sets out the policy, and also incorporates the nonforfeiture law of the state of New York, and alleges that the defendant never served upon the said Elihu C. Osborne, the insured, the notice required by said law, and also alleges the death of the insured on January 21, 1895, and that subsequent thereto the defendant company expressly disclaimed and denied any and all liability, under and by virtue of said policy, arising from the death of said Elihu C. Osborne, on the ground that the third annual premium called for by said policy had not been paid. The answer does not deny that notice was not given, in pursuance of said law, to the insured; nor does it allege that notice was given to the plaintiff, the beneficiary, or at all. Findings and judgment went for the plaintiff in the court below for the sum specified in the policy, less the unpaid premiums and interest thereon.

It is contended on the part of the appellant that the plaintiff, and not the deceased, was the person whose life was assured, and that the notice required by the New York law should have been served upon her; she being the party for whose benefit the insurance was made. The language of the law in reference to the notice is "shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is assured, or the assignee of the policy, if notice of the assignment has been given to the company." The language of the policy in this case is, "does assure the life of Elihu C. Osborne"; and therefore he was the "person whose life is assured." The law might have been enacted, as claimed by the appellant, so as to require notice to the beneficiary; but it clearly does not, but to the person whose life is assured. The law in question has been construed and applied repeatedly by the highest court in the state of New York adversely to the contention of the appellant. Appellant, however, is not satisfied with these decisions, but seems to rely upon the dissenting opinions of the supreme court in an earlier case than those hereafter referred to, claiming that such dissenting opinions are based on better reasons and sounder law. This court, however, will prefer to follow the decisions of the highest court, particularly in the construction of the statutes of its own state, and not the dissenting opinions of the lower court. In Baxter v. Insurance Co., 119 N. Y. 450, 23 N. E. 1048, the court, in construing the statute in question (Laws 1876, as amended in 1877), say: "The statute above referred to (Laws 1877, c. 321) declares that no life insurance company doing business in this state shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy thereafter issued, by reason of nonpayment of premium, unless, after it becomes due, a notice, stating the amount of such premium, the place where it should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is assured at his last known post-office address, postage paid, by the company, and further stating that, unless the premium then due shall be paid to the company or its agent within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited, and void. It is also provided by the same section that, in case such payment is made within the thirty days limited therefor, it shall be deemed a full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the payment of premium; and it declares that no such policy shall in any case be forfeited until the expiration of thirty days after the mailing of such notice. These provisions are to have full effect, any condition to the contrary notwithstanding. There was no proof given at the trial by either party to show whether this notice was served or not. It is obvious that this statute, when imported into the contract, modified its conditions in very material respects. The duration and validity of the policy is not, then, dependent upon payment of the premium on the day named therein, but upon payment within thirty days after the notice had been given."

It is objected, also, on the part of the appellant, that the complaint does not contain any allegation of a tender of the premium. Under the nonforfeiture law of New York, a failure to tender the premium, without the notice specified in said law to be given by the company, did not work a forfeiture. It not being necessary on the part of the plaintiff to prove a tender, it was not necessary that it should be alleged in the complaint. In De Frece v. Insurance Co., 136 N. Y. 144, 32 N. E. 556, the court say: "The plaintiff was not bound to allege or prove the payment of the annual premiums when due. The contract is to be read as if the act of 1876 had been literally incorporated into it. There could be no forfeiture for this cause, unless the defendant alleged and proved nonpayment, after the due service of the notice required by law."

It is also claimed, on the part of appellant, that there was a waiver of the notice by the plaintiff. There is nothing in the case to show a waiver. Besides, it has been held by the court in the case of Griffith v. Insurance Co., 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113, that under the law in question in the state of New York a forfeiture could only occur in the mode pointed out by such law, to wit, after notice by the company as therein provided, and nonpayment within the time specified after such notice given. In this last case a policy of insurance for $10,000 was issued upon the life of E. J. Griffith; loss, if any, payable to his wife, Mary E. Griffith. The action was brought by his widow, Mary E. Griffith, and an attempt was made in that case to show a waiver on her part of the notice of nonpayment of the premium; and in the opinion it is said: "The statute in question is regarded as indicative of the legislative will that, as a matter of public policy, life insurance companies should be deprived of the power to declare policies forfeited for nonpayment of premiums, except in the prescribed mode, and that, being deprived of the power so to do, a waiver on the part of the insured cannot be construed to confer such power, in the face of the law which has taken it away. The reasons for such a policy are so numerous and obvious that it is not deemed necessary to occupy time and space in specifying them. The conclusion is reached that, as no notice was given by defendant, the policy was not forfeited by failure to pay the annual premium which fell due June 1, 1890."

We see no error in the case. The judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—POWERS OF ADMINISTRATRIX.

1. In an action to restrain defendant administratrix from selling certain land, on the ground that the title belonged to plaintiff, plaintiff offered a judgment roll, in an action against defendant and the heirs of the intestate, quieting title against defendants in favor of plaintiff; the judgment showing entry under a stipulation in open court. Held, that whether the stipulation was sufficient to authorize judgment, or not, was within the jurisdiction of the court to determine, and the judgment thereunder, though erroneous, was not void.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1588, authorizing a compromise when for the best interests of an estate, it will be assumed, when judgment is entered against an administratrix by stipulation, that it was shown to the court that the administratrix had been authorized to consent to the entry of the judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Action by one Merrill against Mrs. Bachelder, administratrix of Joseph E. Bachelder, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. J. Batchelder, for appellant. T. J. Butts and J. M. Thompson, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The defendant is the administratrix of the estate of Joseph E. Bachelder, deceased, and, as such administratrix, advertised for sale certain parcels of real estate, as a portion of the estate of her intestate. The plaintiff alleges in her complaint herein that she is the owner in fee of the said real estate, and seeks to restrain the defendant from selling, or from offering the same for sale, upon the ground that her title thereto will be clouded. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial. The allegations of the complaint are sufficient to support the judgment; and, as findings of fact were waived by the parties, only the order denying a new trial can be considered.

For the purpose of establishing her claim of ownership, the plaintiff offered in evidence a judgment roll in an action brought by her grantor against the defendant herein and the heirs of her intestate, in which the superior court had adjudged that her grantor was the owner in fee of said parcels of land, and quieting her title as against the defendants therein, and declaring that they be debarred from asserting any title thereto. The defendant objected to the introduction of this evidence, on the ground of incompetency, and urges upon this appeal that, by reason of its recitals, the judgment itself cannot be made the foundation of any rights in the plaintiff. The judgment is in the following form: "This cause coming on regularly for trial on the 22d day of September, A. D. 1896, a trial of said cause was had before the court without a jury; whereupon witnesses on the part of the plaintiff and the defendants were sworn and examined, and documentary evidence introduced by respective parties; and, the evidence being closed, the said parties, in open court, stipulated and agreed that the plaintiff should have judgment as prayed for in her complaint; that a judgment and decree might be entered herein adjudging said plaintiff to be the owner of, and entitled to the possession of, the property described in the complaint; and findings were waived. Wherefore, by reason of the law and the facts herein, findings of which have been duly waived by the defendants, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the property described in the complaint [describing the same, and quieting her title thereto]."

It is contended by the appellant that the administratrix could not enter into a stipulation that a judgment be rendered against her for a portion of the estate of her intestate, without authority from the court in which the administration of said estate was pending, and that, until such authority was shown, the judgment was inadmissible as evidence; and that, as the judgment recites that it was rendered upon a stipulation by the administratrix, its invalidity appears upon its face, and may be availed of at any time. The stipulation was, however, only evidence before the court to be considered in rendering its judgment; and whether it was sufficient to authorize the judgment or not was within the jurisdiction of the court to determine. If it was insufficient therefor, the court committed an error, which might have been corrected upon an appeal, but its judgment was not thereby rendered void. All intendments are in favor of the correctness of the judgment; and, if the administratrix could, under any circumstances, have made the stipulation recited in the judgment, it will be assumed, for the purpose of sustaining the judgment, that these circumstances were shown to the satisfaction of the court. Section 1588, Code Civ. Proc., provides, "A compromise may also be authorized when it appears to be just, and for the best interest of the estate;" and, as against the objections of the appellant herein, it will be assumed that it was shown to the superior court that the administratrix had been authorized to consent to the entry of the judgment. It appears from the complaint in that action that the plaintiff therein claimed to be the equitable owner of the land, by reason of having furnished the consideration for its purchase, and that the conveyance was taken in the name of the deceased; and it may well be that, upon these facts having been presented, the court, sitting in probate, granted the administratrix authority to enter into the stipulation. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. LEE v. PREWETT et al.
(Sac. 371.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1899.)

ELECTIONS—SCHOOL TRUSTEES—VACANCIES—NOTICE
—DISFRANCHISEMENT—REGISTRATION—OFFICERS—FAILURE TO BE SWORN—PLEADING.

1. Where a notice of election stated that it was to elect school "trustees," failure to state that there were vacancies to be filled did not invalidate the election; no voters being misled.

2. Under a statute requiring polls to be open at an election not less than four hours, a notice is sufficient which states that they will be open "between" 1 and 5 p. m.

3. One not offering to vote cannot complain that he was deprived of the privilege of voting.

4. The great register remains for all purposes required by law until the new registration is completed.

5. Re-registration is not required for the annual school election.

6. Under Pol. Code, § 1597, permitting trustees in a school-election notice to designate any four consecutive hours for the polls to be kept open, a failure to open the polls for 30 minutes after the time set does not invalidate the election; no one being prevented by the delay from voting.

7. Failure of an election officer to be sworn, though a felony, does not invalidate the election.

8. The fact that a threat was made that no one would be allowed to vote, unless he was re-registered, does not invalidate the election; no one in fact being challenged for that reason.

9. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 808, providing that, when several persons claim the same office, one action may be brought against all to try their respective rights to the office, an action by three trustees, constituting a board charged with the same public duty, to try their right to the three offices, is not an improper uniting of three causes of action in one.

10. A complaint in quo warranto, to try the right to an office, which alleges a valid election, is sufficient on demurrer, as against the claim that vacancies should be filled by appointment; the demurrer admitting the validity of the election, and hence that there was no vacancy.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Madera county.

Quo warranto by the people, on the relation of Charles A. Lee, against S. M. Prewett and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Larew, for appellants. Francis A. Fee, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This proceeding, in the nature of quo warranto, is brought for the purpose of ousting the defendants as trustees of Green school district, in the county of Madera, and of admitting to said office Charles A. Lee, Nelson Luke, and George Hudson. The plaintiff had judgment of ouster against the defendants, and that Lee, Luke, and Hudson be admitted to said office; and from this judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the defendants appeal.

For more than three years prior to June 5, 1896, there had been no election of school trustees held in said district; and during all that time the county superintendent of schools had, from year to year, appointed trustees for said district. On the first Friday in June, 1896, an election was held in said district, at which said Lee, Luke, and Hudson were declared elected, and within 10 days thereafter they all qualified as trustees of said district. On July 9, 1896, the county superintendent, acting upon the supposition that said election was illegal and void, appointed the defendants trustees of said school district; and hence this proceeding. The merits of the case, therefore, turn upon the validity or invalidity of said election, though there are some minor questions requiring notice.

The alleged invalidity of said election is based upon several grounds; the first being that the notice of election was insufficient, in that it gave notice "that the annual school meeting for the election of school trustees will be held," etc., and did not state that vacancies in the office existed, which were to be filled. The law provides that, when a new district is organized, an election shall be held, at which three trustees shall be elected, one to serve one year, one for the term of two years, and the third for three years, and thereafter, on the first Friday in June of each year, that one trustee shall be elected, to serve three years.

Appellant contends that there were vacancies in the office of trustee to be filled, and that the notice of election should have specified that fact, and cites People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 27. In that case it was held that elections to fill vacancies occasioned by the death or resignation of an officer are special elections, and that the proclamation of the governor, required by statute, is necessary to the validity of a special election. In that case the county judge of Calaveras county tendered his resignation, to take effect September 1st, which resignation was received by the governor on August 24th, though dated August 13th. The board of supervisors, learning that the resignation had been made, gave 10 days' notice that a special election to fill the vacancy would be held on the day of the general election, which was held on September 5th; but this special election was not included in the governor's proclamation, because it was not known in time. Here the question is different. The notice of election was given by the proper authority, the trustees of the district, and for the proper time, and the notice specified that it was "for the purpose of electing trustees for said district," which implied that a full board was to be elected; and, if so, the statute determined the respective terms for which they should be elected. I think there was no such defect or uncertainty in the notice as would make the election void, unless it were also shown that the voters were in fact misled by the notice, and because thereof had failed to elect three trustees, one to serve one year, one to serve two years, and one to serve three years. The record, however, shows that in this respect the law was complied with. "Elections should never be held void, unless clearly illegal. It is the duty of the court to give effect to them, if possible." State v. Hudson Co. Freeholders, 35 N. J. Law, 277.

Appellants cite, and quote largely from, People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49. It will be noticed, however, that in that case, as in others, a distinction is taken between vacancies caused by death or resignation, and vacancies occasioned by operation of law, as by the expiration of the term, in which case the statute, it said, fixes the time when a successor shall be elected; and in such case it seems to have been held in People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. 491, that the requirement that proclamation shall be made is directory, not mandatory. This construction was put upon People v. Brenham in People v. Weller, supra, in which it was said, speaking of the former case: "The court properly held that the failure of the incumbent—the mayor—to give the required notice could not deprive the people of their right under the law to elect their officers. But it has nowhere been decided that such notice is not essential to the validity of all special elections. An election to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death or resignation of an officer is a special election, and the provision of our laws which requires such election to be held at the same time and place with general elections does not change their character." And, as to vacancies of the latter class, notice of the election was held to be mandatory, the reason being that it is essential in order to prevent frauds; that, if it were otherwise, an officer might resign on the eve of an election, and, concealing it from the public at large, advise a few friends of the fact, who might thus, with a few votes, elect a successor, while, as to vacancies by the expiration of the term of office, the people have knowledge of the fact long in advance, and can nominate their candidates, and have a fair expression of the people's choice. In the case at bar it may be conceded that the notice is defective, since ordinarily after the first election in a new district but one trustee is to be elected each year; but here the notice called for the election of "trustees," and, in so small an organized territory as a school district, we may reasonably suppose that, as there had been no election for three years, a full board was to be elected, and this was indicated by the notice. If it had been shown by the evidence that voters were misled by the defective notice, so that for that reason a fair election was not had, we should be inclined to reach a different conclusion; but the evidence does show that every vote cast specified the term for which each candidate should serve, if elected.

It is also contended that the notice does not state the time of opening and closing the polls. The notice stated, "The polls will be open between the hours of 1 p. m. and 5 p. m." This, I think, was sufficient. The law requires the polls to be kept open not less than four hours. The notice obviously meant that the polls would be open from 1 to 5 p. m. There is no claim that any one was prevented from voting, either because of the notice, or because the polls were kept open a little less than four hours. The record shows that but five votes were cast,—all for Lee, Luke, and Hudson. There were several persons present who did not vote, or offer to vote, though, before the polls were closed, it was asked if any one who had not voted desired to vote. Six of these persons were called by defendants, and all testified, in substance, that they went for the purpose of voting, but did not offer to vote, because they understood their votes would be challenged upon the ground that in March, preceding, the board of supervisors had canceled the old register of voters, and no one could vote unless he had been re-registered. This was talked around the polls, but it will hardly be contended that one who did not offer to vote can complain that he was deprived of his privilege of voting. That the great register remains, for all purposes required by law, until the new registration is completed, and that re-registration was not required for the annual school election, see Falltrick v. Sullivan, 119 Cal. 613, 51 Pac. 947.

The last clause of section 1597, Pol. Code, permits the trustees, in the notice of election in those districts in which the number of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years does not exceed 500, to designate any consecutive four hours after 9 o'clock a. m., and ending not later than sundown, as the time during which the polls are to be kept open. A substantial compliance with the notice as to the time of opening the polls, where no one was deprived of the privilege of voting thereby, does not affect the validity of the election. Appellants contend that the polls were not opened until half past 1 p. m., and that the finding that the polls were opened at 1 o'clock is not justified. But, if the finding had been as appellants contend it should be, it would not affect the judgment, as no one was prevented from voting by the delay, which seems to have been caused by the failure of the inspector and judges to attend, the selection of others, and procuring a box to serve as a ballot box.

The court found that the persons who served as officers of the election were not sworn as required by law, and appellants cite those provisions of the Political and Penal Codes making it a felony to act as an election officer without having been appointed and qualified as such. But these provisions, while imposing penalties upon the person who so acts, do not declare the election void for that cause. But the point has been directly decided in Whipley v. McKune, 12 Cal. 352. See, also, Rounds v. Smart, 71 Me. 380; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107 (Gil. 81); People v. Cook, 14 Barb. 259; Atkinson v. Lorbeer, 111 Cal. 419, 44 Pac. 162; Code Civ. Proc. § 1112. The principle underlying these decisions is that the rights of the voters should not be prejudiced by the errors or wrongful acts of the officers of the election, unless it shall appear that a fair election and an honest count were thereby prevented.

H. J. Prewett, a witness called by defendants, was asked: "Did you hear the plaintiff, Charles A. Lee, say, prior to the election in Green district, that he would not let a d—d man vote at that election, if he were not re-registered?" An objection to this question was rightly sustained. It does not appear that Mr. Lee did not believe that no one had a right to vote unless he had been re-registered, and, if so, it would be his duty to challenge voters upon that ground; but, however that may be, this was prior to the election, and no one was in fact challenged on that ground. That several, perhaps all, who did not vote, refrained from offering to vote because they believed they had no right to vote, cannot be a ground for setting aside the election. That the voters generally were mistaken upon a question of law relating to or affecting their right to vote is of itself no evidence of conspiracy or fraud.

Appellants' objection to the complaint on the ground that three causes of action are improperly united is not well taken. Section 808, Code Civ. Proc., provides, "When several persons claim to be entitled to the same office or franchise, one action may be brought against all such persons in order to try their respective rights to such office or franchise." The office or franchise here was the same. The three trustees constitute a board, or entity, charged with the performance of the same public duty; and where the right of each member of the board depends upon the same facts, as is the case here, the question is whether the board, composed of the three persons, has a legal existence, and the right to exercise the powers conferred upon it as such.

Nor was the general demurrer to the complaint well taken. It is true, the school superintendent has power to fill all vacancies on the board; but the complaint alleged an election on June 5th of an entire board, and hence there was no vacancy on July 9th, when the superintendent appointed the defendants. For the purposes of the demurrer, the defendants must have assumed, contrary to the allegations of the complaint, that the election was illegal and void. I find no error in the record, and advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

124 Cal. 1

LAHMAN et al. v. HATCH. (L. A. 556.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1899.)

TAXATION—ASSESSOR—BOARD OF EQUALIZATION—ASSESSMENT BOOK—CUSTODY—ALTERATION
—LEVY OF TAX—NOTICE.

1. That, while the assessment book was in the office of the secretary of the board of equalization, the assessor added descriptions of improvements in the columns provided therefor, does not invalidate the assessment, the columns theretofore having in them figures corresponding in quality and value to the figures in the columns headed "Value of the Improvements"; no description of the improvements being necessary, and the book being clear and intelligible without them.

2. The fact that the assessor removed the assessment book from the office of the secretary of the board of equalization, where it was lying open for public inspection, as required by law, from 5 p. m. Saturday until Monday morning, does not invalidate the assessment; the law not requiring the book to be open for inspection on Sunday, and Act March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 254) § 71, requiring irregularities not affecting substantial rights to be disregarded.

3. A complaint alleging that, after the board of equalization lost control of the assessment book, it made changes therein, without showing that complainant was injured, is bad on demurrer; since, whether such action was valid or invalid, the complaint does not show complainant entitled to any relief.

4. Where a taxpayer has notice of the meeting of the board of equalization, and all the steps preliminary to the levy of an assessment, he is not entitled to notice of the levy.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Suit by W. E. Lahman and others against Ed. J. Hatch, as collector of the Escondido irrigation district. There was a decree for defendant, and complainants appeal. Affirmed.

R. P. Willard, for appellants. Wadham & Stevens, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Appeal from judgment entered after demurrer to complaint sustained. Action brought to restrain the respondent, as tax collector of the Escondido irrigation district, from selling lands of the appellants for taxes imposed by the directors of the district under the act entitled "An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts and to provide for the acquisition or construction thereby of works for the irrigation of lands embraced within such districts, and also to provide for the distribution of water for irrigation purposes," approved March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 254).

The grounds of demurrer to the complaint are: First, that complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the action is barred by the limitation established by the act in question. In answer to the point that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the appellants claim that the taxes, the collection of which they seek to restrain, are illegal for two reasons,—for conduct of the assessor, and for conduct of the board of equalization.

For conduct of the assessor: Section 37 provides that, on or before the first Monday in August of each year, the assessor must complete his assessment book and deliver it to the secretary of the board, who must immediately give notice thereof, and of the time the board of directors, acting as a board of equalization, will meet to equalize assessments. The time fixed for the meeting shall not be less than 20 nor more than 30 days from the first publication of the notice, "and in the meantime the assessment book must remain in the office of the secretary for the inspection of all persons interested." The complaint charges that the assessor prepared his assessment book, and "on the 4th day of August, 1897, said assessor delivered said assessment book to the secretary of the said irrigation district; that said assessor did not, prior to said 4th day of August, 1897, list any improvements on said book, or in the columns of said book headed 'Improvements on land in the Rancho Rincon del Diablo' (that being the land in said district other than city or town lots), as being or situated on any of the land assessed; that there was at said time improvements on said lands in said district, and on the lands listed on said book, and on the lands of these plaintiffs; that the value of all of said improvements exceeded the sum of one hundred thousand dollars; that, on or about the 11th day of September, 1897, at about the hour of five o'clock p. m., said assessor, without having first been authorized so to do by any action of the board of directors of said district, sitting as a board of equalization, or as said board of directors, took and removed said assessment book from the custody of the secretary of said board and of said district, and retained the same until Monday morning of September 13, 1897, when said book was returned to the custody of said secretary; that said book, when so returned, had entered and listed thereon, and in the column headed 'Improvements on the Land in the Rancho Rincon del Diablo,' and in the column headed 'Improvements on City or Town Lots,' the improvements that were situated and located on said lands and on said city and town lots; that prior to said 11th day of September, and at the time said book was taken from the custody of said secretary, as aforesaid, there was nothing written on said assessment book or in said columns to represent improvements, except figures, which corresponded in quantity and number to the figures entered on said book in the column headed 'Value of Improvements on Lands in the Rancho del Diablo' (which column was properly marked '$' and 'c.'), and in the column headed 'Improvements on City or Town Lots,' said figures having nothing annexed to them for the purpose of explaining their meaning; * * * that said assessor did not * * * assess or list in an assessment book, or in any other manner, any of the improvements situated upon the lands in said irrigation district; that, at all of said times, there were a great many buildings, consisting of dwelling houses, barns, outbuildings, store and business houses, in said district and situated upon the lands of said district." As far as we can gather from this imperfect statement, it appears that, when the book was first delivered to the assessor, it contained columns "headed 'Improvements on Land,'" in which there were figures "which corresponded in quantity and value to the figures entered in said book in the columns headed 'Value of Improvements on Land.'" The vice charged is that "the figures had nothing annexed to them for the purpose of explaining their meaning." But these figures corresponded in quantity and number with the figures in the column headed "Value of Improvements"; and, as this latter column had proper dollar and cent marks, the book was made clear and intelligible. No description of the improvements is necessary in the assessment book. All that is necessary is a general designation of improvements, with the value at which they are assessed. People v. Rains, 23 Cal. 127. In the form prescribed for an assessment book by section 3651 of the Political Code, there is no description of improvements. It would be a highly inconvenient provision if the validity of an assessment of improvements were made to depend upon a correct description of every dwelling house, barn, or outhouse. The description of the real property sufficiently identifies the improvements. Thus, it appears in this book, with sufficient clearness, that the assessor has assessed the improvements. He had done his duty in that respect. That was the essential thing. The figures were correct. All that he is said to have done afterwards was to have "listed and entered in the columns headed 'Improvements on Land in the Rancho Rincon del Diablo,' and in the column headed 'Improvements on City and Town Lots,' the improvements that were situated and located on said lands, and on said city or town lots." If this means that he added descriptions of the improvements, that was unnecessary and immaterial. Certainly, nothing new that was material was added; for the correct valuations were there, and nothing was added to alter them. If this is a correct interpretation of the complaint, it does not show anything which injuriously affects the substantial rights of the appellants. The assessor made his corrections two days before the board of equalization lost control of the book, and the parties interested might have seen and examined it. Section 71 of the act provides: "The court hearing any of the contests herein provided for, in inquiring into the regularity, legality or correctness of such proceedings, must disregard any error, irregularity or omission which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties to said action or proceeding." If the above is not a correct interpretation of the complaint, it does not state with sufficient clearness any cause of action to entitle the appellants to relief. Of the same character is the irregularity in taking away and detaining the assessment book from 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon until Monday morning. Sunday is, by another provision of the act, recognized as a dies non in proceedings of the board of equalization. The book may be presumed to have been returned before office hours of Monday morning; or the undescribed fragment of Monday morning during which it was unreturned comes within the rule of de minimis, not substantially affecting the rights of the parties.

The conduct of the board of equalization: Section 37 of the act requires the assessor to deliver his assessment book to the secretary on or before the first Monday in August, and the secretary immediately to give notice thereof, and of the time the board will meet to equalize the assessments. The time fixed for the meeting shall not be less than 20 nor more than 30 days from the first publication of the notice. Section 38 provides that the board "shall meet and continue in session from time to time as long as may be necessary, not to exceed ten days, exclusive of Sundays, to hear and determine such objections," etc. The complaint shows that the meeting of the board was fixed for the 4th day of September, 1897; that the board met on the 4th of September, and continued in session from day to day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, up to and including the 16th day of September, and on the 16th day of September "altered and changed, by either raising or reducing the same, a great many of the assessments on assessment book." The respondent contends that the 9th of September, being a legal holiday, was, like the two Sundays, properly excluded from the counts. But, conceding to the appellants that the board lost jurisdiction after the 15th, and that its action on the 16th was void, there is a fatal objection to the complaint. It does not show how the appellants were injuriously affected by the action or by the omission of the board; for, whether the action of the board be valid or invalid, the result is the same with the averments of the complaint. Assuming that the action of the board was regular and valid, the complaint is defective. The averment is simply that the board "altered and changed, by either raising or reducing the same, a great many of the assessments." It does not appear that the assessments of appellants' lands were altered. Nor does not appear that, by the "raising or reducing," the general assessed value was lowered, thereby causing an increased tax levy to operate, to the injury of the appellants. If the valuation of the lands or improvements of appellants were not raised, but the total valuation raised,—which is quite consistent with the allegations of the complaint,—the result would be a lesser tax upon the appellants. If, on the other hand, the action of the board was void for want of jurisdiction, the original assessment remained; and there is no error shown in that assessment. The appellant cites the case of State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 21 Nev. 270, 30 Pac. 693, to the effect that the reduction of the assessment of the lands of the road from $14,000 per mile to $12,000 per mile was void, because made by the board of equalization after the expiration of the allotted time. The result was that the original assessment remained, and the state recovered the tax. The failure of the board to act did not defeat the assessment. Under this decision, the result to the appellants is that the assessment stands, and is unattacked. It does not appear that the appellants attempted to call into action the seasonable action of the board upon their assessments,—a proper course suggested by the Nevada court to the taxpayer before he complains of the board. In no aspect of the complaint does it state a cause of action. Another objection made by the appellants is that there is nothing in the act providing for notice to be given of the time when the assessment will be levied. But proper notice is given of the meeting of the board of equalization (section 37), and within 10 days after the close of the session, whose duration is fixed by the law, the secretary is required to have the whole work of the session extended into columns, and added (section 38). "The board of directors shall then levy an assessment," etc. (section 39). As the taxpayer has had notice of all the preliminary steps which he could examine and make objection to, there is no controlling reason why he should have notice of the levy, the final act which is the outcome of the rest, and in reference to which he can have nothing to say. He has, besides, complete notice of the time before which the levy cannot be made, and it would need but small diligence in him to know the rest. It becomes unnecessary to pass upon the defense of the limitation prescribed by section 72 of the act. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

ASHTON et al. v. HEYDENFELDT et al.
(S. F. 1,266.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1899.)

REPLEVIN—PROPERTY SUBJECT—SHARES OF STOCK —CONVERSION—REVERSAL ON APPEAL—RIGHT TO RESTITUTION—SUPREME COURT—JURISDICTION.

1. Replevin does not lie to recover shares in a corporation, as they are incorporeal and intangible property, incapable of seizure.

2. In an action for the recovery of property, an allegation of a demand therefor, and its refusal, does not show a conversion.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 957, requiring property and rights lost by a judgment which is thereafter reversed on appeal to be restored, and giving appellant a right of action therefor against the respondent, executors who, pursuant to a decree of distribution, delivered property to a distributee, may, on the reversal of such decree on appeal, and the remanding of the matter of distribution of the estate to the court below for further proceedings, recover the property from the distributee, or its value, if restitution cannot be had, since the delivery by them was not voluntary.

4. Code Civ. Proc. § 456, requiring a judgment or determination of a court to be pleaded by stating it to have been duly given, does not apply to a judgment of the supreme court, it being a court of superior jurisdiction, whose jurisdiction is presumed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles Ashton and another, as executors of the will of Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased, against Sunshine O. Heydenfeldt and another. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Craig & Meredith, J. H. Meredith, and L. H. Jacobs, for appellants. Knight & Heggerly and Geo. D. Collins, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Action to recover possession of "shares of stock." Defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiffs having declined to amend, judgment of dismissal was entered, and plaintiffs appeal.

The property sought to be recovered is described thus, "Four thousand six hundred and seventy-four shares of the capital stock of the Zeila Mining Company, a California corporation," which stock, it is alleged, was the property of said Solomon Heydenfeldt at the time of his death, and ever since has been the property of his estate; that on October 23, 1893, the superior court made a final decree of distribution of said estate; "that pursuant to said decree said stock was distributed to the defendant Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt, and was thereafter by her transferred, as plaintiffs are informed and believe, and therefore allege, without any valuable consideration, to the defendant Sunshine O. Heydenfeldt, and said stock has ever since been detained by them from the possession of plaintiffs." It is further alleged "that said decree of distribution was reversed by the supreme court of the state of California, and the matter of said distribution remanded to this honorable court for further hearing"; that no further hearing has taken place; that both the defendants were parties to the proceedings, and had notice thereof; that charges and expenses to a large amount have accrued against said estate, which are unpaid; "that since the reversal of said decree plaintiffs have demanded of defendants the return of said stock, but they did then refuse, and have ever since then refused, and do now refuse, to return said stock, or any part thereof." The value of the stock is alleged to be $30,000, and damages for its detention $4,000. The prayer is for judgment for the return of the stock, or, if that cannot be had, then for its value, and for damages.

If the complaint is to be regarded as though the action were in claim and delivery, it does not state a cause of action, inasmuch as "stock" in a corporation is an incorporeal, intangible thing, and therefore incapable of identification, or seizure under the writ. The proceeding is not aimed at the certificate representing these shares, nor is it mentioned or described. Nor is it sufficient as a complaint for the conversion of the stock, since a conversion is not alleged. The allegation of a demand and refusal is not sufficient as an allegation of conversion, since "the demand and refusal is only evidence of a prior conversion, not in itself conclusive, but liable to be explained and rebutted by evidence to the contrary." 2 Greenl. Ev. § 644. And in Mires v. Solebay, 2 Mod. 244, it was said: "It is not found that the servant did convert the sheep to his own use, for the special verdict only finds the demand and the refusal, which is no conversion; and, though it is evidence of it to the jury, yet it is not matter upon which the court can give judgment of conversion." But this point need not be further pursued, since I think the complaint sufficient to require the restitution of the stock distributed under the decree, or the payment of its value, of Supreme Court, see 56 Pac. 1031.

said decree having been afterwards reversed on appeal to this court. 39 Pac. 788. The defendants were parties to the settlement of the accounts of the plaintiffs as executors, and to the decree of distribution mentioned in the complaint; and the right of the plaintiffs, as such executors, to the possession of said stock as assets of said estate prior to the decree of distribution cannot be questioned. The decree operated as a judgment against the executors requiring them to deliver said stock to the defendant Elizabeth, and it was so delivered under and pursuant to said judgment, and not as the voluntary or gratuitous act of the plaintiffs, but in discharge of their liability to account for all the assets of the estate which came to their hands. But, that decree having been reversed (vacated) on appeal, the matter stood as though no decree had ever been made, and upon another hearing it might appear that the said stock was required for the payment of some debt or liability of the estate, or that some other distributee was entitled to it; and in such case, the liability of the plaintiffs remaining as though the erroneous decree had never been made, it is obvious that the stock was lost to them by reason of said erroneous decree, and that they are entitled to restitution; and in such case it is provided that relief may be had by action. Code Civ. Proc. § 957. The right to such relief, however, existed before the statute. In Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 17, it was said: "On the reversal of the judgment the law raises an obligation in the party to the record, who has received the benefit of the erroneous judgment, to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost. And the mode of proceeding to effect this object must be regulated according to circumstances. Sometimes it is done by a writ of restitution, without a scire facias, when the record shows the money has been paid, and there is a certainty as to what has been lost. In other cases a scire facias may be necessary to ascertain what is to be restored. 2 Salk. 587, 588; Tidd, Prac. 936, 1137, 1138. And, no doubt, circumstances may exist where an action may be sustained to recover back the money. Clark v. Pinney, 6 Cow. 297." In Raun v. Reynolds, 18 Cal. 276, 290, this court said: "It does not follow, because a party has a right, under a certain state of facts, to a judgment, and the fruits of it, that he must necessarily be entitled to those fruits forever afterwards. A judgment, so long as it continues unreversed and unsuspended, may be enforced; but when it is reversed it is as if never rendered, and money collected by authority of it may, as a general rule, be recovered back. * * * Here the equity of Reynolds arose after the reversal, to be restored to whatever he lost by the judgment." See, also, Applegarth v. Dean, 68 Cal. 491, 13 Pac. 587, and numerous other cases approving Raun v. Reynolds, cited in 2 Notes on California Reports, p. 64. In such cases the plaintiff is entitled to a restitution of everything still in the possession of the defendant in specie. Freem. Judgm. § 482. The suit being in equity, the court has power to compel the delivery of the property received by the defendant, even though it be of a character such as to make its seizure under a writ of replevin impossible; or, if it is no longer in the possession or control of the defendant, the court may compel compensation in money.

It is contended by respondents that there is nothing in the complaint to show that the supreme court had jurisdiction to reverse the decree of distribution; that, as no attempt was made to comply with section 456, Code Civ. Proc., it was necessary to show jurisdiction in the supreme court to reverse the decree; and that the supreme court, though a court of record, is not a court of general jurisdiction. The supreme court, however, is a court of superior jurisdiction, and is within the rule laid down in Weller v. Dickinson, 93 Cal. 108, 28 Pac. 854, where it is held that said section refers to that class of judgments which, prior to the enactment of the provision, were required to be pleaded by setting out the jurisdictional facts, and not to "courts of superior or general jurisdiction that are presumed to act by right and within the authority conferred upon them by law"; and Freeman, in his work on Judgments (section 452), after referring to certain cases, further says: "But, in so far as these cases indicate that it is essential to aver anything whatever to show the jurisdiction of courts of record, they are not sustained by the authorities." Weller v. Dickinson, supra, is cited and approved in Clark v. Nordholt, 121 Cal. 26, 53 Pac. 400. Viewed as an action to recover property, or its value, from a party who received it under a judgment afterwards reversed, the complaint is not obnoxious to either of the grounds of special demurrer interposed by respondents. I advise that the judgment appealed from be reversed, with directions that the demurrer to the complaint be overruled.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions that the demurrer to the complaint be overruled.

PEOPLE v. GRINER. (Cr. 513.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1899.)

HOMICIDE—INFORMATION—SIGNATURE—NEW TRIAL—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER OF DECEASED.

1. An information signed in the name of the district attorney, by an assistant district attorney, is valid.

2. The mere fact that the deceased had an ax in his hand, and shook it around, defendant being behind him, does not show an excuse for defendant's act in then shooting the deceased.

3. It is not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse a new trial, in a criminal case, on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, where the person who was to give such evidence was present as a witness at the first trial, under a subpoena from defendant.

4. Defendant cannot object to the court's refusal to permit evidence that the "character" of the deceased for peace and quietness was bad, where the court offered to allow evidence of his "general reputation" therefor.

5. In a prosecution for murder, the record evidence that the deceased had been previously convicted of an assault on a third person is inadmissible.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county.

Frederick Griner was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Campbell and R. M. Swain, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant has been convicted of murder of the second degree, and appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charging the commission of the crime is signed with the name of the district attorney of the county, "by T. J. Butts, Assistant District Attorney." It is now claimed that there is no authority in law for an assistant district attorney to sign an information in the name of his principal, and that, therefore, the motion to set aside the information should have been granted. The district attorney of Sonoma county is allowed an assistant district attorney by authority of the state legislature. It has been held that an information is properly signed when the district attorney's name is attached thereto by a deputy district attorney. People v. Darr, 61 Cal. 554; People v. Etting, 99 Cal. 577, 34 Pac. 237. Again, it is held that an information signed by an assistant district attorney is valid. People v. Turner, 85 Cal. 432, 24 Pac. 857. If an information signed by a deputy district attorney, in the name of his principal, satisfies the law, and if an information signed by an assistant district attorney also satisfies the law, then there can be no question but that an information signed in the name of the district attorney, by the assistant district attorney, is sufficient.

It is next insisted that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. To this point we quote the following excerpt from the testimony of the defendant himself: "I saw he won't go to bed, and so I got up and lit the lamp, and told him to go out to his room, and he would not do it; and I urged him along, and put the lamp on the table in the sitting room, and urged him along to his room; and he got out of the sitting room into the empty room, and there was an ax in the corner between the two doors, and I saw him raise that, and I went back to my bedroom; and under the pillow I had my pistol, and got it, and I walked out and urged him along to go to his bed, and he shook the ax around one way and the other way; and I fired three shots, the first one hitting the breast, and the others I don't know where they went. I went back to the sitting room. The room was full of smoke, and I heard the ax drop, and he walked out on the porch, and from there I don't know where he went; and I took the lamp, and went out, and found him dead on the ground." Upon this evidence, alone, the jury was authorized in law to find the verdict rendered.

It is claimed that a new trial should have been granted upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. In view of the fact that Brown, the party who was ready to give the newly-discovered evidence upon a second trial, was present as a witness at the first trial, subpoenaed by the defendant, we are not strongly impressed with the showing made. It can be only in an exceptional case that the character of showing here disclosed should be deemed sufficient to demand a new trial. Especially in a case like this, much should be left to the discretion of the trial court. New trials upon the ground now urged would be a most common occurrence, if the precedent here sought should be declared. Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 610, 34 Pac. 342, is a case in point. It was there held that a lack of diligence in securing the evidence was fatal to the application. In this case there was no abuse of discretion upon the part of the trial court in so holding.

Defendant claimed to have done the shooting in self-defense, and upon that theory offered to prove, by various witnesses, that the character of the deceased for peace and quietness was bad. It is only in certain peculiar cases that this kind of evidence is admissible at all; and, conceding, for present purposes, that such a case is disclosed by this record, still we find no error committed by the court in the action taken. Under objection, the evidence was not admitted, the judge stating at the time that he would allow evidence as to the "general reputation" of the deceased for peace and quietness. Counsel for defendant declined to accept the offer made, and now claim reversible error in the ruling of the court in the rejection of the evidence offered. We will enter into no discussion as to the existence of any substantial difference between evidence as to the "character" of the deceased for peace and quietness, and evidence as to his "general reputation" for peace and quietness. It is sufficient now to say that the judge offered to allow counsel for defendant to examine witnesses as to the general reputation of the deceased for peace and quietness, and counsel should have been satisfied with such offer.

It was next attempted to show, by the record of conviction, that deceased had been previously convicted of a misdemeanor, namely, an assault upon one Whallen. This evidence was erroneous from any standpoint. Neither do we find any well-founded objection to the remarks of the prosecuting attorney in his address to the jury.

The court has carefully examined the instructions asked by the defendant which were refused by the judge. There is no substantial error to be found in such refusal. The charge to the jury was full, explicit, and legally sound. It appears to have fully covered the entire law of the case. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

2. In the absence of evidence that defendant had made any collections on the accounts assigned to plaintiff after the assignment, no right to an accounting exists.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Graham Paper Company against S. J. Pembroke and others. From a judgment entered on sustaining a motion for a nonsuit, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gordon & Young, for appellant. J. H. Dickinson and H. E. Monroe, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The plaintiff and the defendant the Pacific Roll-Paper Company are corporations. On December 23, 1893, the Pacific Roll-Paper Company was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of about $15,000, due on merchandise accounts, and on that day T. J. Corwin, the president of said Pacific Roll-Paper Company, in the name of the corporation, by himself as president, executed to the plaintiff a written assignment of "all its book accounts and bills receivable, including all debts of every kind now due to said Pacific Roll-Paper Company from any person or persons, and the said Pacific Roll-Paper Company hereby agrees and covenants with the said Graham Paper Company to represent it as its agent henceforth in the collection of said bills and book accounts and debts, and reduce the same into cash as speedily as possible." This assignment was to be in satisfaction of the plaintiff's demand only to the extent that collections should be made. No statement of the accounts, bills receivable, or other debts embraced in said assignment accompanied it, nor was any statement thereof afterwards furnished the plaintiff, though demand was made for such statement about January 1, 1894, and afterwards a partial pencil memorandum was shown the plaintiff, but was retained by the assignor to be completed. On January 19, 1894, said Pacific Roll-Paper Company sold its property, assets, and good will, including the accounts and other demands so assigned to the plaintiff, to defendant S. J. Pembroke, for the sum of $23,500, part of which was paid in cash ($6,853), and the remainder in notes; and the answer alleged that no part of the purchase price consisted of debts due or owing from or by the vendor, that the purchaser immediately gave notice to all persons whose names appeared upon the books of the vendor as owing said Pacific Roll-Paper Company of the assignment and transfer of said accounts, and that said defendant had no knowledge or notice of said assignment to the plaintiff. The relief demanded by the plaintiff is, in substance, that it be adjudged to be the owner of said accounts and demands, that a receiver be appointed, for an accounting, that plaintiff have access to the books, and that defendants be enjoined from collecting any of the accounts that were in existence and unpaid on December 23, 1893, and for other relief. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence in chief the defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the grounds: (1) That it was not shown that the assignment to plaintiff was executed by the corporation, or that the directors ever authorized the president to make it; and (2) that no steps were taken by the plaintiff to perfect the assignment, or to act under it, and that no attempt was made to reduce the accounts to possession. Said motion was granted, and from the judgment entered thereon and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial this appeal is taken.

The only questions made or discussed by counsel in their briefs are: First, whether Mr. Corwin, the president of the Pacific Roll-Paper Company, had authority to execute the assignment to plaintiff; and, second, if its execution was authorized by the corporation, was it valid as against S. J. Pembroke, the subsequent assignee, who was a purchaser of the same accounts and demands without notice of the prior assignment, and who immediately gave notice to the debtors of the assignment to her, and obtained possession of the books and accounts? If the second of these questions should be resolved against appellant, the first need not be considered. To complete the assignment of an account as against the debtor, it is universally conceded that the debtor must have notice, as otherwise his debt will be discharged by payment to the assignor; but whether the prior assignee must give notice to the debtor in order to protect himself against a subsequent assignee is a question upon which there is a conflict in the authorities. "It is a well-established rule in England that, as between successive assignees of a chose in action, he will have the preference who first gives notice to the debtor, even if he be a subsequent assignee, provided at the time of taking it he had no notice of the prior assignment." 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) p. 1077. The reason of this rule is stated by Sir Thomas Plumer, M. R., in Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1, thus: "In Ryall v. Rolles, 1 Ves. Sr. 348, the judges held that in the case of a chose in action you must do everything towards having possession which the subject admits. You must do that which is tantamount to obtaining possession, by placing every person who has an equitable or legal interest in the matter under an obligation to treat it as your property. For this purpose you must give notice to the legal holder of the fund. In the case of a debt, for instance, notice to the debtor is, for many purposes, tantamount to possession. If you omit to give that notice, you are guilty of the same degree and species of neglect as he who leaves a personal chattel, to which he has acquired title, in the actual possession and under the absolute control of another person." The English rule has been followed by the federal courts in this country. See Judson v. Corcoran, 17 How. 612; Spain v. Hamilton's Adm'r, 1 Wall. 604, 624; Bank v. Schuler, 120 U. S. 511, 7 Sup. Ct. 644. In Methven v. Power Co., 13 C. C. A. 362, 66 Fed. 113, it was held that, where two assignments of a chose in action, for valuable consideration, are made to different persons, the assignee who first gives notice of his claim to the debtor has the prior right, though the assignment to him is later in date than that to the other assignee, if taken without notice. This proposition is also sustained in 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1035a; and in note 4, p. 339, Foster v. Cockerell, 9 Bligh, 332, 375, 376, is quoted at considerable length, stating what appears to us satisfactory reasons in its support. In 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 695, the same doctrine is stated, and at section 698 the learned author added: "Even where the rule concerning notice to the debtor or trustee has not been adopted, an assignee who had otherwise the priority may lose it through his laches, as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for value who has been injured by the negligence. * * * The questions as to priority of right may arise between the assignee and a judgment creditor of the assignor or a subsequent purchaser from the assignor. There is a clear distinction between these two claimants, since a judgment creditor only succeeds to the rights of his debtor, while a purchaser may acquire higher rights." See, also, Id. § 707. In 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1077, notes 3, 4, Iowa, Missouri, Vermont, and Virginia are mentioned as supporting the English rule, and New Jersey, New York, and Texas as rejecting it. To the former list may be added Connecticut. See Bishop v. Holcomb, 10 Conn. 444, and Foster v. Mix, 20 Conn. 395.

Appellant cites a large number of the New York cases in support of its contention, and it must be conceded that they sustain the general proposition that the prior assignee has the better right, though he has not notified the debtor. We think, however, that the doctrine announced by the English courts, and followed by our federal courts and the state courts above mentioned, is based upon the better reason, and sustained by the weight of authority. Notice to the debtor not only protects the assignee against payment to the assignor, but against payment to the subsequent assignee; since the debtor, with notice of the prior assignment, would be no more protected by a payment to a subsequent assignee than he would by payment to the assignor; and, besides, an intending purchaser of the accounts from the assignor would have it in his power to ascertain from the debtors, by inquiry, whether any prior assignment existed, and would thus be furnished with the only reasonable protection possible against fraud on the part of the assignor. There are, however, some special features which strengthen the case of defendant Pembroke, the second assignee. The plaintiff was a creditor of the assignor, endeavoring to obtain some security for its claim against the Pacific Roll-Paper Company. It left the accounts and choses in action in the hands and under the control of the assignor, as its agent, for collection. The defendant, Pembroke, is a purchaser, who not only took an assignment of the accounts and other choses in action, but obtained actual possession of them and immediately notified the debtors, and therefore obtained a perfect legal title, without notice of the prior assignment, and with no means of obtaining information of it otherwise than from the fraudulent assignor, who, by the sale and assignment, represented that it had good right to make the sale and assignment. The case of Kirk v. Roberts (Cal.) 31 Pac. 20, is not in point. There the defendant was the assignee in insolvency, and therefore stood in the shoes of the insolvent; while here the defendant is a purchaser in good faith and for value, without notice, and therefore stands in a better position than her assignor.

In the closing paragraph of appellant's brief it is said that plaintiff had a right of action for an accounting against the Pacific Roll-Paper Company as to what it had collected on the assigned accounts, and against defendant Pembroke for whatever she may have collected since the assignment to her, and that it was, therefore, error to grant the motion upon the grounds stated. As to defendant Pembroke there was, as we have seen, no right to an accounting; and as to the Pacific Roll-Paper Company there was no evidence that it had made any collections. The court would certainly not make an order requiring it to account in the absence of some evidence that it had made collections. Plaintiff called and examined Mr. Corwin as a witness, but did not ask for disclosures as to whether collections had been made; and, having rested its case, the court below could not assume that collections had been made, nor can we. Under these circumstances it does not appear that appellant has been prejudiced.

Numerous exceptions were taken to rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. None of them are discussed in the briefs. Most of them relate to the authority of the president of the defendant corporation to make the assignment to the plaintiff, which assignment, we have assumed for the purposes of the case, was the act of the corporation. None of the other rulings would have changed the result had they conformed to plaintiff's views. I advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

KUHLMAN v. KUHLMAN. (S. F. 1,075.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1899.)

DIVORCE—EVIDENCE—CRUELTY.

1. Where plaintiff alone testifies as to personal abuse by his wife, and she explicitly denies the language alleged to have been used, no divorce can be granted under Civ. Code, § 130, prohibiting the same on the uncorroborated statement of either party.

2. Evidence that after a husband, without cause, had deserted his wife, who was at the time sick, she missed her diamonds and her sealskin saccue, and reported to friends of his that she thought he had taken them, is insufficient to entitle him to divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Hans G. Kuhl against Helen Kuhl for a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. Judgment of dismissal was entered. From an order granting a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Naphtaly, Friedenrich, & Ackerman, for appellant. J. H. Henderson, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. The action was tried before Hon. D. J. Murphy, late judge of the superior court, who found from the evidence that the defendant was not guilty of extreme cruelty towards the plaintiff, and did not inflict upon him grievous mental suffering; and, as no affirmative relief was sought by defendant, judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff moved for a new trial upon the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the findings, and that the decision was against law. A bill of exceptions was settled by Judge Murphy, and the motion was afterwards heard before Judge Bahrs, who made an order granting a new trial, and from that order the defendant appeals.

The complaint alleged that the parties intermarried July 23, 1895; that on divers occasions the defendant was guilty of extreme cruelty towards the plaintiff, and particularly as follows: "In the month of April, 1896, she had angrily upbraided the plaintiff, and said to him, 'God curse your soul;' and on many occasions in or about said month of April, 1896, she called him a 'damned Dutchman' and a 'loafer.' In the month of May, 1896, the defendant falsely and maliciously accused plaintiff to sundry of his business acquaintances and friends of having stolen diamonds and a sealskin saccue." That said acts and conduct inflicted upon plaintiff grievous mental suffering. The answer put in issue all these allegations. The plaintiff testified that defendant used towards him the epithets alleged in the complaint, and the defendant testified as explicitly that she did not, and that she did not use towards the colored servant girl any such language as plaintiff testified to. As to these matters the plaintiff was not corroborated in the slightest degree, and hence, as to them, there was no evidence upon which the court could base a finding for the plaintiff. "No divorce can be granted upon the default of the defendant, or upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties. * * *" Civ. Code, § 130. As to the allegation in the complaint that "in the month of May, 1896, the defendant falsely and maliciously accused plaintiff to sundry of his business acquaintances and friends of having stolen diamonds and a sealskin saccue," a somewhat fuller statement is required. These parties were married in July, 1895. The epithets of which the plaintiff complained he testified were used in the following March, and on May 13, 1896, he left the defendant, and did not afterwards return, and informed two of defendant's friends, whom she had sent to ascertain the cause of his absence, that he would never return or live with her again. While living together, they occupied defendant's house. At the time plaintiff left her, defendant was sick in bed, and had been for about 10 days. She missed her diamonds and saccue soon after the plaintiff left, and about the last of May she called on Mr. Hadley, a personal and intimate friend of the plaintiff, and, in the language testified to by him, told him "that her husband had left the house where they were living, and had taken her diamonds, and also her sealskin saccue. She asked me if he had pledged them to me, or whether he had tried to get a loan upon them from me. I told her no; that I did not believe he had taken them; that I did not believe Kuhl capable of doing such a thing." Mr. McKenzie, the other friend of plaintiff, on whom defendant called, put the matter in a somewhat different light. He testified: "She told me that her husband had left her home, and had stolen her diamonds, and also her sealskin sacque." In relation to this matter the defendant testified that at the time plaintiff left her she was sick in bed, and had been for 10 days; that he did not tell her he was going to quit; that they had no quarrel; that she observed him going to a drawer, where she kept her diamonds, and that her diamonds and sacque disappeared when he left; that about the 5th of May he said there was a good market for stocks, and that "if he had some money he could make a barrel of money"; that he wanted her to mortgage the furniture to go into the speculation, but she declined to do so. Taking these facts, in connection with her inquiry addressed to the witness Hadley whether the plaintiff had pledged her property to secure a loan, or whether he had applied to him for a loan, they tend strongly to show that she believed he had taken them for the purpose of raising money with which to speculate in stocks, and that her statement and inquiry were not malicious, nor, from her standpoint, without excuse or palliation. It should be remembered that these statements to plaintiff's friends Hadley and McKenzie were made after plaintiff had deserted defendant, and therefore formed no justification or excuse for the desertion; nor did he give to either Mrs. Salmon or Mr. Ward, who were sent to him by the defendant to learn the cause of his absence, any hint that he left her because of any cruel treatment, but assigned as the reason for leaving her that he was disappointed in money matters; that he supposed she was wealthy, and would let him have money. The plaintiff was recalled in rebuttal, and testified that he did not ask the defendant for money to speculate in stocks, that he did not say that he had married her for her money, or that he would return upon payment of $10,000; but this was the full extent of his denial of the testimony of those witnesses.

The rule determining what conduct constitutes extreme cruelty as a cause of divorce is matter of law; but whether the evidence shows such conduct is a question of fact to be decided upon the trial. Janvrin v. Janvrin, 58 N. H. 144. Ordinarily, what constitutes extreme cruelty is a mixed question of law and fact, and where the evidence, assuming it to be true, is not legally sufficient, the court may so decide as a question of law. As to the language alleged to have been used by the defendant to the plaintiff prior to the separation, the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove it. He testified that it was used; she, that it was not. No corroboration was attempted by the plaintiff, while the testimony of Mr. Ward, a boarder in the house during all the time these parties lived together, tended strongly to corroborate the defendant. Those acts of alleged cruelty, and the other relating to the taking of the diamonds and sacque, were wholly distinct in character, and were separate in point of time by about two months. If, therefore, there was any extreme cruelty inflicted by the defendant upon the plaintiff, it must be predicated wholly upon the last of these alleged acts. Under the facts in this case, was that "extreme cruelty"? That it hurt the plaintiff's feelings may be conceded. That it inflicted upon the plaintiff "grievous mental suffering"—that which the statute makes a ground of divorce—is a conclusion the law will not draw from the evidence. The marital relation is one of great public concern. The law does not tolerate contracts in restraint of marriage, nor permit the marriage relation to be dissolved at the whim or caprice of the parties, or for causes which, in view of public policy, it is better the parties should bear, even though it be with discomfort. Whether the plaintiff, who had deserted defendant, and not only announced his determination never to return, but affirmed that determination by bringing an action for divorce, could maintain it for an act of extreme cruelty occurring after the desertion, which was less than a year before suit was brought, need not be decided. Certainly it was a material fact in the case, to be considered by the court in determining whether the words spoken would not have been more likely to cause anger than mental anguish.

Appellant also contends that the court erred in not entering a final judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, instead of a simple judgment of dismissal, which he seems to think is not a bar to a relitigation of the issues. If that be true, the judgment is more favorable to the plaintiff than it should have been, and he is not injured. But the judgment is upon the merits, and in the usual form in equitable actions, in which, if it is intended to permit the plaintiff to relitigate the issues, or any of them, the right is preserved by adding, "without prejudice to a new action." I advise that the order appealed from be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed.

ANDERSON v. ANDERSON. (L. A. 583.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1899.)

DIVORCE—DECREE FOR MAINTENANCE.

1. In an action for divorce, where the wife charges that the husband has left her without cause, and charges conduct which the court finds renders it impossible for her to live with him, and alleges want of means, and prays that a portion of the common property be awarded to her, on proper showing she is entitled to a decree for maintenance, under Civ. Code, § 136.
2. In an action for divorce, where decree is rendered for the wife for separate maintenance, she is entitled to an allowance for the support of a daughter who is of age, under Civ. Code, § 136, providing that the court may provide for the maintenance of the wife "and her children," and section 206, providing that the father and mother of any poor person, who is unable to maintain himself, must maintain such person to the extent of their ability, on a finding that the daughter is dependent on her parents for support.

3. An allowance of $150 a month to a wife, for the support of herself and children, out of an income of $230 a month of the husband in the state,—he having an income of about $450 outside of the state,—is not excessive.

4. It is not error to appoint a receiver of the husband's property in the state, where a decree for separate maintenance has been rendered in favor of the wife, and the husband is a nonresident, and allegations in the bill that he is about to dispose of the property are not denied.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by Henrietta Anderson against William H. Anderson. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, and from an order appointing a receiver, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. R. Gray and E. R. Annable, for appellant. E. B. Stanton, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Action for divorce. The complaint alleges that plaintiff was married to defendant in New York; has resided for more than 8 years in California; there are six children living, the two youngest being a daughter of 19 and a son of 11 years. Charges extreme cruelty in many forms, growing out of a morose and cruel disposition. Alleges that defendant deserted plaintiff in 1893, and went to live in New York; that defendant is the owner of a block of land in the town of Riverside containing  $2\frac{1}{2}$  acres, upon which are situated 9 dwelling houses, value about \$18,000, rent \$170 per month; also, the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of another block, with 4 dwelling houses, value about \$7,500, rent \$60 per month; also, 55 acres of Rancho San Bernardino, planted in deciduous trees, no income; also, personal property, consisting of household furniture of the value of \$2,000, a mortgage given by R. J. Mills for \$1,525, and mortgage of \$600 by Archie Brook; that all of the above is community property; that defendant is the owner of real properties in the city of Brooklyn, state of New York, of the value of \$50,700, rents \$440 per month; that plaintiff is in indigent circumstances, and has no means or income except what may be derived from the rents of these houses in Riverside. Alleges, upon information and belief, that "the defendant has endeavored to sell, convey, transfer, and incumber portions of the premises above described, thereby to deprive her of a livelihood and support, and is now endeavoring to make such transfers or incumbrances." Prays for divorce and the custody of the minor child; that a portion of the common property be set apart to plaintiff, and that defendant be enjoined from disposing of, or in any manner incumbering, the property, and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the property, receive the rents, etc.; with prayer for general relief. The answer denies cruel treatment and morose and ungovernable temper. Admits that he has not lived with her as her husband since August 1893, but denies that his living apart from her was without provocation. Alleges that, "by reason of the unfortunate condition of things surrounding defendant, he became addicted to the use of intoxicants, and was more or less under their influence from day to day," but denies that plaintiff was in great fear of him in that condition. Alleges that the property in the state of California is all his separate property, having been purchased with funds acquired by him in the state of New York, as his separate property, under the laws of that state; that the mortgage given by Archie Brook for \$600 has been paid up, and the money properly expended for medical services and payment of debts; that defendant is indebted in the sum of \$10,007 in the state of New York. Denies the values put upon the properties in Brooklyn, and the rents stated, and alleges that after paying taxes, water rates, repairs, and insurance, and interest on the debt, the income is nearly exhausted, and furnishes very little towards the support of either himself or family. The answer does not deny the values or rents of the California properties, or the charge made in the complaint that defendant has endeavored to sell, convey, transfer, or incumber portions of the property, to deprive plaintiff of a support, and is now endeavoring to make such transfers or incumbrances; does not deny that plaintiff is without means.

The court finds: That the defendant was morose and suspicious, and unjustly accused plaintiff of want of chastity; was unreasonable and abusive. That such conduct was wholly due to jealousy and a morose disposition. That defendant was not otherwise intentionally cruel in his conduct towards plaintiff. That this action was commenced by plaintiff under the belief that defendant was endeavoring to sell and dispose of his property. That she did not wish to obtain a divorce, except for the purpose of preserving the property. That plaintiff has always conducted herself in a proper and blameless manner, and used her best efforts to conciliate the defendant. "That since the month of August, 1893, without any reason, cause, or excuse, defendant has refused to live with plaintiff. That since said date, and before said date, defendant has given but very little or no attention to the care of the property mentioned and described in plaintiff's complaint. He has allowed the property to be controlled by agents, and has given it no personal attention. Defendant has not been engaged in any business. He has been reckless and extravagant in his expenditures, and has squandered large sums of money, and his estate has become seriously impaired by his extravagance and reckless expenditure. He has shown no reasonable disposition to support or maintain plaintiff or his children, but has shown a disregard of the rights of plaintiff and his children to support. His conduct towards plaintiff and his children has been willful and intentional. * * * He has shown no disposition or desire to resume marital relations with plaintiff, or to live with her; and the conduct of defendant towards plaintiff has been and is unjustifiable, and renders it impossible, at present, for them to live together. His conduct shows that he is unwilling to support his wife and children, and that he has tried to avoid supporting them, and to squander, dispose of, and incur the property upon which they are dependent for support. That the property in California is sufficient, if properly administered, to provide for the support and maintenance of plaintiff and the children, and to yield a surplus, after paying the expenses of maintenance of said property and the support of plaintiff and her children, towards the support of defendant, and that in addition the defendant has the entire management and control of all the property situated in the state of New York, described in paragraph 15 of the plaintiff's complaint. That it is apparent that the defendant, if allowed the control of the property in California, will not provide for the maintenance and support of the plaintiff and his children, but will recklessly squander said property, and ignore their rights." The court finds that all the property in the state of California is the separate property of the defendant, and finds that two of the children (Harry and Etta, the daughter) are dependent upon plaintiff and defendant for support, and have heretofore been, and now are, supported by plaintiff, and are residing with her. From the above facts the court holds that the conduct of the defendant did not amount to extreme cruelty, and that plaintiff is not entitled to a divorce; that plaintiff is entitled to a reasonable support and maintenance out of the property of defendant for herself and the two children, the daughter and son; that a receiver be appointed to take charge of and manage the property; that plaintiff be paid by the receiver $150 per month for the support of herself and children, and be allowed the use of the house at Riverside occupied by her, and the household furniture. Judgment is entered in accordance with the conclusions of law, and charges all the real properties with a lien in favor of the plaintiff to secure the payment of the maintenance awarded to her. The judgment recites that the mortgages of Mills and Brook had been paid.

The appellant contends that under these pleadings the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for maintenance, and that the court has gone outside of the issues to make a case for maintenance. But the case comes within section 136 of the Civil Code, as settled in Hagle v. Hagle, 68 Cal. 588, 9 Pac. 842. The wife charges that the husband has left her without cause, and charges conduct on the part of the husband which the court finds makes it impossible for her to live with him, alleges her own want of means, and prays that a portion of what she claims to be the common property be awarded to her, and prays for general relief. Under the case made in the complaint, it was not necessary to charge a failure to provide the plaintiff with the necessities of life; and, if it were, the necessity of a separate maintenance is shown by the undenied averment that defendant was threatening to dispose of the property in order to deprive her of the means of support.

The point is made that the custody of the minor child is not awarded to the plaintiff, and for that reason nothing should be allowed for his support, and also that the daughter is of age, and nothing should be awarded for her support. So far as the minor child is concerned, it is found that he is in the custody of the mother, and is supported by her. As long as this state of facts continues, the father has no reason to complain; for by the provision thus made for the support of the son he is relieved from liability himself. The case is different with the daughter. In her case it appears from the findings that she is residing with her mother, and that, although of age, she is dependent upon her parents for support. Section 136 provides that, though judgment of divorce is denied, the court may, in an action for divorce, provide for the maintenance of the wife "and her children or any of them." It has been held, under a statute of Oregon somewhat analogous, that the word "children" must be construed to mean "minor children." Fitch v. Cornell, 1 Sawy. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 4,834. But the court adds: "The reason is, they are no longer in the custody or under the control of their parents; nor are the latter bound to maintain them, except under peculiar circumstances, arising from poverty or sickness." The same intimation appears in Snover v. Snover, 13 N. J. Eq. 261, where the chancellor says: "From the evidence now before the court, I incline to the opinion that, if the daughter continues in health, the allowance for her support should cease when she attains the age of eighteen. I will hear an application on this ground from the father at the proper time." And so, in the present case, under any change of circumstances with reference either to son or daughter, the court may at any time make a modification of the judgment, if it hold that under the circumstances of the case the presence of the children influences the amount of the allowance. In this connection section 206 of the Civil Code is important, in the line of the intimations of the Oregon and New Jersey courts. That section provides that it is the duty of the father and mother of any poor person, who is unable to maintain himself by work, to maintain such person, to the extent of their ability. In view of the finding that the daughter is dependent upon her parents for support, we must presume that, from ill health or other cause, she is "unable to maintain herself by work." It does in fact appear in the testimony, without objection, that the daughter is an invalid. From the above reasons, which are sufficient to support the judgment on this point, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether, under section 136, the court may not, in granting a maintenance, properly take into consideration the size of the family, adult or minor, which the husband has left with his wife in his home, as an element entering into "her condition in life," which may always be considered in fixing the amount of maintenance.

It is insisted that the allowance of $150 to the wife out of an income of $230 derived from the California property of the husband is excessive, the privilege of dwelling house and furniture being also allowed to her. There is no settled rule which can be invoked in such a case to control the discretion of a trial court, and there is nothing here to show abuse of discretion. It is claimed that there is a fatal omission to find whether the income of the New York property, as established by the findings, is gross or net, or to find the amount of expenses to which it is subject, or the amount of indebtedness of the husband. The income is found to be about $440 per month, and the value of the property about $50,700. The answer does not state definitely the amount of expenses to which the income is subject, but only that, after paying interest and other expenses, the income will "furnish very little towards either the support of himself or his family." It states an indebtedness of $10,007, but admits a valuation of property in New York to the amount of $45,000, with gross income to the amount of $287 per month. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that the omission to find as a fact the existence of the indebtedness stated in the answer is material. The trial court evidently did not so regard it. The statements in the answer as to the expenses of the property are too vague to be the subject of a finding.

A more serious question is the necessity of the appointment of a receiver in the case. Section 140 of the Civil Code provides that the court may require the husband to give reasonable security for making any payments required, and may enforce the same by the appointment of a receiver, or by any other remedy applicable to the case. It is charged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that the husband has endeavored, and is endeavoring, to sell and transfer or encumber his property, and thereby to deprive the wife of a support. The defendant is a resident of the state of New York. Where so much is necessarily committed to the discretion of the trial court, depending in each case upon its estimate of the character of the parties, as exhibited in matters too numerous or too trivial to go into the record, we cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion in this case in the appointment of a receiver. That the defendant was a nonresident of this state, attached to his residence in New York by large holdings of property, is a strong circumstance tending to make a receivership the most natural as well as the most effective method of enforcing compliance with the order for maintenance. And the severity of the method devised is mitigated by the fact that he did not, as from his nonresidence he could not, give personal attention to his properties in this state, and left them to the management of agents. Under the management of a receiver, judiciously appointed, and subject to the control of the court, the properties may be well managed, and the rights of both parties protected. These considerations probably tended to influence the judgment of the court below. I advise that the judgment and the order denying motion for new trial, and the order appointing a receiver, be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and the order denying motion for new trial, and the order appointing a receiver, are affirmed.

BRIGGS et al. v. BREEN et al. (S. F. 1,076.) 1
(Supreme Court of California. March 6, 1899.)

EXECUTORS—LIABILITY—ATTORNEY'S FEES—ALLOWANCE—CONCLUSIVENESS—PARTIES TO ACTIONS—JOINDER.

1. In the absence of an agreement that attorneys for an executor shall look for their fees to the estate or an allowance therefrom by the court, the executor is personally liable for their reasonable compensation.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, provides that an executor shall be allowed reasonable fees paid to attorneys, etc. Section 1635 provides that "any person interested in the estate" may contest an executor's account. Section 1637 provides that the settlement of the account is conclusive against "all persons in any way interested in the estate." Held, that an executor's attorney is not "interested in the estate," so as to be estopped to claim a greater fee than is allowed the executor.

3. The fact that the attorney files exceptions to the executor's account does not render the court's allowance binding on him.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 379, providing that "any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question involved therein," an administrator of a deceased promisor may be joined with survivors who were jointly liable with decedent to plaintiff.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county.

Action by N. C. Briggs and another against James F. Breen and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs for a less sum than that demanded, they appeal. Reversed.

Scott & Dooling, for appellants. S. F. Lieb and B. D. Sargent, for respondents.

BRITT, C. Action for the alleged value of professional services rendered by plaintiffs as attorneys at law (they being partners in practice) to the defendant James F. Breen, and one John R. Breen, who were executors of the last will of a certain decedent. It appears that the executors employed plaintiffs to conduct the ordinary legal proceedings for the administration of the testator's estate and in the defense of certain actions brought against the executors in their official character. Such employment terminated upon the death of said John R. Breen, which occurred August 31, 1894. On July 12, 1895, the surviving executor, James F. Breen, filed in court his final account of the administration. Therein he prayed a credit of $1,250 for the payment of plaintiffs, and alleged that sum to be the reasonable value of their services. Before the account was filed, plaintiffs notified the executor that they were dissatisfied with this sum; and after the filing thereof they filed written exception to the same, stating that said sum "is not reasonable compensation for the services of said attorneys, and they ask leave to submit evidence to the court of the value of said services, to the end that said attorneys have from said estate reasonable compensation." Upon the hearing of said account the plaintiffs were, it seems, present in court, but declined to introduce any evidence touching the item aforesaid, and the account was settled and allowed as rendered. Afterwards plaintiffs brought this action. The administrator of the estate of John R. Breen, the deceased executor, is joined as a defendant with James F. Breen, plaintiffs having first presented their claim to him for allowance as a debt of said John R. Breen, and the claim having been rejected.

The matters above stated appear from the findings of the court or the admissions of the pleadings. The court further found that no agreement or understanding was ever had between plaintiffs and the executors as to the amount of compensation for the services of plaintiffs, nor the source from which payment was to be made, nor that they should receive such sum as the court should fix on settlement of the accounts of the executors; also that the reasonable value of said services was the sum of $1,800; but the court held that, "by reason of the conclusiveness on plaintiffs of the allowance in the probate court,"—meaning the superior court sitting in probate in the matter of said final account,—they were entitled to judgment for the sum of $1,250 only, which was entered accordingly.

1. Since there was no agreement that the attorneys should look for their fees to the estate or an allowance therefrom by the court, it follows that the executors were liable personally to them for their reasonable compensation. It was so decided in Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 387, and has been more or less distinctly asserted in several cases since.

Gurnee v. Maloney, 38 Cal. 85; In re Page's Estate, 57 Cal. 241; In re Ogier's Estate, 101 Cal. 385, 35 Pac. 900; In re Kasson's Estate, 119 Cal. 489, 51 Pac. 706. The law of this state is not peculiar in this regard. "It is a well-recognized principle," says Judge Woerner, "that for liabilities contracted by the personal representative, although for the benefit and in the interest and behalf of the estate, it is not liable to creditors. * * * It follows that the estate is not liable to an attorney for his services at the instance of an executor or administrator, but that the latter is himself liable in a suit by the attorney." 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 356. And to the same effect, among other cases, are Mygatt v. Wilcox, 45 N. Y. 306; Bowman v. Tallman, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 385; Parker v. Day, 155 N. Y. 383. 49 N. E. 1046; Thomas v. Moore, 52 Ohio St. 200, 39 N. E. 803; Barker v. Kunkel, 10 Ill. App. 407.

2. Section 1635, Code Civ. Proc., relating to the accounting of executors and administrators, provides that "any person interested in the estate" may contest the account on the hearing thereof; and section 1637, following, provides that "the settlement of the account and the allowance thereof by the court, or upon appeal, is conclusive against all persons in any way interested in the estate," with a saving in favor of persons under legal disability. Defendants urge that plaintiffs were persons "interested in the estate," within the meaning of these sections, and are, in virtue of the same, estopped to claim more than was allowed to the executor for their compensation on settlement of his final account. We cannot agree with defendants. The law being that the estate is not liable to the attorney, it must be also that the attorney is not interested in the estate. This court has often decided that the allowance from the estate for attorney's fees, under section 1616, Code Civ. Proc., must be made to the executor or administrator, and not to the attorney (In re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. 458, 41 Pac. 483, and 42 Pac. 479, and cases cited); which construction of the statute is reasonable, in view of the rule that the representative, and not the estate, is liable to the attorney; but that could scarcely be said if the attorney is really a person interested in the estate to the amount of his fees. It is hard to see how the court could compel the representative to take more from the estate for payment of his attorneys than he has himself claimed for that purpose in his account. Unless the attorney has agreed to accept for his fees the allowance made by the court to indemnify the executor or administrator in that behalf, there seems as little reason for saying that he is concluded by the order making such allowance as that persons having claims against the representative founded on the latter's tort or breach of contract, committed while acting for the estate, can be affected by the settlement of his accounts. In the absence of statute, the court in probate cannot adjudicate between such persons and the executor or administrator. 2 Woerner, Adm'n, §§ 152, 356. See Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3; In re Burdick's Estate, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734; Sterrett v. Barker, 119 Cal. 492, 51 Pac. 695; Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 4; Johnson v. Leman, 131 Ill. 609, 23 N. E. 435.

The circumstance that plaintiffs filed exceptions to the executor's account is unimportant. If they were interested in the estate, the order of the court (made on due notice) concludes them, whether they contested the account or not. If they were not interested, they had no right to contest it, and the filing of exceptions could not give them an interest. The fact of such appearance may have been evidence bearing on the question whether they expected to look to the estate for their fees, —a question settled, however, by the findings in the negative.

We are not insensible to the force of defendants' argument ab inconvenienti. It is said that, if the representative pays the attorney in advance of settlement, he may find that the court will consider the charge too great, and refuse him credit for the payment, as happened in Re Gasq's Estate, 42 Cal. 288; while, if he first obtains settlement of his account on his own estimate of what is a proper charge, the attorney may refuse to accept it, and sue him for a larger sum, as in the case here. The supposed perils of the representative are more apparent than real. He will, we apprehend, commonly be able to procure competent counsel, who will agree to render their services for such compensation as the court may allow to him for that purpose from the estate. It is seldom that the superior courts have been found niggardly in that particular. See the remarks of this court in Re Byrne's Estate (Cal.) 54 Pac. 957, 1015. Again, the attorney is entitled, in any event, to only reasonable compensation. It will probably not often occur that the estimate of a jury in an action by the attorney against the representative will be higher than that of the court to which the account is rendered.

Defendants rely on In re Courts' Estate, 87 Cal. 480, 25 Pac. 685. In that case an order, made on settlement of an account, determining that certain claims for services rendered to the executrix were legal charges against the estate, was held conclusive on the executrix and those interested in the estate. If there is anything in the opinion there which would justify the inference that persons not so interested might be compelled to litigate their claims against the executrix upon hearing of her account, it is dictum merely.

3. It is claimed by respondents that the administrator of J. R. Breen is improperly joined as a defendant with James F. Breen. There were, at common law, valid formal reasons against such joinder, and they were allowed effect in two early cases in this state. May v. Hanson, 6 Cal. 642; Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 173. But section

379, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question involved therein." The language is certainly broad enough to allow the joinder of the administrator of a deceased debtor or promisor with survivors who were jointly liable with him to the plaintiff; and such is the later doctrine of this court, to which we adhere. Lawrence v. Doolan, 68 Cal. 309, 5 Pac. 484, and 9 Pac. 159; compare Bank v. Howland, 42 Cal. 129; Fisher v. Hopkins, 4 Wyo. 379, 34 Pac. 899; Bliss, Code Pl. § 107; Pom. Rem. §§ 302-304. The objection of misjoinder must be overruled.

Defendants were liable for the whole value of the services of plaintiffs, as found by the court; but it appears from the record, and from the admissions in the briefs of plaintiffs, that they have received on account of their demand the sum of $1,250, paid from the funds of the estate subsequently to the commencement of the action. The judgment should therefore be reversed, with directions to the court below to render judgment for plaintiffs for the sum of $550, the excess of the value of their services as found by the court above the payment aforesaid, with interest from date of the original judgment, and for costs, judgment to be against James F. Breen personally; and that the administrator of J. R. Breen pay in due course of administration.

We concur: GRAY, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to render judgment for plaintiffs as in said opinion recommended.

SHAFFER v. WILLIS et al. (S. F. 817.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1899.)

NOTES—OWNERSHIP—FINDINGS—TENDER—REASON FOR REFUSAL—NEW TRIAL—APPEAL.

1. An allegation in the complaint, not denied in the answer, that defendants made the note sued on, and delivered it to plaintiff as payee,—the note being produced at the trial and offered in evidence by plaintiff without objection,—supports a finding that plaintiff was the owner of the note at the time of the trial.

2. In an action on a note, defendants alleged a tender of the amount claimed by them to be due. The court found that the allegations of the answer were untrue, "save and except as to the second allegation, * * * wherein a tender of $60 is pleaded, * * * but * * * that $60 was and is wholly insufficient in amount" to pay the note sued on. Held equivalent to a finding that a tender was made which was insufficient in amount.

3. A note, on its face, amounted to $318. The maker deducted the amount of certain warrants which he claimed should be credited on the note, and made a tender of the balance, which was $60. The payee's agent stated that he could not "receive the offer, and would refuse the tender of $60." Held to show a refusal of the tender because of its insufficiency.

4. Where a motion for a new trial is based on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and every material fact is contradicted by counter affidavits, the trial court's discretion in refusing a new trial will not be interfered with.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by W. H. Shafer against V. I. Willis and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Horace Hawes, for appellants. W. B. Good and Meux & Johnston, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action on promissory note. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

The complaint asks judgment for $318.22, balance due of the principal and interest of the note in suit, and $50 as attorney's fees. The answer denied that no payments had been made except as admitted in the complaint, and alleged in addition thereto a payment, not credited, of $244.90, in the form of certain Selma irrigation district warrants. The answer also alleged the tender of $60 before suit was commenced, in payment of the balance due on said note, and that, on the day of the said tender, defendants deposited said sum, in the name of plaintiff, in the Bank of Selma,—a bank of deposit and good repute,—and so notified plaintiff. The pleadings are verified. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and as facts the court found that plaintiff was the owner of the note; that all the allegations of the complaint are true, and that there was an unpaid balance of $318.22 due on said note; that the allegations of the answer are untrue, "except as to the second allegation in said answer contained, wherein a tender of the sum of sixty dollars is pleaded and properly set forth as having been made by defendants to plaintiff, on or about August 12, 1896, but from the undisputed evidence the court further finds that the said sum of sixty dollars was and is wholly insufficient in amount to operate as a payment of the promissory note mentioned in plaintiff's complaint."

1. Appellants contend that the findings are not supported by the evidence: (1) That plaintiff was the owner of the note at the date of the trial; and (2) that no payments on the note had been made, except as admitted in the complaint. It was alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that defendants made the note, and delivered the same to plaintiff as payee. This note was produced at the trial and offered in evidence by plaintiff without objection. This was sufficient evidence to support the finding of ownership. The more seriously disputed finding of fact relates to the agreement of the parties when the Selma irrigation warrants were delivered to plaintiff. Appellants claim that they were delivered as payment, and should have been credited on the note, which would have left a balance due of $60, and that they tendered payment of this balance before suit was brought. As to the purpose in delivering these warrants, the evidence is conflicting. Plaintiff testified that he received them "as collateral on the note, to be collected and applied on the note." There were two warrants,—one for $10, and one for $234.90. Plaintiff, in his testimony, explains the circumstances under which he received these warrants, and he testifies that he did not receive them as payment on the note. Defendants testified that they understood the delivery of the warrants to be a payment as money, at their face value. Without quoting from the evidence, I think it may be said that defendants clearly contradict the plaintiff as to the understanding in this matter. As there is a direct conflict in the evidence, it is beyond the province of this court to reconcile it.

2. On August 12, 1896, plaintiff, by his attorney, Mr. Good, presented the note for payment, amounting then to $318. Defendant Mr. Willis deducted the amount of the warrants, leaving a balance, as defendant figured it, of about $60, and offered to pay that in cash. This money was placed on deposit in a bank of good repute for the use of plaintiff. Appellants assign error because they alleged a tender of $60, and the court failed to make a finding upon the issue thus presented. The court did not find distinctly whether a tender in fact was or was not made, but it did so find inferentially; for it found that the allegations of the answer were untrue, "save and except as to the second allegation in said answer contained, wherein a tender of a sum of sixty dollars is pleaded and properly set forth as having been made by defendants to plaintiff on or about August 12, 1896, but from the undisputed evidence the court finds that the said sum of sixty dollars was and is wholly insufficient in amount to operate as a payment of the promissory note mentioned in plaintiff's complaint." This we think was tantamount to a finding that a tender was made which was insufficient in amount. What took place at the time the tender was made was testified to by Mr. Good as follows: "On or about August 12th I presented this matter to Mr. Willis for payment. It amounted then to some three hundred and eighteen dollars, and he deducted the face of the warrant from the amount, and it amounted to something like sixty dollars, as the difference. He said he would tender me the amount of the difference, which was sixty dollars,—he made it,—but which was a few cents more than the difference, and offered to pay me that in cash then and there. I told him we were unable to receive the offer, and would refuse the tender of sixty dollars." We think it fairly inferable from this testimony that the tender was refused because insufficient. The purpose of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2076) which requires the objection to be stated, if it is to the amount, is to inform the debtor of the amount claimed by the creditor, so that the former may have the opportunity of meeting the demand, if he should wish to do so. Here the amount of the demand was made known by the agent of the creditor, and the debtor clearly understood it, because he made his tender of that amount, less what he claimed should be deducted on account of the warrants. The refusal to accept the amount was a refusal of the tender as made, and, as the evidence shows that it was much less than the amount found to be due, we think the findings sufficient.

3. The motion for new trial was based in part upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence. This evidence is set forth in three separate affidavits. One Elliott deposed that he was secretary of the Selma irrigation district in February, 1896. At a meeting of the directors held early in the month, plaintiff came to him at that meeting, and asked about a warrant which the board had allowed and delivered to defendant Willis, and stated to affiant that Willis had promised him the warrant, or a part of it, as payment on a note of Willis held by him (plaintiff). One Gower, who was president of the board, made a similar affidavit. One Walton deposed that in March, 1896, "plaintiff stated that he was interested in the Willis warrant; that Mr. Willis owed him, and that, if he had not received this warrant as a payment, he would have sued him; * * * that he thought he would get the money sooner that way than from Mr. Willis." Defendants deposed that they did not know these facts until after the trial, and that they could not have discovered or produced this evidence by any reasonable means. Plaintiff, by counter affidavit, contradicted the facts set forth in the affidavits used by defendants at the hearing of the motion. Elliott and Gower deposed as to a conversation which occurred before plaintiff received the warrants, and when the defendants were not present. The terms of the transfer depended on what took place at the time the warrants were delivered, and not upon anything the transferee may have said at some time previous, and to third persons. It is claimed that the statements of Gower and Elliott would have been admissible to contradict plaintiff's evidence as to what afterwards took place between plaintiff and defendants; but, whether admissible or not, the evidence, as admissions, the court below might well have regarded as overcome by the denial of plaintiff that he made them. Walton's statement was contradicted by plaintiff's affidavit, and, besides, in its essential feature, does not present such unequivocal facts as would justify this court in reversing the order denying the motion. The affidavit does not clearly charge that plaintiff admitted that he held the warrants as payment, and plaintiff denies that he made any statement of the kind affirmed by Walton. Where the motion for new trial is based on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and every material fact is contradicted by counter affidavits, the discretion of the court in refusing a new trial will not be interfered with on appeal. People v. Mesa, 93 Cal. 580, 29 Pac. 116; Doyle v. Sturla, 38 Cal. 457; Merk v. Gelzhauser, 50 Cal. 631. Furthermore, the newly-discovered evidence was cumulative, and was not so conclusive in its character as to raise a reasonable presumption that it would change the result. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

McFARLAND, J. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the judgment and in the opinion, except that I do not agree that when a motion for a new trial is based on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, and every material fact in the affidavits is controverted by counter affidavits, the discretion of the trial court may not be interfered with. The authorities cited do not sustain the proposition, and I think the proposition cannot be sustained on principle, or upon a proper construction of the statute. Section 657, Code Civ. Proc., provides that a new trial may (must) be granted "for any of the following causes materially affecting the substantial rights of such party: * * *

(4) Newly-discovered evidence, material for the party making the application, which he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at the trial." Now, if a showing is made which satisfies the statute, the party is entitled to a new trial in court according to the law regulating such trials. The court cannot, in lieu of such new trial, determine the issue of fact on affidavits, and find that, though such evidence, material under the rigid rules especially applied to these motions, and which, if true, would probably require a different judgment, can be produced, nevertheless the opposing party can refute the new testimony by other evidence, also new. This would be to retry the issue on affidavits, and to deny the trial according to established procedure, such as the statutes provide the moving party who makes such a case shall have. The newly-discovered evidence here should, I think, have been held not to be material in the sense required in these motions; but, if it was material, it consisted of proof of certain statements alleged to have been made by plaintiff. Affidavits by three witnesses were submitted as to statements made by plaintiff. The counter affidavit is simply and only that of plaintiff himself. I do not think it can be held to be a counter showing at all; but, waiving that, the issue of fact could not be properly determined by the court upon these affidavits. The authorities ited do not sustain the proposition. They are all of a piece, and in each, after giving sufficient reason for denying the motion, it is added, "Besides, every material fact was contradicted by counter affidavits." The decision is not based upon that fact, nor is there an intimation that any importance is attached to the counter showing. On many points, no doubt, the affidavits of the moving party may properly be overcome by counter affidavits. As to the use of due diligence, or that the evidence is newly discovered, or can be had, no doubt affidavits of the proposed witnesses might be read to show that they would not testify as represented. In short, any pertinent matter may then be tried, except the issue of fact to which the newly-discovered evidence is addressed. That issue cannot be then tried, although the court may examine the proposed testimony, and compare it with the case already made upon the trial, to determine its relevancy and importance; and if it determines that the evidence, if true, would most probably not change the result, the motion should be denied. In this case I think the court must have so determined, and upon that ground I concur in the conclusion.

I concur: HENSHAW, J.

BAYLEY v. EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSUR. CORP. (S. F. 857.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1899.)

APPEAL—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—FALSE STATEMENTS—WAIVER—WARRANTIES.

1. A finding by the jury on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

2. The fact that an accident insurer had waived a false statement that the insured had never before received compensation for any accident, in so far as it had paid him therefor in 1892, and knew of certain other like payments by third persons in 1892, does not waive the falsity of the statement in that prior compensations for accidents had been paid the insured in 1886, of which the insurer had no knowledge.

3. The objection of immateriality cannot be urged against a warranty in a policy so as to avoid the effect of a breach thereof.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by G. B. Bayley against the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellant. Stanley, Hayes, McEnerney & Bradley, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action upon a policy of accident insurance. The verdict and judgment were for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

The assured, George H. Bayley, was killed by an accident, and this action is brought by his widow, Gertrude B. Bayley, who was the person in whose favor the policy ran. At the trial all of the defenses set up in the answer were waived, except two: (1) That the insured represented in his written application for the policy that he had never proposed and been declined insurance by an accident insurance company, and that this was not true; and (2) that he represented in said application that he had never received compensation for any accident, whereas he had, in November, 1892, and also in the year 1886, received compensation from other accident insurance companies on account of injuries he had sustained by previous accidents.

As to the first defense, it is sufficient to say that the evidence as to that defense was materially conflicting, and that, therefore, the finding of the jury upon the issue cannot be here disturbed.

2. The application upon which the policy was issued contained the following: "Said policy to be based upon the following statement of facts, which are to be considered as warranties." The fourteenth statement in the application is as follows: "I have no other accident insurance covering weekly indemnity except as herein stated: Aetna, ten thousand dollars." The fifteenth statement is as follows: "I have never received compensation for any accident except as herein stated;" and there was no statement as to any compensation having been received; and the statement, as thus expressed, was clearly that he never had received any prior compensation for an accident. But it was proven beyond doubt that he had received compensation for an accident in 1892, and also in 1886, and therefore the statement was false. This false statement, being a warranty, relieved the appellant from any liability on the policy, unless certain other principles of law intervene to prevent that result. Respondent contends that at the time the statement was made the appellant knew that respondent had before that received certain compensations for an accident, and that the appellant, having received the premium and issued the policy with a knowledge that the statement was false, thereby waived it. There is no doubt that the principle contended for by respondent as to the waiver is well established. In Menk v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 53, 14 Pac. 839, and 18 Pac. 117, Mr. Justice Temple, delivering the opinion of the court in bank, said: "Nor would misstatements be fatal to the claim of plaintiff which the agent well knew to be false when he made out the application, received the money of the applicant, and issued the policy. The tendency of the decisions is, plainly, to hold all those conditions waived which, to the knowledge of the agent, would make the policy void as soon as delivered; otherwise the company would knowingly receive the money of the applicant without value returned, and the whole transaction would be a palpable fraud. Kruger v. Insurance Co., 72 Cal. 91, 13 Pac. 156."

In Bacon on Benefit Societies and Life Insurance (volume 2, par. 427) it is said: "And if, when the insurance company issues the policy, it knows that certain answers in the application are falsely answered, it waives the right to object by such issue;" and the text is amply sustained by the authorities. See Van Schoick v. Insurance Co., 68 N. Y. 434; Gray v. Association, 111 Ind. 531, 11 N. E. 477; Schwarzbach v. Protective Union, 25 W. Va. 622. This principle might be successfully invoked by respondent so far as the compensations for a former accident in 1892 are concerned, for it appeared that the appellant itself had paid some of those compensations, and that it also knew that other compensations were paid in that year by one or two other companies. And it might well be held to have waived the fact that respondent had received compensations for the accident which occurred in 1892. But respondent had also received compensations for an accident which occurred in 1886, of which appellant had no knowledge whatever; and there is no principle upon which it can be held that a waiver of compensation for one particular accident, of which the appellant had knowledge, was also a waiver of the fact of prior compensations for accidents of which appellant had no knowledge. Appellant might well have overlooked the circumstance that respondent had been once before injured, and had received compensation for an accident, while the fact that on other occasions, or even upon one other occasion, he had received compensations for accidents upon one or more other policies might have been considered by the appellant as a very material objection to him as an applicant for insurance. Moreover, the statement was a warranty, and the objection of immateriality cannot be urged against a warranty, unless in very exceptional instances; and, although a warranty may be waived, there was no waiver in the case at bar except as to the compensations received in 1892. The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE v. BIRD. (Cr. 480.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 15, 1899.)

FORGERY—EVIDENCE—OPINIONS—OTHER CRIMES—WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—HOSTILITY.

1. On a trial for forging a check, evidence that other checks are forgeries is not admissible to prove the corpus delicti, but only—after that has been established—to show guilty intent.

2. On a trial for forging a check, the burden of showing guilty knowledge of defendant as to other forged checks in evidence is on the state, and is not sustained by proof that the other checks were forged, and that prosecutor believes that defendant forged them.

3. On a trial for forging G.'s name to a check, evidence that, long after defendant's arrest, G. was handed a blank check, to which his name appeared to have been signed, and which was found in a desk "said" to be the one occupied by defendant, was incompetent, in the absence of other evidence connecting defendant with the blank check or the desk.

4. On a trial for forgery, whether a witness shall point out, on enlarged photographs, differences between genuine signatures and alleged forgeries thereof, is within the discretion of the court.

5. A witness may state the grounds of an opinion to which he has testified.

6. Though it already appears that a prosecuting witness is hostile to defendant, the latter may prove that such witness has tried to persuade a surety on the bail bond to withdraw.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

R. A. Bird was convicted of the forgery of a check, and from a judgment on the verdict, and from a refusal of a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

C. W. Pendleton, E. A. Meserve, and J. L. Copeland, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

TEMPLE, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment upon a verdict convicting him of forgery, and from a refusal of a new trial. Defendant was employed as clerk by G. J. Griffith, and is prosecuted for forging his employer's name to a check on the First National Bank of Los Angeles for $200, with intent to defraud Griffith and the bank. It was proved that defendant presented the check to the bank, and obtained the money thereon; and Griffith testified that he (the witness) did not draw the check, and had not authorized defendant to do so, and, further, that the money drawn was not used by him (Griffith), or for his benefit. On the other hand, Grove, the bank teller who paid the check, and Mr. Hammond, the assistant cashier of the bank, both testified that in their opinion the check was genuine. There being, then, a conflict as to whether the check was genuine or not, the prosecution introduced a number of checks, drawn in the name of Griffith on the same bank, which he swore were forgeries, and had been paid, to his damage in the sum of about $1,250. There was no evidence whatever tending to connect Bird with these forgeries, if they were such. A suspicion may have been suggested that, as Bird had drawn the money upon one check alleged to have been forged, he probably was guilty of the other forgeries, and had been systematically committing such forgeries. As he was the confidential clerk of the prosecuting witness, suspicion would more naturally attach to him. If proof had been forthcoming to show the connection of defendant with these other checks which were said to have been forged, still such coincidence is not admissible to prove the corpus delicti, but only after that has been established to show guilty intent. And the prosecution assumed the same burden of proof as to each of the checks introduced to show guilty knowledge as in regard to the check for which he is being tried. People v. Whiteman, 114 Cal. 338, 46 Pac. 99. As to some of these checks, Griffith testified that he believed the signature to be Bird's signature; meaning, perhaps, that he believed that Bird signed his (the witness') name. He does not say that he knew Bird's handwriting, or why he believed that Bird wrote it. Indeed, there is much to show that his opinion resulted simply from the fact that he did not recollect drawing the check, and thought the money had not been used in his business. There can be no doubt that the evidence was improperly admitted.

Griffith was allowed to testify that he had been handed a blank check, to which his name appeared to have been signed, which blank he immediately tore up and threw into the waste basket. Upon objection being made, the district attorney stated that he would follow it by testimony showing where it was found. This occurrence was long after defendant had been arrested, and it was not proposed to show that Griffith's name had been signed to the blank by Bird, or that Bird had ever seen it, otherwise than by showing where it was found. Afterwards one Hoyle was sworn, and testified, under objection, that he examined the contents of a square-top desk "said" to be the desk occupied by Bird, and found among them the blank check in question. When he found it, or in whose custody the desk had been, or whether others occupied it as well as Bird, if it can be assumed that Bird did occupy it, was not shown. There was no other testimony connecting Bird with the blank or with the desk. The evidence was clearly incompetent.

There are some other alleged errors, but of less consequence than those already alluded to, and which do not call for extended notice. I think it was a matter within the discretion of the court whether Griffith should have been required to point out upon the enlarged photographs the difference between the signatures alleged to have been forged and those admitted to be genuine. The court also properly excluded evidence as to what Hammond said to Griffith as to one of the checks, but I think that Gibson should have been permitted to state the grounds of an opinion to which he had testified, and am unable to appreciate the objection that it was argumentative; also, that the defense should have been permitted to prove that Griffith, the prosecuting witness, had endeavored to persuade one of the sureties on defendant's bail bond to withdraw. The fact that it already appeared that Griffith was hostile did not supply the place of the proffered testimony. If true, such evidence would tend to establish a persecuting spirit, and a degree of hostility which, in the opinion of the jury, might affect the value of his evidence. The judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

OF HONOR v. GEHRENBECK et al. (S. F. 1,484.)<sup>1</sup>

BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS—INTEREST OF BENEFICIARY—DESCENT.

Under a by-law of a beneficial society, providing that if all the beneficiaries selected by a member die before him, and he leaves no widow, the benefit shall go to his heirs, where a member's wife, who is named in the certificate as beneficiary, dies before her husband, his heirs are entitled to the benefit, the wife's interest not being such as could descend to her heirs.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Supreme Council American Legion of Honor against Albrecht Gehrenbeck and others. From the judgment rendered, Jacob Kornahrens, administrator of the estate of Margaretha Gehrenbeck, deceased, appeals. Affirmed.

B. McFadden, for appellant. Loewy & Gutsch, for respondents.

GRAY, C. The plaintiff, a mutual benefit association, issued a beneficiary certificate to one of its members or companions named Gehrenbeck, and his wife, Margaretha, was named therein as the beneficiary. The wife died some months prior to the death of Gehrenbeck, but no other beneficiary had been named by Gehrenbeck at the time of his death. The administrator of the deceased wife's estate claims that the $3,000 due on the certificate became a part of her estate on the death of her husband; and the children of the deceased husband by a former wife claim that it should go to them under a by-law of the plaintiff. The contest is between the defendants, they having interpleaded, and the plaintiff having paid the money into court. The children of the deceased husband had judgment, and the administrator of the deceased wife's estate appeals.

The beneficiary named in the certificate had no interest or property therein that her heirs could succeed to. Her interest was "a mere expectancy of an incomplete gift." It was revocable at the will of the insured, and could not ripen into a right until his death. Hoelt v. Supreme Lodge, 113 Cal. 91, 45 Pac. 185; Jory v. Supreme Council, 105 Cal. 20, 38 Pac. 524; Hellenberg v. District No. 1, I. O. B. B., 94 N. Y. 580. Her right under the certificate was not unlike that of an heir apparent, and that "is not to be deemed an interest of any kind." Civ. Code, § 700. The beneficiary having died before any right had become vested in her, this mere expectancy died with her, so there was nothing left for her heirs to succeed to. The by-laws of plaintiff provide as follows: "(128) In the event of the death of all the beneficiaries selected by the member before the decease of such member, if no other or further disposition thereof be made in accordance with the provisions of these by-laws, the benefit shall be paid to the widow. If none, then to the heirs of the deceased member; and, if no person or persons shall be entitled to receive such benefit, it shall revert to the benefit fund." Under this by-law the children and heirs of the deceased, Gehrenbeck, are the beneficiaries of the certificate, and entitled to the money paid into court. These views of the case dispose of the other objections urged by appellant. For these reasons, I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

BREEDLOVE v. NORWICH UNION FIRE INS. SOC. (L. A. 360.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1899.)

INSURANCE—SOLE OWNERSHIP—WAIVER OF CON-DITIONS—APPEAL—REVIEW—PLEADING.

1. A mortgagor conveyed land, but the deed was not recorded until foreclosure suit was begun. The mortgage was foreclosed, and the property sold. Held, that the grantee of the deed was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property within the terms of the policy issued to her pending such foreclosure.

2. A mortgagor conveyed mortgaged property to his mother, which deed she did not record. Another son was the agent of defendant insurance company, and, with knowledge of the condition of his mother's title, issued a policy to her on an application in which she stated that she was the sole and unconditional owner of the property. The mortgage was foreclosed, and at the time the policy was obtained the redemption had but 18 days to run. Ten days thereafter the building was burned. Held that, though there was enough evidence to warrant a trial court in finding against a waiver of the condition as to conditional ownership, his finding of waiver was sufficiently supported by the evidence, so that a verdict for plaintiff will not be set aside.

3. Where, in an action on a policy, plaintiff alleges that she has fulfilled all the conditions on her part to be kept and fulfilled, it was not necessary for her, where the application alleged a sole and unconditional ownership, to allege waiver of such condition, where the evidence showed that the allegation was not true in fact.

4. The act of an agent of an insurance company in issuing a policy on an application alleging unconditional ownership is a waiver of such condition where he knows at the time that the property is mortgaged, and that a foreclosure suit is pending.

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinion in division, see 54 Pac. 93.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action to recover upon an insurance policy. George L. Bush had been the owner of the property. He executed a mortgage upon it to one Cowgill. Thereafter he conveyed the property to the plaintiff, who is his mother. An action to foreclose the mortgage was commenced against the mortgagor on October 3, 1894, and judgment therein was rendered upon December 22, 1894. Under this judgment the property was sold to Cowgill upon January 31, 1895. The plaintiff did not record conveyance from her son until October 13, 1894, and, consequently, was not made a party to the foreclosure suit. After the sale under the judgment, and 18 days before the expiration of the time within which she could redeem, she applied for and obtained insurance in the sum of $2,500 upon a warehouse located upon the property. Ten days after the insurance of the property, and eight days before the time for redemption had expired, the warehouse was destroyed by fire. Plaintiff never redeemed. The policy contained the following clause: "This entire policy shall be void if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated herein.

* * * This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void * * * if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership." The character of plaintiff's interest, as stated in the policy, was, "Mary Breedlove, two thousand five hundred dollars on her two-story frame, metal-roof building." In her complaint plaintiff averred that she was the unconditional and sole owner of the building insured. She further alleged that all the conditions of the policy upon her part to be kept and performed were duly kept and performed. In answer, defendant denied the allegation of the complaint as to plaintiff's sole and unconditional ownership, and by way of separate defense averred that it was stipulated in the policy that it should be void if the interest of the insured was not truly stated therein; that the interest of the insured was stated to be the sole and unconditional ownership of the property; that the statement was not true, and that the falsity of the warranty vitiated the policy. Under these pleadings the trial was had. The court distinctly declined to find whether or not plaintiff was the sole and unconditional owner, but set forth the facts of her title as hereinabove stated, and further found that defendant waived the warranty expressed in the contract by issuing the policy to plaintiff with full knowledge of the condition of her title.

That plaintiff was not the sole and unconditional owner of the property does not admit of debate. It may be conceded that when she took the deed from her son she was such an owner, but she failed to record her deed. The judgment in the foreclosure suit, and all the proceedings therein had, were as conclusive against her as if she had been made a party to the action. Code Civ. Proc. § 726; Daniels v. Henderson, 49 Cal. 245. "Upon a sale of real property the purchaser is substituted to and acquires all the right, title, interest and claim of the judgment debtor thereto." Id. § 700. "If the debtor redeems, the effect of the sale is terminated, and he is restored to his estate." Id. § 703. It is by the foreclosure sale that the title passes. Robinson v. Thornton, 102 Cal. 680, 34 Pac. 120. The sheriff's deed gives no new title. It is merely evidence that the title has become absolute. Duff v. Randall, 116 Cal. 226, 48 Pac. 66. One who fails to record his conveyance from the mortgagor puts himself in position to be deprived of his title by the foreclosure proceedings. If he stands idly by, and permits the action to be prosecuted without intervention upon his part, he is consenting to be represented by his grantor, and the legal effect of the foreclosure sale is to dispose of his title as completely as though he himself were present and litigating. By failing or refusing to record his title, he holds it subject to divestiture under the foreclosure proceeding. It is not that he retains his title, but is estopped from asserting it against the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, or those in privity with him; it is that he has been stripped of title, and left with but a brief right of possession, and an equally brief equity of redemption. But in this case it matters not whether it be said that the plaintiff retained her title, but was estopped from asserting it, or whether it be said, as we have held it to be, that she has been deprived of her title; for in either case the interest which she possessed in the property at the time of her insurance of it was not that of sole and unconditional ownership. If, upon the one hand, she was divested of title by the foreclosure sale, assuredly she was not the sole and unconditional owner. But if, upon the other hand, she retained her title, but was estopped from asserting it, none the less the result of the foreclosure sale was to create by operation of law a superior and paramount title in the purchaser at that sale. That purchaser became the owner of the property, and from any point of view plaintiff could not have been the unconditional and sole owner. See Insurance Co. v. Brennan, 58 Ill. 158. If there was a warranty at all from the insured to the insurer upon this question of unconditional and sole ownership, it is fully established by the use of the possessive pronoun "her" in the sentence above quoted, "Mary Breedlove, two thousand five hundred dollars on her two-story, metal-roof building." McCormick v. Insurance Co., 66 Cal. 363, 5 Pac. 617.

But against this claim of warranty plaintiff contended (and the court so found) that the policy was issued by defendant's authorized agents with full knowledge of the condition of her title, and that thereby the warranty was never given, but its giving was expressly waived. It is with the utmost reluctance that we are compelled to the conclusion that this finding is sufficiently supported by the evidence, for the circumstances are such as gravely discredit the good faith of the transaction, and leave a taint of fraud affecting the whole. The facts in this regard are the following: A son—George Bush—made a deed to the mother which she did not record. Another son,—B. B. Bush,—with John T. Jarvis, together composing the firm of Jarvis & Bush, were the agents of the defendant insurance company. By these agents a policy had been issued to the mortgagee of the property some few months before the date of the issuance of the policy in suit, and had been canceled by this same insurance company as an undesirable risk because of the foreclosure proceedings, and perhaps because of other matters. George Bush, upon behalf of his mother, obtained from B. B. Bush the insurance policy in question when the mother's time for redemption had but 18 days to run, and 10 days thereafter the building was consumed by fire. The mother never redeemed. George Bush testified that he informed his brother, B. B. Bush, of the condition of the mother's title to the property, and that the brother was fully advised upon the matter. B. B. Bush, the agent, shufflingly and evasively testified to the same facts. He was impeached by proof of contradictory statements made by him touching these questions, and it is shown that his associate and partner, Jarvis, knew nothing whatever of the issuance of the policy. There was clearly enough in all this to have warranted the trial judge in discrediting this testimony, and finding against a waiver. He, however, accepted the testimony and found in accordance with it. It cannot be said, therefore, that the finding is unsupported, and under our rule we are reluctantly compelled to permit it to stand.

But appellant insists that the question of waiver was not in issue, and that, therefore, the court erred in admitting evidence and in finding upon it. Herein it is argued that plaintiff relied for her recovery upon performance of her contract of insurance; that, as appears by that contract, she warranted her title; that, in accordance with this, she affirmatively pleaded that she was the sole and unconditional owner, and that this was the only issue which the court was called upon to decide. It is urged that this pleading comes under the general and well-settled rule that one who pleads performance cannot recover upon proof of waiver or proof of excuse for nonperformance. Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 Pac. 867. This position, however, cannot be maintained. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to aver a performance of all conditions upon her part to be kept and performed. It was necessary for her, then, to plead performance of all promissory warranties, but it was not necessary for her to plead the truth of an affirmative warranty of title. Cowan v. Insurance Co., 78 Cal. 181, 20 Pac. 408. Still it was obligatory for plaintiff to show by her pleading that she had an insurable interest, and this she undertook to do by the averment touching her title. Defendant, however, by a separate defense, pleaded the warranty as to title, and the falsity of it, in avoidance of its liability. Since this new matter is taken as controverted under our laws of pleading, any defense to it by way of replication was open to plaintiff without pleading, and it was, therefore, permissible for her to show that there never had been such a warranty, and that it had been waived at the time of the delivery of the policy. That the warranty could be waived in the manner indicated, is settled in this state. Farnum v. Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 260, 23 Pac. 869; Kruger v. Insurance Co., 72 Cal. 95, 13 Pac. 156; West Coast Lumber Co. v. State Inv. & Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 502, 33 Pac. 258. And upon the precise question of the waiver of a warranty as to sole and unconditional ownership, see Long Island Ins. Co. v. Great Western Mfg. Co. (Kan. App.) 42 Pac. 740. Notwithstanding the fact, then, that plaintiff's interest in the property was not that of a sole and unconditional owner, nevertheless she did have an insurable interest which will support her action. The court found that she was damaged by the fire in the amount of the policy, and gave her judgment accordingly. No exception is taken to this finding, and it is conclusive upon the question in this appeal. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

KNARSTON v. MANHATTAN LIFE INS. CO. (S. F. 1,114.)<sup>1</sup>

LIFE INSURANCE — NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUMS — WAIVER OF FORFEITURE—POWERS OF GENERAL AGENT — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. A general agent may waive a forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums by extending the time of their payment, in the absence of knowledge by insured that the agent has no such authority.

2. Notice to pay a premium due on the 15th of the month was given to insured, but the general agent, on the 16th, extended the time to the 24th. Insured, who did not pay on the 24th, promised to pay in a day or two, but did not pay a collector who called on him on the 27th, and no other efforts were made to collect the premium. The general agent testified that he would have received the premium at any time prior to the death of insured, which occurred on the 2d of the following month. Held sufficient to show a waiver of forfeiture for nonpayment of premium.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Alice L. Knarston against the Manhattan Life Insurance Company. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John H. Durst, for appellant. James M. Allen, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action brought to recover upon a policy of life insurance. The defense is that the policy had become forfeited prior to the death of the insured by reason of the nonpayment of the fourth semiannual premium. The policy contained the usual forfeiture clause upon failure occurring in the payment of premiums when due. The defendant company, being a New York corporation, was required by the laws of that state to give a written notice to the insured, at a stated time before the premium became due and payable, notifying him of the fact that such premium would become due and payable upon a certain date. The giving of this notice was made by the law of New York a condition precedent to the forfeiture of the policy. It is conceded that in this case the notice was given.

The facts giving rise to this litigation are as follows: The fourth semiannual payment became due upon November 15, 1895. Upon that day the general manager of the company sent his collector to Knarston, the insured, to collect the premium, but Knarston was absent from his place of business. This fact was reported to the general manager, whereupon the collector was again sent, upon November 16th, to collect the premium. One Gilmor, representing Knarston, thereupon went to see Landers, the general manager and agent of the company, in reference to the matter, stating to Landers that Knarston desired an extension until November 24th in which to pay the premium. Landers then stated, in substance, that such extension would be given. Upon November 25th the collector was again sent to collect the premium, and Knarston thereupon promised to pay it that day or make some arrangement in reference to the matter. Upon November 27th the collector was again sent upon the same errand, but failed to get the money. Nothing further was done, and upon December 2d the insured was killed in a railroad accident.

There are but two important questions involved upon this appeal, the first one being: May a general agent of an insurance company waive the conditions of a policy and extend the time of payment of a premium? This question presents but little difficulty in solution, and must be answered in the affirmative. Bacon on Benefit Societies and Life Insurance (section 426) states the true rule when he says: "A general agent has power, unless specially restricted by limitations and instructions communicated to parties dealing with him, to waive or dispense with any of the conditions of the policy; and the company is liable for all acts done by him in the course of his employment. He may waive conditions either in writing or verbally." It will thus be observed that, whatever the restrictions placed upon the powers of a general agent by the company may be, unless those restrictions are brought home to the insured the company is bound by the acts of the general agent. The waiver of conditions in a policy of life insurance by the general agent is within his apparent scope and authority, and, in the absence of notice to the contrary, parties dealing with such agent have the right to assume that all general powers rest with him. In this country, where these companies carry on business in almost every state in the Union through the instruments of general agents, such of necessity should be the law. We find ample authority to support the text of the author from which we have quoted. Silverberg v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 36, 7 Pac. 38; Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222; Insurance Co. v. Hayden's Adm'r, 90 Ky. 39, 13 S. W. 585; Murphy v. Insurance Co., 3 Baxt. 440; Palmer v. Insurance Co., 84 N. Y. 63. It is said in Joyce on Insurance (section 536): "In general it may be stated that it is conceded that a general agent may, in the absence of known limitations on his authority, waive a forfeiture as well as the company." It is apparent from the foregoing authorities that it is not sufficient upon the part of the defendant to show that Landers had no authority to waive conditions in the policy, but to such a showing must be joined the all-important fact that the insured, Knarston, knew of the limitations placed upon Landers' authority. There is an entire absence of any such showing in this record. Indeed, it appears affirmatively that the insured had no such notice.

It is next contended upon the part of the appellant that defendant waived the payment of the premium at the time it became due under the policy, and hence there was no forfeiture of the policy at the date of Knarston's death. After careful consideration, we have concluded this contention has full support in the law. The law does not like forfeitures, and evidence tending to show the waiver of a forfeiture will be looked upon with kindly eyes. While the time for payment of premiums is a pure matter of contract between the parties, and such time may not be extended by the courts, still forfeitures will be avoided upon any reasonable showing. The amount of evidence demanded to establish a forfeiture is much greater than is needed to establish a waiver. Again, there need be no direct and specific agreement to waive the forfeiture. A waiver may be implied by the acts and conduct of the parties. Speaking directly to this question, it is said in Titus v. Insurance Co., 81 N. Y. 419: "But it may be asserted broadly that if in any negotiations or transactions with the assured, after knowledge of the forfeiture, it recognized the continued validity of the policy, or does acts based thereon, or required the insured, by virtue thereof, to do some act or incur some trouble or expense, the forfeiture, as matter of law, is waived; and it is now settled in this court, after some differences of opinion, that such a waiver need not be based upon any new agreement or an estoppel." Again, it is said in Hanley v. Association, 4 Mo. App. 253: "Regard must be had to the element of reciprocity. If a company keeps things open so that it can at any time claim its rights to premiums, why should not the policy be regarded as existing in respect to its liabilities?"

* * * If the forfeiture, whether full or partial, occurs eo instante, the insurer should act accordingly. If his own acts show that he does not regard it as having so occurred, he cannot complain that those acts are made evidence against him. It is no hardship that he should be made to take one ground or the other." Joyce says: "As a general rule, if the company has treated the policy as valid, and has sought to enforce payment of the premium, or has otherwise, with knowledge, recognized by its own acts or declarations, or those of its agents, the policy as still subsisting, it waives thereby prior forfeitures." Joyce, Ins. § 1370. A waiver was held in Robinson v. Insurance Co., 18 Hun, 395, the court saying: "Down almost to the time of the destruction of the property by fire the defendant was making vigorous attempts to collect the premium on the last renewal, and showed no sign of an intention to take advantage of the conditions in the policy which made it void, but one quite to the contrary, of continuing the policy and collecting the consideration for so doing." The identical principle here discussed was under consideration in Murray v. Association, 90 Cal. 406, 27 Pac. 309, and it is there said: "And the rule is firmly established in this class of cases that when an insurance company, after knowledge of any default for which it might terminate the contract, enters into negotiations or transactions with the assured which recognize the continued validity of the policy and treat it as still in force, the right to claim a forfeiture for such previous default is waived,"—citing cases.

Tested by the foregoing authorities, there can be but one conclusion arrived at in this case, and that is a waiver of the forfeiture is disclosed by the evidence. The express promise of the general agent to extend the time of payment of the premium to November 24th left the policy in full force and effect to that time. If the insured had died during that extension, there could be no question but that the company would have been liable. Indeed, respondent's counsel admitted such liability at the oral argument. The notice served upon the insured under the provisions of the New York law was to the effect that the policy would be forfeited upon November 15th if the premium was not paid, yet it is conceded that the forfeiture at that time was waived by the 10-day extension. Was the right of forfeiture exercised by the company upon the 24th of November or thereafter? There surely was no exercise of the right of forfeiture at that time; for upon the 25th the defendant attempted to collect the premium, and likewise attempted to collect it upon the 27th. By these acts of defendant it is plain that it considered the policy in full force and effect upon both the 25th and the 27th. The insured was killed upon December 2d. Between the 24th of November and the 2d of December, by no word, deed, act, or sign did the defendant indicate that the policy was forfeited. Upon the contrary, everything that was said or done by defendant during that time indicates that it deemed the policy to be in full force and effect. The general agent himself testifies that he would have accepted the premium at the hands of the insured if paid at any time before Knarston's death. This statement is strong evidence against defendant's present position. It casts a strong light upon the mind of the defendant, and shows almost conclusively that it did not exercise the right to claim a forfeiture prior to Knarston's death, but, upon the contrary, considered the policy as alive and in full force and effect. The cases all hold that under such circumstances as presented here the insurance company may not blow both hot and cold at the same time. In other words, it cannot be allowed to say that the policy was canceled prior to Knarston's death, and at the same time declare that it was ready and willing to accept the premium at any moment before his death. If the policy was canceled, it had no right to reanimate it by the mere acceptance of a premium. The defendant has no right to say, "Knarston having met with sudden death, the policy is canceled because the premium was not paid;" and in the same breath also say, "If Knarston had not met such death, we would not have considered the policy canceled, but would have accepted the premium if offered."

Much stress is laid by respondent upon the written notice served upon the insured prior to November 15th, as required by the laws of the state of New York. That notice was simply a condition precedent to the forfeiture of the policy. The serving of the notice in no way or degree barred the company from thereafter waiving the forfeiture, if it felt so disposed. And that the forfeiture was waived for the space of 10 days after November 15th cannot be denied. The promise to give a 10 days' extension of time in which to pay the premium accomplished the result. The fact that this promise was made upon November 16th, the day after the premium became due, is immaterial. It is said in Insurance Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 241: "On the other hand, if the agreement be made after the note matures, such agreement is itself a recognition on the company's part of the continued existence of the policy, and consequently of its election to waive the forfeiture." Conceding, upon the expiration of the 10 days' extension, that the forfeiture would take place in the presence of nonaction upon the part of the parties to the contract, still we have no such case. Defendant thereafter treated the contract of insurance as still in force. By its conduct it affirmatively indicated that as yet it did not insist upon a forfeiture. Aside from the original notice, the effect of which has been entirely neutralized by its subsequent conduct, the defendant indicated no intention during Knarston's life of claiming a forfeiture. After Knarston's death, in view of its previous conduct, it was too late to make the claim. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

DAVITT et al. v. AMERICAN BAKERS' UNION, NO. 51. et al. (S. F. 1,177.)

CONSPIRACY—EQUITABLE RELIEF—PLEADING.

1. As against a special demurrer, a complaint to enjoin a boycott of a private business, and for damages, is bad, which merely alleges that defendants have conspired to injure plaintiffs' business, and by force and threats have attempted to intimidate plaintiffs' workmen and prevent them from working, and to compel plaintiffs to discharge them, and that defendants have in various ways attempted to destroy plaintiffs' business, and threatened to destroy it, and does not show the particular threats made, or force used, or the character of menace exercised.

2. An allegation in such complaint that to prevent plaintiffs from carrying on their business, and to keep persons from dealing with them, defendants maliciously distributed false circulars in front of plaintiffs' place of business, without setting out their substance, is insufficient as against a special demurrer.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Davitt & Daly against the American Bakers' Union, No. 51, and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order dissolving a preliminary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

M. Cooney, for appellants. Geo. W. Monteith, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. Action for damages and perpetual injunction. A general and special demurrer was interposed to the complaint and sustained. Plaintiffs declined to amend, and judgment went against them. This appeal is from the judgment, and also from the order dissolving the temporary injunction. A verified answer was filed with the demurrer. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs were co-partners carrying on the bakery business; "that for the purpose of injuring plaintiffs' business, and to compel them to discharge their employes, defendants have for more than sixty days last past resolved upon and conspired together, * * * and to that end and for that purpose defendants have attempted, by force, menace, and threats, to intimidate said workmen, and to prevent them from working for the plaintiffs." It is further alleged that defendants have likewise attempted, by force, menaces, and threats, to compel the plaintiffs to discharge said employes; that defendants in various ways have maliciously attempted to destroy the said business of plaintiffs, and still threaten the destruction of plaintiffs' business. It is further alleged "that the said defendants during said period have maliciously continued to publish, or caused to be printed and published, distributed, and circulated, false and malicious publications and circulars upon the said premises of the plaintiffs, and in front of and in the vicinity of their said place of business, for the purpose of preventing them to carry on their said business, and to prevent persons from dealing with them, as well as to intimidate both the plaintiffs and their employes in their conduct of the business and in the performance of their work, and they threaten to continue to do so."

In the face of the demurrer interposed in this case, the complaint must fall. Possibly the complaint is not sufficient to stand, even against a general demurrer; but, however that may be, it surely is too weak to stand an attack made upon it by a special demurrer. This complaint deals in generalities throughout, and the rule for drafting a pleading which asks for the interposition of equitable relief demands a statement of the specific facts upon which relief is sought. Inferences, generalities, presumptions, and conclusions have no place in such a pleading. Conceding the formation of a conspiracy is charged, having for its object a common design and purpose, still we find no statement in the bill as to any specific overt acts done by defendants in pursuance of that design and purpose. A conspiracy, however atrocious, clous its purpose, is not the subject of a civil action, for it does not damage. Herron v. Hughes, 25 Cal. 560. There is no allegation whatever showing the particular threats defendants made, what amount or kind of force defendants used, what kind or character of menace was exercised, or how the business was to be boycotted.

The allegation as to the acts of defendants in printing and circulating false publications and circulars is somewhat more specific than anything else we find in the pleading; yet that allegation is not broad enough. The substance, at least, of these publications and circulars, should have been set out in the pleading. The pleading should show the nature of the publication. The defendants and the court are entitled to know the character of the publication. Perchance, upon its face it may not have been injurious, it may not have been malicious, and it may not have been false. For these reasons the bill should have been explicit in setting forth substantially the contents of these publications. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

GOLDSTONE v. MERCHANTS' ICE & COLD-STORAGE CO. (S. F. 737.)

WAREHOUSEMEN — RECEIPTS — SALES — BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

1. Under St. 1878, p. 949, requiring warehousemen to issue receipts for goods stored with them, and to deliver the goods only on presentation of the receipt, if it be negotiable, or, if nonnegotiable, on the written order of the person to whom the receipt was issued, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 33, providing that compliance with the law shall be prima facie presumed, a purchaser of goods stored in a warehouse is not put on inquiry as to outstanding warehouse receipts therefor by an order on the warehouseman, given him by the seller, directing the warehouseman to deliver "the following goods: Storage receipt No. E, * * *; storage receipt No. B, * * *,"—and reciting that no goods are delivered without a receipt properly filled out.

2. On an issue whether the buyer of goods stored in a warehouse was an innocent purchaser, within Civ. Code, § 1142, providing that a purchaser of goods in good faith in the ordinary course of business for value from one to whom the owner has transferred possession shall acquire the title of the former owner, it appeared that the seller had taken the buyer to the warehouse, and, with the assistance of an employé of the warehouseman, had exhibited the goods, and that, on completing the sale, he gave the buyer an order for them on the warehouseman, which the buyer exhibited to the warehouseman, who told him that he had received a duplicate thereof from the seller. The warehouseman did not inform the seller that anybody else had claims against the goods, and rendered him a bill for storage due, which was paid. Part of the goods the warehouseman delivered to the buyer, and the balance he refused to deliver, because they were the property of a third person. The seller had bought the goods from such third person, giving his note therefor, which was indorsed as secured by the goods in question; but he testified that those words were not on it when he gave the note, that he paid part of the price, that the balance was to be paid on delivery of the goods, and that the seller's vendor had a lot of goods in the warehouse, and he purchased as much thereof as he could sell, receiving from the vendor an order therefor, which he sent to the warehouseman, and when he sold the goods in question he gave the warehouseman a duplicate of the order given the buyer, whereupon the warehouseman separated the goods sold from the remaining goods of his vendor. Held, that it was error to nonsuit the purchaser in an action to recover the goods from the warehouseman.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles Goldstone against the Merchants' Ice & Cold-Storage Company. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Naphtaly, Friederich & Ackerman, for appellant. Dorn & Dorn and Fox & Gray, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. The action is to recover the possession of certain 18 boxes of dressed turkeys (3,800 pounds), or the value thereof, if delivery cannot be had. The answer alleges that the turkeys were deposited with defendant by one Hoerr, in his own name, for safe-keeping, and were the property of said Hoerr and one Clements, partners as Clements & Hoerr. Plaintiff was nonsuited at the close of his evidence, and judgment for defendant was entered accordingly. The appeal is from that judgment upon a bill of exceptions containing the evidence. Appellant claims that the judgment was erroneous for two reasons: (1) The evidence shows title and right of possession in plaintiff. (2) Defendant is estopped from denying plaintiff's title.

1. A nonsuit should be denied where the evidence and the presumptions reasonably arising therefrom are legally sufficient to prove the material allegations of the complaint. De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 117; McKee v. Greene, 31 Cal. 418; Alvarado v. De Celis, 54 Cal. 588; Felton v. Millard, 81 Cal. 540, 21 Pac. 533, and 22 Pac. 750; Higgins v. Ragsdale, 83 Cal. 219, 23 Pac. 316. The proof must be sufficient to raise more than a mere surmise or conjecture that the fact is as alleged, and must be such that a rational mind can draw from it the conclusion that the fact exists. Janin v. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100. It has also been held that, whenever the evidence introduced by plaintiff so conclusively establishes a defense as that the court might properly grant a new trial in case of a verdict in his favor upon like evidence, the court may direct a judgment by way of nonsuit. McQuilken v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 7. On January 29, 1895, defendant had on storage at its warehouse in San Francisco a lot of dressed turkeys. One Dunbar, of the firm of J. W. Dunbar & Co., engaged in the commission business, notified dealers on that day that he had a lot of turkeys in defendant's warehouse, and invited their examination. Plaintiff and one Miller, among others, went with Dunbar to examine the turkeys, accompanied by an employé of defendant, who opened the cases containing the turkeys for their inspection. Upon coming out of the cold-storage room of the warehouse, Dunbar sold to plaintiff and Miller, each, a lot of these turkeys at 12½ cents per pound, and on that day made entry on his books of the sale. Plaintiff said he would take about 5,000 pounds. He testified: "I asked Dunbar if that meant cash, and he said that I could have a little time on it. I told him that, when he would give me the bill, I would pay a portion the middle of the month, and the balance at the end of the month of February. About the 5th of February we met, and he handed me a bill for the turkeys. I thereupon gave him my note for the amount, payable in 30 days, and on the 8th of February I paid him upon the note $200. When I gave him the note, he gave me an order on the cold-storage company." Plaintiff's note, dated February 5, 1895, to J. W. Dunbar & Co., for $503.62, due 30 days after date, showing a payment of $200 on February 8th, is in evidence. Dunbar & Co. gave plaintiff the order on the defendant February 5th, which reads:

"Please deliver to C. Goldstone the following goods: Storage receipt No. E 55, 14 boxes Gob. 3380, tare 507-2873. Storage receipt No. B, 6 Bxs. Hens, 1310-14-1156. J. W. Dunbar & Co., M.

"No goods delivered without a receipt properly filled out."

Plaintiff testified that on receipt of this order he went to defendant, and informed the bookkeeper, and was told that they were aware of it, as they had received a duplicate from Dunbar. Dunbar testified that after the sale to plaintiff defendant segregated plaintiff's turkeys, and marked them "E 55"; that this was done before he gave plaintiff the order, and it is inferable that it was done on the 29th of January, when the sale was made, for in the record is a bill for storage rendered by defendant to plaintiff bearing that date, in which the packages are referred to as marked "E 55," and the bill shows that plaintiff paid defendant storage from January 29th to March 29th, two months, $46.90. Some question was raised as to whether plaintiff should pay storage for any part of January, for the reason that Dunbar claimed to have paid storage for that month. But it is reasonably deducible that defendant treated the sale as made January 29th, and that the packages were then segregated, and marked for plaintiff "E 55," while Miller's were marked "A 55." Plaintiff testified: "On the 1st of March I called on the storage company for some turkeys, and received two cases. I made no payment to them when I got this lot of turkeys. They delivered them on my order. The first time they informed me of the claim that there was 10 cents payable on those turkeys was on the 7th or 8th of March. I went there at that time, and demanded my turkeys. I was refused, and they said I would have to pay 10 cents a pound if I wanted any more turkeys. I asked the reason why, and they said those turkeys are not paid for yet. I told him I had paid for them, and I asked him why he had sent me the cold-storage bill, and they said that made no difference; that if I wanted law to go ahead." Defendant at no time told plaintiff that any person other than Dunbar & Co. owned or claimed the turkeys. Plaintiff further testified that he had not been notified of any claim on the turkeys before that time. "I went in the office in front, and said, 'I want two cases of turkeys,' and they said, 'All right; send your drayman.' I said, 'I want from E 55 one case of hens and one case of gobblers.' * * * I did not pay 10 cents a pound for them, and if anybody else did I did not know it. Those were the only turkeys I took out until the suit was filed."

Defendant claims that Dunbar & Co. had no title, and therefore plaintiff got none; that Dunbar had made a conditional purchase from Hoerr, who, it is claimed, was the real owner, on which Dunbar had paid but 2½ cents per pound, and there was still due 10 cents per pound, to secure which Hoerr had a lien on the turkeys. The evidence on this point is given by Dunbar, plaintiff's only other witness. He testified that he bought the Goldstone and Miller turkeys from Hoerr. On cross-examination he testified: "I bought them on the 29th of January. There was no specific amount stated at the time,—any amount that I could sell. I paid 12½ cents per pound. I paid 2½ cents, leaving 10 cents per pound unpaid. The only portion of the remaining 10 cents per pound which I paid was on account of withdrawals from the cold-storage company or parts of the goods. When the people to whom I sold them wanted some of the goods, I went to the cold-storage company, and paid the 10 cents per pound from time to time, in order to release them. On the goods that were in the cold-storage company at the commencement of this suit I have not paid any portion of the 10 cents per pound." On redirect examination he testified: "I gave to Mr. Hoerr, for the balance of what I owed him on account of those turkeys, my note." This note is for $966, and is dated January 29, 1895, payable March 30, 1895, to order of F. J. Hoerr, at Anglo-California Bank, and is in the usual form, signed J. W. Dunbar & Co. After the signature at the bottom of the note is the following: "Secured by poultry in refrigerators." Witness testified that he didn't think this was on the note when he signed it, but was not certain. He said, however, if it was there, he didn't see it. He further testified that he paid defendant on March 1st $40 for the release of two cases of turkeys for Goldstone, and that "at the time I gave the note to Mr. Hoerr it was understood that the 10 cents per pound was to be paid on delivery of the poultry." There is no evidence that plaintiff knew of this payment, and he testified that he did not. Dunbar also testified: "Some two or three days after the dealers were there to look at the turkeys, as stated, Mr. Hoerr gave me an order, and I sent it to the cold-storage company." And, as already stated, he testified that Hoerr had sold him such of his turkeys as he (Dunbar) could sell. It clearly appears, we think, that plaintiff purchased from Dunbar & Co. in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and paid the consideration in full; for the evidence tends to show that the note given for the balance was in payment, and was so received. There is no evidence from which it can be said that plaintiff knew or was in any wise warned that there was any claim upon the turkeys by any person other than Dunbar & Co., except it may have been by defendant for storage, and this claim plaintiff paid. In the order given by Dunbar & Co. upon defendant to deliver the turkeys to plaintiff was written: "No goods delivered without a receipt properly filled out." This obviously meant only that defendant must take a receipt for turkeys as delivered to plaintiff, as evidence of delivery.

Respondent claims that this meant to give plaintiff notice, and put him upon inquiry as to the outstanding warehouse receipts issued by defendant to Hoerr; and it is claimed that a presumption arises that defendant duly issued receipts as a warehouseman, and dealt with the goods strictly pursuant to the act of 1878. St. 1878, p. 949, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 33. This act contemplates two classes of receipts, (1) negotiable and (2) non-negotiable; and, in case of the latter class, the warehouseman may deliver the goods upon the written order of the person to whom the receipt has issued. In the former case, he can deliver goods only upon presentation of the receipt and indorsement thereon of the goods delivered. We cannot presume that Hoerr's receipt was of the former class. His giving Dunbar an order for the goods would imply, rather, that the receipt of defendant, if there was one, was of the latter class. In the order given to plaintiff are found the words, "Storage receipt No. E 55," and "Storage receipt No. B," and it is claimed that these clauses had reference to the defendant's outstanding warehouse receipts, which it was plaintiff's duty to look after and surrender, and, if he had done so, he would have learned of Hoerr's claim. I do not think the words imposed any such duty. They are vague, and convey no information to the holder, however intelligible they may have been to the warehouseman. The reference to "receipt No. E 55" was plainly to the segregated lot purchased by plaintiff, and it is impossible to say what "storage receipt B" referred to. We think these references were not such as to put plaintiff on notice or inquiry as insisted by defendant.

Dunbar's testimony as to his purchase from and payment to Hoerr is somewhat confused and contradictory. The motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom (Wright v. Roseberry, 81 Cal. 87, 22 Pac. 336; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 309, 27 Pac. 737); and I think, upon such motion, the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant. I think, also, that the rules as to nonsuit are the same whether the trial is by the court or by a jury. Dunbar testified, in effect, that he bought the turkeys from Hoerr, paid 2½ cents per pound cash, and gave his note for the balance, and that two or three days after the purchase Hoerr gave him an order (presumably for the turkeys), and he sent it to defendant. On February 5th Dunbar sent defendant a duplicate of his order to plaintiff for lot E 55. Hoerr must have known of the sale to plaintiff, for Dunbar testified that he bought from Hoerr such as he had found market for. Dunbar's note to Hoerr contained a statement, after the signature: "Secured by poultry in refrigerators." But we think the inference from Dunbar's evidence is a reasonable one that this clause was not there when the note was signed, and ought not to be accepted as proving a conditional sale, or that right of control and possession had not been given to Dunbar. Besides, the clause does not necessarily refer to these turkeys. It may have referred to other poultry. If Hoerr took Dunbar's note in payment, as may be inferred from Dunbar's evidence, and put Dunbar in control of the turkeys, by giving him an order for them, I think, on a motion for nonsuit, the court should have accepted that statement which was most favorable to plaintiff, rather than the other one, by Dunbar, that it was understood between the two that Dunbar was to pay 10 cents per pound as the turkeys were removed. If there was such an understanding, why was the note given at all? Is it not probable that defendant understood the control of the property to have passed to Dunbar since defendant segregated it from the other property of Hoerr, and marked it for plaintiff, and collected storage from him?

Appellant invokes section 1142, Civ. Code. It provides: "Where the possession of personal property, together with a power to dispose thereof, is transferred by its owner to another person, an executed sale by the latter, while in possession, to a buyer in good faith, and in the ordinary course of business, for value, transfers to such buyer the title of the former owner." I do not understand that the possession mentioned necessarily means actual, exclusive, manual possession. Where the property is in the hands of a bailee, it is sufficient to transfer the right of possession, subject, of course, to the bailee's lien. It seems to us that a fair and reasonable view of the evidence warrants our holding that this section applies to the case in hand. Respondent contends that plaintiff was not a buyer in good faith, and in the ordinary course of business, because he must be presumed to have known that there was an outstanding receipt, issued by defendant, which plaintiff ought to have gotten possession of. But we have seen that no such presumption arises from any evidence in the case. Nor is it true that the sale was not executed, for everything was done that Dunbar and plaintiff could do to complete the sale, and leave the property with the bailee, which they had the right to do. There was payment. There was the order of Dunbar, and its acceptance by defendant, and a segregation of the property from other of Hoerr's property, and a partial delivery agreeably to the transfer. And so, also, was there possession so far as necessary.

This branch of the case is elaborately and learnedly argued by counsel for defendant, occupying the most of a 90-page brief. It is altogether possible that the facts of the case, if they were all brought out, would show that in law plaintiff ought not to, and cannot, recover; but we cannot resist the conclusion that defendant should, upon the showing made by plaintiff, be put to its proof. The evidence of Hoerr and the warehousemen may clear away many doubts which now present themselves, and which, under the rules of law, we feel bound to resolve in favor of plaintiff on the motion.

2. Appellant presents numerous and plausible, and in some respects cogent, reasons for holding defendant to be estopped by its conduct from escaping liability by pleading Hoerr's ownership of the property. We avoid a consideration of this point, although much urged by plaintiff, as we do not wish to forestall its determination at the retrial. On the whole case, it seems to us that, if it had gone to a jury on plaintiff's evidence, and a verdict had been rendered for plaintiff, the evidence would have been sufficient to support a judgment upon the verdict, and hence it was error to grant the nonsuit. The judgment should be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

McDERMONT et al. v. ANAHEIM UNION WATER CO. et al. (L. A. 529.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1899.)

WATER COMPANIES—ISSUE OF ADDITIONAL SHARES—INJUNCTION—PLEADING—DEMURRER—DEFENSES ADMISSIBLE.

1. Allegations, in a complaint against a corporation, of facts peculiarly within defendant's knowledge, may be upon information and belief, although defendant's records containing such facts were open to plaintiff's inspection.

2. In a suit by stockholders of a water company to enjoin the issue of additional shares, allegations that the amendment of the articles to allow such issue has never been adopted by a vote of holders of the third of the stock, and that no notice of an intention to make such amendment had been advertised in any newspaper published in the town or county in which the company's principal place of business is located, which follow the language of Civ. Code, § 362, are sufficient, as against a general demurrer, to show that that section has not been complied with.

3. Where the complaint, by the stockholders of a water company, to enjoin the issue of additional shares, does not show on its face that any of the respondents were bona fide purchasers of such shares, that defense cannot be made under a demurrer.

4. A defense of laches, not appearing in the complaint, cannot be made under a demurrer.

5. The defense of estoppel on grounds not appearing in the complaint cannot be made under a demurrer.

6. An unexplained delay of 40 days after the filing of amended articles of incorporation of a water company, before a suit by stockholders to enjoin the issue of additional stock in accordance therewith, is not laches per se.

7. Where a suit by stockholders of a water company to enjoin the sale of additional shares of stock, under an amendment of the articles of incorporation, is based on the theory that the amendment is absolutely void, there need be no offer to return money paid for such shares.

8. In a suit by stockholders of a water company to enjoin the issue of additional shares of stock, brought against the company and those to whom such stock had been issued, where the complaint does not show that any consideration had been paid for such stock, a defense of failure to tender back money paid therefor cannot be raised by demurrer.

9. In a suit by stockholders of a mutual water company to enjoin the issue of additional shares of stock, it is error to strike from the complaint allegations that plaintiffs' land required all the water to which they were entitled, and that at all times all of the water controlled by the company was necessary to supply the original stockholders.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

Suit by A. McDermont and others against the Anaheim Union Water Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

E. E. Keech, for appellants. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, Cochran & Williams, A. E. Nolt, R. Melrose, and J. D. Pope, for respondents.

GRAY, C. In this case a motion to strike out portions of the complaint was granted, and a demurrer to the complaint sustained, and, the plaintiffs refusing to amend, the defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The plaintiffs in this case are stockholders in the corporation defendant, and they bring this action to enjoin the defendants from disposing of any of the water of such defendant to any one other than bona fide stockholders in said corporation. The defendant corporation is formed for the purpose of supplying water for hydraulic irrigation and domestic uses to its stockholders, and within the limits of a certain 12,000 acres of land in Los Angeles county. It is not organized for the purpose of profit or for the purpose of distributing dividends to its stockholders, but solely for the purpose of owning and controlling water in ditches and reservoirs, the sole beneficial use of said water being vested in the stockholders. McFadden v. Board, 74 Cal. 571, 16 Pac. 397.

The complaint contains the usual allegations as to the incorporation of defendant, the purpose for which it was formed, etc., and then alleges, in substance, among other things, that the directors of the corporation (who are also made defendants) on the 7th of November, 1896, adopted resolutions to amend the articles or certificate of incorporation so as to increase the land to which it should supply water to 13,055 acres, by including 1,055 acres contiguous to the original 12,000 acres in the description of lands contained in the articles, to which water was to be supplied. The complaint also states that on May 17, 1897, the articles of incorporation as amended were filed in the office of the county clerk, and a certified copy thereof in the office of the secretary of state; that these amended articles had never been approved or adopted by the vote or written consent of stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock; that a new issue of some 370 shares of stock in the corporation had followed the amendment of the articles, and that such new issue of stock had been sold to various parties, who are also made defendants herein, and that, unless restrained from so doing, the defendants will divert a ratable portion of the waters of the corporation to these new stockholders for use upon the lands added by the amendment of the articles to the original district embraced in the original articles of incorporation, and the plaintiffs will thereby be deprived of a portion of the water which is necessary to irrigate their lands.

The first reason urged why the demurrer was properly sustained is that certain material allegations of the complaint were made on information and belief. Section 446 of the Code of Civil Procedure seems to contemplate that the averments of a pleading may be based on information and belief, and it would seem that where the allegations of a complaint relate to facts, as they do in this case, the truth of which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendants, there can be no valid objection to their being based on information and belief. The fact that the records of the corporation were open to the inspection of plaintiffs does not affect this rule, for the reason that such records may be contradicted if they do not speak the truth.

The allegation of the complaint, "that the amendment to the articles * * * has never been adopted or approved by a vote or written consent of the stockholders of said corporation representing at least two-thirds of the subscribed capital stock thereof, nor has any notice of the intention to make said amendment been advertised in any newspaper published in the town or county in which the principal place of business of said corporation is located," follows the language of section 362 of the Civil Code, and is a sufficient allegation to show that that section was not complied with, in the face of any objection that can be urged against it on a general demurrer.

The complaint, on its face, does not show that any of the respondents were innocent purchasers of the new issue of stock in good faith, for value, and without notice. If there exists any such defense as that, it must be pleaded in the usual way; it cannot be taken advantage of by demurrer in this case.

The defenses of laches and estoppel are affirmative defenses in their nature, and the facts showing their existence must be set out in an answer, as they do not appear from the complaint. An unexplained delay in bringing this suit for 40 days after the filing of the amended articles of incorporation cannot be held to be laches per se.

The complaint is drawn on the theory, and its allegations show, that the attempted amendment to the articles of incorporation was an absolute nullity and void for noncompliance with the law, and that the issue and sale of stock was also an absolute nullity for the same reason. An offer to restore or a tender of money back is only necessary where it is sought to rescind or annul something. Here the plaintiffs ask to have that declared void which has on their statement been void from the beginning, and not merely voidable. The plaintiffs, so far as appears from the complaint, have received nothing on account of the sale of the stock, and therefore could not, in any event, be called on to restore anything. If there is any restoring to be done, the purchasers of the stock will have to look for that in the direction their money went, and if they have any defense at all, based on the absence of a tender or the want of an offer to restore, it will have to be incorporated in a proper pleading, along with the other defenses already referred to.

On motion, the court, by its order, struck out of the complaint the following, to wit: "And upon said lands plaintiffs have valuable walnut orchards and other trees which require all the water to which plaintiffs are entitled, as hereinafter alleged, to maintain them in a healthy, productive condition." "(5) That since the organization of said corporation, under and in accordance with its articles of incorporation as aforesaid, it has acquired water and water rights in the Santa Ana river amounting to a constant flow, where the same is taken from the Santa Ana river during the irrigating season, of from one thousand to two thousand miner's inches of water, measured under a pressure of four (4) inches." "(8) That at all times since the organization of said corporation all of the water owned and controlled by it has been necessary, during the summer months, to supply the stockholders of said corporation with water for their necessary irrigation and domestic uses."

These or similar allegations are the most common and most necessary in every complaint for the purpose of enjoining the illegal diversion of the plaintiffs' water. In striking them out, the complaint was left devoid of anything to show any water right in either the water company or the plaintiffs, as its stockholders. It must always be shown in a complaint, in an action of this character, that the water in controversy is necessary and useful to the plaintiff for some beneficial purpose. In striking out these allegations, the court erred. In the sixth paragraph of the complaint, the pleader evidently stated a conclusion of law, which he drew from the articles of incorporation and by-laws appearing elsewhere in the complaint, and this was properly stricken out. I advise that the judgment be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment appealed from is reversed.

In re RINGOT'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,483.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1899.)
EXECUTORS — APPOINTMENT BY WILL — COMPENSATION — MANNER OF PAYMENT.

1. An olographic will stated that testator desired a certain person to settle his estate. A codicil, which testator had kept separate from the will, stated that it was part of the will, and that on and after his death he wanted a certain person, other than the one named in the will, to have full charge of his estate, to receive all moneys, and to pay all bills for the term of seven years, for which he was to be paid a liberal sum each year. Held, that the codicil appointed the person therein named as executor in place of the one named in the will, under Civ. Code, § 1371, providing that, where it appears by a will that it was testator's intention to commit the execution thereof to a certain person, such person shall be entitled to letters testamentary, though he be not named as executor.

2. The provision of the codicil that the services of such person should continue for seven years, and that his compensation should be paid annually, did not constitute him an agent for a specific purpose, since it did not require the administration to be kept open for that time, and a testator may provide that the compensation of his executor shall be paid at stated intervals, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, fixing the compensation of executors where the will does not provide for it.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Ringot, deceased, E. D. Sawyer petitioned for letters testamentary, and from an order denying his petition, and appointing Herbert Nelson Taylor executor, he appeals. Affirmed.

John M. Burnett, for appellant. Briggs & Hudner, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Appeal from an order granting letters testamentary. The will of the decedent is olographic, bearing date June 11, 1896, and is as follows: "I, Joseph Ringot, of Hollister San Benito County State of California being of sound mind and understanding does make and declare this to be my last will, I have deeded to my wife Mary Belle Ringot her share of my estate. The remainder after all my just debts are paid I give and bequeath to the following named persons share and share alike [naming them]—I desire that E. D. Sawyer of San Francisco shall settle my estate. Hollister June 11th 1896. Joseph Ringot." December 31, 1897, he made a codicil thereto in the following terms: "On and after my Death I want Mr. Herbert Nelson Taylor to have full charge of my Estate to receive all moneys and pay all Bills for the terms of Seven years And to be paid a liberal sum each and every year This is a part of my will. Hollister Dec. 31st 1897. Joseph Ringot." The original will and the codicil were found in the desk of the deceased, each inclosed in a separate sealed envelope, and on the back of the envelope inclosing the codicil was indorsed, in the handwriting of the deceased, "On my death to be delivered to Herbert Nelson Taylor." The envelope inclosing the original will was addressed to Stephen L. Piper, a nephew of the deceased, who testified that the testator, about a year and a half before his death, told him that he would find his will in his desk, and that he was to deliver it to the appellant. After the death of the testator the appellant presented the will and codicil for probate, with a petition for letters testamentary, and a counter petition was presented by Mr. Taylor. The petitions were heard together, and the court admitted the two instruments to probate as constituting the last will of the deceased, and granted letters testamentary thereon to Taylor, and denied the appellant's petition. From this order the present appeal is taken, the appellant contending that the testator named Taylor only as an agent for specific purposes, and that the original appointment of the appellant as executor is not affected thereby.

In neither of the instruments does the testator name any person to be the executor of his will; but, if either of them had been presented for probate without the other, the court would have been authorized under the provisions of section 1371, Civ. Code, to grant letters testamentary to the person therein named. If the testator had made no other provision than that in the codicil for the exercise of the functions of an executor, the court would properly have determined that it was his intention that the respondent should be the executor of his will. His expression, "On and after my Death I want Herbert N. Taylor to have full charge of my Estate," sufficiently indicates his intention in this respect, and is fully as cogent as his declaration in the original will that he desired the appellant to "settle" his estate; and if each is to be construed as of equal import in determining the intention of the testator, the direction in the codicil must be held to supersede that in the original will. His declaration, "This is a part of my will," indicates that he intended that the respondent should exercise all the functions named in the codicil. He could not, however, have "full charge" of the estate, and "receive all moneys and pay all bills," if the appellant should receive letters testamentary; and the direction that he shall have such full charge "on and after my death" is inconsistent with the contention that the testator intended that the appellant should be appointed executor, with a direction to employ the respondent as his agent. This construction is not defeated by the subsequent provision, specifying a period for his services, and providing for his compensation. This clause does not require that the administration shall be kept open for seven years, and, if the estate shall be ready to be closed before the expiration of that time, the duties of the respondent will cease. Section 1618, Code Civ. Proc., implies that a testator may by his will provide compensation for his executor different from that provided by the statute, and no reason is suggested why he may not, under this provision, direct that his executor shall receive a portion of such compensation at stated intervals during the administration of the estate. No allowance therefore could be made without the approval of the court, and, as the court would at all times have the estate under its control, it could make such allowance from time to time as would be just, in view of the condition of the estate and the extent to which the administration had been completed. The order is affirmed.

CALLAHAN v. BRODERICK, City and County Auditor. (S. F. 1,373.)

PLEADING—DEMURRER—CONCLUSIONS—CERTAINTY.

Allegations that certain demands "are not lawful," "not allowed by law," "in excess of the amount legally due," and are claimed under unconstitutional legislation, and allegations that certain moneys were "illegally drawn from the fund," are all mere legal conclusions; and a complaint based thereon is demurrable for insufficiency of facts the objection not going merely to its certainty.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by T. H. Callahan against William Broderick, auditor of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Clarke, for appellant. H. T. Creswell, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Injunction. A demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained, and the court gave judgment for defendant, dismissing the action, from which plaintiff appeals. The amended complaint alleges that plaintiff is a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, and a taxpayer therein, and a contributor to and beneficiary of the fund mentioned in the complaint; that on July 7, 1897, the board of police relief and pension fund commissioners of said city and county "passed and approved, to wit, forty demands on said fund, among which are four demands which are not lawful demands on said fund, and defendant threatens to audit, and is about to audit, said four demands." Referring to these four demands, the complaint proceeds: "They are No. 878, for one hundred and sixty dollars, in favor of J. F. Moran; No. 839, in favor of John Short, for twenty-two dollars; No. 856, for one hundred and fifty dollars, in favor of G. Clinton; No. 857, for one hundred and fifty dollars, in favor of S. Pomeroy. The Moran demand is for expenses not allowed by law to be paid out of said fund, and does not show on its face the 'title, date, and section of the law under which it is drawn.' The Short demand is seventy-two dollars in excess of the amount legally due thereon. The Clinton and Pomeroy demands are drawn under section 13 of the pension law of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 59), and said section is unconstitutional and void because of special legislation, and many other reasons." The complaint then sets forth that William Alvord, R. J. Tobin, and M. A. Gunst constitute said board of commissioners, and allowed and approved said demands; that these commissioners theretofore allowed certain other demands to these same persons (Moran, Short, Clinton, and Pomeroy), for doing which the complaint charges that "they [the commissioners] are liable to the said city and county"; that defendant is about to audit the demands of said commissioners for their salaries, and it is alleged "that it is not lawful to audit said demands until said persons shall restore or cause to be restored to said fund the moneys unlawfully drawn from said fund with the approval and allowance of said commissioners, and they are liable therefor, under section 86, consolidation act (St. 1856, p. 170)." Upon the foregoing allegations it is sought to restrain defendant. The demurrer was (1) for insufficiency of facts; and (2) want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant or of the subject-matter. The latter ground is not urged.

As near as we can determine from the complaint, the restraining order is asked on two grounds: (1) Because defendant is about to audit the demands of Moran, Short, Clinton, and Pomeroy; and (2) because he is about to audit the salary demands of the commissioners.

As to the first of these demands, it is alleged that "they are not lawful"; that "the Moran demand is for expenses not allowed by law to be paid out of said fund"; that "the Short demand is seventy-two dollars in excess of the amount legally due thereon"; that "the Clinton and Pomeroy demands are drawn under section 13 of the pension law of 1889, and said section is unconstitutional and void, because of special legislation, and many other reasons." These allegations are nothing more than averments of legal conclusions. There are no averments of facts from which it can be determined whether the demands are or are not illegal or unauthorized. There is no statement of the character of the demands, from which it can be determined what they were for. The necessity for a statement of the facts essential to a right claimed is not obviated by averments of legal conclusions (Aurrecoechea v. Sinclair, 60 Cal. 532); for allegations of conclusions of law will be disregarded in considering objections raised by demurrer (Ohm v. City and County of San Francisco, 92 Cal. 437, 28 Pac. 580). A conclusion of law tenders no issue, and a complaint which depends upon such allegations is insufficient and demurrable. Branham v. Mayor, etc., 24 Cal. 585. The code provision requires a concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action, not such statement of the law governing it. Code Civ. Proc. § 426. Appellant replies that respondent ought not to be permitted to escape investigation on what is by appellant claimed to be a purely technical objection to the complaint, and that the objections go to its uncertainty, if at all, and not to its sufficiency. Most rules of pleading are technical, but they are founded in wisdom and justice, and orderly procedure imperatively demands their reasonable enforcement. The objection of uncertainty goes rather to the doubt as to what the pleader means by the facts alleged, not to the failure to allege sufficient facts. When the facts alleged are insufficient, the pleading is to be tested by general demurrer. Code Civ. Proc. § 430.

As to the salary demands of the said commissioners, the complaint is not less insufficient in its allegations of facts. Substantially all that is averred to support the complaint as to the commissioners is that they permitted moneys to be illegally drawn from a fund in their control, and for that reason it is unlawful for defendant to audit their claims for salary. It was certainly essential that some facts should have been set forth showing the nature and character of the claims alleged to have been illegally allowed by the commissioners, and which would in some degree, at least, tend to show why the commissioners became "liable to the said city and county." It was but a legal conclusion to allege that they became liable "under section 86, consolidation act," even if we may assume (what is not alleged) that the consolidation act referred to related to the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff no doubt seeks to restrain defendant by force of section 82 of that act, which prohibits the auditor from allowing a demand against the city "in favor of any person or officer in any manner indebted thereto." Whether the commissioners became "indebted" to the city by their alleged unlawful act, in the sense the term is used in that section, may admit of some question. As to this we express no opinion, nor upon the point as to whether the remedy be not against the commissioners upon their bonds, nor upon the further point suggested by counsel for respondent, that the term "indebted" implies a liquidated amount. We think the allegations raised no issue of fact. They were neither more nor less than averments of legal conclusions. We do not see how the court below could have done otherwise than sustain the demurrer, without violating well settled rules of pleading, and therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

McELDOWNEY v. MADDEN (PEOPLE, Interveners). (Sac. 475.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1899.)

ATTACHMENT—SUBSEQUENT ATTACHING CREDITOR—RIGHT TO INTERVENE.

Where a subsequent intervening attaching creditor alleged that plaintiff has no legal claim against defendant, that the writ issued by him was void, that the property attached by both was insufficient to pay intervenor's claim, and that defendant had not sufficient property to pay the claims of both, such facts establish his rights to intervene, and the denial of his application was error.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county.

Attachment by Jennie McEldowney against John Madden, in which the people of the state of California applied to intervene. From an order denying interveners' petition, they appeal. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald and John E. Raker, for the People. Jenks & Clafin, for respondent plaintiff. J. H. Stewart, for respondent defendant.

GRAY, C. This is an appeal by intervenor from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying appellant the right to intervene. The respondents have filed no brief. The plaintiff brought suit for $400, money had and received, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued and levied on the property of defendant. The defendant demurred, and while such demurrer was pending the appellant asked leave to file a complaint in intervention, in which it is alleged that appellant had begun an attachment suit against the defendant Madden on a bond given by him to the state of California, and, subsequent to the levy of attachment herein, had attached the same property levied on by plaintiff in this case. Facts are then stated showing that plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendant, that the writ of attachment herein is null and void, that the property attached is insufficient to pay intervenor's claim against the defendant, and that defendant has not sufficient property to pay both intervenor and plaintiff. The prayer of intervenor's complaint is that it be adjudged that defendant is not indebted to plaintiff, that the attachment herein is null and void, and that intervenor has a prior and superior lien on the property attached, etc. The court denied the motion to intervene, the demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and, the defendant refusing to answer, the plaintiff had judgment.

"That under our Code an attachment or execution creditor has a right to intervene, and, upon a proper showing, defeat the lien of a prior attaching creditor, we regard as too well settled to need further discussion." Opinion of Searls, C., in Kimball v. Richardson-Kimball Co., 111 Cal. 393, 43 Pac. 1111; Davis v. Eppinger, 18 Cal. 378; Speyer v. Ihmels, 21 Cal. 280; Coghill v. Marks, 29 Cal. 673; Coffey v. Greenfield, 55 Cal. 382. On the authorities cited it is clear that, under the facts alleged in the complaint in intervention, appellant was entitled to intervene. I advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to permit the complaint in intervention to be filed.

We concur: PRINGLE, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to permit the complaint in intervention to be filed.

HILTON v. CURRY, County Clerk. (S. F. 1,122.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 22, 1899.)

MANDAMUS—JURORS—CERTIFICATE OF ATTENDANCE —ISSUANCE—CLERK'S REFUSAL—NECESSITY —FEES—BY WHOM PAYABLE.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, authorizing mandamus to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, the writ does not lie to compel the county clerk, ex officio clerk of the superior court, to issue a certificate to a juror, stating his attendance, and the amount to which he is entitled therefor, since there is no statute imposing such duty.

2. The county of San Francisco was exempted from Act 1870, § 28, requiring the county clerk to issue certificates of attendance to jurors, by St. 1870, p. 680, and hence the production of such certificate is not a prerequisite to the prosecution of any remedy a juror in such county may have for the recovery of fees.

3. St. 1864, p. 365, providing that in the county of San Francisco the fees for jurors should be "for each cause two dollars, to be paid in civil cases by the successful party," was amended by St. 1866, p. 122, which declared that, if a cause occupied more than one day, jurors should receive two dollars for each day's attendance. St. 1895, p. 267, enacted to establish the fees of jurors throughout the state, declared that grand jurors or jurors in the superior court should receive two dollars for each day's attendance. Held, that the latter act did not repeal the former, and hence jurors' fees in the county of San Francisco in civil cases were still payable by the successful party, and not from the public treasury.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application by one Hilton for a writ of mandamus against one Curry, clerk of the superior court of San Francisco county, to compel the defendant to issue to him a certificate of his attendance as a juror of said court. From an order granting the writ, defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. J. Cresswell, for appellant. Barrett & O'Gara, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff was summoned to attend as a trial juror before the superior court of San Francisco, department No. 3 thereof, and in obedience thereto appeared and attended as such trial juror upon 20 days in the months of March and April, 1897, exclusive of days upon which he actually served as a juror in the trial of causes therein. During all this time this department of the superior court tried only civil cases. Thereafter he demanded from the defendant, who was the county clerk and ex officio clerk of said superior court, a certificate stating that he had so attended, and was entitled to be paid therefor the sum of $40, computed at the rate of $2 per day for each day's attendance. The defendant refused to give him this certificate, and he thereupon applied to the superior court for a writ of mandate commanding the defendant, as such clerk, to make and issue to him the said certificate. A demurrer to his petition was overruled by the court, and judgment was entered in his favor in accordance with his petition, from which the present appeal has been taken.

The writ of mandate is issued "to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station." Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. It is not alleged in the petition or contended by the respondent that there is any statute directing the county clerk to issue the certificate which was demanded of him,—the allegation in the petition being, "that it is necessary for the collection of said sum from the city and county that the defendant make and issue" the said certificate; and he states in his brief that this necessity arises out of the fact that the board of supervisors refuses to take action upon any claim for jurors' fees unless accompanied by such certificate. We are not cited to any provision of law making the presentation of such certificate a condition precedent to any action by the board of supervisors, and, in the absence of such provision, this requirement of the board would not defeat any right of recovery which the respondent might otherwise have. If the certificate is not authorized by statute, it could have no legal effect, and would be but the mere declaration of a fact which is capable of being shown by any other competent evidence. The cases of Jacobs v. Elliott, 104 Cal. 318, 37 Pac. 942, and Mason v. Culbert, 108 Cal. 249, 41 Pac. 464, cited by respondent, arose under section 28 of the act of 1870, as amended in 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 188), which expressly directed the clerk to issue such a certificate. This statute, however, both by section 52 thereof, and also by another act passed at the same session (St. 1870, p. 680), expressly excepted and exempted the city and county of San Francisco from its operation, and the above cases are consequently inapplicable here.

The right to compensation for service as a juror is purely statutory, and it is for the legislature to determine in what cases such compensation shall be made, as well as the amount and mode of payment; or it may withhold any compensation therefor. In the absence of any provision upon the subject, the juror cannot claim any compensation for his services, and he can in no case claim compensation to any greater amount, or from any other source, than is prescribed by statute. It has never been the legislative policy of this state that any portion of the jurors' fees in San Francisco should be paid out of the public treasury. The first statute upon this subject (St. 1850, p. 421) applied to the whole state, and provided, in substance, that the court which summoned a jury should, by its order, fix a certain amount to be allowed as a per diem to the jurors, and should assess a portion of this amount as a jury fee to be paid into court in each case by the prevailing party upon the rendition of the verdict, and that the clerk should distribute this amount equally among the jurors by whom the cause was tried. In the next year the legislature provided different fees for different counties in the state, and section 20 of the act (St. 1851, p. 35), which was applicable in San Francisco, fixed the fees of jurors as follows: "For the trial of each cause two dollars; which shall be paid by the party in whose favor the verdict is rendered before the same shall be entered." In 1855 both of the above statutes were repealed, and an act to regulate the fees of office was passed (St. 1855, p. 81), by which in the part thereof made applicable to San Francisco no provision was made for jurors' fees; and it was expressly declared by section 51: "No other fees shall be charged than those specially set forth herein, nor shall any fees be charged for any other services than those mentioned in this act." In 1864 an act was passed (St. 1864, p. 365) providing that in the city and county of San Francisco the fees of jurors should be "for each cause two dollars, to be paid in civil cases by the party in whose favor verdict is rendered." This act was amended in 1866 (St. 1866, p. 122) by providing that, if a cause occupy more than one day, the jurors should receive two dollars for each day's attendance. The act of 1870, as we have above seen, excepted the city of San Francisco from all of its provisions. In 1895 the legislature passed an act (St. 1895, p. 267) establishing the fees of jurors throughout the state as follows: "For attending as a grand juror or juror in the superior court, for each day's attendance two dollars." It is contended by the respondent that this act had the effect to repeal the provisions in the act of 1870 excepting the city and county of San Francisco from its operation. Repeals by implication are not favored in the law, and, whenever there are two statutes upon the same subject, courts will endeavor to harmonize them, so that, if possible, effect may be given to the provisions of each. It is only when there is a repugnancy or inconsistency between the two that the later will be held to repeal the prior one. Bank v. Cahn, 79 Cal. 463, 21 Pac. 863. The act of 1895 does not purport to deal with the mode in which jurors shall be paid, nor does it contain any provision authorizing their payment out of the public treasury, or fixing the source of their compensation; but it is, as stated in its title, an act merely to establish the fees of county officers and of jurors and witnesses in this state, leaving unaffected the mode in which these fees are to be paid, and other provisions in previous acts upon that subject which are disconnected from the amount of their fees. It merely declares the amount of their fees for each day's attendance, leaving the mode as well as the source of payment as it existed prior to the passage of the act. The exception of San Francisco from the operation of the act of 1870 left the act of February 27, 1866 (St. 1865, p. 122), in force; and the provision in this latter act for the mode in which fees of jurors shall be paid was a legislative declaration upon a subject distinct from that fixing the amount of the fees, and in no respect inconsistent therewith. The act of 1895 makes an express repeal of only "all acts inconsistent herewith," but does not expressly repeal the act of February 27, 1866, nor does it expressly repeal the provision in the act of 1870 exempting San Francisco from the provisions of that act. So far as the prior act of February 27, 1866, is consistent with the provisions of the act of 1895, it was continued in force and allowed to remain the law of the land. In Miller v. Curry, 113 Cal. 644, 45 Pac. 877, it was held that, so far as this act purports to determine the amount of fees to be charged or collected by the officers therein named, it supersedes the statute upon the same subject which was passed February 9, 1866 (St. 1866, p. 66), applicable to San Francisco, and impliedly repeals that statute. But in Dwyer v. Parker, 115 Cal. 544, 47 Pac. 372, it was held that the act did not supersede or repeal the county government act, so far as it purports to affect the compensation of the officers; and in Reid v. Groezinger, 115 Cal. 551, 47 Pac. 374, it was held that, although the amount of fees to be received is fixed by the act of 1895, the provision in previous acts that they should not be received by the justice is unaffected. In Carpenter v. Jones, 121 Cal. 362, 53 Pac. 842, it was held that the act of 1895 does not repeal that provision in section 28 of the act of 1870, as amended in 1872, for the mode of paying jurors in certain cases; that the later act only purports to deal with the amount of the fees, and not with the means or source from which they are to be paid. Under the principles of this case it must be held that the provisions of the act of 1870 for the payment of jurors' fees are still in force, but, as San Francisco is specially excepted from the provisions of that act, the provisions of this section have no application to the present case. Moreover, if the contention of the respondent should be upheld, it would prove too much for his case, since the principle upon which he claims that the act of 1895 repeals the section in the act of 1870 exempting San Francisco from its provisions would have the effect to repeal also section 28 of that act, which is the only provision in the statutes authorizing the clerk to give the certificate which he seeks. We hold, therefore, that the provisions in the act of February 27, 1866, for the mode in which jurors' fees shall be paid, were not repealed by the act of 1895, and that, as there is no provision in the statutes making the payment of jurors' fees in San Francisco a charge upon the public treasury, the petitioner was not entitled to the certificate asked for. It may be added that, if the contention of the respondent should be sustained, as the act of 1895 makes no provision for the payment of jurors' fees by the parties to a civil action, the entire compensation for their attendance must be made from the public treasury, irrespective of the days in which the juror has served on the trial of causes, or whether their service was in civil or in criminal cases. The provision in the act of 1895 in reference to the fees of witnesses is in the same terms as that in reference to the fees of jurors, and there would be the same ground for holding that provisions in former statutes determining the mode in which witness fees are to be paid have been repealed, and that the fees of witnesses are also to be paid out of the public treasury. The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. NOP. (Cr. 439.)

CRIMINAL LAW—MISDEMEANOR—FISH LAWS.

Pen. Code, § 19, declaring every offense, in which a different punishment is not prescribed, to be a misdemeanor punishable with imprisonment not exceeding six months, or fine not exceeding $500, or both, does not apply to section 636, making a violation of the fish laws punishable by a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not less than 50 days, or both.

Beatty, C. J., and Henshaw, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Tom Nop was charged with a violation of the fish laws. From a judgment for accused, the people appeal. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People. W. A. Sloan, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant was charged by information, under section 636 of the Penal Code, with a violation of the fish laws. The superior court decided it had not jurisdiction to try the offense charged, and the people have appealed from that decision.

The punishment provided by the Penal Code for all parties convicted of a violation of the provisions of said section 636 determines the jurisdictional question here involved. If the punishment to be inflicted for a violation of the provisions of this section may not exceed $500 fine, or six months' imprisonment in the county jail, then the offense is an ordinary misdemeanor, of which the superior court has no jurisdiction. But if the fine may be greater than $500, or the imprisonment may be for a longer term than six months, then the superior court has jurisdiction to try the case. The aforesaid section 636 within itself declares that a defendant guilty of violating its provisions "is punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than fifty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment." By the penalty here provided it will be observed that the minimum punishment only is fixed; yet such legislation is good, and there is no possible constitutional objection to it. Many instances are to be found throughout the Penal Code where the maximum penalty only is fixed, and the penalty in the one case is no more invalid than in the other. When the maximum only is fixed, the punishment may be adjudged at any point not exceeding the maximum. When the minimum punishment only is fixed, then the punishment may be adjudged at anything not less than the minimum. Testing the penalty provided by section 636, without regard to other statutes, it cannot be gainsaid but that a fine of $1,000, or a judgment of imprisonment for one year in the county jail, would be a valid judgment, and absolutely unassailable. Is there any law limiting the scope and effect of the penalty provided by section 636? The defendant claims the existence of such a law, and points to section 19 of the Penal Code. That section provides: "Except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this Code, every offense declared to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or both." When placed in the crucible, this section wholly fails to meet the demands made upon it. It may be read as follows: "Except in cases where some other punishment is prescribed by this Code," etc. It is perfectly apparent that some other punishment is provided by section 636. Hence that section deals with certain cases not touched upon by section 19. Surely the punishment prescribed by section 636 is different from that prescribed by section 19. It is different in two most important particulars: First, under section 636 the punishment may be greater than six months' imprisonment, or $500 fine; and, second, under section 636 the fine may not be less than $100, or the imprisonment less than 50 days. Under section 19 the punishment may be $1 fine, or one day's imprisonment. The difference in the punishments under the sections is apparent at a glance. The contention is that section 19 fixes the maximum punishment for convictions under section 636. By such contention we find that section 19 fixes the maximum punishment, and section 636 fixes the minimum punishment. This is a novel situation; for section 19, in all cases where it is applicable, directly fixes both maximum and minimum. In other words, it purports to deal with and fix the entire penalty, and not simply a maximum. It was enacted to deal fully and completely with all cases coming within its purview, and not to be joined to and invoked with some other section of the Penal Code providing a penalty, in order that the true penalty for the conviction of any particular offense might be ascertained from an inspection of both. It was intended to fully and completely deal with all cases coming within its scope. And, such being its intent and purpose, it has no relationship with section 636. If section 19 had never been enacted, there would be no difficulty whatever in enforcing section 636, and administering punishments thereunder greater than a $500 fine or a six-months imprisonment. In the absence of some kind of intimation by the lawmaking power that section 19 was purposed to limit the force and effect of section 636, we cannot so hold. Ex parte Anear, 114 Cal. 370, 46 Pac. 172. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; TEMPLE, J.; VAN DYKE, J.

HENSHAW, J. I dissent. The conclusion reached and declared by the prevailing opinion is that a person found guilty of violating section 636 of the Penal Code may be punished by a fine to any amount, and by imprisonment for the term of his natural life. It is not questioned but that the legislature may impose so grievous a penalty for so slight an offense, if it sees fit to do so; but, in this day of humane penal laws, a court should adopt such a construction only when clearly compelled to do so. It is pointed out that throughout the Penal Code many instances are to be found where the minimum penalty only is fixed, and that such legislation is good. Unquestionably, it is good. It is aided in the case of felonies by the provisions of section 671 of the same Code, wherein it is prescribed: "Whenever any person is declared punishable for a crime by imprisonment in the state prison for a term not less than any specified number of years, and no limit to the duration of such imprisonment is declared, the court authorized to pronounce judgment upon such conviction may, in its discretion, sentence such offender to imprisonment during his natural life, or for any number of years not less than that prescribed." In all cases amounting to felony, therefore, where the minimum punishment alone is fixed, resort is at once had to section 671, to determine what may be the maximum punishment. I insist that in the case of misdemeanors, where the minimum penalty alone is prescribed, resort should, in like manner, be had to section 19 of the Penal Code for the same purpose, and that in the case at bar (section 636 prescribing, as it does, the minimum penalty alone) reference should be had to section 19 of the Penal Code to determine the maximum penalty that may be imposed for the offense. "Except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this Code," says section 19, "every offense declared to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both." The offense, under section 636, is expressly declared to be a misdemeanor, and by the same section the minimum punishment for the offense is designated. It is to my mind both just and natural to conclude that the legislature in such a case designed that the maximum penalty should be that laid down in section 19, rather than to ignore this plain provision, and to say that in this latter part of the nineteenth century of the Christian era a man, for illegally casting his net in the stream, may forfeit all his property, and be imprisoned in a common jail for the term of his natural life.

SACRAMENTO BANK v. PACIFIC BANK
(McDONALD, Intervener). (S. F. 1,069.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1899.)

BANKS—INSOLVENCY—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—SUBROGATION.

1. A creditor of an insolvent bank, who recovers a portion of his debt from stockholders on their personal liability, is not thereby prevented from sharing with other creditors on the basis of his entire debt in the assets of the corporation, to the extent of the balance due.

2. A stockholder of an insolvent bank, who has been compelled to pay the claim of a creditor because of his additional statutory liability, is, under Civ. Code, § 309, not entitled to be subrogated to the creditor's interest in the assets of the corporation.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Sacramento Bank against the Pacific Bank, J. M. McDonald, intervener. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant and intervener appeal. Affirmed.

Sawyer & Burnett, for appellant. Freeman & Bates, for respondent. Roger Johnson, for intervener.

GRAY, C. Appeal from judgment for plaintiff for the sum of $1,014.38, claimed to be due on the sixth dividend declared in favor of creditors by directors of defendant. The appeal is taken on the judgment roll, from which it appears that the defendant became insolvent, and was placed in liquidation by proceedings of the bank commissioners in 1893; that it was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $20,272.70, or thereabout; that plaintiff presented its claim for that amount to the defendant, and that defendant in due form allowed the same; that from the defendant plaintiff has collected of this indebtedness, before the commencement of this suit, five dividends of 5 per cent. each, or a total of 25 per cent., of its original claim, amounting in the aggregate to about $5,071.90; also from the solvent stockholders plaintiff recovered about $5,100, being the proportion of the remaining 75 per cent. of plaintiff's claim due from them, leaving a little over $10,000 unpaid on plaintiff's original claim. After all these collections, a sixth dividend to the creditors of 5 per cent. was declared by the directors of the insolvent defendant, and the first question presented to the court in this case is, how should plaintiff's right in that dividend be computed, and how much is plaintiff entitled to recover on account of such dividend? The trial court decided that plaintiff's share in the sixth dividend was the same as it had been in each of the first five dividends, and that it was entitled to 5 per cent. of its original claim as it was before anything was collected. There is no explicit statute or previous decision of this court to guide us in this matter, but I think the trial court reached a conclusion that is correct upon principle, and is borne out by decisions of courts in other states on questions bearing a close analogy to those involved in this case. "If both the maker and indorser of a promissory note are declared bankrupts, the holder may prove the note for the full amount thereof against the estate of each, and the amount for which he may prove it against the estate of each cannot be affected by any dividends received from the estate of the other, except that the dividends received from the two estates will not, in any event, be permitted to exceed in the aggregate the amount of the note." In re Meyer, 78 Wis. 615, 48 N. W. 55; In re Bates, 118 Ill. 524, 9 N. E. 257. In Bank v. Porter, 122 Mass. 308, where the question was what the dividend against the indorser should be where the payee had already received 50 per cent. of his note from the maker, the court says: "The plaintiff had received fifty per cent. of his debt from the estate of the maker, but this was no reason why the defendants should not pay them the fifty per cent. upon the whole debt as they had entered it upon their schedule. The plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of its double security. Where both maker and indorser are liable, the holder of a note may prove the amount against each, and receive dividends to the full amount of his debt." On the principle followed in these cases it appears that the plaintiff in this case is in the position of a creditor having two debtors, one being the corporation, all the stockholders representing the other, each of whom owe him his entire claim; and that he is at liberty to proceed against both, or either separately, without reference to the other, until his entire claim shall be satisfied; and that the plaintiff's right to share in the dividends with the other creditors of the insolvent bank is to be measured by the amount of its claim as it was fixed by the approval of the same, made in course of the liquidation of the Pacific Bank; and it would follow from this that the plaintiff's share in the sixth dividend would be the same in amount as its share has been in every preceding dividend. By prosecuting its rights against the stockholders, the plaintiff forfeited no right that it had against the Pacific Bank. The law is swift to bestow a premium upon promptness and vigilance in the pursuit of one's rights, and will not rob plaintiff of any advantage it may have gained over the other creditors by its early suit against the stockholders. If, however, the appellants were to prevail in their contention that plaintiff's right to share in dividends should be measured by the amount of its claim left after deducting all that it had received on it, the plaintiff might soon find itself in a worse position than it would have occupied had it refrained from suing the stockholders until the assets of the bank were exhausted. A construction of the law that would lead to such a result should be avoided.

The intervener also appeals from the judgment, contending that he, being a stockholder owning 1,738 out of the total 10,000 shares of the Pacific Bank, had been compelled by plaintiff to pay it  $1738/10000$  of its demand against the bank, and that he is, therefore, entitled to be subrogated to the extent of the last-named fraction in and to plaintiff's right in the sixth dividend. It is clearly the law that the funds of an insolvent corporation are all to be dispensed solely for the benefit of its creditors, and, while the stockholder may be compelled to put a great deal into the funds of such a corporation in the way of assessments, he is not as a stockholder permitted to share in its dividends either by subrogation or otherwise. Civ. Code, § 309. Under the constitution and statutes of this state each stockholder may be compelled to pay to the corporation assessments to the full amount of his subscription to the capital stock of the corporation for the payment of creditors of such corporation, and also be individually liable to each creditor for such proportion of his claim as the amount of stock held by such stockholder bears to the whole of the capital stock. These two liabilities and the remedies based thereon are concurrent. Civ. Code, § 322; Const. art. 12, § 3; Hiller v. Collins, 63 Cal. 235; Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448. It follows, then, that whatever the intervener has paid, either directly to the corporation in the way of assessments, or on account of his personal liability as a stockholder directly to the creditor, he was bound to pay under the law, and can recover no portion of the same back, either by subrogation or otherwise. The conclusion of law found by the court against the intervener is therefore correct. For the foregoing reasons I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

KNOTT v. McGILVRAY. (S. F. 1,566.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1899.)

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT—ACTION BY WIDOW—NEGLIGENCE—STREETS.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, providing that the heirs of a person whose death is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another may recover damages, a complaint alleging that plaintiff, at the time of the injury to, and the death of, such person, was his wife, and is his surviving widow, states a cause of action, as the widow is an heir of the deceased husband, and, under certain conditions, may be his sole heir.

2. A person engaged with tools and materials directly over a thoroughfare where people are rightfully traveling must exercise the greatest care to prevent injury to travelers.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Jane Knott against John D. McGilvray. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Wilson, for appellant. Jas. Alva Watt, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is to recover damages for the death of one Benjamin Knott, and was originally instituted against Claus Spreckels and John D. McGilvray. During the trial, on the motion of Spreckels, a nonsuit was granted as to him, and the case proceeded to judgment against the defendant McGilvray. An appeal is taken from the judgment, and also from the order denying the defendant McGilvray's motion for a new trial.

The first contention of the appellant is that the complaint does not state a cause of action, inasmuch as the surviving wife, as such, has no cause of action, but only the heirs of the deceased. By section 377, Code Civ. Proc., it is provided: "When the death of a person, not being a minor, is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, or, if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, then also against such other person." The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the surviving wife and widow, and that at the time of his injury and death, as aforesaid, was the wife of said Benjamin Knott. The surviving wife is an heir of the decedent, and, by the law of succession, "if the decedent leave a surviving husband or wife, and neither issue, father, mother, brother nor sister, the whole estate goes to the surviving husband or wife." Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 5. There is nothing in the record to show that there were any other heirs than the plaintiff. If it appear upon the face of the complaint that there were other heirs who were not joined, the objection could have been taken by demurrer. If it did not appear upon the face of the complaint, but as a fact, there were other heirs, their nonjoinder could have been taken advantage of by answer. The question of a nonjoinder was not raised either by demurrer or answer in this case. "If no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." Code Civ. Proc. § 434. Hence the appellant, realizing that the objection as to nonjoinder of other heirs, if there were any, has been waived, falls back upon the contention that the complaint fails to state a cause of action. But the complaint clearly does state a cause of action, and is sufficient to support the judgment.

Under said section 377, Code Civ. Proc., the defendant Spreckels, as owner of the premises, was joined with the defendant McGilvray, upon the theory, doubtless, that he was considered responsible for the latter's conduct. Spreckels appeared by his counsel, demurred to the complaint, which was overruled, and afterwards separately answered. At the trial, after the evidence was in, upon motion of his counsel, a nonsuit was entered as to the defendant Spreckels, on the ground, as it would seem, that the defendant McGilvray was an independent contractor and alone liable. Defendant McGilvray thereupon moved the court, upon affidavit, to remove the cause as to him to the United States cir-cult court, on the ground that he was a citizen and resident of the state of Colorado. He further states in his affidavit that Claus Spreckels was fraudulently and improperly joined as a party defendant for the sole purpose of defeating the rights of said petitioner, McGilvray, to remove the cause to the United States circuit court; and that within 10 days after the commencement of the action, on his application, the cause was removed to the circuit court, and that the same was remanded to the superior court on the ground of the joinder of said Spreckels, who was a resident of this state, as a defendant with petitioner. The counter affidavit denies that Spreckels was fraudulently joined as a party defendant, and alleges that the plaintiff believed, and still believes, that he is a proper party, and that McGilvray has been and now is an actual resident of the city and county of San Francisco, having and maintaining a residence therein for the period of two years last past, and that the cause was not remanded by the United States circuit court on the ground of the joinder of Spreckels, but upon the ground that the petition for the removal filed by the defendant McGilvray was defective in form and substance, and did not show any right of removal. The court below, it is presumed, found the fact to be as stated in the counter affidavit; that Spreckels was not fraudulently joined as a party defendant, but was joined as such defendant in good faith, and not for the purpose of defeating a removal by the petitioner; and that the cause had been remanded by the United States circuit court on the ground that the petition was insufficient, and did not show any right of removal. In Gregory v. Hartley, 113 U. S. 745, 5 Sup. Ct. 745, the court say: "The mere filing of a petition is not enough, unless, when taken in connection with the rest of the record, it shows on its face that the petitioner has, under the statute, the right to take the suit to another tribunal." See, also, Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5; Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799; Stevens v. Nichols, 130 U. S. 230, 9 Sup. Ct. 518; Crehore v. Railroad Co., 131 U. S. 240, 9 Sup. Ct. 692.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in charging the jury as follows: "Upon this subject the supreme court have said that where one is engaged with tools and materials directly over the thoroughfare where people are constantly traveling, and have an undoubted right to travel, that under such circumstances the law demanded of such party more than ordinary care. Such party is bound, under such circumstances, to exercise the greatest care and caution in the performance of his work, in order that travelers may not be injured." This portion of the charge is nearly in the precise language used in Dixon v. Pluns, 98 Cal. 388, 33 Pac. 270. The court there says: "The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. Upon the evidence, we cannot say that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence in walking upon the sidewalk at the time the injury was inflicted. She had a right to be there, and had no sufficient reason to anticipate danger from overhead. Respondent's evidence also established a prima facie case of negligence upon the part of the appellant. He was engaged with tools and materials directly over a thoroughfare where people were constantly traveling and had an undoubted right to travel. Under such circumstances, the law demanded of him more than ordinary care. He was called upon to exercise the greatest care and caution in the performance of his work in order that travelers might not be injured. The injury was received at the hands of the appellant by the dropping of the chisel while respondent was walking upon the public street." See, also, Judson v. Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 Pac. 1020. There are no other matters disclosed by the record, to which our attention has been called by the appellant, which require consideration. Judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BANKS AND BANKING — INSOLVENCY — DEPOSITS — REPAYMENT — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR — EVIDENCE — ACCOUNT STATED — CLAIMS — STATEMENTS BY BANK AFTER INSOLVENCY — ASSIGNMENT — PAROL POWER — VALIDITY.

1. A depositor paid his bank checks on his deposit for drafts on Chicago. His bank book was then balanced, showing the amount of his deposit after deducting the checks. Two days later the bank failed, and, the drafts not being paid, and returned to the depositor, he subsequently surrendered them to the bank, and it credited their amount to his account in his pass book. Held, in an action to enforce a stockholders' liability, that the delivery of the drafts did not constitute payment pro tanto of his deposit, and that the depositor's claim at the time of the failure was the amount of the original deposit.

2. Where the amount of plaintiff's claim against an insolvent bank had been fully proved by other competent evidence, the erroneous admission of additional evidence, merely cumulative, in corroboration, is harmless.

3. Where a depositor's bank book showed his balance after deducting certain checks given for drafts which were protested because of the failure of the bank, a subsequent statement of his claim, executed by the manager of the bank, showing the amount to be his previous balance, is admissible to rebut the presumption arising from the bank book showing his claim to be the balance, less the checks at the date of the failure.

4. Where a depositor's bank book showed the balance due him, less certain checks for drafts which had been protested because of the failure of the bank, the fact that he waited some time before protesting against the deduction in his account by the checks does not make the book an account stated, where it was afterwards credited with the unpaid drafts, and his claim certified by the bank to be the original deposit.

5. Where an insolvent bank was still under the control of its directors, the statement of a claim of a depositor by the bank's officers is not invalid as a declaration after insolvency, since it is but the statement of an old indebtedness, and not the creation of a new one.

6. Since the assignment of a claim against an insolvent need not be in writing, a parol power authorizing another to make such assignment is valid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles L. Dingley, Jr., against R. H. McDonald, James McDonald, and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant James McDonald appeals. Affirmed.

Sawyer & Burnett, for appellant. H. A. Powell and W. A. Dow, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. This action is brought against stockholders of the Pacific Bank to recover the portions of the debts of the bank for which they are respectively liable as stockholders. Many claims are consolidated. But only in the case of two claims are questions presented on this appeal.

1. The complaint alleges: That on the 23d day of June, 1893, there was on deposit in said bank, belonging to and to the credit of H. D. Rowe, the assignor of the plaintiff, the sum of $4,891.01; that on the said 23d day of June the bank closed its doors, and suspended business. The answer denies that on the 23d day of June there was on deposit to the credit of Rowe any more than $228.25. The court finds that there was on deposit as alleged in the complaint the sum of $4,891.01. Appellant claims that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding. The evidence shows that Rowe had that amount—$4,891.01—on deposit on the 17th of June; that on that day and on the 21st of June he drew two checks for drafts or bills of exchange by the Pacific Bank on the National Bank of Illinois at Chicago in favor of Charles A. Capwell. These checks were charged against his account, and reduced the account on the books to $228.25, the balance shown by his bank book on June 22d. The checks were not paid in money, but were given for the drafts. The drafts were refused payment, were protested, and returned to Rowe, and by him surrendered to the Pacific Bank. The bank gave him credit on his bank book for the amount of the checks which it had charged against him, restoring his credit account to $4,891.01. This credit was not entered on the bank book until December 14, 1893. The appellant claims that by the issuance of the drafts payable to Capwell the bank assumed a liability to him different to its liability to Rowe for his original moneys on deposit; and that, whatever may be its liability on the drafts, it was not for moneys on deposit, as charged in the complaint. But that is not of the substance of the transaction as between the bank and Rowe. Rowe had moneys on deposit with the bank.

He instructed the bank to pay his moneys to Capwell in Chicago, and drew a check to appropriate moneys for such payment. The bank, by its draft upon Chicago, ordered payment to be made to Capwell; but the bank failed, payment was not made to Capwell, and the draft was protested, and returned to the bank. This is the meaning of the transaction between Rowe and the bank, consisting of check and of draft protested and returned. There was no payment of the check which could withdraw Rowe's deposit. The draft was not received in payment of the check. It is well settled that a note, even if it be the note of a third person, or a bill of exchange in favor of another, does not operate as payment except by express agreement. The presumption is not in favor of its being received as payment. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28 (in which it was said that, when a check is given for payment of a debt, the giving of a receipt in full does not establish an agreement for an absolute payment); Steinhart v. Bank, 94 Cal. 362, 29 Pac. 717 (in which the original note was stamped as "canceled"); Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 516, 39 Pac. 922 (where the old obligation was surrendered).

Appellant claims that it was error to admit in evidence the "claim" delivered by the bank to Rowe in the place of the bank book surrendered by him. The claim is as follows: "$4,891<sup>01</sup>/<sub>100</sub>. No. 1,059. Certificate of Proof of Claim. San Francisco, August 5, 1895. This is to certify that the Bank of Sisson, Crocker & Co. (for claim No. 52, H. D. Rowe, manager) has this day made legal and satisfactory proof that it is a creditor of the Pacific Bank, of San Francisco, California, to the amount of forty-eight hundred and ninety-one dollars and one cent, upon the following claim, to wit: Balance due on open account of said H. D. Rowe, manager, as per pass book now on file in Pacific Bank (for proof of claim see No. 52, filed December 12, 1893), and said bank, or the lawful assignee of this claim, will be alone entitled to the dividends thereon. No assignment of this claim, or any portion thereof, will be recognized in the payment of dividends, unless notice of such assignment is given, and entered upon the books of the bank, before such dividends are declared, as evidenced by the indorsements hereon. This certificate is to be surrendered to the bank upon the payment of the final dividend. Pacific Bank, by J. E. Farnum, Manager." It is contended by the appellant that this claim is a mere declaration by an officer of the bank, made after the insolvency, and that, even if it be admissible against the bank, it cannot affect the stockholders. If it were relied on as proof of the original deposit, there might be force in the contention. But the original deposit was clearly proved. The controversy is only over the account, whether the deposit remained undiminished, or whether it was reduced to $228.25. And upon this question the bank book was introduced in evidence by both sides, the appellant expressly offering it on his behalf. This claim was merely the restatement by the manager of what the bank book offered by the appellant showed, being delivered to Rowe in place of the bank book when he surrendered his book to the bank. Hence the appellant could not object to its competency, whatever fault he might find with its weight or significance. The bank book which he had offered in evidence was itself merely the declaration of an officer of the bank. This claim was the declaration of its manager. But, indeed, the deposit was, as we have said, proved without the claim. The case really depends upon the effect of the checks drawn for the purchase of the drafts. If they were not paid by the drafts, the deposit stood unreduced; and this is the plaintiff's case. The subsequent declarations of officers of the bank were only corroborative of the case thus made by the plaintiff. They were not necessary to the plaintiff, and for that reason were of no injury to the defendant. Besides, they were admissible to rebut the presumption claimed by the appellant to arise from the delivery to Rowe of the bank book showing on the 23d of June a balance in his favor of $228.25. Appellant claims that the failure by Rowe, for some uncertain time, to protest against the apparent reduction of his account made an account stated between the parties by reason of his presumed assent. This presumption is rebutted by the entry which the bank book offered by him shows to have been made in it on December 14th, and by this claim, afterwards substituted for the bank book. They were both declarations, as potent to exhibit the true state of the account after the protest and surrender of the drafts as was the book before their protest. That the claim was a declaration made after the insolvency of the bank was, in this aspect, not fatal to it. The bank was still under the control and management of its directors. Long v. Court, 102 Cal. 449, 36 Pac. 807. The claim was signed by the manager. It did not purport to be the creation of a new indebtedness, but to be the statement of the old account.

2. The same point is made in reference to a deposit of $250 made by the plaintiff on June 13th, against which a check was drawn in purchase of a draft on Chicago. The facts are substantially the same, and the same reasoning applies.

3. An assignment of cause of action is made by F. M. Parcels acting for and in the name of Mrs. Fitch. Her authority to him was only verbal. But, as such an assignment is not required to be in writing, the verbal authority was sufficient.

4. The only other point made by the appellant is that the claim of Mrs. Fitch was barred by the provisions of section 359, Code Civ. Proc., which requires the action to be brought within three years "after the liability was created." Mrs. Fitch deposited $208.85 on the 10th day of March, 1893. Action was brought on the 10th day of March, 1896. There were at one time conflicting decisions in England and in this country on this question, many cases holding that in the computation of time the first day should be included. The appellant cites a case to that effect. Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 192. But in Bemis v. Leonard, 118 Mass. 502, Mr. Justice Gray reviews the cases in both countries with much learning and discrimination, and shows that the whole current of modern authority in both countries is in favor of excluding the first day in cases where the expression of our statute is used, "after the liability was created." The case of Presbrey v. Williams is discredited in that case. Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 379; Cornell v. Moulton, 3 Denio, 12. In this state the case is set at rest by section 12, Code Civ. Proc., which requires the exclusion of the first day. Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 514. I advise that the judgment and order denying new trial be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and the order denying new trial are affirmed.

BRASLAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY.
(S. F. 1,852.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1899.)

BANKS—LIQUIDATION—APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR
—NOTICE—EVIDENCE.

1. In proceedings for the liquidation of a bank, notice of an application to the court to appoint a director to take place of one who has resigned pendente lite need not be given a person claiming to have been elected to such office, where he has given no notice to the court of his incumbency, the statute not requiring any notice.

2. On application, in proceedings to liquidate a bank, for the appointment of a director to take the place of one who has resigned, the burden is on one claiming to have been elected to the office to show such election, and where there is no evidence of, but merely an answer to the petition alleging, such appointment, the court is authorized to appoint another.

In bank.

Application by Charles P. Braslan against the superior court of Santa Clara county for a writ of certiorari to review an order of said court appointing directors for the Union Savings Bank of San José, in proceedings by the attorney general for the liquidation of the affairs of said bank. Denied.

Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for petitioner.
Atty. Gen. Ford, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The attorney general commenced an action against the Union Savings Bank of San José and its seven directors, in pursuance of the provisions of section 11 of the amended bank commissioners' act (St. 1895, p. 175), to enjoin them from the transaction of any further business and to compel a liquidation of the affairs of the bank. Subsequent to the commencement of the action, and to the appearance of the original defendants therein, several of the directors resigned, and the petitioner claims to have been elected in place of one of them; but it is not shown that he was ever substituted as a defendant, or that he entered an appearance or gave any notice to the court or to any of the parties of his election as a director. This being the situation of affairs, the attorney general, by leave of the court, filed and served upon the defendants who had appeared a supplemental complaint, alleging that all the directors of the corporation had resigned, and that there were no directors, and praying the appointment of seven directors by the court. To this supplemental complaint an answer was filed containing no direct denials of its allegations, but merely alleging the fact that at different dates several of the directors had resigned, and that their resignations had been accepted by the remaining directors, and other persons elected in their place. Among other similar allegations, it was alleged that this petitioner, at a date prior to the filing of the supplemental complaint, had been elected a director in place of one who had resigned, and that he had entered upon the discharge of his duties; but it did not allege that he was still a director. It was also alleged in this answer to the supplemental complaint that six of the directors last appointed—all of them, that is to say, except Braslan, the petitioner here—had resigned, and their formal resignation was attached to the answer, which was signed by an attorney at law describing himself as attorney for all of the defendants and their successors, except Braslan. No summons, citation, or other notice of the proceeding appears to have been served upon Braslan, but the matter was submitted to the court "on the pleadings"; whereupon the court appointed a full board of seven directors of the corporation. This is the order which the defendant seeks to have reviewed, and such are the facts disclosed upon the hearing of a rule to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue.

The petitioner contends that the order appointing a full board of directors, which practically ousts him from an office to which he claims to have been duly elected, was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and void, because it was made without notice to him, and because it does not appear that the occasion had arisen for action by the court.

Upon these propositions, the first question to be considered is whether the law under which the court was proceeding gave the petitioner any right to personal notice of the application for the appointment of directors to fill vacancies. The statute is by no means explicit or plain upon this point, but I think it may be gathered from its various provisions that the intention was to invest the superior court with a very extensive authority and jurisdiction over the corporation during the whole progress of liquidation, and, among other things, authority to fill all vacancies in the board of directors as often as they might occur, if the remaining directors failed or were unable to fill them. To call the powers of the court into action for this purpose I do not think a supplemental complaint is necessary, or even appropriate. The proceeding is independent and collateral, and may be taken by or on behalf of any party interested, by petition to the court, based upon the fact of malfeasance, neglect, or vacancy caused by death or resignation. When the court is asked to remove a director for fraud, malversation, or neglect, the statute expressly provides for a citation to the person accused and a hearing, but no notice is provided for when the court is asked to fill a vacancy. It may be contended, however, that, in the absence of such a provision, the director whose place is alleged to have become vacant is, if living, entitled to notice, upon general principles, in order that he may have an opportunity of showing that he has not vacated or abandoned the office. This is certainly a reasonable contention, but, whether well founded or not, it does not help the case of this petitioner, because here all the directors of the corporation, of whose existence the court was advised, and whose places the court was asked to fill, were notified of the proceeding. The petitioner had never, so far as appears, made known to the court, or to the other parties interested, the fact that he was, or claimed to be, a director, and the only mode of notifying him would have been by a general notice to all the world. But no such notice is prescribed or authorized, and, therefore, unless the court can proceed to act upon an alleged vacancy without notice to every unknown claimant of the office it cannot act at all, and the statute is in this respect nugatory. But this result cannot be allowed, and therefore I conclude that a director, or one claiming to be such, is not entitled to notice of an application to fill a vacancy unless he has given previous notice of his incumbency.

Upon the second point the case is more simple. Treating the so-called "supplemental complaint" as a petition to fill a vacancy, and allowing that a petition by the attorney general need not be verified, it stated a case calling for the action of the court; and, even if the answer could be construed as making an issue upon the allegation of a vacancy in the directorship claimed by petitioner, still the only way it raised such issue was by the affirmative allegation that petitioner had been appointed to fill a vacancy admitted to have been created by the resignation of another director. Therefore the burden of proof was upon those alleging the appointment, and since the whole matter was submitted on the so-called pleadings, without further evidence, the court did not even err, much less exceed its jurisdiction, in declaring a vacancy and proceeding to fill it. The writ is denied and the proceeding dismissed.

I concur: VAN DYKE, J.

I concur in the judgment: TEMPLE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment denying the writ and dismissing the proceeding and in the opinion of the Chief Justice. Furthermore, I think that the petitioner is not in a position to invoke the writ of certiorari. He was not a party to the proceeding in the court below, and did not attempt to make himself a party thereto by intervention or otherwise; and he is not in the exceptional position where, although he was not a party to the record, he might resort to certiorari, for the reason that he has substantial interests involved. The only interest which he shows is an asserted claim to an office, and certiorari is not the proper remedy for trying title to an office. Moreover, although this case is before us upon notice to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue, yet at the hearing the record was produced, and it was agreed by the parties that the matter should be determined as though a writ had been issued and the record of the lower court was here; and, therefore, even if the petitioner had the right to invoke the writ, the record shows no want of jurisdiction whatever. Moreover, as at present advised, my opinion is that from the time the board of bank commissioners take possession and control of a bank and its assets under the statute, until the adjudication of the court as to whether it shall be put into liquidation or not, the directors have no power to perform the corporate act of electing a new director.

GAROUTTE, J. I concur in the judgment. This is a proceeding to review the action of the superior court of the county of Santa Clara (Lorigan, Judge) in appointing seven directors for the Union Savings Bank of San José, an insolvent institution. Conceding the action of which complaint is made involved the exercise of judicial functions, and that, therefore, the legal remedy invoked is the proper one, still the showing made demands a denial of the relief sought. Upon a writ of review, the record is placed before this court, and the presence or absence of power in the lower court to make the order sought to be reviewed must appear from the face of that record. In this proceeding it appears that the bank corporation had no directors. Such is the positive allegation of the supplemental bill. There is no denial of this allegation, and the fact stands admitted. Under such circumstances, the court not only had the power to appoint seven directors, but it was its duty to exercise that power and make the appointment. Petitioner insists that he was a director of the bank corporation at the time this order of appointment was made, and that he had no notice of the proceeding, although a party directly interested in the matter. It is a full and complete answer to this claim of petitioner when it is said that none of these facts appear from the record, and it is by the record that the case must be decided. If petitioner's rights have been affected by the act of the court in appointing these directors, he must seek some other remedy by which to protect himself.

SPIRES v. URBACH et al. (L. A. 524.)

CONTRACT—AVOIDANCE—MUTUALITY.

The owner of land, who made a contract permitting an electric railroad to be built thereon, and agreed to deed a right of way therefor if it was completed and in operation within a stipulated time, cannot avoid his contract, for want of mutuality, after the road is built and in operation within the time fixed therefor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Joseph H. Spires against Max Urbahn and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Walter F. Haas, for appellants. John D. Pope, for respondent.

PRINGLE, C. Action brought to enforce the performance by the defendants of the following contract: "The undersigned hereby agrees to deed to J. H. Spires or assigns, as a right of way for an electric railway, the south thirty feet of my seventeen and one-half acre tract in section 35, township 1 south, range 14 west, S. B. M., Los Angeles county, California. Said right of way to be deeded to said Spires or assigns within thirty days after an electric railway has been built and in operation on said right of way, permission being hereby granted: provided said road shall be built and in operation by July 1, 1897; provided said road shall give through transportation between the business center of the city of Los Angeles and Santa Monica, California. I further agree that, if said Spires or assigns shall build and operate said road as above, that I will deed to said Spires or assigns, free of incumbrance, within thirty days after said road is built and in operation, the following described property: One and one-half acres of land off my said seventeen and one-half acre tract, etc. [Description.] Franziska C. Gottleber. J. H. Spires. Witness: Isidore B. Dockweiler." The complaint alleges that Spires, plaintiff's assignor, built and put in operation an electric road in pursuance of the agreement, and within the time limited. And the court found the allegations of the complaint to be true. The point contended for by the appellants is that there was no consideration for the contract, no obligation to build the road having been assumed by Spires, and hence there was no mutuality in the contract. It is now too well settled to permit of controversy that in such cases the completion of the work is an executed consideration which is sufficient to give mutuality to the contract. It is true that there was no mutuality until the road was built. But when the offer of the contract was accepted by the performance of its condition, it was too late to deny the consideration. These contracts have become familiar as stimulants to the construction of railroads and other public works, the inducement to the promisor, whether expressed or presumed, being the probable enhancement of the value of property by the construction. That such contracts or mere offers, unilateral at first, may be enforced when mutuality is secured by an executed consideration, is sustained upon well-recognized principles. The consideration takes its strongest form when it is executed. The question was lately under consideration in this court in the cases of Thurber v. Meves, 119 Cal. 35, 50 Pac. 1063, and 51 Pac. 536, and Sayward v. Houghton, 119 Cal. 545, 51 Pac. 853, and 52 Pac. 44. In the latter case it was said: "An original lack of mutuality in the right to specific performance will not preclude the enforcement of the contract, where this want has been removed at the time the action is brought." The case of Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 404, is cited by appellant. That case is reviewed in Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458, and it is shown that the ruling in Cooper v. Pena is not at variance with the principle stated above. In the case of Wilks v. Railroad Co., 79 Ala. 186, a contract essentially the same as the present one is considered by the court, and the objection of want of mutuality meets with scant favor from the court, which said, "There is nothing in this objection." I advise that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WHITE v. CITY OF ALAMEDA.
(S. F. 1,391.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1899.)

MUNICIPALITIES—OFFICERS—MASTER AND SERVANT.

1. One appointed and employed by resolution of a city "as driver of the street wagon, and to care for its horses," at so much a month, is not constituted an officer of the city, entitled to hold his position until discharged or the resolution is rescinded, or to receive pay for months in which he did not work.

2. The fact that he was able and willing to perform the services did not put on the city the duty of keeping him employed, nor make it liable for failing to do so.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court of Alameda county.

Action by Thomas White against the city of Alameda. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Clinton G. Dodge, for appellant. E. K. Taylor, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for services as driver of a street wagon. The complaint alleges that one M. M. White (plaintiff's assignor) was employed by defendant on April 19, 1897, "to drive the street wagon, and to take care of the horses of defendant, at a salary of sixty dollars per month"; that this employment was by virtue of a resolution of the trustees of defendant, passed on said day, "appointing and employing" said White "driver of the street wagon, and to take care of the horses of defendant, at a salary to be paid said White therefor by defendant of sixty dollars per month." It is alleged that "said resolution remained in full force and effect from and including the said 19th day of April, 1897, to the 1st day of November, 1897, on which said last-named date said M. M. White resigned from said employment." It is further alleged that defendant failed to furnish any work to be performed by White for the months of June, July, August, September, and October, 1897, "but that during all of the period of said last-named months said M. M. White was able, ready, and willing to perform the work authorized to be done, and which he was employed to do under and by virtue of said resolution." It is alleged that said White was paid to June 1, 1897, but no more. The action is for $300, wages for five months at $60 per month. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the grounds: (1) Insufficiency of facts, (2) uncertainty in some particulars. Judgment was given for defendant on demurrer, from which plaintiff appeals.

Appellant says in his brief that he alleged in the complaint that no services were performed during the months for which pay is claimed, although he was ready and willing to perform, "for the purpose of shortening the case and testing the question on demurrer." It is claimed by appellant that "the contract was a definite, entire, and continuing one, lasting to a certainty as long as the same was not discontinued by legislative action on the part of defendant"; that the resolution of defendant created an office, and appointed plaintiff to it, and that the office and employment continue until the resolution is rescinded or plaintiff is discharged from the employment,—citing People v. Oulton, 28 Cal. 45; People v. Hammond, 66 Cal. 654, 6 Pac. 741; Stone v. Bancroft, 112 Cal. 652, 44 Pac. 1069; Webster v. Wade, 19 Cal. 292; Civ. Code, § 1999. Replying, defendant claims that there is nothing in the pleadings to show that the resolution relied upon created or attempted to create an office, or that plaintiff was appointed to any office, or became a public officer; the city of Alameda is a municipal corporation of the fifth class, organized under the act of March 13, 1883

(St. 1883, at page 250, c. 6), and the charter creates no such office; that plaintiff's assignor, White, was employed for no special term, and the time adopted for estimating his wages was one month, and his hiring is presumed to be for one month (Civ. Code, §§ 2010, 2011); and that his service comes within the definition of master and servant (Id. § 2009). The resolution under which defendant entered service is not pleaded, nor is its substance given, otherwise than it is alleged that defendant adopted a resolution appointing and employing one M. M. White "driver of the street wagon and to take care of the horses of the defendant." This did not constitute White an officer, such, for example, as the state librarian, mentioned in 28 Cal., supra, who, it was held, continued in office after the expiration of his term, and until his successor was duly selected and had qualified, although the law creating the office did not authorize him to do so. The rule there laid down was based upon the reason that civil functionaries, like the state librarian, are charged with the duty of the safe-keeping and current management of public property committed to their custody, and are by law made responsible as such custodians; and that the public business requires that these duties shall be discharged without interruption. The case in 66 Cal. and 6 Pac., supra, was that of police commissioners, whose appointment was under an act which did not fix the term. But we cannot regard the driver of a street wagon as any such officer, or as coming within the reason of the rule stated in 28 Cal. Nor can we regard the resolution, so far as we can judge from what is said of it in the complaint, as amounting to anything more than a minute entry by defendant in its proceedings that it had hired plaintiff to do the work at the monthly compensation of $60. No inference can be drawn from anything in the pleadings or the resolution that defendant was to receive pay when he did no work, or that it was a continuing employment, to last until the resolution might be rescinded, or until defendant was formally discharged. The complaint alleges that defendant "failed to furnish any work to be performed by said M. M. White under said resolution for the months," etc.—the months for which he now claims salary. Doubtless this was because the defendant had no use for White's services. We cannot see that the fact that White was able and willing to perform the services put any duty upon defendant to keep him employed, or that it became liable for failing to do so.

Appellant insists that White was not a servant in the sense that term is used in the Civil Code (sections 2009–2011), but that he was an employé (if not an officer), as defined in section 1965, Id. As we understand title 6 (entitled "Service"), Civ. Code, § 1965 et seq., there is no necessary distinction between the terms "servant" and "employé." The title deals with three classes of service, and the obligations of the employer and employé towards each other. Under this title of "service" are agents, factors, shipmasters, mates, and seamen under the head of "particular employments," where are found "master and servant." The term "employé" may sound more euphonic than the term "servant," but there is no substantial difference between the two except as the statute makes a difference. All public officers are "servants" of the people. In speaking of the various occupations which fall under the head of "workmen" or "employés," Mr. Schouler says that the relation of master and servant may well be said to apply, and he adds that in this country "it is gratifying to reflect that the servant is frequently the social equal, or even the superior, of his master." Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 455. Section 1997, Civ. Code, provides that: "Every employment is terminated: 1. By the expiration of the appointed time. * * *" Section 2010, Id., provides that: "A servant is presumed to have been hired for such length of time as the parties adopt for the estimation of wages;" and section 2011, Id., provides that: "In the absence of any agreement * * * as to the term of service, the time of payment, or rate or value of wages, a servant is presumed to be hired by the month, at a monthly rate of reasonable wages, to be paid when the service is performed." Here the complaint shows a hiring for no specified time, but at a monthly rate of wages, and it shows payment for all the time that service was rendered. The claim now urged, in our opinion, rests upon a false basis, to wit, that the resolution created an office, and that White, upon his appointment, continued in office, and was entitled to pay as such officer, whether he performed service or not, at the stipulated monthly salary, because the defendant did not formally repeal the resolution. We think the relation of master and servant was created by the employment, nothing more nor less, just as the relation is created and regarded between a railroad or other private corporation, where persons are employed to perform special service, not "an independent calling." The books are full of cases where the relation of master and servant is recognized, and so designated, as existing between railroad and other corporations and their employés. It is possible that under the allegation in the complaint that White "continued to be employed by defendant in said capacity at said salary of sixty dollars per month until the 1st day of November, 1897," would be sufficient upon general demurrer. Plaintiff, however, does not rely upon that allegation, but seeks a decision only upon his theory of the case. As we think his theory is unsound, it is advised that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

FRASHER v. RADER et al., Fire Com'rs.
(L. A. 359.)

CERTIORARI—MUNICIPAL BOARD—JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS.

Certiorari will not issue to review the action of a board of fire commissioners granting permission for the erection of a building on land within the city, under an ordinance allowing them to grant such permit only on petition of three-fourths the property owners in the block where the building is proposed to be erected; the action of the board not being the exercise of a judicial function.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Application by George W. Frasher against Frank Rader and others, as fire commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, to review an order of defendants permitting the erection of a blacksmith shop within the city. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Will D. Gould, for appellant. W. E. Dunn, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The defendants, constituting the board of fire commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, granted Dennison & Tucker permission to build a blacksmith shop upon a certain piece of land within the city. Under the municipal ordinance a structure for such purpose could not be built "without a permit from the fire commissioners so to do, which permit shall be granted only upon the petition of three-fourths of the property owners in the block in which said building is proposed to be erected." Permission was granted upon October 23, 1895. Upon October 20, 1896, this petition for a writ of review was filed. It averred that the requisite number of property owners had not petitioned on behalf of Dennison & Tucker, and that the board of fire commissioners granted the permit well knowing such to be the fact. Upon these averments it was sought to review and annul the order of the board.

The writ of certiorari runs to review the action of an inferior tribunal, exercising judicial functions, only upon a showing that such tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, and that the legal remedies applicable to the case are inadequate to afford protection or relief. It cannot be used to review the acts of a legislative, executive, or ministerial body, or even the acts of a judicial tribunal in the exercise of its discretion. The board of fire commissioners had for its duty—First, to determine "whether three-fourths of the property owners in the block" had petitioned; and, second, if the determination upon this was favorable to the applicant, then to decide whether to grant or refuse the permit. In neither nor in both of these acts did it render a judicial decision. In the second, it was but exercising a discretion not the subject of review. In the first (since it will not be contended that the board could pass on conflicting titles to real estate), it was but making a mathematical computation, no more judicial in its nature than is the sheriff's determination, when he executes his deed, that six months have elapsed since the execution sale, and no more judicial than the act of a board in awarding a contract to the lowest bidder. Townsend v. Copeland, 56 Cal. 612. All political, executive, legislative, and ministerial boards, bodies, and offices are constantly, and, indeed, perpetually, called upon to make decisions affecting the conduct of matters intrusted to them. They exercise their judgments in so doing, and they determine the existence or nonexistence of facts. No street in any municipality of the state may be ordered improved until the proper authorities have first decided as a fact that a public necessity or convenience requires it. Such decisions, however, are not judgments pronounced by a judicial tribunal. They do not, as to be judicial decisions they must, declare the law and define the rights of the parties under it. But this subject has been discussed so recently and so fully in Quinchard v. Board, 113 Cal. 664, 45 Pac. 856, and in People v. Board Sup'rs Contra Costa Co. (Cal.) 55 Pac. 181, that it would be supererogatory to continue. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CRESCENT CANAL CO. v. MONTGOMERY
et al. (S. F. 1,084.)

JUDGMENT—VACATION—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS—STIPULATION—FRAUD—PARTIES—SUBSTITUTION.

1. Defendant, in a suit to restrain him from destroying a canal on his land, resold the land to his grantor, and he sold it to one J., who intervened, and with consent of defendant, and with notice to plaintiff, substituted his attorney for defendant's, withdrew his intervention, and filed an answer and cross complaint. Thereafter defendant stipulated for entry of judgment against him. On motion to reinstate, J. and his attorney deposed that defendant agreed to the substitution, and to J.'s defending in his name for J.'s benefit, and that plaintiff knew it, and the attorney deposed that he stated in open court that he would defend in the name of defendant for J.'s benefit. Two others deposed to defendant's knowledge that the land was purchased by J. for the purpose of defending in the action. Defendant did not deny such knowledge, but claimed he had a verbal option of buying the land back, but did not state that he had done anything, nor intended to do anything, under it. Defendant's attorney deposed that no statement was made in court that he heard or understood as to J.'s defending the action, and he did not know that J.'s attorney was defending. Held, that defendant's stipulation for judgment was a fraud on the real defendant, and the judgment should be reopened.

2. Where the court allowed a party to file an intervention, and afterwards an answer and cross complaint, to authorize reopening a judgment against such party an affidavit of merits need not be filed.

3. A motion to set aside a judgment on account of fraud need not set out an affidavit of merits.

4. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 385, permitting an action to be continued in the name of the original party in case of any transfer of interest, the transferee of a part only of a cause of action may continue it in the name of the original party.

5. A stipulation for judgment, signed by a party, is of no effect, he being represented in court by an attorney.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by the Crescent Canal Company, a corporation, against John Montgomery and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order refusing to vacate and set aside the judgment, defendant J. G. James appeals. Reversed.

W. C. Graves and E. D. Edwards, for appellant. F. H. Short, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This appeal is from an order denying the motion of J. G. James for an order to vacate and set aside the judgment made and entered herein on the 19th day of May, 1897. The motion is based upon affidavits, pleadings, and files in the case, minutes of the court and certain deeds of conveyance, all of which are embodied in the bill of exceptions brought up with the appeal. The facts of the case are about these: William Johns and Thomas Poyser were owners and in possession of fractional section 4, lying north of the Laguna De Tache grant, in township 18 S., range 19 E., Mount Diablo base and meridian, containing 480 acres, more or less. The plaintiff canal company entered upon this fractional section without permission of Johns and Poyser, and constructed levees and dams over and upon said section, and across and in the bed of a natural stream of water called "North Fork of Kings River," flowing through said section, without the consent or knowledge of said Johns and Poyser. In 1889 the said Johns and Poyser sold and conveyed said fractional section 4 to the defendant L. Y. Montgomery, and the said Montgomery, to secure the payment of a sum of $4,000 purchase money, mortgaged said lands to said Johns and Poyser. Thereafter Poyser sold and assigned his entire interest in and to said mortgage to said Johns, and he became sole owner thereof. Thereafter the defendants Montgomery commenced to dig and tear down and remove the said levees and dams, and the plaintiff thereafter, on the 5th of December, 1891, commenced this action in the superior court of Fresno county against said Montgomerys, and obtained a temporary injunction against said defendants Montgomery, restraining them from digging up and tearing down said levees and dam. Thereafter, on January 2, 1892, the defendants filed an answer to said complaint, and at the same time a cross complaint, in which it was alleged that the said canal had been constructed across said land as stated, and that the same obstructed and dammed up a natural water course, and backed the water up over the banks and upon the lands of the said defendants; that the same was a nuisance, and caused great damage to the defendants; and asking that said nuisance be abated. Thereafter, on September 19, 1896, said L. Y. Montgomery resold said fractional section 4 to William Johns, and the said Johns satisfied and released the mortgage, and canceled said debt due him from said Montgomery. Thereafter, on October 12, 1896, said Johns sold and conveyed 40 acres, more or less, of said section 4 to said J. G. James, and the said James paid therefor the sum of $600. Thereafter, on the 1st day of December, 1896, by leave of the court, James filed his complaint in intervention in this action. In his complaint in intervention said James set up his ownership of a portion of said section 4, and alleged that the North Fork of Kings river is a natural stream or water course, and that during ordinary stages of water it has and continues to carry down and through said tract a continuous stream; that prior to the action of the plaintiffs in constructing their canal the greater part of the waters of Kings river were accustomed to and did flow in their natural channel through said North Fork of the Kings river by and past said tract of land, and that Johns and Poyser, grantors of the intervener, were the owners and in possession of the tract of land during the time plaintiffs wrongfully entered upon the same and obstructed said natural water course; that Johns intended, after repurchasing said fractional section 4, to sell and convey the 40 acres to James, as stated, and said Montgomery consented and agreed thereto, knowing at the time that said James wanted to and intended to defend said action for his own use and benefit; and asks affirmative relief that the plaintiff be restrained and prevented from maintaining or continuing said dam and canal across the bed of said North Fork of Kings river. Thereafter, on December 22, 1896, W. C. Graves was substituted as the attorney of record for the defendants in place of R. B. Terry, the defendants signing the following consent: "We hereby consent to the foregoing substitution of attorneys, the same having been made at our special instance and request. John Montgomery and L. Y. Montgomery." Plaintiff's attorney admitted service of notice of substitution of attorneys for the defendants, December 24, 1896. Thereupon it was agreed between the defendants and their substituted attorney, W. C. Graves, and James, that the complaint of said James in intervention should be withdrawn without prejudice, and that said James should maintain and defend the action in the names of the said John and L. Y. Montgomery for his (James') own protection and benefit; and thereafter said Graves, as such attorney, May 10, 1897, filed an amended answer and cross complaint, in the names of said defendants John and L. Y. Montgomery, but in the interest and for the benefit of said James, according to said agreement. May 19, 1897, the following stipulation, dated April 17, 1897, was filed: "Whereas, all matters of dispute and difference have been settled in the above-entitled action, and the defendants admit and agree that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment as prayed for in the plaintiff's complaint, except that it is understood and agreed he is not entitled to and does not claim any judgment against the defendants, and the defendants are not entitled to and do not claim any judgment against the plaintiff for damages in said action: Now, therefore, it is understood and agreed that the plaintiff may take judgment in said action as prayed for in plaintiff's complaint, except that no judgment for damages or costs shall be entered against the defendants, but that otherwise plaintiff is entitled to and shall have the relief sought in said action, and the defendants request that judgment herein be entered accordingly." Upon this stipulation the judgment in question was entered May 19, 1897. It recites: "Whereas, it appears to the court that the defendants above named have consented in writing that plaintiff may have and is entitled to judgment in said action as prayed for in plaintiff's complaint, except that no judgment for damages or costs shall be entered in said action in favor of the plaintiff or against defendants, but that otherwise plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought in said action, defendants requesting in writing that judgment be entered accordingly: Now, therefore," etc.

The motion to set aside and vacate the judgment entered upon such stipulation is based upon the ground, among others, that James was the real party defendant interested in the subject-matter in controversy in said action, and that the defendants Montgomery had no interest therein, or in defending the same, since the conveyances and substitutions already referred to, all of which was known to the plaintiff and its attorney; and that said purported stipulation made by said Montgomery was a fraud upon the rights and interests of said James and upon the court. There can be no doubt that, after the conveyances and substitutions referred to, James was the real party in interest as defendant in the subject-matter in controversy in said action, in place and stead of the nominal defendants. The stipulation signed by them states that "all matters of dispute and difference have been settled in the above-entitled action." What matters of dispute and difference have been settled? The only matter in dispute was as to the right of the plaintiff to maintain its canal in the manner in which it constructed the same along and across the tract of land known as "Fractional Section 4." This right was asserted by the plaintiff and denied by the defendants, and also by the intervener, James, and the only way that matter in dispute is shown to have been settled, as far as the plaintiff and nominal defendants are concerned, is by the sale and transfer of all interest of the defendants in and to the premises in question, to wit, fractional section 4. The showing made in support of the motion of appellant was all in this line. The affidavit of the appellant, James, states that while the action was pending defendants "conveyed to William Johns all their right, title, and interest in and to said section 4, over, along, and upon which said canal, dam, and other obstructions have been constructed by said plaintiff"; and further states his purchase of the 40-acre tract for $600, and "that thereafter, and while said action was still pending, this affiant and the said defendants came to an agreement in and by which it was agreed between them that affiant would withdraw his said complaint in intervention, and would undertake to carry on and maintain defense to said action in the name of the defendants for his (affiant's) own protection and benefit, and that he did, pursuant to said agreement, withdraw his said complaint in intervention, and did procure Walker C. Graves, his own attorney, to be substituted in lieu of the attorney for defendants in said action, and that he has ever since, and up to the time said action was attempted to be dismissed, maintained and carried on the defense of said action at his own cost and expense, and free of any costs or expense to said defendants; * * * that the plaintiff well knew, long prior to said 17th day of April, 1897, that this affiant was defending said action in the name of said defendants, for his own use and benefit." The appellant's attorney, Graves, in his affidavit states that after filing of his petition in intervention he met L. Y. Montgomery, one of the defendants, "and it was then and there agreed between the said L. Y. Montgomery, acting for himself and his co-defendant, John Montgomery, and this affiant, acting for J. G. James, that affiant would withdraw the complaint of J. G. James in intervention in the above-entitled action, and would undertake to carry on and maintain the defense to said action in the name of the defendants, and for J. G. James' own protection and benefit, and free of any cost or expense to the defendants," and further details the steps that were taken thereafter pursuant to said agreement, substantially the same as in the affidavit of the appellant, James, and adds: "And affiant further states that upon the withdrawal of said complaint in intervention he stated in open court that he would defend the action in the name of defendants for the benefit of J. G. James, or words to that effect were used, and plaintiff knew long prior to the 17th day of April, 1897, that J. G. James was defending said action in the name of the defendants, for his own use and benefit." In Johns' affidavit he says: "On or about the 21st day of August, 1896, and while said action was pending in said court, the said L. Y. Montgomery proposed to affiant to sell and convey the said land back to him if affiant would release and discharge said mortgage and cancel the debt secured thereby. This affiant consented and agreed to said proposal, and thereupon, in pursuance thereof, said L. Y. Montgomery did, on the said 19th day of September, 1896, by a deed of that date, reconvey said fractional section to this affiant." And further: "And when this affiant purchased said section from said L. Y. Montgomery, as hereinbefore stated, and while said action was pending in said court, the said James, in order to entitle him to protect his interests and rights to have said water flow over his said land, and with full knowledge and consent of said L. Y. Montgomery, purchased from this affiant forty acres of said fractional section, upon, over, and through which said canal is situated, and this affiant conveyed the said forty acres to said James, this affiant and L. Y. Montgomery well knowing that said James wanted to, and intended to, defend said action." Thomas Poyser in his affidavit says: "That this affiant was present on the Laguna De Tache grant, and heard the conversation between L. Y. Montgomery and the said William Johns, namely, on or about the 21st day of August, 1896, in the course of which the said L. Y. Montgomery proposed to sell and convey the said land back to the said William Johns if the said William Johns would release and discharge said mortgage and cancel the debt secured thereby; that said Johns consented and agreed to said proposal; and that said Johns then and there informed the said L. Y. Montgomery that he intended, after repurchasing said land, to sell and convey some forty acres to Jefferson G. James for six hundred dollars, upon, over, and through which said canal is situated." The only affidavits in reply on the part of the plaintiff were by its attorney and L. Y. Montgomery, one of the defendants. The affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney in response to that portion of the affidavit of Graves, the appellant's attorney, as to what occurred in open court, merely says "that no statement was made in open court or otherwise, at the time the complaint of Jefferson G. James was withdrawn, or at any time or at all, that was heard or understood by affiant." And also that he did not know at the time that James was defending the action for the Montgomerys. The affidavit of L. Y. Montgomery admits the reconveyance of the said fractional section 4 to William Johns, as stated, and also that at and before the execution and delivery of said deed it was understood and agreed that said Johns would convey 40 acres of said land to J. G. James for the consideration of $600. He does not deny that the mortgage held by Johns for $4,000 was satisfied of record and the debt secured thereby canceled, but claims that at the time of the reconveyance he had a verbal understanding with Johns that he (Johns) would convey the said land to affiant, or to affiant and his brother, upon demand therefor, and upon payment to him of $3,000,—$400 in cash at the time of said reconveyance, and a note and mortgage upon the land for the remainder, payable within a reasonable time. Nothing is stated in his affidavit as to anything having been done under such alleged verbal agreement, or that he ever intends to do anything under it. He admits that the ditch or canal in question "runs through and over said section 4, and a portion thereof through and over the lands conveyed to the said James, and a portion thereof through and over the lands in which affiant retains title and interest, as hereinbefore stated and specifically set forth." That is the so-called "verbal agreement," which may never be carried out, and which could not be enforced. He does not deny anywhere the conversations and agreements detailed in the affidavits of the appellant, his attorney, and William Johns and Thomas Poyser.

At the time the stipulation was filed the defendants had no title of record to the premises involved or interest in further defending the suit, and the appellant, James, was an interested party in defending such suit. Section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, in case of any transfer of interest, the action may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action. In the case of Walker v. Felt, 54 Cal. 386, the plaintiff, after having transferred his interest, through his attorney dismissed the action. The court says: "The party who had transferred his interest divested himself of any power to control the action. He could not dismiss it, because his successors had a right to have it continued. The validity of the order of dismissal in this case rests solely upon the consent of the original plaintiff. * * * As he had no right to interfere with the action, the court, not being advised of that, should have vacated the order based upon it." The attorney who signed the stipulation as the attorney for the plaintiff did not assume to act as the attorney for his successor in interest, and states in his affidavit "that he signed the stipulation because he and the nominal plaintiff had parted with all interest in the land, and did not wish to prosecute the action any further, and did not desire to become liable for costs." The court, commenting upon this affidavit, says: "We cannot discover that this gave him any right to stipulate away the rights of his successors in interest. The attempt to do so should be defeated, if the court possesses the requisite power to defeat it. The act involves a flagrant breach of good faith, and that is a thing that justice abhors. * * * The court which made the order dismissing the action must have been imposed upon, and, after discovering the fraud and imposition, the order should have been promptly vacated." In this case the nominal defendants signed the stipulation, and not an attorney, and they substantially give the same reason as given in the case cited, to wit, that they had no further interest in the litigation. In Plummer v. Brown, 64 Cal. 429, 1 Pac. 703, the defendant John A. Brown's interest had been transferred, pending the litigation, to Martha Brown and C. E. Thom. The court say: "They certainly had acquired the right to represent him. The transfer of his interest to them entitled them to have the action continued in his name, or the court might allow them to be substituted for him. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. After transferring his entire interest in the subject of the controversy, the defendant was only nominally a party to the action. The real parties in interest were his grantees. The entry of his default affected them, not him. It is the duty of all courts to construe the provisions of the Code 'liberally, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice.'" In that case the motion was made under section 473, Id., and the court set aside the default entered against the original defendant upon the motion of his successors in interest, which order was affirmed by this court. In People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. 348, a motion was made by the Cucamonga Company, to which the land involved in the action had been conveyed, and a certificate therefor assigned by Mullan, to set aside a pretended service on Mullan, which motion was denied by the court below, and on appeal the order was reversed by this court. This court say: "We regard the corporation as, in legal effect, the assignee and legal representative of Mullan, and standing in his shoes. We think the motion was well made. Code Civ. Proc. § 473; U. S. v. Patterson, 15 How. 12. The company could have moved in the name of Mullan, and it has substantially done this. We should be sacrificing substance to form to hold otherwise."

It is contended on the part of respondent's attorney that if the motion was made under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., it was properly denied for want of an affidavit of merits. However, the attorney for appellant, James, files an affidavit of merits, and the appellant himself states facts disclosing merits. Besides, this contention on the part of respondent's attorney is answered by the action of the court below in allowing the appellant to file, first, a complaint in intervention, and subsequently, through the nominal defendants, allowing to be filed by the appellant's attorney the last amended answer and cross complaint. The court, therefore, at the time of granting such orders, must have considered that the appellant had a meritorious defense to the action. But this motion is not based on section 473, Code Civ. Proc., but upon the rights of a party succeeding to the interests of a litigant, pending the litigation, under section 385, Id. Further, the motion is not to set aside a default obtained "through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect," but is to set aside a judgment entered upon a fraudulent stipulation.

It is too plain to be questioned that the nominal defendants, at the time the stipulation was filed, knew that the real party defendant was the appellant, James, and that they had parted with what interest they might have had. As to them, therefore, it was clearly a fraud upon the appellant to sign the stipulation and have judgment entered thereon. "When a judgment or decree of any court, whether inferior or superior, has been obtained by fraud, the fraud is regarded as perpetrated upon the court as well as upon the injured party. * * * The equitable jurisdiction to cancel and set aside or to restrain judgments and decrees of any court obtained by a fraud practiced upon the court and the losing party is well settled and familiar." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 919. See, also, Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. 370, 4 Pac. 232. In Norton v. Railroad Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 585, and 32 Pac. 452, the motion was made to quash the summons, and to set aside and vacate the default of the defendant, on the ground that the service was not such as authorized by law, and a fraud on defendant, and that the court had no jurisdiction to enter the default and judgment. It was contended in that case that the application could only be made under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., based upon an affidavit of merits. This court say, in response to that contention: "The main provision of that section is that a court may relieve a party from the judgment taken against him 'through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect,' and it is quite clear that the provision just quoted has no application to the ground upon which the respondent moved in the case at bar. Defendant here is not asking a relief on its neglect or mistake or default of any character. * * * In the cases cited the parties making application to set aside the judgments confessed some neglect or misconduct from which they sought to be relieved, and thus come clearly within the provisions of said section, and, of course, were compelled to comply with the provisions of the section, under the construction which the court had given them." The order of the court below setting aside the default was affirmed by this court in bank, after full hearing.

But it is contended that the appellant only acquired a part of the former interest of the defendants in the premises, and not the entire interest. Even if this should be conceded, it does not help the respondent in the least. In Cerf v. Ashley, 68 Cal. 420, 9 Pac. 658, it is held: "The Code allows, in case of a transfer of a part of the subject-matter, the transferee to be joined as plaintiff with the original plaintiff. In case of a transfer of interest, the action or proceeding may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action or proceeding. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. It would be too narrow a construction of this section to hold that it applies only where the transfer is of the entire interest." In Stewart v. Spaulding, 72 Cal. 264, 13 Pac. 661, one of the plaintiffs became insolvent, and his assignee in insolvency continued to represent his interest, without substitution, in the name of the insolvent, and the court held that this was proper; that the action could be continued in the name of the original party, or the one to whom the interest was transferred could be substituted. Railway Co. v. Hooper, 76 Cal. 404, 18 Pac. 599. The nominal defendants in this case at the time of the stipulation were represented by an attorney of record, who was the attorney of the appellant, and also was known by them to represent the interests of the appellant in the action. A party to an action may appear in his own person or by attorney, but he cannot do both. If he appears by attorney, he must be heard through him, and it is indispensable to the decorum of the court, and the due and orderly conduct of the cause, that such attorney shall have the management and control of the action or of the defense, and his acts go unquestioned by any one except the party whom he represents. So long as he remains attorney of record, the court cannot recognize any other as having the management of the case. If the party whom he represents at any time becomes dissatisfied, his remedy is pointed out by law,—to procure a change or substitution. Until this has been done, the client cannot assume control of the case. In Board v. Younger, 29 Cal. 149, the court say: "While there is an attorney of record, no stipulation as to the conduct or disposal of the action should be entertained by the court, unless the same is signed or assented to by such attorney. * * * Such a rule is not only indispensable to the orderly conduct of a cause, but is likewise a safeguard to the client against the intrigues of his adversary. * * * To entirely ignore the attorney of record, and enter, without his consent, into secret negotiations with his client touching the management of his case, is unbecoming the dignity of the legal profession, and destructive of that courtesy which is due from one member to another." In Mott v. Foster, 45 Cal. 72, the court say: "The stipulation signed by the plaintiff in person goes for nothing. He had at the time an attorney of record, who as such had the exclusive management and control of the case." In Wylie v. Gold Co., 120 Cal. 486, 52 Pac. 810, the court say: "When a party appears and is represented by an attorney of record, he cannot assume contr<sup>l</sup> of the case, and, if he signs a stipulation dismissing the action, or extending time for any purpose, the stipulation will have no effect, and will be disregarded by the court." On the showing made in this case, the court below should have promptly granted the motion to set aside the judgment entered upon the stipulation of the nominal defendants. Order denying the motion reversed.

McPHERSON v. SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY.
(Sac. 498.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1899.)

ACTION ON CONTRACT—PLEADING—COUNTIES—PRESUMPTIONS—AUTHORITY—OFFICERS—NEGLECT OF DUTY.

1. In an action on a well contract, where plaintiff alleged that he was prevented from finishing the well because of defendant furnishing unsuitable casing, which collapsed and stopped up the well, an allegation that plaintiff offered to dig another well without profit, at its actual cost, was unnecessary to the cause of action, and ineffectual as an offer to perform.

2. Where a county having a well bored was to furnish the casing, the presumption that it should be suitable and of proper strength is not overcome by Civ. Code, § 1654, providing that an uncertainty in a contract between a public body and a private person shall be presumed to be caused by the latter, and most strongly construed against him.

3. Specifications for a well contract provided that all materials should be of the best quality and suitable. Held, that this applied to the casing to be furnished by the county having the well bored, as well as to the material furnished by the contractor.

4. In an action on a well contract, a count for extra work caused by and on account of improper casing furnished by defendant having the work done states a cause of action.

5. Where, under a well contract, the owner could stop the work at any time, the contractor cannot recover damages for being prevented from completing the contract by the owner's furnishing defective materials; this not being done willfully.

6. In an action against a county on a well contract, the petition alleged that the county entered into the contract, acted on it, and made payments under it; and the contract recited that the county made it through its duly authorized agent. Held, on demurrer, that the petition was not bad as not setting out the authority under which the agent acted.

7. A county cannot escape liability under its contract to furnish suitable casings for a well being bored for it because of the neglect of duty of its officers in selecting the casings.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by J. K. McPherson against San Joaquin county. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Louttit & Middlecoff, for appellant. W. B. Nutter, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action upon contract. The complaint alleges that plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract by which plaintiff agreed to bore, for the use of defendant, "a well for flowing water and gas in accordance with the specifications prepared therefor." Plaintiff agreed to furnish all necessary tools and labor for the work, and bore the well to the depth of 2,000 feet, unless defendant "direct the discontinuance of the work." The size of the bore of the well was to be 12 inches, carried down to the greatest possible depth. Where changes were found necessary in the size of the bore, in going down, defendant was to have the right to decide as to such changes. The contract provided "that the casing to be used in said well should be furnished by the said party of the first part [defendant], * * * and shall be selected and designated by the said party of the first part." Usual covenants were given by plaintiff to make the work first-class in all respects. Plaintiff was to keep an accurate account of developments in striking water or gas as the work progressed, and report fully to defendant the results obtained. Plaintiff was to be paid at the rate of $2.25 per foot for the first 1,000 feet, $2.50 per foot for the next 500 feet, and an increased amount per foot as the well was deepened. The contract also further provided: "The total number of feet of said well to be bored being two thousand feet, unless a sufficient flow of gas shall be found at a lesser depth, or work be sooner suspended by" defendant. A provision required plaintiff to make a statement to defendant on the 1st of each month of the number of feet completed the preceding month, and, if found correct, the account should be approved by defendant, and a warrant issued to plaintiff for the amount due, less 25 per cent. reserved until full completion of the contract. Full and detailed specifications were made part of the contract. In the specifications is the provision following: "The casing to be furnished to the contractor, delivered on the grounds; he to place the same in position. * * * All casing and steel shoes for the well will be furnished by the board of supervisors." It was provided that, if the work should be discontinued by defendant, plaintiff was to "be entitled to the full payment of such portion of the work as has been satisfactorily completed, at rates that have been agreed upon in the contract"; defendant reserving the right to order the work stopped at any time. The complaint alleges "that plaintiff duly performed all the conditions on his part to be performed under said contract until said well was bored and completed to a depth of eleven hundred feet," about July 10, 1897; "* * * that the casing selected, designated, and furnished by said defendant to plaintiff to be used in said well was of such inferior quality that on said day said casing, without any fault on the part of plaintiff, and while plaintiff was in the due performance of his part of said contract, failed, collapsed, gave way, and obtruded itself into said well, and stopped up said well at a point about one thousand feet in depth in said well to such an extent that it was impracticable and impossible for plaintiff to further proceed with the boring and completion of said well; that, prior to the time that plaintiff had used said casing which failed * * * and obtruded itself into said well as aforesaid, said plaintiff had warned said defendant and its officers and agents that said casing was insufficient and unfit to be used in said well, and had protested against being required to use the same in said well, but said defendant had required said plaintiff to proceed to use said casing in said well, and had refused to procure proper casing to be used in said well." At this point in the complaint it is alleged that, after the casing collapsed as stated above, plaintiff offered to bore a new well, without profit to him, to the depth of 1,000 feet, if defendant would furnish casing and pay the actual expense of boring the well, and from that point plaintiff would proceed to complete the new well under the terms of the contract. This clause was stricken out on motion. The complaint then alleges that the sum of $2,500 was due for boring the well to the depth of 1,100 feet, no part of which has been paid, except $1,875.01, leaving due the sum of $624.99. Allegations are made showing that the claim was duly presented, and was rejected by the supervisors. A second count alleges the sum of $250 to be due for extra work caused by and on account of the improper casing furnished plaintiff. A further claim is also made of $500 damages for being prevented from completely performing the contract. Judgment was entered for defendant on the general demurrers to the several counts, from which, and also from the order granting the motion to strike out the clause above noted, plaintiff appeals.

1. The motion to strike out was properly granted. The objectionable matter was not necessary to the cause of action alleged in the complaint. If it was intended as an offer to perform, it failed of that object; for it was entirely different from the contract and was, in effect, an offer to dig a new well on different terms.

2. Respondent claims that defendant had the right to select the casing, and, if it erred in exercising its discretion, that fact gave plaintiff no right of action. Respondent invokes section 1654, Civ. Code, which provides that where uncertainty exists in a contract between a private party and a public officer or body, as such, the uncertainty is presumed to be caused by the private party, and the contract must be interpreted most strongly against the private party. We can discover no uncertainty in the provision that defendant was to supply the casing. If there is any uncertainty, it is as to whether defendant was at liberty to furnish unsuitable casing. It is claimed that in the contract defendant did not in terms agree that the casing shall be of proper strength and suitable for the purpose. But this would be implied, and no presumption should be indulged, under section 1654, to overcome an implied covenant so obviously just. When defendant undertook to furnish casing, it agreed to furnish casing suitable for the purpose. But in the specifications is a clause which, fairly construed, we think, in terms put upon defendant the duty to furnish suitable casing. It reads: "The bidder to whom the contract may be let will be required to enter into an agreement * * * to furnish and erect machinery and plant of the most approved kind, and all tools and materials of every description used in the prosecution of the work shall be of the best quality and suitable for the services to be performed, so that every possible security may be afforded to guard against accidents, so that the work may be successfully prosecuted and speedily completed." Quite as much depended upon having suitable casing, as in having suitable machinery with which to do the work; and this clause refers to the materials to be used, as well as to the machinery. Respondent contends that it was plaintiff's duty to use any casing furnished, and, if it happened to be worthless and wholly unsuitable, it was still his duty to use it, and take the consequences, to which the maxim, "Damnum absque injuria," applies. This contention is neither sound in law nor in morals. Respondent makes the same, but no other, objections to the second count. We think a good cause of action is stated for the extra work. As to the claim for damages, we find nothing in the contract to support it. Defendant reserved the right to terminate the contract at any stage of the work. When the casing collapsed, the work ceased, and defendant refused to allow resumption of any further boring of the well. We do not think plaintiff is entitled to recover for profits he might have made on the unfinished portion of the well. If it had been alleged that defendant willfully, and for the purpose of evading the contract, caused the bad casing to be used, it might be otherwise; but, so far as the complaint shows, it was the bad judgment of defendant, honestly exercised, that caused the trouble.

3. Respondent contends that the complaint is insufficient because it fails to show that the contract was made by authority of defendant. This contention rests upon the recital in the contract that it was entered into "by and between the county of San Joaquin, state of California, by and through James Brown, the duly-authorized agent of said county for said purpose, party of the first part," and plaintiff, the second party. The contract is signed: "James Brown. J. K. McPherson;" the attestation reading: "In witness whereof, the said parties have caused this instrument to be properly subscribed." The complaint alleges that the contract was entered into by defendant. Respondent cites section 2 of the act of April 1, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 452), which provides that the power of a county "can only be exercised by the board of supervisors, or by agents and officers acting under their authority, or authority of law." It is claimed that the contract set forth in the complaint shows that it was executed by an agent of the county, and it therefore became necessary to allege the authority under which the agent acted. Furthermore, it is claimed that while, under the allegations, the proof at the trial might have shown authority, still, upon demurrer, the complaint is insufficient; citing Murphy v. Napa Co., 20 Cal. 497; House v. Los Angeles Co., 104 Cal. 79, 37 Pac. 796; Jerome v. Stebbins, 14 Cal. 457; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411; and other cases. This is not an instance of powers delegated to an agent, as was that in 104 Cal., 37 Pac., supra, nor is it a case where there is a failure to allege every fact essential to be proved, as were the other cases cited. Here the allegation is that the county entered into the contract, and the contract itself recites that the county made it by and through its duly-authorized agent. The complaint also shows that the county acted under the contract, and made payments for work done under it. We think the allegations were sufficient. Defendant's point must be made by the answer, and upon the trial.

4. It is next contended that the county is not liable for the neglect of duty of its officers; citing Crowell v. Sonoma Co., 25 Cal. 316; Santa Cruz R. Co. v. Santa Clara Co., 62 Cal. 180; Chope v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364; and other like cases. The cases cited are actions arising out of the tortious acts of public officers, and are not in point. The cause of action here arises from breach of contract. Defendant cannot escape liability by setting up its neglect of duty in failing to perform its part of the contract. Even actions for damages arising out of the neglect of public officers, formerly held not to be maintainable, are in some cases now allowed, under the new constitution. Tyler v. Tehama Co., 109 Cal. 618, 42 Pac. 240. See, also, Denning v. State (filed Jan. 19, 1889) 55 Pac. 1000. The judgment should be reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer.

PEOPLE v. GONZALES. 6 Cal. Unrep. 263 (Cr. 477.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1899.)

ROBBERY—INFORMATION—VARIANCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—APPEAL—PRESUMPTION.

1. A variance between the name of the owner of the property, as given in an information for robbery and as shown in evidence, is immaterial.

2. In a prosecution for robbery, the owner of the property testified that defendant knocked him down, rendering him insensible, and that on recovering consciousness his purse and watch were missing. Another witness testified that he saw defendant holding the owner of the property on the ground. No one distinctly saw defendant rifle the latter's pockets, nor was the property found in defendant's possession. Held, that a conviction was justified.

3. Where the court, of its own motion, gives an instruction based on a contention which it states was made on the trial, it cannot be presumed on appeal, in the absence of such fact being affirmatively shown by a bill of exceptions, that the contention was not made.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Jack Gonzales was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. E. Wilcox and D. M. Burnett, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Gonzales (the appellant here) and one Fernandez were charged by information with the crime of robbery, committed by forcibly taking from one P. Santonette a brass watch and also the sum of $40 in money, the personal property of said P. Santonette. Gonzales was tried separately, and convicted. At the trial it appeared that the true name of the person called P. Santonette in the information is Peter Lattonette. He testified, however, that he is known by the name of Pete Santonette, and was so known to Gonzales at the time of the alleged robbery, and gave that as his name on the preliminary examination of this case. It further appeared from his testimony that he came from his residence in the Santa Cruz mountains to the city of San Jose "for amusement and rest," and to promote these objects he formed the acquaintance, on the night of the alleged robbery, of said Gonzales and Fernandez, and also of one Pitts. All took several drinks at the expense of Santonette, after which, as the four persons named were walking along one of the streets of the city about the hour of 12 midnight,—Pitts being a few paces behind the others,—Santonette received a blow on the head, struck by Gonzales, and fell to the ground, where he remained insensible about 15 minutes. When he recovered consciousness, he was alone, and then missed his purse, containing $40, which he had carried in his pocket, and his brass watch, which he wore when he was knocked down. He immediately complained to the police. Said Pitts testified: That a scuffle occurred between Santonette and Gonzales. He saw Gonzales holding the former on the ground. "I can't swear positively that he went through the man's pockets, but the best of my knowledge is that he did. I believe this from the way they acted. It was so dark I could not see well." That they left Santonette lying on the ground where he fell. A certain police officer testified to a declaration of Gonzales to the effect that Santonette insulted him, and he (Gonzales) knocked him down. Rosia Garcia, a witness for defendant, testified that Pitts came to her house about 1:30 a. m. of the night in question, and said he and Gonzales had robbed a man; that he (Pitts) struck him, and Gonzales "went through his pockets." Other evidence produced on either side need not be stated. It must be assumed, in support of the verdict, that the jury found the testimony on behalf of the prosecution to be true. Among the instructions of the court to the jury was the following matter: "It is contended in this case that the witness Pitts was an accomplice in the commission of a robbery, if it was committed, and therefore his testimony should not be considered by the jury, unless corroborated by other facts and circumstances in the case." The court then stated to the jury the rule forbidding a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, in the language of section 1111, Pen. Code.

1. It may be, as defendant claims, that the name of the owner was a necessary part of the description of the property taken (People v. Hughes, 41 Cal. 234); but no objection to the information was taken, by demurrer or otherwise. It was no material variance when it appeared in evidence that his true name was something different. People v. Woods, 65 Cal. 121, 3 Pac. 466; People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 570, 46 Pac. 611. See People v. Prather, 120 Cal. 660, 53 Pac. 259, and People v. Plyler, 121 Cal. 160, 53 Pac. 553.

2. Defendant urges that the evidence was circumstantial, and insufficient to show either that a robbery was committed or that he was guilty thereof. It is true that no one distinctly saw defendant rifle Santonette's pockets, nor was the property of Santonette found in defendant's possession; but the property was taken from him, the evidence tended to show, after he was knocked down, and before he recovered consciousness, and why was Gonzales "holding him on the ground," as Pitts testified? Hardly for the purpose of preventing violence at his hands, for, according to Santonette's testimony, he was then insensible. We are satisfied that this court is not warranted in interfering with the conclusion drawn by the jury from the evidence.

3. The court gave an instruction, correct in point of law, upon the kind and character of corroboration necessary to support the testimony of an accomplice before conviction could be had. It introduced the instruction by the following sentence: "It is contended in this case that the witness Pitts was an accomplice in the commission of a robbery, if it was committed, and therefore his testimony should not be considered by the jury, unless corroborated by other facts and circumstances in the case." It is said of this that the instruction was given by the court of its own motion, that no such instruction was asked by either the people or the defendant, and that no such contention as that Pitts was an accomplice was made by either party in the action. The injurious effect of the language is pointed out, and that effect may be conceded. While it is true that there is nothing in the record to show that such a contention was in fact made, upon the other hand there is nothing in the record to show that such a contention was not made. Error will not be presumed. If, in truth, no such contention was made, it was incumbent upon the appellant to have made that fact appear by a bill of exceptions. Failing to do so, the presumption must be that the instruction was addressed to a theory of the evidence advanced in the argument; and, if such was the case, no error could be predicated upon it. The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

124 Cal. 193

SWAN v. THOMPSON. (S. F. 1,124.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1899.)

SLANDER—ACTIONABLE WORDS—MALICE—EVIDENCE —PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—PLEADING—CROSS-EXAMINATION—TRIAL—OBJECTIONS.

1. Unless the vice in a question is latent, an objection that it is irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent is sufficiently specific.

2. In an action by the captain and part owner of a vessel against another part owner for slander by accusing him of drunkenness, a third person, owning part of the vessel, testified that defendant had said that plaintiff was willing to cast the vessel on the rocks for the insurance, and because thereof witness and defendant concluded to get the command of the ship away from plaintiff. Held, that it was improper to ask him on cross-examination whether plaintiff had suggested that witness place heavy insurance on his interest, and he would take the vessel off shore and fix the rest.

3. The question was incompetent because it related to no issue in the case, and tended to prejudice plaintiff by showing his willingness to commit a crime.

4. The witness not having given any direct evidence concerning plaintiff's drunkenness or reports thereof, it was improper to ask him on cross-examination how many reports came to him that plaintiff was drinking during the time he was in command of the vessel.

5. In an action by the captain of a vessel against the owner of an interest therein for slander by accusing him of getting drunk while on voyages, evidence that officers and sailors on the vessel under the plaintiff's command had told defendant that plaintiff was in the habit of getting drunk while on voyages is admissible on the issue of malice, though inadmissible under a plea of justification.

6. Where the complaint charges slander by accusing plaintiff of habitual drunkenness and of being in the habit of getting drunk, a plea of justification, that the alleged slanderous words are true, is not too broad.

7. Under a plea of justification of a slander by accusing plaintiff of drunkenness, evidence of plaintiff's drunkenness during a period not covered by the plea is inadmissible.

8. Under Civ. Code, § 46, subd. 3, defining "slander" as a false and unprivileged publication which tends directly to injure another in respect to his profession or business, either by imputing general disqualification, or something with reference to his profession or business which has a natural tendency to lessen its profit, a statement that a master mariner is in the habit of getting drunk is actionable, since such charge includes his conduct while on voyage.

9. The defense that a slander was a privileged communication must be pleaded.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles F. Swan against Hans A. Thompson. There was a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Warren Olney, Jr., for appellant. H. W. Hutton, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. By this action it is sought to recover damages from defendant upon the grounds of slander and malicious prosecution. Plaintiff is a master mariner, and was for several years a part owner in the good ship McNear, and had command of her. Defendant was also a part owner in the ship, and managing owner. The claim for damages is based upon two grounds: First, it is charged that the defendant declared of plaintiff in the presence of certain people, comprising a committee representing certain insurance companies, that "he is a drunkard when he is away from town." It is further charged by the complaint that defendant said of plaintiff at another time, in the presence and hearing of one Magill, "Lately he has been in the habit of getting drunk, and a couple of days ago went on a debauch." It is further alleged that he said of plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of one Hanna, "He has been in the habit of getting drunk." As a second cause of complaint, it is alleged that defendant maliciously had plaintiff arrested without probable cause, etc. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint, and also declared that the alleged slanderous words were true. It was further claimed that the statement of the defendant to the insurance people was a privileged communication. The case was tried by a jury, and verdict and judgment went for defendant. This appeal is from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Various assignments of error are relied upon to support the appeal, and we will at once pass to the consideration of some of the most important ones. It is first claimed upon the part of defendant that many of plaintiff's exceptions taken to the rulings of the court upon the admission and rejection of evidence cannot be considered, because the objections made are too broad and general. The objections found in the record are the ordinary ones, to the effect that the question "is irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent." Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 421, 33 Pac. 271, is relied upon to support defendant's contention in this regard. In certain cases specific objections should be made to questions, in order that the court and opposing counsel may know exactly the particular vice lurking in the question, relied upon by the party objecting. Especially in fairness to the court should this be the law. This is essentially the rule when the vice in the question is a latent one. But, if the question is objectionable from every standpoint, the court is not aided in making an intelligent ruling by a specific objection, and there the specific objection is not demanded. There is no reason for it, and where the reason is not present the rule fails. Nightingale v. Scannell, 18 Cal. 323. The objections relied upon in this case are sufficiently broad to meet the requirements of the law.

Wendt, a part owner of the vessel, gave evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. Upon direct examination he testified, among other matters, that defendant said that plaintiff had told him (defendant), in effect, that he was willing to cast the vessel on the rocks for the purpose of getting the insurance, and that for this reason and others he and defendant came to the conclusion to get the command of the ship away from the plaintiff. Upon cross-examination he was asked, under objection: "Q. Now, I want to ask you, didn't you on one occasion tell me that Captain Swan went to you, and suggested to you that you should put a heavy insurance upon your interest in the vessel, and he would take her off shore and fix the rest?" This question was clearly improper cross-examination. Neither was it competent evidence under any aspect of the case. It tended to show the willingness of the plaintiff to commit the crime of barratry,—a matter not involved in the case, and a matter tending strongly to his prejudice. The evidence was not proper as cross-examination, because it neither explained nor discredited any statement made by the witness upon his direct examination. Again, the witness having testified that plaintiff was in command of the vessel for three or four years, he was asked upon cross-examination: "Q. How many reports came to you, during that time, that Swan was drinking?" Under objection that the matter was not cross-examination, the witness was compelled to answer the question. This ruling was clearly erroneous. There is not a word in the direct evidence of the witness concerning plaintiff's drunkenness, or reports of his drunkenness.

Under objection, defendant testified that various officers and sailors under the command of plaintiff told him (defendant) that plaintiff was in the habit of getting drunk upon these voyages. The presence of malice in fact, as looking towards exemplary damages, was an element in the case. It was also an element in the case as bearing upon the privileged communication made by defendant to the insurance committee. Considerable evidence was introduced by plaintiff upon this question of malice. In answer to this class of evidence, the statements made to defendant by men working under the plaintiff as to his (plaintiff's) drunkenness was material and competent evidence. While such evidence was, in a sense, hearsay, and clearly not admissible to prove the truth of the charge of drunkenness, still the good faith of defendant, as already suggested, was an important element in the case as bearing upon malice in fact. Especially is this true when we consider that plaintiff admitted that defendant's statements to the insurance companies were privileged. These statements of the sailors and officers to the defendant were not matters of mere general rumor and report, but were statements of parties claiming to be eyewitnesses to the occurrence. Many authorities are cited to the effect that general rumors and reports cannot be relied upon by defendant, even as evidence in mitigation of damages. Preston v. Frey, 91 Cal. 107, 27 Pac. 533. But here we have something much more direct and tangible as tending to disprove the charge of malice in fact. We hold the evidence admissible. This conclusion is supported by Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 363; Edwards v. Society, 99 Cal. 438, 34 Pac. 128; Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 681, 52 Pac. 150, 499.

Upon the branch of the case appertaining to malicious prosecution, it became a material fact whether or not plaintiff used a pistol in an assault upon the defendant. The parties plaintiff and defendant directly contradicted each other as to the fact, and there were no other witnesses. Plaintiff admitted a pistol in his possession at the time, but denied exhibiting it. The evidence being in this unsatisfactory situation, plaintiff proposed to show his innocent possession of the pistol at the time by showing the circumstances under which he came by the weapon. This evidence was refused admission under objection. It is claimed by plaintiff that, if he came into possession of the pistol without any intent or purpose of using it in violence upon the defendant, then such evidence, to some degree, tends to show that he did not so use the weapon. We are not prepared to say the ruling of the court was erroneous.

By objection to the admission of evidence, and in other ways during the trial, plaintiff made the point that the justification of the charge as set forth in the answer was fatally defective by reason of its general character. In view of the allegation of the complaint which charged that the defendant accused the plaintiff of habitual drunkenness, and of being in the habit of getting drunk, we are satisfied that the justification is not couched in language too broad. Specific accusations of drunkenness upon certain specified days would hardly be a justification of the charge either of habitual drunkenness, or of the habit of being drunk.

The court committed a substantial and prejudicial error in admitting the evidence of the witness Broman. While his testimony went to the effect of plaintiff's drunkenness, it was entirely outside of the justification, for it covered a period of time not included therein. Not being within the justification, plaintiff had no notice that such evidence would be introduced, and necessarily was unprepared to meet it. If acts of drunkenness may be testified to which are not included within the lines marked out by the plea of justification, then the plea is useless, for it serves no purpose. The authorities are all one way upon this proposition.

By the complaint it is charged that defendant used in the presence and hearing of one Hanna the words, "He [plaintiff] has been in the habit of getting drunk." Defendant now insists that these words are not actionable. This contention is based upon the claim that they were not spoken of plaintiff in his position as a master mariner. In other words, it is claimed that he was not charged to have been in the habit of getting drunk while navigating his vessel. We cannot agree with this contention. To say that a "master mariner is in the habit of getting drunk" is a charge so broad as to cover the mariner's conduct upon his voyages as well as between his voyages, upon the sea as well as upon the land. There is no qualification of the language. It covers the drinking habits of the master mariner, wherever he may be. We can imagine no language better calculated to ruin a master mariner than the language here used, to wit, "He is in the habit of getting drunk." No man of the slightest business prudence would employ such a master mariner to navigate his ship. No insurance company would take a risk upon the cargo or the ship under the command of such a captain. Upon this question the test seems to be, do the words used directly tend to injure the party by reason of their relation to his occupation? Applying this rule to the case at bar, the slanderous character of the words is fully apparent, for the reasons already suggested. The foregoing principle of law is more fully laid down in subdivision 3 of section 46 of the Civil Code, as follows: "Slander is a false and unprivileged publication other than libel, which * * * (3) tends directly to injure him in respect to his office, profession or business, either by imputing to him general disqualification in those respects which the office or other occupation peculiarly requires, or by imputing something with reference to his office, profession, trade or business that has a natural tendency to lessen its profit." Tested by this provision of the law, we are prepared to say an accusation against a master mariner, that he is in the habit of getting drunk, imputes to him a "general disqualification" in those respects which the occupation peculiarly requires. The occupation of master mariner, above all things, peculiarly requires a man who is not in the habit of getting drunk. See Chaddock v. Briggs, 13 Mass. 248; Sanderson v. Caldwell, 45 N. Y. 398.

The court refused to give the following instruction: "If you find from the evidence that upon or about the time mentioned in the amended complaint the defendant spoke of and concerning the plaintiff, in the presence and hearing of J. F. Hanna, the words alleged in the amended complaint to have been so spoken, to wit, the words, 'He has been in the habit of getting drunk,' and if you further find that the defendant has not proved to your satisfaction, by a preponderance of evidence, that said words were true of plaintiff, I instruct you that your verdict must be for the plaintiff." The reasons for refusing this instruction are given as: (1) It ignores the question of privileged communication; and (2) the words are not actionable. The court also refused an instruction to the effect that the aforesaid statement did not constitute a privileged communication. Both of these instructions should have been given. The words were actionable, and the statement was not privileged. Indeed, as to this statement there was no claim made in the pleadings that it was a privileged communication. Gilman v. McClatchy, 111 Cal. 611, 44 Pac. 241.

We refrain from a further discussion of the law embraced in the charge to the jury. Many objections have been made by appellant to its soundness. But, in view of what has been said, we feel that the lines are fairly marked out by which the court may be guided upon a second trial. As to the degree of evidence necessary to substantiate a plea of justification, Hearne v. De Young, supra, may be consulted. Upon many questions of law involved in this case,—especially upon the question of malice in law and malice in fact,—Childers v. Publishing Co., 105 Cal. 288, 38 Pac. 903, affords valuable information. The order is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

O'KANE v. WHELAN, Sheriff. (S. F. 999.) 1
(Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1899.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—GIFTS—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

1. A wife acquires no title to property, as against her husband's creditors, under a deed of gift executed by her husband when ill, to secure the property to her in case of his death, where he subsequently recovers, and uses the property in his business.

2. A wife must take possession of property purchased of her husband, as required by Civ. Code, § 3440, to render the sale valid as against his creditors, though the property is subsequently included in an inventory of her separate estate filed under section 165.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Replevin by Julia O'Kane against R. I. Whelan, sheriff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

John H. Durst, for appellant. J. J. Coffey, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This is an action in replevin against the defendant, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, to recover two horses, one express wagon, and two sets of harness, or their value, found by the court to be $500. The goods were seized by the sheriff under an execution issued upon a judgment recovered by F. W. Spencer Company against Frank O'Kane, April 18, 1893. The appeal is from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff claims the property as her separate property under a deed of gift, as to the wagon, executed to her by her husband in 1880; and as to all of the property in question, under a bill of sale from her husband to her, in consideration of one dollar, executed September 7, 1892. The deed of gift of 1880 cuts no figure, for the reason that the plaintiff herself testifies that the object of the deed was to secure the property to her in the event of her husband's death, and that he afterwards recovered and carried on his business as before his sickness, in the same manner and at the same place, and used and kept the wagon in the same manner and at the same place. The finding of the court that the plaintiff has been, for more than four years prior to the filing of the complaint in this action, in the possession of the property mentioned in the complaint, is entirely unsupported by the evidence. The testimony of the plaintiff is: "On September 7, 1882, my husband executed and delivered to me a bill of sale of six horses and three wagons and certain harness. The wagon, horses, and harness seized by the sheriff were included in this bill of sale. * * * The only consideration passing was the one dollar which I paid to my husband. My husband had no other property than that conveyed to me. After the execution of the bill of sale my husband continued the express business in the same way as before, and carrying on the business at the same place and stand. The horses, wagon, and harness were stabled and kept at the barn on the premises at 1036 Golden Gate avenue, and cared for the same way after the sale as before. Over the stable door after the sale, and at all times before and since, there was the sign, 'Washington Furniture Express,' 'Frank O'Kane & Son.' On the wagons are the names, 'Washington Furniture Express,' 'Frank O'Kane,' and 'Frank O'Kane & Son.' These names have at all times been on the wagons and unchanged." Frank O'Kane testified as follows: "After the bill of sale to my wife, I carried on the business the same as before, but for her. The only difference was that, while before I kept all the money, afterwards I gave all to her except the spending money which she allowed me. The team, wagon, and harness were at all times kept in the same place; that is, at our residence 1036 Golden Gate avenue. The business stand was at the same place. There remained the same signs and names over the stable door and on the wagons, and the same business card was used." This is all the testimony on the question of sale and delivery. September 8, 1892, the plaintiff filed for record in the office of said city and county an inventory of her separate property, including therein the horses, wagon, and harness now sued for. "Every transfer of personal property, other than a thing in action, * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession." Civ. Code, § 3440. To meet this provision of the law against fraudulent conveyances, the respondent relies upon sections 165, 166, providing for the filing of an inventory of the separate personal property of the wife. This question was directly passed upon in Murphy v. Mulgrew, 102 Cal. 547, 36 Pac. 857. In that case the wife claimed that she had purchased the horses in question from her husband, Wyman Murphy, on January 11, 1890, which were seized by the defendant, as sheriff of Sonoma county, November 16, 1891, under a writ of attachment in favor of the Santa Rosa Bank and against her husband, the said Wyman Murphy. The court there say: "From the evidence of the plaintiff it will be perceived that no actual change of possession of this property took place at the time of the delivery of the bill of sale, but, on the contrary, in all its surroundings, it remained entirely in statu quo. Mrs. Murphy attempts to escape the legal effect of the foregoing evidence by the claim that she had appointed her husband her agent to take the possession and control of the horses for her, and, as such agent, his possession was her possession; but there is nothing to be urged in favor of such a contention. Both the letter and spirit of the law contained in section 3440 would be defeated by the recognition of such a principle. The object of the statute is to require notice to the world of the transfer of personal property, in order that men may be able to deal with each other upon equal terms and from a common level. The efficacy of the statute would be entirely destroyed if the vendor were allowed to remain in possession of the property as the agent of the vendee, in the absence of any notice to the world of such a change of conditions. A practice of that kind would be in direct conflict with the terms of the statute itself." Further: "The transfer of the property in litigation by bill of sale was made January 11, 1890, and upon December 30th following plaintiff filed an inventory of her separate property in the recorder's office, in accordance with the provisions of section 165 of the Civil Code. The Santa Rosa Bank became a creditor prior to the recording of the inventory, and the attachment proceedings upon the husband's indebtedness were begun November 16, 1891. It is now insisted by respondent that, conceding no immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession took place at the date of the bill of sale, still the subsequent recording of the inventory in the recorder's office of her separate property, including these horses, cured any defective compliance with the provisions of section 3440, and gave her good title against the world from that day. It is unnecessary to pass upon the scope and purpose of section 165 of the Code. Whatever may be its scope and purpose, we are well satisfied it is not entitled to a construction that would nullify the provisions of section 3440 as to fraudulent transfers of personal property." On the authority of that case, as well as from the fact that the finding of the court referred to is unsupported by the evidence, the judgment and order refusing a new trial are reversed.

PEOPLE v. PATTERSON. (Cr. 484.)

ROBBERY—EVIDENCE—CHARGE—CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

1. Prosecuting witness testified that he left a saloon with accused and another in the evening, and, as they walked along the street, the two suddenly attacked him, and knocked him insensible, and, when he became conscious, he found that he had been robbed of $18. He soon after returned to the saloon, bleeding from a wound in the head. He was corroborated as to his leaving the saloon with the two. He was considerably under the influence of liquor, and, before leaving the saloon, had pretended to the bartender that he had no money to pay for drinks. Held, that a verdict of guilty was justified.

2. In a prosecution for robbery, accused's witness testified he heard of the robbery on the 24th of February. On cross-examination he was asked, "How did you know that he was robbed that evening?" and answered that he had not said that he knew on the 24th of the robbery, but that he had merely heard at some other time of the robbery on the 24th. Held, that there was nothing prejudicial to accused in the question.

3. One accused of robbery testified he lodged at a certain house, and was asked by the state, "When did you pay your rent there?" Objection was sustained. Held, that the mere asking of the question was not cause for reversal.

4. The prosecuting attorney, in argument to the jury, said, speaking of accused's attorney: "Why, this child talks to you as if you were a band of idiots." Held that, while it was not courteous language, it was not prejudicial to accused.

5. A requested charge that, if a witness named swore falsely in one place, the jury could believe his entire testimony false, was properly modified to read, "any witness."

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

James Patterson was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. L. Sanders, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of robbery, alleged to have been committed by the felonious taking away from the person of one Heisler of $18 in money. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The main point of the appeal is that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the verdict. But Heisler testified that during the evening of February 24, 1898, he left a certain saloon in company with the appellant and one McMahon, who was also convicted of the same crime, and that while the three were walking along the street the appellant and McMahon suddenly attacked him, seized him by the throat, and struck him a blow which knocked him down and rendered him for a time insensible, and that when he recovered his consciousness he found that he had been robbed of about $18 in coin. He soon afterwards returned to the saloon, bleeding from a wound in the head. As to the fact that he had left the saloon a short time before, in company with the appellant and McMahon, he was corroborated by the witness Swope. No doubt the testimony of Heisler was somewhat weakened by the fact that he was a good deal under the influence of liquor, by the fact that shortly before leaving the saloon he had pretended to the bartender that he had no money to pay for drinks, and by a few other circumstances. But, although the case made out by the prosecution was not a particularly strong one, yet we would not be justified in saying that the jury should not have believed his testimony, and, therefore, under the rule so well established, we cannot say that there was not sufficient material evidence to warrant the jury in finding a verdict of guilty.

The judgment cannot be reversed on account of any alleged errors of law. It was not error in the court to refuse to strike out the testimony of the witness Hughes, who was called for the prosecution. His evidence had some relevancy to the issues in the case, and, at all events, it was not prejudicial to the appellant, but was really to his advantage.

On the cross-examination of appellant's witness McMahon, the prosecution asked him, "How did you know he was robbed that evening?" To this appellant objected as not cross-examination, and the objection was overruled. On his examination in chief he had said, "I heard of his being robbed on the 24th day of February." This fairly bore the construction that he had heard on the 24th day of February that the robbery had occurred, and it was quite proper to ask him, on cross-examination, how he knew on the 24th that the robbery had occurred. The witness' answer was that he had not said that he knew on the 24th that he (Heisler) had been robbed, but that he had merely heard at some other time that he had been robbed on the 24th. There was nothing in this improper or prejudicial to the appellant.

The appellant when on the witness stand, having testified that he stopped at a certain lodging house, was asked by the district attorney, "When did you pay your rent there?" Whether this question was proper or not, the objection to it was by the court sustained, and the mere asking of the question would certainly not warrant a reversal of the judgment. It is not within the principle of those cases where it has been held that numerous repetitions of questions clearly improper, and evidently done for the purpose of taking an unfair advantage, will warrant a new trial. Neither did the court err in denying appellant's motion to strike out certain testimony of the witness which had been introduced without objection, on the ground that it was not cross-examination. It was about matters about which the witness had testified in chief.

The alleged misconduct of the assistant district attorney who tried the case is not sufficient to warrant a new trial. It seems, although it does not clearly appear, that the prosecuting attorney said something to the effect that the attorney for the defendant was a shyster, but the court immediately said that the language used, whatever it was, was improper and out of place, and the prosecuting attorney withdrew it. Afterwards the prosecuting attorney, after alluding to certain things which, as he said, the attorney for the appellant was trying to impress upon the jury, said, "Why, this child talks to you as if you were a band of idiots." This was certainly not courteous language, and the court was wrong in saying, "I think it does not transcend legitimate argument;" but it is evident that this language, however distasteful it may have been to the attorney for the appellant, could not have been, in a material sense, prejudicial to the appellant.

Appellant asked the court to give the following instruction: "The jury are instructed that it is a maxim of our law that when testimony is false in one part it is false in all, and that, if you find in this case that the witness Swope testified falsely in one place, you are at liberty to believe his testimony false in every part, and to entirely disregard it in your consideration of the facts in this case." The court struck out the words, "the witness Swope," and inserted in place thereof the words, "any witness," and as thus modified gave the instruction. Assuming, but not deciding, that the instruction in either shape is not in contravention of section 19 of article 6 of the state constitution, which provides that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law," still the instruction as given by the court was all that appellant was entitled to upon the subject. Reference by the court to a particular witness is dangerous; it tends to lead the jury to believe that the court itself is suspicious of the witness named. If such instructions can be demanded by the defendant in a criminal case, they can also be demanded by the prosecution; and it is much better for such instructions to state the general principles of law, and allow counsel to make the application. There are no other points which call for special notice. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

MENKE v. LYNDON et al. (S. F. 1,162.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1899.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—INSOLVENCY—ASSIGNEE—ELECTION—REMOVAL—PARTIES—PLEADING—EVIDENCE.

1. Civ. Code, § 3449, as amended in 1895, provides that at a meeting of the creditors of an insolvent to elect an assignee in place of the sheriff for the purpose of voting thereat the sheriff shall accept the sworn statement of a creditor as to the correct amount of his claim. Held, that a power authorizing an attorney to "protect in every respect" a creditor's interests, and to do everything necessary with reference to disputed claims, authorized the attorney to make the sworn statement of the demand, and also to vote as the creditor's proxy at the election of the assignee.

2. For purposes of evidence, no weight attaches to a sworn denial of a fact based on a statement that the party making the denial "has no information or belief" as to the fact.

3. An application to have an election of an assignee for an insolvent in place of the sheriff declared void need not allege that it is prosecuted for the benefit of all the creditors.

4. Under Civ. Code, § 3449, as amended in 1895, providing that at a meeting of the creditors of an insolvent to elect an assignee in place of the sheriff "a majority in amount of demands present or represented by proxy shall control all questions and decisions," a majority in amount of the demands "voted" is not sufficient per se.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.
Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by J. H. Menke against James H. Lyndon and another to restrain the delivery of property to an assignee, and to have his election declared void. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a temporary injunction, he appeals. Reversed.

Lowry & Gutsch, for appellant. Jos. R. Patton, for respondent Lyndon. Hiram D. Tuttle and W. L. Gill, for respondent Roemer.

BRITT, C. On January 18, 1897, one Werner H. Menke, being insolvent, made to the defendant Lyndon, who was the sheriff of Santa Clara county, an assignment of property in trust for the benefit of his creditors under the provisions of section 3449, Civ. Code, as amended in the year 1895. Thereupon the sheriff called a meeting of the creditors, as required by said statute, "for the purpose of electing one or more assignees in the place and stead of the said sheriff." At the meeting thus called the sheriff presided, and declared as the result of the vote of the creditors that the defendant Roemer was duly elected assignee. The sheriff was about to deliver to Roemer, as such assignee, the property of the assigning debtor, when plaintiff brought this action to restrain such delivery, and to have the supposed election of Roemer judicially declared void. In his complaint, duly verified, plaintiff alleged that he was a creditor of said debtor at the time of said assignment, and yet is, to the amount of $13,269. He applied for an injunction pending the action. His application was denied by the court, and this is an appeal from the order denying the same.

Said section 3449, Civ. Code, provides that at the meeting of creditors for electing an assignee in the place of the sheriff "a majority in amount of demands present or represented by proxy shall control all questions and decisions"; also that for the purpose of voting at such meeting the sheriff shall accept as correct the statement of the amounts of the demands, respectively, of the creditors as set forth in the debtor's assignment to him, unless a creditor, finding the amount of his claim to be incorrectly stated in the assignment, file "a statement, under oath, of his demand," which statement shall, for the purpose of voting, as aforesaid, be accepted by the sheriff as correct. At the hearing of plaintiff's motion for an injunction it appeared, among other things, that plaintiff resides at the city of Bremen, Germany. A few days prior to the aforesaid assignment of January 18, 1897, he made to one Gutsch, of the city of San Francisco, in this state, a power of attorney, duly executed and acknowledged, in terms purporting to authorize the latter to "protect in every respect" the interests of plaintiff in all parts of the United States, and to act in plaintiff's name for that purpose, and to collect debts, and bring actions, and do everything necessary with reference to claims in dispute. In the said assignment plaintiff was named as a creditor to the amount of $12,650; but before the meeting of creditors said Gutsch, on behalf of plaintiff, filed with the sheriff a statement of plaintiff's demand, under oath, stating the same to be $13,269, and by virtue of said power of attorney he voted at said meeting, as plaintiff's proxy, the amount last stated. On that occasion the "amount of demands present or represented by proxy" was $28,770.88, so that a majority of the same was above $14,385.44. Defendant Roemer received the vote of $14,301 thereof for the office of assignee; one H. A. Diehl received the vote of demands (including that of plaintiff) amounting to $13,858; and the holder of a demand for above $600—one Spingler—declined to vote at all. The sheriff, as already stated, declared Roemer duly elected; to which ruling plaintiff, by his said attorney, then and there protested on the ground that the claim of Spingler should be counted against Roemer in determining whether he had received a majority.

At the meeting of creditors the sheriff overruled all objections to the right of Gutsch to vote the plaintiff's demand, but both defendants urge now sundry of the objections then taken. Thus, they assert that the power of attorney was insufficient to authorize Gutsch to make affidavit to the claim of plaintiff or to vote the claim as proxy for plaintiff. As regards the affidavit,—made to correct the statement of amount of the demand contained in the assignment,—it is not apparent from the statute but that it may be made on behalf of the creditor by any person who has competent knowledge of the facts. And if express authority from the creditor is required for the filing thereof with the sheriff, still the power of attorney held by Gutsch was in language both broad enough and specific enough to include it, and was also sufficient evidence of his right to vote as plaintiff's proxy at the meeting.

It is further said that on the hearing of the motion for injunction the question whether plaintiff was a creditor of the assigning debtor to any amount was in dispute; but to raise that question the record shows only the affidavit of the sheriff to the effect that he has no information or belief as to the indebtedness of Werner H. Menke to plaintiff, "and, basing his denial on that ground," he denies that such indebtedness ever existed. It was said in People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 9, that an affidavit made upon information merely is entitled to but little weight in any legal proceeding; and certainly for purposes of evidence no weight at all can be accorded to an affiant's denial based on the want of any information whatever.

Another objection is that plaintiff does not avowedly prosecute the action for the benefit of all the creditors. We know of no valid reason why he should so allege. Of course, if he succeeds, the result inures to the advantage of all,—if such they regard it.

On the showing made it must be held that Roemer was never elected assignee. He did not receive the vote of "a majority in amount of demands present or represented by proxy," which, by the requirement of the statute (section 3449, Civ. Code), "shall control all questions and decisions." The thirteenth section of the former federal bankrupt act (section 5034, Rev. St. U. S.) provided that the choice of assignee should be made by the greater part in number and in value of the creditors who have proved their debts. The question of the construction of that statute was stated and ruled as follows: "Must a person, to be elected assignee, receive only a majority of the votes actually cast, or a majority of all who have proved their claims? The register thinks that a majority of all the claims that are proved is requisite, and I agree with him in this opinion. * * * If no one receives the vote of this majority, no choice is made by the creditors." In re Purvis, 20 Fed. Cas. 74. And a like decision was rendered in Re Scheiffer, 21 Fed. Cas. 657. Our statute here under view does not differ materially (as regards the present question) from that considered in the cases cited; and, in our opinion, it requires the same interpretation. See O'Neill v. Reynolds, 116 Cal. 264, 48 Pac. 57. The court should have issued the temporary injunction asked, and the order denying it should be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying a temporary injunction is reversed.

STOCKTON ICE CO. v. ARGONAUT LAND & DEVELOPMENT CO. (Sac. 462.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1899.)

AGENCY—REVOCATION—NOTICE—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL.

1. Liabilities incurred by an agent on behalf of his principal after the termination of the agency, in favor of one having no notice of the revocation of the agency, are binding on the principal, though he never ratified the agent's act.

2. Findings on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed, though the appellate court differs with the trial court as to the weight of the evidence.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by the Stockton Ice Company against the Argonaut Land & Development Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James A. Louttit, for appellant. Dudley & Buck, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Both parties are corporations. The action is for coal sold and delivered to appellant, and for freight paid and advanced by plaintiff for the defendant, all at its request. The plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals therefrom; and also from an order denying a new trial. No question is made but that the findings are sufficient to support the judgment, but it is contended that the evidence does not justify the findings, and this is the only question presented.

The principal controversy was as to the authority of Mr. Fairbrother to incur the indebtedness for the defendant corporation. It appears from the evidence that, prior to the transactions here in question, Fairbrother had been the duly-authorized agent of the defendant, and at various times purchased coal, as such agent, from the plaintiff, to an amount exceeding $1,700, for all of which the defendant paid. It is claimed by the defendant, however, that his agency had ceased before the transactions here in question took place. To this contention the plaintiff replied that, whether his authority had in fact ceased or not, he continued to act as such agent as before, and that plaintiff had no notice of the revocation of the agency. If this be true, it is immaterial whether the defendant did or did not subsequently ratify Fairbrother's acts in incurring these liabilities. All the liabilities sued upon were such as the corporation defendant could properly incur, and hence the only question was whether Fairbrother was the agent, actual or ostensible, of the defendant. The evidence was conflicting, but quite sufficient to justify the findings. The facts were for the trial court to determine, and, even if we differed with that court as to the weight of the evidence, we could not disturb its action. The judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BRIGGS et al. v. BREEN et al. (S. F. 1,076.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1899.)

In bank. For opinion in department, see 56 Pac. 633.

PER CURIAM. Affirmed.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing in this case, because I think an erroneous construction has been given to the contract of the parties, and a precedent established which can never fail to work an injustice as often as it is followed. When the defendants employed the plaintiffs to perform the necessary legal services incident to the administration of the estate of which they were executors, without any express agreement as to compensation, there was, of course, an implied agreement to pay the reasonable value of the services. But if it can be justly inferred from the nature of the transaction that they had each in mind, and expected to be governed by, a particular rule or method of ascertaining such reasonable value, then that is as much a term of the contract as the agreement to pay. The contract of the defendants was like any other implied contract, and their promise such, and such only, as can be reasonably inferred from all the circumstances. If I order a sack of flour from a grocer, the promise which the law implies is that I will pay the reasonable value of the flour, as determined by its current market price at the time and place of delivery; and this because market price is the generally accepted standard of value, and is therefore presumed to have been the thing intended and understood by buyer and seller. But suppose current market price not to be the accepted standard of value. Suppose, for instance, that some board or officer is invested by law with the power to ascertain and fix the value of provisions. In that case the only promise the law could imply from a simple order for the delivery of a sack of flour would be a promise to pay its value as determined by such board or officer. Now, to apply this illustration to the case in hand: When an executor, administrator, or other trustee employs an attorney to serve him in his representative capacity in the care and due administration of the subject of the trust, they both know that the services are to be rendered, not for the personal advantage of the trustee, but solely in the interest of the beneficiaries of the trust,—not for the executor, but for the distributees of the estate. They both know that it is not just that for such services the trustee should pay out of his own pocket a sum in excess of that allowed by the court in the settlement of his accounts, and the attorney knows perfectly well that the trustee does not expect or intend to be held to a personal liability beyond the sum allowed by the court. They both know that the reasonable fees of the attorney are a charge upon the trust fund, because it is made the duty of the chancellor or probate court, in settling the accounts of the trustee, to ascertain and allow such reasonable fee as a preferred claim. By express mandate of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1616), it is made the duty of the probate court, in settling the account of an executor, to allow, and necessarily to ascertain, his reasonable expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate, including reasonable fees paid to attorneys for conducting the necessary proceedings or suits in court. The amount so ascertained is all that the executor can take out of the trust fund to reimburse himself, and, if he may be compelled by the attorney in another forum to pay a larger sum, he must lose the difference. Now, this being the law, known to the parties, and vitally affecting the relation upon which they are about to enter, the question to be determined is, what understanding is to be inferred, what promise implied, as to the rule and mode of ascertaining the attorney's compensation, in the absence of an express agreement? To me it seems perfectly clear that the only reasonable inference is that the attorney expects to receive, and the executor expects to pay, only that reasonable compensation which the probate court, in the settlement of the executor's account, shall ascertain and allow; and, if such is their understanding, such necessarily is their contract. Of course, no attorney would be bound to accept the employment on those terms; but, if he is unwilling to do so, it is for him to insist upon an express agreement of a different character. The duty of having the agreement made express, if he intends to hold the executor to a personal liability for a sum in excess of the court's allowance, devolves upon him especially, because, from the very nature of the transaction, he must know that the executor cannot intend deliberately and advisedly to incur an indefinite and perhaps serious personal liability for the sole benefit of heirs and legatees. It is no argument against this position to say that the executor cannot make the estate liable to the attorney, and that the allowance on account of the attorney's fees is made, not to the attorney himself, but to the executor. The question is not as to the power of the executor to subject the estate to a liability, but as to the extent and measure of his own liability. It is conceded in the opinion of the court, and is unquestionably true, that the executor can, by express stipulation, limit his liability to the amount allowed him out of the estate; and the only question we have to determine is whether, in the absence of such express stipulation, the law will imply the same thing. The question, in other words, is whether the law will adopt a presumption which in nine cases out of ten will correspond with the fact, or a presumption which in nine cases out of ten will be directly contrary to the fact. Moreover, this proposition that the executor cannot subject the estate to a liability to the attorney, and that the allowance of attorney's fees is made to the executor, and not to the attorney, in addition to being an utterly false quantity in the discussion here, is all the more deceptive, because, while it is formally and technically true, it is substantially false. If it is the duty of the probate court to apply the funds of the estate to the payment of the fees of the attorneys employed by the executor, and if the fees allowed to the executor merely pass through his hands to the attorney, the proposition that the executor cannot subject the estate to the liability has nothing substantial to rest upon. The decision in Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 387, is not in conflict with the conclusions above stated. All that is there decided is that by a general retainer the administrator of an estate incurs a personal liability. That, however, is not the question here. Concede the personal liability of the executors; the question still remains, how is the extent of that liability to be determined? My contention goes no further than this: That it is to be determined by the express stipulation of the parties, if it is express, and, if not express, by the tacit understanding which ought to be inferred from the nature of the transaction,—an understanding, that is to say, that the attorney will claim no more than the probate court will allow; that he will not subject his own client to a loss and damage which he well knows he does not intend to incur.

The court, in noticing the argumentum ab inconvenienti urged by counsel for respondents, suggests that the hardships involved in the rule here announced are more apparent than real, because, they say, the executor or administrator will commonly be able to procure counsel of ability who will agree to render their services for such compensation as the court will allow from the estate. This is undoubtedly true. I have no doubt that counsel of ability do commonly render their services for the amount which the court allows, and that without any express agreement, and without any idea that in accepting such allowance they are doing more or less than they and their client understood they would do, though nothing was said on the subject. The suggestion of the court, however, does not meet the real difficulty. The executor or administrator, though he can protect himself against a personal liability by an express agreement, will rarely think of doing so, simply because he will not be aware of the necessity of making an express agreement until it is too late.

Besides the injustice to individuals which must occasionally result from the rule of this case, a more serious mischief is involved.

Henceforth every executor or administrator who is not protected against a personal liability beyond the amount allowed for attorney's fees in the probate court will be compelled, in order to avoid risk of loss to himself, to urge a large and liberal allowance, for fear that in another forum a still higher estimate may be placed upon his attorney's services, for which he will be answerable. Instead of being free to protect the estate against an exorbitant demand, he will have an interest in sustaining it. Considerations of public policy, therefore, no less than of justice, require the construction of this contract for which the respondents contend. I think the judgment of the superior court should have been affirmed.

LOWER KINGS RIVER RECLAMATION
DIST. NO. 531 v. McCULLAH et al.

(S. F. 1,166.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1899.)

DUE PROCESS OF LAW—SPECIAL LAWS—DRAINS—RECLAMATION—ASSESSMENTS—DESCRIPTION—TRUSTEES—DEALINGS WITH DISTRICT—APPEAL—REVIEW.

1. Pol. Code, § 3493½, providing that, at any time within a year after the filing of an assessment list for the expense of reclaiming land, the district board of trustees may prosecute an action to determine the validity of the assessment, which action shall not prevent another action to recover the money assessed, but the judgment wherein shall be conclusive between the parties as to the validity of the assessment, is not unconstitutional, as depriving the owner of a hearing.

2. Nor is such section a special law.

3. Under Pol. Code, § 3461, providing that the assessment list for the expense of reclaiming lands must contain a description, by legal subdivisions, of each tract assessed, the number of acres, the name of the owner, and the amount assessed against each tract, the land need not be described in the smallest legal subdivisions.

4. In an assessment for the expense of reclaiming lands, a description of a tract gave the east boundary as the east line of section 26 of a certain township, and the west boundary as the division line between the S. E. ¼ and the S. W. ¼ of said section 29; thence south, on such line, to a certain point. If the second and third calls were followed, the last point would not be reached; and if the second call was followed, and the course of the third call rejected, other land than that of the person named as owner would be included; but, if section 26 were substituted for 29, the description would close, and include no other land. Held, that the call for section 29 was a clerical error, and the description was sufficient to sustain the assessment.

5. Trustees of a reclamation district are not chargeable with fraud in purchasing rights of way from themselves individually, where such rights of way are necessary, and are paid for at the same rate as other lands similarly situated.

6. A claim for work on a reclamation improvement performed by one of the district trustees is not invalid, where the work was recommended by the engineer as necessary and approved by him as excellent, and there is no evidence that it was otherwise, or that the trustee derived profit therefrom, though such trustee voted with the other two in favor of approving the claim.

7. The action of county supervisors in forming a reclamation district is conclusive that the lands therein are of the character for the reclamation of which such district is authorized by statute to be formed.

8. In an action by a reclamation district to determine the validity of an assessment, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence as to the character of the land assessed for benefits, the finding of the court in favor of the assessment will not be disturbed on appeal.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by the Lower Kings River Reclamation District No. 531 against C. J. McCullah and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Daggett & Adams, for appellants. M. K. Harris and Denson & Adams, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This is an action to have an assessment for $20,500 adjudged to be valid. It is brought in pursuance of section 3493½ of the Political Code, a new section enacted in 1893. Plaintiff had judgment in the lower court as prayed, and costs, and the contesting defendants have appealed from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial. The complaint follows the form prescribed in the section of the Political Code referred to, and seems to be sufficient as to its allegations. The answer denied most of the allegations of the complaint, except as to the organization of the district and the ownership of the lands assessed. The findings of the court are against the defendants upon all the issues presented in the answers.

It is contended on the part of the defendants that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that the new section of the Political Code under which the action was brought is unconstitutional. It is provided by this new section of the Political Code that "at any time within one year after the filing of the list mentioned in section 3462 the board of trustees of the district may, in the name of the district, commence and prosecute an action * * * to determine the validity of the assessment. * * * In an action prosecuted under this section the court shall decree the validity or invalidity of the assessment in accordance with what the court may determine the facts to be." It is provided that the action brought under this section shall not be a bar to or prevent an action brought under other sections of the Code for the recovery of money assessed upon lands in a reclamation district, "but the judgment given and made in the action brought under the provisions of this section shall be conclusive between the parties thereto as to the validity or invalidity of the assessment." In Reclamation Dist. v. Runyon, 117 Cal. 164, 49 Pac. 131, it is said: "This proceeding is not an action in personam, and, while it is not in strictness a proceeding in rem either, it partakes rather of the nature of the latter. It is designed as one of the processes to test the legal perfection of an assessment levied by a reclamation district. The property owner is entitled to a hearing at one time or another on the question of benefits. Reclamation Dist. v. Evans, 61 Cal. 104; Reclamation Dist. v. Phillips, 108 Cal. 306, 39 Pac. 630, and 41 Pac. 335; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663. Before the passage of section 3493½ of the Political Code, he made his showing when action was brought to enforce the assessment. But, to obviate the difficulties and delays which thus arose, this peculiar proceeding was established. By it is provided a forum before which a property owner may go and make full proof of his objections to the assessment. The final determination of the court upon the matter may be used by or against him in any future action to collect the tax. Thus, it gives the property owner the hearing to which he is entitled, but provides that such hearing may take place in advance of an action upon the assessment." There seems to be no doubt expressed by this court in reference to the constitutionality of the new section under consideration, although the question was not expressly raised nor passed upon. The case of People v. Railroad Co., 83 Cal. 393, 23 Pac. 303, relied upon by defendants, was where the legislature undertook to prescribe a form of complaint in an action to enforce the collection of a tax. The court there held that the sufficiency of the complaint to recover delinquent taxes must be tested by the rules regulating pleadings in civil actions, and not by section 3670 of the Political Code as it stood at that date. The complaint in that case was held bad for the reason, among others, that it lacked the elements essential in stating a cause of action. The feature of the act in that case as to special legislation was wholly unlike the section under consideration here. The cases of City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604, and Darcy v. City of San Jose, 104 Cal. 642, 38 Pac. 500, cited by defendants, do not support their contention in this particular. We do not think the new section is unconstitutional.

It is claimed by defendants, also, that section 3461 of the Political Code requires that in giving a description of the tract assessed the land must be described in the smallest legal subdivision under the congressional system of surveys, which is 40 acres. As an example, the description given of the land of defendant Wood is cited as follows: "Tract or parcel No. 13. Owner, George Wood. East ½ of S. E. ¼ of section 27, township seventeen, and south range twenty-one, containing eighty (80) acres, assessed at 114.01." It is contended that the description should have been the N. E. ¼ of the S. E. ¼, and the S. E. ¼ of the S. E. ¼, etc., and that each 40 should be separately assessed. The law does not sustain this contention. The list mentioned in section 3460 of the Political Code is of "the charges assessed against each tract of land." Section 3461 of the same Code says the list must contain "a description by legal subdivisions, swamp land surveys, or natural boundaries of each tract assessed; the number of acres of each tract; the names of the owners of each tract; \* \* \* the amount of the charge assessed against each tract." The E.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  is a legal subdivision, although it is not the least subdivision known to our system of surveys, and the law, as already quoted, does not require that the description shall be by the least legal subdivision. Robinson v. Forrest, 29 Cal. 318, is not in conflict with this view. The meaning of the act of Congress in respect of making out a list and plats of swamp lands claimed by a state was there under consideration, and it was held that it meant the smallest subdivision, or 40-acre lot. This was, however, to determine what lands should be included as wet and unfit for cultivation, where the greater part of any subdivision was of that character. It is the tract as a whole described by legal subdivisions that is required to be assessed, and the assessment is not required to be carried out against each subdivision, but "the amount of the charges assessed against each tract." Section 3461. See, also, Reclamation Dist. v. Wilcox, 75 Cal. 443, 17 Pac. 241; Reclamation Dist. v. Phillips, 108 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 630, and 41 Pac. 335. In the last case, a description reading, "W  $\frac{1}{2}$  of S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of sec. 28 Tp. 17," in the assessment list, was held sufficient, as representing the W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, township 17.

It is claimed also by appellants' counsel that the assessment of tract 3 to Hames is void because of misdescription of the land. The description is as follows: "Beginning at the southeast corner of the north half of the northeast quarter of section thirty-five, township seventeen south, range twenty-one east; thence north on the east line of sections thirty-five and twenty-six in said township to the intersection of said east line with the line of levee of Lower Kings River reclamation district number 531; thence along the line of the said levee to its intersection with the line dividing the southeast and southwest quarters of said section twenty-nine; thence south on said quarter section line to the southwest corner of said north half of northeast quarter of said section thirty-four; and thence east to place of beginning,—containing one hundred and fifty-five acres." By a mere inspection of the map or diagram with this description it is apparent that 29 should be 26. Section 29 is not said section, because it has not been mentioned. Twenty-six is said section, and has been mentioned. Then, taking the next call, we find that it runs south on said quarter section line to the southwest corner of said N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of said section 35, which renders it absolutely certain that the person who wrote the description intended to correctly describe the land of Mr. Hames, and that 29 was a mistake in the call, and should have been 26. Read literally, the description goes down the levee several miles to section 29, and to go south on that line section 35 would never be reached, and to go directly from the point in section 29 to the corner in section 35 the line would cut diagonally across several sections and include land other than Hames'; whereas, substituting section 26 for 29, the description closes, and embraces only Hames' land. An examination of the map in the original transcript makes the mistake apparent, and the acreage also corresponds with the description, assuming 26 to have been intended where 29 is written. No surveyor would have any difficulty in ascertaining the precise land intended. It is not a question of a double assessment so much as it is a manifest clerical mistake or blunder in writing one word or figure in place of another; but this does not destroy the description, because the identity of the land is apparent from the other calls. Reamer v. Nesmith, 34 Cal. 624; Irving v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 15, 4 Pac. 766; Helm v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 476, 18 Pac. 604. Appellants' counsel, however, contend that the rule applicable to the description in a deed will not hold as to an assessment. We can see no reason for such a distinction; the main point is to have the land described so that its identity can be ascertained.

It is charged, also, that the trustees perpetrated frauds in the management of the affairs of the district, among these in the purchase of rights of way from themselves. The rights of way were necessary, and paid for at the same rate per acre as other landowners were paid whose lands were similarly situated. It also appears that the warrants were drawn and paid from the fund raised from the first assessment, and not included in the bills for the second assessment now in question. Some other claims were also paid from the first assessment, which are challenged.

The pertinent inquiry, however, is, is the present assessment necessary to meet the debts of the district, and to carry out the necessary improvements contemplated? In their reports to the board of supervisors, the trustees stated that there were outstanding debts, which, with accrued interest and the expenses of collecting and assessing, would amount to $16,500, for repairs, care of levees, material, superintendence, etc., the estimated amount required being $4,000, making $20,500, for which the assessment was approved and ordered. Representing a part of the unpaid indebtedness are certain outstanding warrants stated in the report to be $14,286.41, exclusive of interest. Certain warrants were issued to Trustee Paige, aggregating $6,305.61. A small part of this is for traveling expenses, and per diem attendance upon the board, the balance being for money advanced by Paige to pay for work done on the levees by different persons, some part of which work was done by his own men and teams. The work done by him was recommended by the engineer as necessary, and was reported to the board. The district was without funds, and the work was done under the supervision of the engineer. In the engineer's report he says, referring to this work: "I have just examined the work finished by Mr. Paige's force, and find they have done most excellent, and I think efficient, work where they have made repairs. The riprapping is the most thorough work of the kind ever done upon the river." The bills presented by Paige, and for which warrants were issued, received the approval of the full board. The minute entry reads as follows: "It was moved by Parkhurst, and seconded by Trustee Ray, that the bill of T. Paige for services on the levee, amounting to $4,520.48, be paid by a warrant drawn on the funds of the district. After a careful examination of the said bill, the motion was unanimously carried, by Trustees Ray, Parkhurst, and Paige voting in the affirmative." There is no evidence to show that the work was unnecessary or not well done, nor is there any evidence that Trustee Paige derived any profit from the same. In other words, there is no actual fraud shown in the transaction, but it is contested on the ground of constructive fraud, in that a trustee cannot deal with himself, and that the corporation may at any time avoid the transaction, whether it be fair or unfair, advantageous or prejudicial. The rule is expressed in our Civil Code (section 2229): "A trustee may not use or deal with the trust property for his own profit, or for any other purpose unconnected with the trust, in any manner." In Reclamation Dist. v. Turner, 104 Cal. 334, 37 Pac. 1038, two out of the three trustees were interested in the old levee purchased by and for the use of the corporation district, and in passing upon the question now under consideration the court in that case say: "It may be conceded that, if one of the trustees was interested in the old embankment, the action of the others could be sustained in any purchase that might be made of them by the district; but it would be turning a very sharp corner for James to say to White, 'You and Mr. Hoyl fix the value on my embankment, and buy it for the district, and he and I will buy yours,' as each would be interested to increase the price of the other's property in order to increase the price of his own; and, if condemnation proceedings are resorted to, they would be defendants while prosecuting the proceedings on behalf of the district. If we are right in holding that the old embankments can be acquired by the district and used as part of the reclamation works, we think it must follow that, since all in the district are not owners of embankments, that at least a majority of the board of trustees must be composed of nonowners of such embankments." By indirection, this case seems to hold that one out of three trustees might be interested in dealing with the corporation, so that a majority remain uninterested and capable of acting in the premises. Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788, was a case where the defendant, as president of a bank, helped to vote himself an increase of salary; and the court, after stating the general rule that it was against public policy to permit persons occupying fiduciary relations to be placed in such a position that the influences of selfish motives may be a temptation so great as to overpower their duty and lead to a betrayal of their trust, and therefore that they cannot be allowed to have any dealings in the trust property with themselves, adds: "Nor can they, in any instance, vote a salary to one of their number as president when he takes part in the proceeding, or his vote is essential to the adoption of the resolution;" again intimating that, if his vote were not essential, the transaction would not be invalid. The case of Wickersham v. Crittenden was again before the court in 106 Cal. 327, 39 Pac. 602, in which it is said: "The fact fully appears from the evidence 'that the increased salary of the president depended upon, and was accomplished by, his own vote as a trustee; * * *'" referring to the former opinion in the same case in 93 Cal. and 28 Pac., and repeating the declaration there contained that Crittenden could not take part in a proceeding where his vote was essential to the adoption of the resolution raising his own salary. And in 110 Cal. 332, 42 Pac. 893, Wickersham v. Crittenden was again before this court. In the meantime a resolution was adopted by other directors, by which they "ratified, approved, confirmed, and adopted" the former resolution fixing the salary of the president. On page 334, 110 Cal., and page 894, 42 Pac., of the opinion, it is said: "In the case reported in 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788, it was held that the original resolution adopted at the meeting of directors of December 12, 1890, fixing the salary at $400, was illegal. The resolution was, however, adopted by the board of directors of the corporation, and was spread upon its records, and on its face purported to be an authentic and sufficient act of the corporation. Its invalidity arose from the fact that Crittenden, whose vote was essential to its adoption, was personally interested in the subject-matter of the resolution, and therefore disqualified from voting thereon. The resolution was, however, within the power of the corporation to adopt; and, though invalid at the time it was adopted, could be subsequently ratified by a competent board of directors, or could be adopted anew, either by reference to it as it was spread upon the records, or by introduction as an original resolution." In City of San Diego v. San Diego & L. A. R. Co., 44 Cal. 107, the question of a director dealing with himself was under consideration, and, after laying down the general rule as already briefly stated, the court say: "We do not doubt that a majority of the trustees might execute the power, but the question is whether Sherman, who was a stockholder and director, could be one of that majority." Morawetz, in speaking of the rule disqualifying a director from dealing in any way with the corporation of which he is agent, says: "It is never necessary that all the directors should take part in the deliberations of the board. The general rule is that a majority of the board constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and that a majority of those who attend the meeting, at which a quorum are present, have authority to bind the corporation by their vote. There is no necessary impropriety in a contract between a director and a corporation, if the latter is represented by other agents. On the contrary, such contracts are, in many cases, the natural result of circumstances, and are justified by the approved usages of business men. The directors of a corporation are generally selected by reason of their influence or wealth, and because they are interested in the success of the company and familiar with its affairs. Not infrequently persons who agree to advance money to the corporation expressly stipulate for a voice in the board of directors, so that they may be able to supervise the faithful application of the money advanced, and keep watch for their own security. To prohibit the directors, in all cases, from dealing with the corporation, would often deprive the latter, in time of need, of the assistance of those persons who have the greatest interest in its welfare and who are willing to give their time upon the most reasonable terms. But a transaction between a director and the corporation, even if the latter was represented by a majority of the board, will always be scrutinized by the court with strictness, and will be set aside, at the suit of the corporation, upon proof of the slightest unfairness or imposition practiced upon it." Mor. Priv. Corp. § 527. Many other cases are referred to in the briefs of respective counsel bearing upon this question, but we think the foregoing fairly present the rule that is applicable to the case; and in view of the fact, as already stated, that no actual fraud was shown in the transaction between the director in question and the corporation, we would not be justified in holding that his claim for services and money advanced is invalid, and not entitled to be allowed. At the same time, it may be pertinent here to add that a director should not act as such or take part in the proceedings of the board at which his claim is either acted upon or under consideration. His vote adds nothing to it. Besides, it is unseemly for a trustee to even appear to take part in a transaction in which he is interested against the corporation or cestui que trust.

The contesting defendants also contend that their lands are not swamp lands, within the meaning of the law for the organization of reclamation districts, or, at any rate, the greater portion of their lands is not of that character. The allegation in the complaint in reference to the formation of the district is not denied. Therefore there seems to be no issue upon that question. In the formation of the district the supervisors were required to determine the character of the lands, and whether they were of the class to be included within a reclamation district under the law, and their action to that extent is held to be conclusive. Reclamation Dist. v. Phillips, 108 Cal. 306, 39 Pac. 630, and 41 Pac. 335. But, notwithstanding this, the court below afforded full opportunity to the contesting defendants to offer proof, not only in reference to the character of the land, but also as to the relative benefits arising from the reclamation proceedings. It appears from the transcript that a large amount of evidence was offered, both by the defendants contesting and also on behalf of the corporation district, bearing upon the character of the land, as well as upon the manner of assessing the same, and the question of relative benefits, and whether such assessment was in proportion to the benefits. And the findings of the court on all these questions are in favor of the plaintiff corporation, and against said defendants. From an examination of such testimony, it clearly appears that the most that can be said in favor of said defendants is that there is a substantial conflict in such testimony; but there is evidence sufficient to support the findings, and, that being the case, this court will not, under well-established rules, interfere with such findings.

Upon an examination of the whole case, we are of opinion that the judgment of the court below establishing the validity of said assessment and the order denying the appellants' motion for a new trial should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

BALFOUR-GUTHRIE INV. CO. v. WOODWORTH. (S. F. 1,101.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1899.)

TRUST DEEDS—SUBSTITUTION OF TRUSTEES—CORPORATIONS—DIRECTORS—MEETINGS—
NOTICE—PRESUMPTION—DISMISSAL.

1. A trust deed provided that the mortgagee company might appoint another trustee by resolution of its directors, and that a copy of the resolution, certified by the secretary, should be conclusive against the mortgagor that the substituted trustee had been duly appointed. Held, that this did not preclude the mortgagee from showing by its records that the substitution had been duly made.

2. Where a resolution adopted at a special meeting of directors was spread at length on the records of the corporation, and authenticated by the signature of its purported secretary, the presumption is that the directors were properly notified of the meeting.

3. The secretary of a corporation testified that he had notified the directors of a meeting by sending to each a written notice, by a boy from his office, 24 hours prior thereto. Held that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the court was authorized to find that proper notice was given.

4. A mortgagor, under a trust deed authorizing the mortgagee company to substitute a trustee by resolution of its directors, cannot complain of the regularity of the stockholders' meeting at which such directors were elected.

5. The execution, by a trustee under a trust deed, of a defective conveyance, does not exhaust the trustee's power, but the trust continues until he has executed a valid conveyance of all his title.

6. A trust deed is not void as suspending the power of alienation, since the mortgagor can, by paying the debt, receive a reconveyance, or, by joining with the trustee and the mortgagee, can convey to a third person.

7. Dismissal of a former similar action before trial of a subsequent action removes the objection of another suit pending.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Suit by the Balfour-Guthrie Investment Company against Benjamin R. Woodworth. From a decree for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short and L. L. Cory, for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Eells and Meux & Johnston, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The appellant executed a deed of trust of certain lands in the county of Fresno, March 12, 1890, to Robert Balfour and Robert B. Forman, to secure the payment of certain indebtedness to the respondent. The deed of trust provided that, in case of any default in the payment of said indebtedness, the trustees, upon the request of the respondent, should sell the lands, after giving certain notice, and apply the proceeds to the payment of said indebtedness. It was also provided in the deed of trust that the respondent might, by a resolution of its board of directors, appoint other trustee or trustees in place of those named therein to execute the trusts, and that, upon a conveyance by the designated trustees to the trustee so appointed, he should be vested with all the estate, trusts, and powers in the premises conferred upon the original trustees. November 22, 1894, the respondent appointed the California Title Insurance & Trust Company as trustee to execute the trusts under said deed, in place of Balfour and Forman, and thereupon Balfour and Forman executed to the said substituted trustee a conveyance of the lands described in the deed of trust. The appellant made default in the payment of his indebtedness to the respondent, and on January 5, 1895, the respondent requested the substituted trustee to sell the land in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust. Thereupon, after giving the notice required by the instrument, the said trustee sold the same at public auction to the respondent, and on February 5, 1895, executed to it a conveyance thereof. The respondent entered into possession of the property, and subsequently brought the present action to quiet its title thereto. Judgment was rendered in its favor, and the present appeal is taken therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial.

1. The transfer and assignment from Balfour and Forman to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company purported to have been executed in accordance with a resolution of the board of directors of the plaintiff, and had attached thereto a copy of such resolution, certified by the assistant secretary of the plaintiff. When it was offered in evidence, the defendant objected upon the ground that no authority for making the assignment was shown; that the assistant secretary was not competent to authenticate the resolution so as to make the transfer effective. It was not requisite, however, to the validity of the assignment, that any copy of the resolution should be annexed thereto. The deed of trust provided that the plaintiff might appoint another trustee by resolution of its board of directors, and "upon such appointment," and a conveyance to him by the trustees named in the deed of trust, he should become vested with all the powers vested in the trustees originally named. The subsequent provision in the instrument that a copy of the resolution, certified by the secretary, should be conclusive against the grantor that the substituted trustee had been duly appointed, did not render such copy the exclusive mode of showing that the substitution had been made. The plaintiff had offered in evidence its records containing the original resolution adopted by its board of directors for the appointment of the substituted trustee, and a request for the transfer and assignment to it. This evidence sufficiently established the authority of Balfour and Forman to make the transfer and assignment.

When this resolution was offered in evidence, the defendant objected thereto upon the ground, among others, that it appeared to have been adopted at a special meeting of the board of directors, at which all of the directors were not present, and that it did not appear that notice had been given to all of the directors. The resolution was, however, spread at length upon the records of the corporation, and was authenticated by the signature of one purporting to be its secretary. In Granger v. Mining Co., 59 Cal. 678, it was held that a similar objection was of no avail; that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that proper notice was given; and that the burden of showing the contrary is cast upon him who would impeach the regularity of the meeting. See, also, Barrell v. Land Co. (Cal.) 54 Pac. 594.

At a subsequent stage of the trial the secretary testified, upon his cross-examination by the defendant, that he had given notice of this meeting to each of the directors by sending to them, by a boy from his office, written notices, at least 24 hours prior to the meeting. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the court was authorized to find that proper notice of the meeting was given.

The objection of the defendant to the regularity of the stockholders' meeting at which the directors were elected was properly overruled. For the purposes of this action, it was immaterial whether this meeting was properly called or not, or whether the election was by the stockholders in person or by proxy, or whether the proxies were sufficient in form to entitle the holders to vote at the election. The records of the corporation show that five persons were elected at that meeting to serve as its directors, and, whether their election was regular or not, they assumed the trust, and became at least de facto directors. So long as they held this position unchallenged by any member of the corporation, their acts as directors were binding upon the corporation, and upon strangers dealing with it. San Jose Sav. Bank v. Sierra Lumber Co., 63 Cal. 179.

2. The deed of trust required that, in case of a sale of the property, the trustee should publish notice of the time and the place thereof at least twice a week for three successive weeks in some newspaper published in San Francisco, and that the recitals in the deed executed upon such sale should be conclusive evidence of the facts so recited; and it was shown that notice of the time and place of sale was in fact published as required by the deed of trust. After the sale the trustee executed a deed to the plaintiff, which recited that such publication had been made "twice a week for three successive weeks" next before the day of sale, but, in specifying the days upon which the publications were made, one was omitted, so that it appeared therefrom that the notice had been published only once during one week of this period. After the discovery of this omission the trustee executed to the purchaser another conveyance of the property, in which the days of publication were correctly recited. When this deed was offered in evidence, the defendant objected thereto upon the ground that by the execution of the first deed the power of the trustee was exhausted, that the recitals therein were conclusive as to the days upon which the notice of sale was published, and that it was not competent for the trustee to impeach the effect of that deed by afterwards executing a conveyance in a different form. This objection was overruled, and an exception thereto taken. Without determining whether the prior deed was defective, it is sufficient to say that the purchaser at the sale acquired the right to have the trustee execute to him a deed which would transfer to him all the title to the land which the trustee had the power to convey under its sale; and, until the trustee had made such a conveyance, its power in the premises was not exhausted, and it could either be compelled to execute such a conveyance, or it could make it voluntarily when requested so to do. One of the trusts assumed by the trustee was to execute a deed of the premises sold, and this trust continued until it had executed a deed which would vest the purchaser with all the title with which the trustee was vested, and which it purported to transfer by its sale.

3. The validity of the provisions of the trust deed was fully considered and sustained in Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 53 Pac. 813. The power of alienation is not suspended when all the parties in interest, including the trustee and the beneficiary, can join in a conveyance and transfer a legal title. In the present case there was no suspension of the power of alienation, since Woodworth could at any time, by paying the indebtedness to the plaintiff, receive a reconveyance of the property, or, by uniting with the trustees and the beneficiary, execute a conveyance to a purchaser. Toland v. Toland (Cal.) 55 Pac. 681.

4. Prior to commencing the present action, the plaintiff had commenced a similar action against the same defendant, and in the answer herein this fact was alleged as a reason why the plaintiff should not recover. Before the trial of the present action, the plaintiff caused a judgment of dismissal to be entered in the former action. This removed the objection of the defendant. Moore v. Hopkins, 83 Cal. 271, 23 Pac. 318. The judgment and order are affirmed.

IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — ACCUMULATED FLOW — USAGES — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — PAROL EVIDENCE — OWNERSHIP OF LAND — DAMAGES — PLEADING — HARMLESS ERROR.

1. A complaint against an irrigation district for failure to furnish water in an accumulated flow, which alleges that, in accordance with reasonable regulations, the district was accustomed to deliver the water in such manner, and that the purchaser had the right to so receive it, which averments are denied, raises the question of a usage to so deliver the water.

2. A contract to furnish a certain amount of water for irrigating purposes, the purchaser being required to give notice when he desires the use of the water, does not limit the latter's right to a constant flow, so as to exclude evidence of a general usage, conformed to by the parties, to furnish and receive the water in an accumulated flow.

3. Where it is a rule, among those engaged in supplying water for irrigation in a certain part of the state, to furnish the water in an accumulated flow, at stated periods, such method constitutes a general usage.

4. Where water for irrigation is worthless unless delivered in an accumulated flow, at stated periods, a general usage to so deliver it is reasonable and valid.

5. Where an irrigation district delivered water to purchasers in an accumulated flow, at stated periods, which was the general usage, knowledge of the district of such usage is sufficiently shown.

6. Possession by a wife of land, either severally or jointly with her husband, is prima facie proof of her ownership.

7. Where an irrigation district purchasing property of an irrigation company, except a certain amount of water which the company was under contract to deliver to purchasers, the contracts not requiring delivery in any certain manner, which amount the district agreed to deliver, and, in consequence, retained a certain sum from the price it would have otherwise paid, it is bound to furnish the water in the way it was furnished by the company.

8. Where an irrigation district purchasing the property of an irrigating company agrees to deliver water to previous purchasers from the company, it is bound to deliver the water, though the lands lie outside the district.

9. Where an irrigation company contracts to furnish a certain amount of water, parol evidence that the purchaser, and others holding similar contracts, understood the same to confer the right of receiving the water in an accumulated flow, is inadmissible.

10. An irrigation district having agreed to furnish water to a purchaser, in an action by the latter for failure to do so the erroneous admission of parol evidence that such purchaser and others understood that their contracts conferred the right of receiving water in an accumulated flow is harmless, where a usage to that effect, conformed to by the district, was shown by uncontradicted competent evidence.

11. In an action against an irrigation district for failure to furnish water to a purchaser, there was evidence that in consequence some of the purchaser's fruit trees died, and that his crop of hay was diminished to a certain amount, the pecuniary loss being above a certain sum. The evidence for the district was mainly opinions as to the probable effect of deprivation of water on the land in question, one witness stating that it would cut off the hay crop to some extent, but not more than one-half. Held, that a finding that the purchaser sustained no substantial damage was unsupported.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Action by Ruby Hewitt and husband against the San Jacinto & Pleasant Valley Irrigation District and another for mandamus to compel defendants to deliver water on plaintiff's land and for damages. Judgment was rendered allowing the writ and refusing damages, from which plaintiffs and the district appeal. Judgment allowing the writ affirmed, and denying the damages reversed.

Jas. F. Crowe, for Hewitt and others. Gibson & Titus and M. C. Hester, for San Jacinto & P. V. Irr. Dist.

BRITT, C. Ruby Hewitt and her husband, H. T. Hewitt, join as plaintiffs in this action to obtain a writ of mandate compelling the defendants to deliver on lands of the wife a flow of  $96\frac{3}{7}$  inches of water during the space of 48 hours, in successive periods of 30 days, when demanded by her, and also to recover damages for previous failure of defendants to supply the water in that manner on her request. The defendant San Jacinto Valley Water Company, a corporation (which for brevity we may designate as the "Water Company"), after filing an answer, took no further part in the case. The defendant San Jacinto & Pleasant Valley Irrigation District (hereinafter styled the "Irrigation District"), a corporation formed for the purpose of promoting irrigation, etc., under the act of March 7, 1887, has appealed from that part of the judgment rendered by the court below allowing the writ as prayed by plaintiffs, and plaintiffs have appealed from that portion of the same denying their demand for damages. No question is raised as to the propriety of joinder of parties or of causes of action.

On September 25, 1890, the said Water Company made a contract in writing with said Ruby Hewitt, whereby it granted, bargained, and sold to her, her heirs, etc., forever, "the right to have conveyed and delivered, by means of and through" its canals, dams, and gates, "an amount of water equal to one irrigating inch of water to each seven acres" of certain described land. The area of such land was 20 acres, so that the water bargained and sold amounted to  $2\frac{6}{7}$  inches. It was provided in said instrument that the purchaser should notify the Water Company "when she requires the use of the water on said lands," the notice to be in such form as the Water Company might prescribe from time to time. On August 28, 1891, said Water Company, by a contract in form the same as that of September 25, 1890, granted and sold to said Ruby Hewitt the right to a further "amount of water equal to"  $3\frac{4}{7}$  inches, to be delivered to and upon certain other lands. On August 2, 1892, the Water Company executed a deed conveying to said Irrigation District various described lands, water, water rights, conduits, rights of way, etc. In this instrument there was an exception of 15 inches of water previously sold and conveyed by the Water Company to divers persons, which exception included the water sold to Mrs. Hewitt as aforesaid; and the deed provided that such 15 inches of water "shall be delivered by said Irrigation District" to said previous purchasers from the Water Company. Prior to said transfer of August 2, 1892, by the Water Company to the Irrigation District, the former had been accustomed to deliver the water sold to Mrs. Hewitt, as above stated, in an accumulated flow of  $96\frac{3}{7}$  inches during 48 hours, in successive periods of 30 days, which is the equivalent in quantity of  $6\frac{3}{7}$  inches flowing constantly; and after the date of such transfer the Irrigation District continued to deliver the water to Mrs. Hewitt in like manner, until April 28, 1894, inclusive. The next month it refused to accumulate the same, and claimed the right to deliver it in a constant flow of  $6\frac{3}{7}$  inches. Hence this action.

Plaintiffs alleged in their complaint most of the matters above stated, and also averred, among other things, that plaintiffs have been accustomed to allow the water to accumulate in defendants' dams, etc., for 30 days; that the rules and regulations of each defendant corporation permit such accumulation; that the same is reasonable; that said Ruby Hewitt is entitled to receive the water so accumulated, and that until the month of May, 1894, defendants delivered it in that manner. The court found that at the various times aforesaid it was, and yet is, the universal usage to allow water to accumulate until demanded by the consumer or it becomes deliverable under the rules of the company supplying the same, and that it was the usage in the locality where defendants carry on their business of distributing water to deliver the same in a flow for 48 hours, equal to the accumulation of a constant flow for 30 days, and that said Irrigation District accepted said conveyance of August 2, 1892, with full knowledge of such usages.

1. On appeal, the Irrigation District contends that the said findings are outside the issues; that no allegation of the complaint is sufficient to raise a question of usage. We understand the case differently. The complaint does allege, in substance and effect, that, in accordance with reasonable regulations governing both defendants, they were accustomed to deliver the water accumulated in the manner specified, and that Mrs. Hewitt has the right to receive it so accumulated, which averments the Irrigation District denied. Usage may regulate conduct quite as well as formally promulgated rules, and the issue concerning the "regulations" of defendants was broad enough to include usages to which they respectively conformed their mode of business. Compare Colman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 245; Jacob v. Day, 111 Cal. 571, 44 Pac. 243. We agree that the complaint might have been more certain in some particulars, but there was no demurrer for uncertainty.

2. It is urged—and this seems to be the principal insistence of the Irrigation District—that said contracts between the Water Company and Mrs. Hewitt by their terms limit her right to a constant flow of the water, exclusive of any right to accumulate the same, and that averment or proof to the contrary cannot be considered. The instruments do not mention a constant flow. They grant an "amount of water equal to one irrigating inch," etc., and require the purchaser to notify the company when she desires the use of the water, the manner of notice to be subject to change by the company from time to time. The reasonable inference from these provisions is that a constant flow was not contemplated. Why require notice from the purchaser when she wants the water if she was to receive it all the time? We see nothing in the instruments to render them "proof and bulwark" against interpretation, in the light of usage and the practice of the parties. Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916; McCarthy v. Water Co., 111 Cal. 328, 43 Pac. 956; Robinson v. U. S., 13 Wall. 363. The District relies on Water Co. v. Richardson, 95 Cal. 490, 30 Pac. 577. That case involved the construction of a judgment determining that certain parties were the owners of a quantity of water "equal to a constant flow of 2½ inches," etc., and it was held that no right of accumulation arose thereon. Nothing appeared in the judgment indicative of a purpose that the use of the water should be intermittent, as in the contracts here, nor had the court before it any question of usage or custom of the parties as a means of interpreting the judgment. The doctrine of the case has no rightful influence in the present controversy.

3. The findings relative to usage are attacked for alleged defect of evidence to support them. There was evidence that water provided for in the said contracts of the Water Company with Mrs. Hewitt, and in similar contracts held by other persons, is worthless for purposes of irrigation if it cannot be accumulated; also that it is the general rule among those engaged in supplying water for irrigation in that (the southern) part of the state to allow accumulation of the water for 30 days; that it was the custom of the Water Company, and after it the Irrigation District, until the refusal alleged in the complaint, to deliver the water in question so accumulated; and that other purchasers of the water which was the subject of the exception in the deed of the Water Company to the Irrigation District received their supply accumulated in like manner. There was no substantial conflict in this evidence. In our opinion, it sustained the finding, and characterized the usage as one known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law. The further objection, that neither of the defendants was proved to be cognizant of the usage, fails also. The usage being general, they are presumed to have known it; and that they delivered water for a series of years, in manner conforming to the usage, is a matter tending to show that they had such knowledge actually.

It is claimed that there was no evidence that Ruby Hewitt owns the lands described in her contracts with the Water Company. It is not clear that such proof was essential. If, however, it was, then the fact appears sufficiently from evidence in the record that she had possession of the land, either severally or jointly with her husband, which is prima facie proof of ownership. Kelly v. Mack, 49 Cal. 523.

A further contention is that the Irrigation District never undertook to deliver the water accumulated at intervals. There was evidence tending to show that because of the assumption by the District of the duty to deliver the 15 inches of water excepted in the deed of August 2, 1892, it retained the sum of $12,000 from the price it would otherwise have paid the Water Company as the consideration of said deed. Looking to all the evidence, we perceive no valid reason why the manner of delivery assumed by the District should be understood as anything different from that proved to have been practiced by the Water Company. It is suggested, rather than urged, that the District has no power to deliver water on lands outside its own territorial confines, which is the situation of Mrs. Hewitt's land. It purchased the property of the Water Company subject to this burden, and on no just principle can hold the property discharged thereof.

A municipal corporation may, for proper corporate purposes, both hold property and perform contracts beyond the municipal boundaries. City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 259, 27 Pac. 604; Lester v. City of Jackson, 69 Miss. 887, 11 South. 114.

4. Over the objection of the Irrigation District, plaintiffs were allowed to introduce parol evidence that Mrs. Hewitt, and other persons holding contracts with the Water Company similar to hers, understood the same to confer the right of receiving the water in accumulated flow, and that this was the reasonable construction of said contracts. Plainly, the evidence was improper, but it is equally plain that the case of the District was not prejudiced thereby. Opinions of witnesses as to the meaning of said instruments could neither add to, nor take from, the construction which the court rightly placed on the same, in view of the uncontradicted competent evidence in the case.

5. There was evidence for plaintiffs that, as a consequence of withholding the water by the District for about 60 days, some of the fruit trees on Mrs. Hewitt's land died, and part of the land set with alfalfa had to be reseeded; that the yield of alfalfa hay was diminished some 50 tons, worth $6 per ton; and that the pecuniary loss was above $300. The evidence on this point produced by the District consisted mainly of opinions to the probable effect of deprivation of water on the land in question. The witness whose testimony was most favorable to the District said the effect on the alfalfa crop would be to "cut it off some; * * * it surely would not cut off more than one-half." It must be said that the evidence showed, without conflict, that some substantial damage resulted from failure to deliver the water, and the finding of the court to the contrary is without support. An irrigation district may be sued. Boehmer v. Irrigation Dist., 117 Cal. 20, 48 Pac. 911. And it was observed in that case that "the legislature did not intend that such actions should be profitless to the parties." Damage being proved to result from the default of the District, the appropriate judgment should have followed. Upon defendant's appeal the judgment, so far as it is in favor of plaintiffs, should be affirmed, and upon plaintiffs' appeal that part of the same directing that they recover no damages should be reversed, with directions to the court below to try the issue as to damages anew.

The question whether or not the contract of the Irrigation District is ultra vires is not presented upon this appeal. No such question, therefore, has been decided.

I concur: CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment, so far as it is in favor of plaintiffs, is affirmed, and that part of the same directing that they recover no damages is reversed, with directions to the court below to try the issue as to damages anew.

JONES v. MCGARVEY et al. (S. F. 1,466.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 5, 1899.)

APPEAL—NOTICE—ATTORNEY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 940, requiring notice of appeal to be served on the adverse party or his attorney, and section 1015, requiring the service of papers on the attorney, instead of the party, where he appears by attorney, notice of appeal must be served on appellee's attorney, if he have one.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county.

Action by one Jones against McGarvey and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

David Jones, for appellant. Chas. E. Wilson and J. A. Cooper, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff served his notice of appeal upon one of several co-defendants, all of whom had appeared by an attorney. Construing section 940 and 1015, Code Civ. Proc., together, they require service of notice of appeal to be made upon the attorney of a party who has appeared by attorney. In such case service upon the party personally is not authorized. Appeal dismissed.

MORSE v. HINCKLEY. (S. F. 1,479.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1899.)

GUARDIANS—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—LIABILITY OF ESTATE—PLEADING.

1. Even if there can be a recovery in equity for services rendered in good faith for the benefit of an estate, in reliance on the estate for compensation, under a contract with a guardian unauthorized by court, the complaint must show that the services were accepted by, or were of benefit to, the estate.

2. Under Civ. Code, § 249, providing that a guardian must safely keep the property of his ward, and not make sale thereof without an order of court, but must, so far as in his power, maintain the same out of the income or other property of the ward, and deliver the property in as good condition as when received, a contract made by a guardian, without order of court, for legal services in establishing the right of the ward to an estate, payment to be made out of the proceeds of such estate, if obtained, is invalid.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Henry N. Morse, as administrator of the estate of George P. Goff, deceased, against Florence Blythe Hinckley, to recover for legal services under a contract with the guardian of defendant. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Noble Hamilton and R. M. F. Soto, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart and Aylett R. Cotton, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The action was commenced by George P. Goff, deceased, December 5, 1896. It is alleged in his complaint that in October, 1885, said defendant, her name then being Florence Blythe, by her guardian, James Crisp Perry, filed her petition in the matter of the estate of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein she claimed and asserted that she was the daughter and sole heir of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, and prayed to be so adjudged. That on the 22d day of October, 1890, said superior court, in the matter of the said estate, did adjudge that she was the daughter and sole heir of said Blythe, and entitled to distribution of all of his estate; and that the judgment was affirmed by the supreme court. That, among the issues which arose on said petition, and the answers thereto, was the issue whether or not, under the laws of this state, she had been legitimated as the child of said Thomas H. Blythe, deceased. That in the year 1889, while such issue was pending and undetermined, said guardian of the person and estate of said Florence entered into a contract with said Goff, an attorney and counselor at law, whereby it was agreed that said Goff should and would prepare and furnish to one W. H. H. Hart, the leading counsel in said matter of said claimant, a brief on her part, on the question whether or not she had been legitimated under the laws of this state; and that, in consideration thereof, as soon as and when it should be finally determined that she had been legitimated by said decedent, and she should come into the possession of his estate, said Goff would be paid out of such estate a reasonable compensation for preparing and furnishing such brief. That said Goff entered upon the discharge of his obligations under said contract, and did prepare, and afterwards, and before the 21st day of May, 1891 (the date of the death of said Perry), did furnish to said Hart a brief on behalf of said claimant on that question. That the reasonable value of said services of said Goff, performed under said contract, in preparing and furnishing said brief, is the sum of $20,000. That the defendant, within two years preceding the commencement of this action, came into the possession of the whole of the estate of said decedent, Thomas H. Blythe, as his only child and sole heir at law, under and by virtue of a decree of final distribution made in the matter of said estate. The court is asked to decree that the sum claimed is due for the services rendered; and that it be declared a lien upon the real property which so came into possession of said defendant, and which is described in the complaint; and that said real property be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the sum adjudged to be due, together with costs. Subsequent to the bringing of the action, said Goff died, and the present plaintiff was appointed administrator in the matter of his estate, and on February 5, 1897, as such administrator, was substituted as plaintiff. Thereafter an amendment was added to the complaint, to the effect that, at the time of the making and entering into the contract between said Goff and said Perry, guardian of the estate of defendant, it was understood and agreed between them that said Perry should not individually become personally liable, and that the brief mentioned in the original complaint was furnished by said Goff to said Hart in the month of July, 1890, and that said defendant had no other property other than the property inherited from the estate of said Thomas H. Blythe. To this complaint, as amended, a demurrer was interposed, specifying, as the grounds thereof, that said complaint, as amended, did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that it did not appear therefrom that any order of court was ever obtained or made authorizing Perry, as guardian of said defendant, or otherwise, to enter into the contract alleged and set forth in the complaint so amended; and that the action is barred by the provisions of sections 337, 339, and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court below sustained the demurrer, without leave to amend, and judgment was entered thereon accordingly, in favor of the defendant. This appeal is from the judgment so entered.

It is admitted by the appellant that no personal liability could have been enforced against the guardian had he lived under the contract set out in the complaint, and also that no personal liability can or could be enforced against the defendant under said contract made by her guardian; but it is claimed that, where moneys have been advanced or services have been rendered in good faith for the benefit of the estate, relying solely on the estate for reimbursement or compensation, the claim for such advances or services may be enforced out of the estate by a suit in equity. Counsel in his brief says: "If it be contended that the case is novel, or that there are no precedents in this case for this suit, that argument furnishes a strong reason why in this case a precedent should be established, that justice may be done, so that the defendant shall not retain the vast estate which she has gained, without compensating those who have assisted her in securing the victory for their labors in that behalf." If, however, a precedent should be established in this case, as suggested, there is nothing in the complaint, as amended, to bring this case within the rule suggested by appellant's counsel. It nowhere appears therefrom that the brief was ever accepted by the leading counsel, or used in the settlement of the Blythe estate, or that it aided the defendant in the least in obtaining the judgment of the court establishing her heirship, and by which judgment she succeeded to the possession of the property of the Blythe estate. Besides, in this state the guardian has no power, without the order of court, to sell or encumber the property of his ward. "A guardian of the property must keep safely the property of his ward. He must not permit any unnecessary waste or destruction of the real property, nor make any sale of such property without the order of the superior court, but must, so far as it is in his power, maintain the same, with its buildings and appurtenances, out of the income or other property of the estate, and deliver it to the ward at the close of his guardianship in as good a condition as he received it." Civ. Code, § 249. To incumber the property with liens, which may be foreclosed or enforced, and the property sold, without an order of court, would not be complying with the provisions of the Code. In Guy v. Du Uprey, 16 Cal. 195, it was sought to hold the ward's property liable for improvements put thereon, under a contract made with the guardian. The court say: "This contract the guardian had no authority to make, and we do not see upon what principle it can be used to support an equitable claim against the property. The person who made the improvements, and to whose rights the plaintiff succeeded, was fully informed of the title and condition of the property, and his position was not analogous, in any respect, to that of a purchaser or bona fide possessor. He acted upon the faith of a contract which had no validity, and, however meritorious his claim may be in a moral point of view, it does not come within any principle upon which equity administers relief in such cases." De La Montagnie v. Insurance Co., 42 Cal. 290, was a case where the guardian of a minor assumed to sell and transfer stock belonging to her ward, without an order of the probate court; and the question was whether such sale transferred the title of the stock to a party who bought in good faith, and without knowledge of the fact that it belonged to a minor; and it was held that the sale was void, referring to Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 591, and Schmidt v. Wieland, 35 Cal. 343,—the court adding: "We think, too, irrespective of adjudged cases, that the plain intent of the statute is to make void every alienation of the property of the ward, if made by the guardian without the order of the court, and that the rule in itself is one of wholesome application to such sales, whether of the personal or real estate of the ward." Hunt v. Maldonado, 89 Cal. 636, 27 Pac. 56, was an action to recover an attorney's fee for services rendered to the guardian of a minor in pursuance of a written contract. The action was against the minor, the same as in this case. The court say: "If the guardian made a valid contract with the attorney, he may be held liable; and if he pays it, and the probate court shall deem the expenditure reasonable and necessary to protect the estate of the ward, it may be allowed from the ward's estate; but it is an expense incurred by the guardian, in the performance of his duties, for which he is primarily liable." Fish v. McCarthy, 96 Cal. 484, 31 Pac. 529, was an attempt to enforce a mechanic's lien upon property of a minor, in a suit against both guardian and minor. The complaint showed that the defendant, Mary McCarthy, in her character of guardian of the estates of Mary, Joseph, and Patrick Powers, minors, employed the plaintiff to repair a certain building, the property of her wards. The plaintiff repaired the building, furnished all the materials necessary for that purpose, and regularly filed and recorded his claim and notice of lien. "Assuming," the court say, "that the allegation in question is equivalent to an averment that the defendant McCarthy, as guardian of the minor defendants, and on their behalf, made the contract in question, it seems clear that the defendant, as such guardian, could not subject the estate and property of her wards to a lien such as here sought to be enforced, without first obtaining an order of court authorizing her to do so,"—citing with approval, Guy v. Du Uprey and Hunt v. Maldonado, supra. "As the mechanic's lien arises from work done and materials furnished under an obligatory contract, if the contract be not binding the lien necessarily fails." If a guardian cannot enter into a valid contract, without first obtaining an order of the probate court, for repairs and improvements of buildings on property belonging to the ward, surely a guardian without such authority cannot enter into a contract for the employment of legal services, so as to bind the ward, or in any way affect his property. The powers of guardians over the estate of the ward, the same as of executors and administrators, cannot be exercised except according to the provisions of law and under the orders of the court which has jurisdiction of the estate. The contract, as alleged in the complaint, which assumed to incumber the property of the ward, without an order of the probate court, is invalid. This renders it unnecessary to consider the question of the statute of limitations. Judgment affirmed.

DUNCAN et al. v. CURRY et ux. (Sac. 511.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1899.)

HOMESTEAD—MORTGAGES—RECORDATION.

Civ. Code, § 1241, subd. 3, provides that a homestead is exempt from forced sale, except a sale "on debts secured by mortgages on the premises, executed * * * by the husband and wife." Subdivision 4 provides that the homestead shall be so exempt from sale, except "on debts secured by mortgages on the premises, executed and recorded before the declaration of homestead was filed for record." Hebl, that a mortgage executed by both spouses need not be recorded, to be paramount to the homestead right.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Action by W. G. Duncan and others against F. M. Curry and wife. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. Clark and Hudson Grant, for appellants.
F. E. Baker, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendants, F. M. Curry and his wife, A. V. Curry. Judgment was rendered in the court below foreclosing the mortgage as against both defendants; and the defendants appeal from the judgment, and particularly from that part of it which decrees that the lien of the mortgage is paramount to a certain homestead right set up in the answer.

On the 24th day of November, 1894, the appellants, husband and wife, executed the mortgage in question, which, however, was never recorded. On December 14, 1895, the appellant A. V. Curry, the wife, duly executed a declaration of homestead upon the mortgaged premises, which was on said day duly recorded; and it was contended by appellants that this declaration of homestead defeats the mortgage lien. It is true that the homestead is exempt from forced sale, except in the instances enumerated in the four subdivisions of section 1241 of the Civil Code. But subdivision 3 of that section is as follows: "On debts secured by mortgages on the premises, executed and acknowledged by the husband and wife, or by an unmarried claimant;" and, of course, the case at bar is clearly within the terms of that subdivision. It is contended by appellants that the case is governed by subdivision 4 of this section, which is as follows: "On debts secured by mortgages on the premises, executed and recorded before the declaration of homestead was filed for record." It is quite evident, however, that subdivision 4 relates to mortgages not embraced in subdivision 3. There is clearly room for such a construction of the two subdivisions as will allow both to stand. Subdivision 3 relates to mortgages executed by both husband and wife, and its provisions as to that class of mortgages are positive and beyond doubt. Subdivision 4 applies to mortgages—and, of course, there are many such—which are not executed by both husband and wife. The two subdivisions, considered together, clearly mean that a mortgage not recorded before the declaration of homestead is filed cannot be enforced as against the homestead, unless it had been executed by both husband and wife. The cases of Bank v. Gerry, 91 Cal. 98, 27 Pac. 531, Bank v. Bruce, 94 Cal. 77, 29 Pac. 488, and Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 51 Pac. 549, 955, cited by appellants, are not in point. In all of these cases a mortgage had been executed by the husband alone, and the wife had not executed any instrument or performed any act which had in any way compromised her homestead right. In neither of them, nor in any case decided by this court to which we have been referred, is there any reference to, or discussion of, subdivision 3. In Downing v. Le Du, 82 Cal. 471, 23 Pac. 202, the action and the facts were substantially like those in the case at bar. There, as here, the mortgage was executed by both husband and wife, and the wife claimed that her homestead was paramount to the mortgage, because the latter had not been recorded. Judgment in the court below was for plaintiff and against both defendants, and the judgment was here affirmed, although the justice who wrote the opinion in that case made no allusion to subdivision 3. But the reasons there given for affirming the judgment were undoubtedly those which moved the legislature when enacting subdivisions 3 and 4 of said section 1241.

For these reasons, we think that the court below properly decided the case. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re ENGLE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 473.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 14, 1899.)

WILLS—PERSONS INTERESTED—PROBATE—PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

1. One to whom is assigned a share in a devise is a "person interested in the will," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1323, providing for probate of foreign wills when presented by the executor or a person interested in the will.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1323, 1324, authorizing administration of a foreign will when produced by the executor or other person interested in the will, letters must, in the absence of a petition by the executor, be granted to a "person interested" applying therefor, to the exclusion of the public administrator.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Petitions for the probate of the will of William Engle, deceased, by C. S. Engle, and by Frank M. Kelsey, public administrator. There were orders granting administration to the former, and denying the petition of the latter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Flint & Barker, for appellant. Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for respondent.

GRAY, C. William Engle died in the county of Riverside, state of California. At the time of his death he was a resident of the territory of Arizona, and had $729.96 deposited in a Los Angeles savings bank, and also held a note for $8,500 secured by a mortgage on real property situated in the city and county of Los Angeles. The deceased left a will, in which he made C. S. Engle, a resident of Chicago, Ill., his sole devisee, and appointed him sole executor of the will. This will was duly admitted to probate in the territory of Arizona. C. S. Engle granted a one-tenth interest in the property of the estate situated in Los Angeles to the respondent Griffith, who is a resident of Los Angeles; and thereafter the respondent presented to the superior court and filed therein a copy of said will, and the probate thereof, duly authenticated, together with a written assignment of C. S. Engle to respondent of the one-tenth interest aforesaid, claimed to be interested in said will, and petitioned the said court to admit the will to probate, and issue to him letters of administration with the will annexed. Subsequently the public administrator of Los Angeles county, Frank M. Kelsey, also filed a petition for the probate of said will and for the issuance of letters of administration to him. Both the petitions were heard together, the court admitted the will to probate, found that said Griffith was interested in said will, ordered that letters with the will annexed be granted to him, and denied the petition of Kelsey; and Kelsey, the public administrator, appeals from these orders.

The assignment to the respondent by the devisee of an undivided one-tenth interest in the Los Angeles property of decedent vested in him all the interest in the will that the devisee had by virtue of being the owner of that one-tenth interest. If, then, the devisee was interested in the will, within the meaning of section 1323 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so as to entitle him to letters of administration as against the public administrator, it follows that his assignee, who is the respondent in this case, is likewise entitled to letters in preference to the public administrator. The right of the devisee, as against the public administrator, in a case of exactly the same character as this, was determined in Re Bergin's Estate, 100 Cal. 376, 34 Pac. 867. This court held in that case that on the probate of a foreign will in this state, in the absence of a petition by the executor named in the will, letters of administration must be granted to a person interested in the will who applies for them. The rule and reasoning of In re Bergin's Estate, supra, clearly supports the decision of the trial court in this matter, and, on the authority of that case, we advise that the orders appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the orders appealed from are affirmed.

MARTIN et al. v. WAGNER et al. (Sac. 294.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1899.)

APPEAL AND ERROR—REVERSAL—RECALLING REMITTITUR—JURISDICTION—DEATH OF RESPONDENT—SUBSTITUTION.

1. After a judgment of reversal and the issuance of a remittitur, the supreme court has no jurisdiction to recall the remittitur for mere error, if no fraud is shown invalidating the judgment.

2. After the death of a respondent pending an appeal, his attorneys filed a brief, and stipulated for a hearing, but made no suggestion of his death until after reversal, when, acting for the representatives of the deceased respondent, they moved for a substitution, but did not show cause for not making an earlier application. Held, that the representatives were not entitled to have the remittitur recalled in order that they might be substituted in the proceedings in the supreme court.

In bank. Heard on motion to recall the remittitur and substitute the executrices of defendant Wagner, deceased. Motion denied.

For former opinion, see 53 Pac. 167.

HENSHAW, J. The appeal in the above-entitled cause was pending in this court upon the 24th day of October, 1896. Upon that day defendant and respondent Wagner died. After his death a brief was filed by James A. Louttit on behalf of the appellants, and by Elliott & Elliott on behalf of respondents. Subsequently these attorneys entered into a stipulation submitting the cause for decision, and upon April 19, 1898, this court rendered its decision and judgment reversing the judgment of the trial court. No petition for a rehearing was presented, and the remittitur issued in due time. No suggestion of the death of Wagner, nor request for a substitution of his representatives, was made until December 5, 1898, when Elliott & Elliott, who had been Wagner's attorneys in the litigation, and who now appear as the attorneys for his executrices, moved the court to recall the remittitur and to substitute the executrices in place of Wagner, deceased. No attempt is made to excuse the delay, nor is any explanation offered why the suggestion of the death of Wagner was so long delayed. Were the judgment so rendered by this court void, it would be its plain duty to recall the remittitur and restore the appeal to the calendar; and this not upon the ground that the court could resume jurisdiction which it had lost, but because it had never lost jurisdiction at all. Such is the well-established rule in those courts which treat a judgment so pronounced against a dead man as a mere nullity. In this state, however, it has been decided that when jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the party, in his lifetime, has been acquired, the rendition of a judgment after his death, without substitution of parties, is not void, but at the most erroneous. Phelan v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 80, 28 Pac. 114; Wallace v. Center, 67 Cal. 133, 7 Pac. 441. Where fraud or imposition has been practiced upon this court in procuring its judgment, the remit-tutur will be recalled, and jurisdiction here will be asserted upon the ground that the judgment so procured is a nullity. But in this case no charge of fraud is made. In its legal aspect, it stands in no different position from that of any other case in which an erroneous decision may chance to have been made by this court. Under the constitution, by the lapse of time and the issuance of the remittitur the judgment has become a finality, beyond the power of this court to modify or amend. But, aside from the question of the power of the court under these circumstances to recall the remittitur, the facts presented in this case do not invite the exercise of such power. No reason is shown why the death of Wagner was not suggested earlier. Elliott & Elliott, who had represented him in his lifetime, continued to act in the case. The respondents thus were represented by the very attorneys who had been under the employ of Wagner. They filed a brief on his behalf. They stipulated to a submission of the cause. Not till long after the issuance of the remittitur did they suggest his death, and in the suggestion offer no showing as to why it was not more timely made. The same attorneys appear for the representatives of Wagner. It is not asserted that the decision of the court is erroneous in point of law, in any other respect than in the manner of its rendition. No injury is shown to have resulted from the decision, and no possible advantage is to be gained to the executrices of Wagner by granting this motion, other than that of unduly delaying and prolonging this litigation. By the judgment of this court the cause was remanded for a new trial. Upon the new trial in the superior court the proper substitution can be made, and the litigation determined upon its merits. The application to recall the remittitur and substitute his personal representatives in the place of Wagner, deceased, is therefore denied.

PEOPLE v. EVANS. (Cr. 454.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1899.)

HOMICIDE—MALICE—COMPETENCY OF JUROR—INSTRUCTIONS—NEW TRIAL—APPEAL.

1. A conviction will not be reversed for error in instructing that malice is not necessary to constitute murder of a homicide committed under certain circumstances, if in other instructions the jury are told that the presence or absence of malice is the distinguishing feature between murder and other degrees of homicide.

2. An appeal lies from an order denying a challenge to a juror for bias, if the question of the juror's competency is one of law, and not of fact.

3. The trial judge stated the general qualifications required of jurors, and instructed them to answer as to such qualifications in response to questions by counsel. Held that, since the examination by the court was not sufficient to relieve counsel from making an examination of jurors, a new trial will not be granted because one of the jurors was not a citizen, as an examination would have disclosed the juror's disqualification at the trial.

Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Thomas Evans was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Walling, for appellant. W. F. Fitzgerald, Atty. Gen., for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. The defendant has been convicted of the crime of murder, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He now appeals to this court.

The following instruction given to the jury is assailed as containing an unsound declaration of law: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant, with malice aforethought, or without considerable provocation, inflicted a wound upon Robert Holland, and that Robert Holland died from the wound so inflicted by the defendant, and that there was no justification for the infliction of said wound, the defendant must take the whole consequence of his wrongful act, and the jury find him guilty of murder." We have been referred to no instruction in the reports of this state couched in language at all similar to the foregoing, and we apprehend there is none. It has been suggested by this court upon many occasions in the past that it is always dangerous to attempt the statement of well-established principles of law in new and different ways. Approved instructions bearing upon the question of malice in cases of murder may be found in the reports of this state by the score. It would have been much better to have followed the lines there marked out. It is always the safer, and therefore the better, course for trial judges to follow the broad and well-traveled road laid out by the decisions of this court, rather than to take the chances of traveling upon crooked and unknown paths. These suggestions have been made many times, yet thus far they appear to have fallen upon stony places; for they have brought forth no fruit.

The foregoing instruction has called for careful consideration. It has given the court much thought. Upon first inspection it would seem that the giving of it demanded a new trial of the case, but it has been finally concluded to the contrary. The court has arrived at this conclusion in view of the many other instructions bearing upon the question of malice which are found in the charge, and which are legally sound. Malice aforethought, as a necessary element of murder, is clearly declared. The jury are told that there is no such thing as murder, unless malice aforethought is present in the mind of the defendant at the time of the killing. The jury are instructed: "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought. If you find that the defendant killed the deceased, then you must determine if the killing was with malice aforethought; for this is the grand criterion that distinguishes murder from other killing; and this malice aforethought is not merely a spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, but is an evil design in general." It is then declared that malice is express "when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature. It is implied when no considerable provocation appears, or where the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart." In another portion of the charge the jury are told: "The presence or absence of malice is the distinguishing feature between murder and manslaughter. If malice enters into the unlawful act by which death is caused, it is murder; but, if malice be wanting, it is but manslaughter." In view of these instructions, which appear to cover every phase of the law as to malice in cases of murder, it is apparent that the jury could not have been misled by the instruction of which complaint is made.

The statute says that malice is implied when no considerable provocation appears, or where the circumstances of the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. If the killing be unlawful, and the circumstances of the act show an abandoned and malignant heart, then there is no room for manslaughter in such a case. It is murder. Or, if the killing be unlawful, and the act of killing be done without considerable provocation, there is no room for manslaughter in such a case; for the circumstances, ex necessitate, show a case of implied malice, and, therefore, a case of murder. People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26. This seems to be the line followed by the trial judge in giving the instruction. The language used is somewhat unfortunate in this: that it is susceptible of the construction that, first, defendant may be guilty if malice aforethought is established; or, second, he may be guilty under certain circumstances, even though there be no malice aforethought. Of course, in every case of murder there must be present the element of malice. The judge recognized that fact, and stated the law to the jury to that effect more than once; and, if this instruction declared the law otherwise, it would be clearly and prejudicially erroneous. But, as already suggested, in view of the other instructions covering the law upon the question, wherein it is declared that malice aforethought is the grand criterion that distinguishes murder from other killing, and wherein it is further said that the "presence or absence of malice is the distinguishing feature between murder and manslaughter," it is evident the jury could not have been misled. In view of the direct and explicit instructions declaring that malice was a necessary element in every crime of murder, the court is bound to assume the jury so understood the law, in the absence of some other instruction declaring to the contrary. An instruction which may to some extent, only, inferentially point in that direction will not be held to be sufficient. Taking these instructions bearing upon malice altogether, the jury must have understood that malice was a necessary element in the crime of murder.

The second proposition discussed by appellant's counsel arises in the challenge of two jurors upon the ground of actual bias, appellant having exhausted all his peremptory challenges. It is suggested by the brief of the attorney general that the statute allows no exception to a ruling of the court in denying a challenge to a juror upon this ground. This position has no force. It comes too late. The law in this state at the present time is to the contrary. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 231, 34 Pac. 718; Same v. Collins, 105 Cal. 511, 39 Pac. 16; Same v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 559, 39 Pac. 944; Same v. Owens (Cal.) 56 Pac. 251. Yet, notwithstanding such is the law, it is said in the Wells Case, and again in the Fredericks Case, that it is only in cases where the question comes before this court as matter of law that its appellate jurisdiction may be invoked; and, where the question presented is one of fact, the trial court is the final arbiter. We are clear that the question as presented by this record is not one of law, but of fact. In speaking to a similar question in the Fredericks Case, the court said: "But the evidence of these various jurors, taken upon their voir dire, is not at all conclusive that they were disqualified from acting in the case. When the matter was submitted to the court for a decision upon the evidence taken, it can at least be said the question was an open one as to their disqualification. The evidence of each juror was contradictory in itself. It was subject to more than one construction. A finding by the court either way upon the challenge would have support in the evidence; and, under such circumstances, the trial court is the final arbiter of the question." The foregoing language of this court is entirely apropos to the case before us.

It appears by affidavits upon motion for a new trial that one Dahl, a juror who sat in the case, was not a citizen of the United States; and this fact is relied upon for a new trial. After verdict is rendered, it is too late to raise for the first time the question now presented. People v. Chung Lit, 17 Cal. 320; Same v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 267. Counsel admit the soundness of this doctrine as a general proposition, but insist that the present case is an exception to the rule. The general doctrine is based upon the proposition that the objection comes too late, inasmuch as counsel should examine the juror as to his general qualifications in the first instance. Here it is now claimed that the trial judge examined the jurors as to their general qualifications, and, therefore, counsel were not called upon to do it. The record does not bear out counsel's claims in this regard. The judge did not examine the jurors as to their general qualifications. He simply stated to them the general qualifications demanded of them by the law, and announced that they should answer as to those qualifications when interrogated by counsel. It now appears that counsel failed to embrace the opportunity presented to him for their interrogation. Conceding exceptions may be found to the general principle of law here involved, it may be readily seen that this case does not come within such exceptions.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HARRISON, J.; HENSHAW, J.

TEMPLE, J. I dissent. The jury are specifically instructed that if the defendant inflicted a mortal wound with malice and without considerable provocation, and there was no justification, they must find him guilty of murder. This error is not cured by any number of other instructions defining murder. It is error to give contradictory instructions. The jury cannot determine between them, nor in this case can we tell which they accepted. Besides, it was telling the jury that they must find the defendant guilty if he inflicted the mortal wound, and there was no considerable provocation, notwithstanding these definitions; or, perhaps, it was an instruction to the effect that if there was no considerable provocation, as matter of law the killing was deemed to have been done with malice aforethought. This, I think, is the reasonable and natural construction of the instructions on this subject taken together. Of course the jury is bound to accept all as correct.

It has been held, and I think properly, that when some essential qualification is omitted from some particular instruction the case will not necessarily be reversed if the omitted qualification is supplied elsewhere, but, if essentially contradictory instructions are given, it must certainly be error. At best the jury were told that if defendant killed deceased he is guilty of murder or manslaughter, depending upon whether the provocation was considerable or not.

MOYNIHAN et al. v. DROBAZ et al. (S. F. 962.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1899.)

SHIPPING—REPAIRS—EVIDENCE OF OWNERSHIP—
CUSTOM-HOUSE REGISTER—ADMIRALTY DE-CREE—TRIAL—FINDINGS.

1. In an action for repairs of a steamboat, an entry of plaintiff's name in a custom-house book, showing the registry or transfer of the boat, is inadmissible to show that plaintiff was a part owner, in the absence of evidence that he authorized the making of the entry.

2. In such action a decree in admiralty against the boat and the papers in the proceeding are inadmissible to prove plaintiff's ownership, where he made no appearance in the proceeding.

3. Where defendant's corporate character was alleged and not denied, it was error to find that defendant was not a corporation, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 462, declaring that non-controverted material allegations in the complaint must be taken as true, and section 590, declaring that issues of fact arise only on allegations in the complaint controverted by the answer.

4. A firm may recover in full for repairing a steamboat, though one of the partners is a part owner of the boat.

5. It is error to find that plaintiff had no attachment lien because of the insufficiency of his bond, where its sufficiency was not questioned, and it was stipulated when the action commenced that an attachment had been made under Code Civ. Proc. § 813 et seq., and had been released on the giving of a bond by defendant.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by T. J. Moynihan and others against Matteo Drobaz and others. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Stanley, McKinstry, Bradley & McKinstry, for appellants. Andros & Frank, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is to recover a balance due from defendant Matteo Drobaz on a contract to construct a boiler for the fishing steamer Golden Gate, and to enforce a lien on said steamer to satisfy said demand, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in reference to actions against steamers, vessels, and boats.

On the trial, the court admitted as evidence, over the objection of the plaintiffs, a copy of the register of the vessel Golden Gate, for the purpose of showing that the plaintiffs were part owners in the said vessel. The entry in the custom-house books of the registry or transfer of a vessel is not even prima facie evidence as against one not claiming to be an owner, unless such entry be shown to have been made by authority of the person named in it. In Fraser v. Hopkins, 2 Taunt. 5, Lord Mansfield said, in reference to the contention that the entry was evidence against such person: "To suppose the effect of the act to be such as is contended for would be to impute madness to the legislature." And Hunter, J., said: "Any bystander may put down a name in the register. You must connect the defendant with it." And Lawrence, J., adds: "Unless you show all this taken down by authority of the person who is to be charged, the register cannot be made evidence, even prima facie." See, also, Tinkler v. Walpole, 14 East, 226; Hozey v. Buchanan, 16 Pet. 215; Steamboat Co. v. Van Pelt's Adm'r, 2 Black, 388. And for like purpose the court also admitted as evidence, over the objection of the plaintiffs, a decree and copies of certain papers in the case of Chandler, as libellant, against the same steamer Golden Gate, in the United States district court. In admiralty, where the proceeding is in rem, the libel prays for process (that is, a warrant of arrest of the thing itself), and a monition to all persons interested to appear upon a certain day and intervene for their interests. The jurisdiction acquired by the seizure of property in such proceeding is to pass upon the question of ownership of such property, after opportunity has been afforded to parties to appear and be heard; and the decree in such cases is conclusive upon all such parties. Every person interested in the vessel is warned to come in and assert his interest. Necessarily no one can be decreed to be a part owner who has not appeared and asserted part ownership or other interest. It was clearly error to admit a copy of said register and copies of said papers in admiralty for the purpose indicated. Ben. Adm. 410-434; Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274. But respondents' counsel say if the court erred either in admitting the ship's register, or in admitting the judgment in the United States district court, or in both respects, it is not such error as entitles the plaintiffs to a new trial, for the reason, it is claimed, that there is still sufficient independent proof of ownership to warrant the finding in favor of the defendants.

The only outside evidence bearing upon the question of the ownership of the plaintiffs in the vessel is the following: Defendant Drobaz says: "The vessel was built in Sausalito, and was to be a steamer for fishing purposes. He started to build her by my orders, Moynihan, Pearson, and several others." Moynihan testifies that he paid in $500 to Drobaz for one share of stock, and took his receipt, which reads: "$500. San Francisco, October 1, 1890. Received of T. J. Moynihan five hundred dollars for one share of M. Drobaz Steam and Sail Fishing Company.

mark.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs were, at all the times therein mentioned, co-partners carrying on business under the firm name and style of Moynihan & Aitken, and it is also alleged in the complaint "that the defendant, the Matteo Drobaz Fishing Company, is, and for more than three months prior to the commencement of this action was, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California." The answer nowhere denies the allegation of partnership of the plaintiffs, or that they carried on business as such, and nowhere denies the allegation that the Matteo Drobaz Fishing Company is a corporation. Besides, the defendant Matteo Drobaz Fishing Company, as such, files a separate answer, in which it does not deny its alleged corporate existence, but does deny that the Matteo Drobaz Fishing Company was the owner of said steamer Golden Gate. By Drobaz's receipt and Moynihan's testimony, the latter had one share in said company. The court finds, however, that the Matteo Drobaz Fishing Company was not at any time a corporation, and did not own the steamer; hence Moynihan was not a part owner. Yet the court finds that the said steamer was owned by Matteo Drobaz and a number of other persons, including the plaintiffs herein, James Aitken and T. J. Moynihan, as part owners.

By the failure of the defendants to deny the allegation of the corporate existence of the Matteo Drobaz Fishing Company, that fact is deemed to be admitted (Code Civ. Proc. § 462), and the finding against such corporate existence is not only a finding against such admission, but also without any issue presented upon which to make a finding (Id. § 590). There is not a particle of testimony that the plaintiff James Aitken ever had any interest in the vessel or in the said company, or that the partnership firm of Moynihan & Aitken, or said James Aitken, were part owners in said vessel, or had any interest therein. The court also finds that at the time of the issuance of the writ of attachment (under section 813 et seq., Code Civ. Proc.) a written undertaking was received by the clerk, which was not to the effect that if a judgment was rendered in favor of the owner of the steamer the plaintiffs will pay all costs and damages that may be awarded against them, or all damages that may be sustained by the owners, not exceeding the sum specified in the undertaking. There is no issue presented in the case on which this finding is required. Besides, it is stipulated that at the commencement of the action the vessel was seized under the provisions of the Code referred to, and was released upon a bond being given on the part of the defendants, as therein required. From this the court erroneously finds, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiffs at the time of the commencement of the action had no lien upon the said steamer Golden Gate, and are not entitled to recover anything in the action, but that the defendants are entitled to their costs.

The order denying a new trial is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; HARRISON, J.

in the complaint, among them P. J. Stockman and another, who are alleged to be executors of the estate of one Mathew Byrne, deceased. Service of summons and copy of complaint was made on both of said executors in December, 1895. Afterwards plaintiff filed amendments to its complaint,—the first on February 24, 1896, and another on March 12, 1896. It may be conceded that both these amendments were of matter of substance. Said executors never answered either the original complaint or the same as amended; nor does the record, which consists of the judgment roll alone, contain any evidence, beyond the recitals presently to be mentioned, that said amendments were served on the executors. On April 14, 1896, the clerk entered the default of said executors, reciting that they had failed to answer the complaint on file within the time allowed by law. On the same day the action was tried on issues raised by answers of other defendants, and plaintiff obtained judgment. The judgment recites that said executors were "regularly served with summons and complaint," and that their defaults for not appearing were regularly had and taken. They have appealed from the judgment, and assign for error that they were not served with the amendments to plaintiff's complaint.

There is no doubt of the general proposition that an amendment to a complaint must be served on all the defendants to be affected thereby. Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 452, 51 Pac. 687, and cases cited. But the question here is whether the record presented shows that such service was not made in this instance. The judgment recites that the executors were regularly served with the complaint, and that their defaults were regularly had and taken,—which could not be unless the amendments had been duly served on them. The statute concerning the contents of the judgment roll in such cases does not require the proof of service of amended pleadings to appear therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 670, subd. 2); and, in our opinion, it must be presumed, in the absence of affirmative showing to the contrary, that the amendments were regularly served, and that evidence thereof was before the court when it made its decree. Such, in effect, was the ruling in Livermore v. Webb, 33 Cal. 489, 492; and the case accords with the principle which ascribes verity to a judgment, and requires an appellant to make its error appear. In Thompson v. Johnson, 60 Cal. 292, a judgment was reversed because of failure to serve an amendment upon a defaulting defendant, and language was employed in the opinion of the court which seems, on cursory reading, to support the inference that the judgment roll must affirmatively show service of the amendment in such a case; but the opinion shows further that the court understood the order granting leave to amend as itself limiting the service to a single defendant,—one not in default. In that view, of course, no presumption ought to lie that service had been made, when the trial court had decided that it need not be made. No such order appears in the record before us; and Thompson v. Johnson, exceptional in its circumstances, is not an obstacle to a decision of the present case in accordance with the broader analogies illustrated by Livermore v. Webb, supra.

Appellants say further that the complaint, either in its original form or as amended, stated no cause of action against them. We have examined the pleading with care. Against a demurrer for uncertainty it could not have stood; but, taken in connection with the exhibits annexed thereto, which include a map of the proposed highway, the amended complaint shows a cause of action sufficient to support the judgment. The objections to it are not of importance to require treatment at length. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

OWNERSHIP—DECLARATIONS.

1. What the wife says about the ownership of realty, in the absence of her husband, does not bind him in a suit by another to quiet title to the property.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by P. Svetinich against Timothy Sheean and another. From a judgment for defendants and order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Marcus Rosenthal, for appellant. John H. Durst and Jas. A. Stevens, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. This is an action to quiet title to a certain lot in the city of Vallejo, Solano county. The title claimed by the plaintiff is founded upon a sheriff's deed. The plaintiff, September 30, 1895, obtained a judgment against the defendant Eliza Sheean in the city and county of San Francisco, and upon this judgment levied upon the right, title, and interest of said defendant Eliza Sheean in and to said lot, and under said judgment and levy, March 2, 1896, a sale was made by the sheriff of Solano county of said interest to the plaintiff in said action, who is the plaintiff here. No redemption having been made, the deed in question was executed October 17, 1896. Defendants, answering denied any title in the plaintiff, and alleged that the title and ownership of said property are in the defendant Timothy Sheean; and said Timothy Sheean, in a separate answer and by way of cross complaint, sets forth that said lot was purchased by his separate means, and, although the deed was taken in the name of himself and his wife, it was his separate property, and so understood at the time. The court finds that the said Timothy Sheean permitted said deed of conveyance to be made to said Timothy Sheean and Eliza Sheean jointly, solely in order to enable the better management and care thereof, and not as a gift, in whole or in part, to said Eliza Sheean; that the said Timothy Sheean was absent from home a great deal of the time in the service of the United States, as an officer in the navy; that the said Timothy Sheean is the owner of said property in fee simple, to his own separate use and benefit, and that the defendant Eliza Sheean has no interest or estate therein; that the plaintiff had notice and knowledge of the rights and estate of defendant Timothy Sheean in said property, and notice and knowledge that any title, estate, or interest therein or thereto held by said Eliza Sheean was held in trust for defendant Timothy Sheean. The evidence abundantly supports the findings.

The first error assigned by the appellant is the refusal by the court to allow the plaintiff to testify as to a conversation had with Mrs. Sheean, in the absence of her husband, as to the ownership of the property. What Mrs. Sheean may have said in the absence of her husband could not bind him, nor affect his title to the property. Besides, the plaintiff, on being recalled, was allowed, without objection, to state as follows: "I am the purchaser of said property under the execution sale. * * * Down to the time of the sheriff's sale I did not know that the defendant Timothy Sheean claimed that the undivided one-half thereof standing in his wife's name was held by her in trust for him, or that he claimed said one-half to be his own property. I had no notice of that from any source. Nobody told me anything of the kind. The only information I had about it was from Mrs. Sheean, who told me that she owned the property; that it belonged to her." He was, however, notified at the time of the sale, as he inferentially admits, that the defendant Timothy Sheean claimed the property, and therefore he did purchase with notice. Bank v. Baker, 82 Cal. 114, 22 Pac. 1037. The record shows: "It was here admitted by plaintiff that it was a fact that at all times since said conveyance by Catherine Reynolds (the grantor of the defendants) the property had been assessed for state and county and town taxes to the defendant Timothy Sheean; that the tax receipts for said property ran to Mr. Sheean right along, but plaintiff objected to the admission of evidence of that fact on the ground that the same was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial." The appellant makes the point that the court erred in admitting this evidence. It was admitted for the purpose of meeting an issue made by an affirmative allegation in the cross complaint, to wit: "This defendant further alleges that he is now, and for more than five years last past has been, the owner of said parcel of land, and has been in the open, notorious, and exclusive possession thereof, and adverse to all persons whatsoever, and has paid for more than five years last past all taxes, of every kind and description, levied thereon." The finding of the court supports this allegation.

The conveyance from Catherine Reynolds running to Timothy Sheean and his wife was dated February, 1886, and was at once put on record in Solano county. At that time, and up to the amendment of section 164 of the Civil Code, in March, 1889, it had been repeatedly held by this court that property conveyed for a money consideration to either or both of the spouses was deemed community property. Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 43; Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 264, 33 Pac. 95; Gwynn v. Dierssen 101 Cal. 563, 36 Pac. 103.

Appellant makes the point that the notice at the sheriff's sale stated that the property was claimed as community property on the part of defendant Timothy Sheean, and also as a homestead, whereas there was no valid homestead. But, if it had been community, instead of separate, property of Timothy Sheean, as found by the court, still it would not be subject to execution and sale on a judgment obtained against Eliza Sheean individually. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

GOSLINER v. GRANGERS' BANK OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 988.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1899.)

OSTENSIBLE AGENT—EVIDENCE—MORTGAGE OF CROPS—SUPPLIES FURNISHED MORTGAGOR—LIABILITY OF MORTGAGEE.

1. Plaintiff furnished a farmer, doing business in his own name, with supplies, with knowledge that he had mortgaged his crop, teams, and implements to a bank for money to prosecute his business. The bank did not own any of the land on which the crop was raised, and plaintiff charged supplies to the farmer. Held, that the bank was not liable to plaintiff for the supplies, as having made the farmer its ostensible agent, defined by Civ. Code, § 2300 as one whom the principal negligently causes a third person to believe to be his agent, when such is not the fact.

2. A mortgagee of crops is not liable for supplies furnished the mortgagor to enable him to raise the crop, in the absence of any express agreement to pay therefor, though the crops are sold to pay the mortgage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by N. A. Gosliner against the Grangers' Bank of California. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Horace Hawes, for appellant. E. S. Pillsbury and F. D. Madison, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This is an action for goods sold and delivered. The case was tried before the court without a jury. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals therefrom, and from an order refusing to grant a new trial.

The defendant was a banking corporation, doing business as such in the state of California, with its principal place of business in the city of San Francisco. Its principal business seems to have been, so far as appears in this case, loaning money to farmers to carry on farming operations, taking mortgages on their crops planted and to be planted, teams, machinery, etc., to secure such loans. During the years 1893-94 and 1894-95, Thomas L. Reed, then farming from 15,000 to 25,000 acres of land under cropping contracts, made an agreement with the defendant bank to furnish him (Reed) with "the money to do the work with, and furnish the stuff to raise the crops." Defendant took mortgages upon Reed's crops, and also upon his mules, etc., as security. At this time Reed was largely indebted to the bank, and it was agreed that the mortgages taken should secure the payment of this past indebtedness as well as the advances to be made during the year. All of the crops, mules, and farming implements were turned over to the defendant, and it realized therefrom some $56,000 or $58,000. This action is brought to recover of defendant the price of the supplies furnished by plaintiff to Thomas L. Reed for these years,—1893-94 and 1894-95,—and which supplies have not been paid for. Substantially the same agreement was made by the defendant bank with John R. Reed for the year 1894-95, Mr. Gosliner being present at the time. It was agreed to pay plaintiff for the supplies so furnished, every three months, with checks drawn by John R. Reed on the bank. The supplies were purchased from plaintiff, and were used upon the ranches of John R. Reed for the purpose of putting in the crops which were mortgaged to defendant, all of which crops were delivered to defendant as agreed. The supplies furnished for the first nine months were paid for with checks drawn by Reed on the bank. For the last three months they were not paid. It is sought in this action to recover from defendant for the supplies furnished during the last three months. The Reeds received credit on the books of the bank for the amount secured by the mortgages, and drew checks against the account to defray their farming expenses. In this way they drew about $80,000 from the bank. The bank received all the crops harvested, which, with the mules, etc., came to about $58,000, leaving something upwards of $20,000 owing from the Reeds to the bank, according to the testimony of the bank's officers.

There was no account between the plaintiff and defendant. The plaintiff charged the goods to the Reeds, which he now seeks to recover the price of from defendant. Plaintiff had full knowledge of the transactions between the bank and the Reeds, and thoroughly understood the relations existing between them; and though he frequently met the officers of the bank, and talked with them concerning the Reeds and their crop prospects, he never intimated to them that he intended to hold the bank for the claim sued on herein until the commencement of this suit. In the meantime he kept pressing the Reeds frequently for his claim. The Reeds carried on the farming business in their own names. They did not own all the land they farmed. Some of it belonged to others, and they were farming it on shares, under agreement with the owners of the land. There is no claim that the bank owned any of the land, nor does it appear that the bank was a party to any of the cropping contracts referred to.

The contention of appellant, on the foregoing facts, is that the "defendant held out the Reeds to be their agents, that plaintiff believed that to be the fact, and that this belief was based and founded upon the acts of defendant, either intentional or negligent." In support of this contention the appellant cites section 2300 of the Civil Code, which defines "ostensible agency" as follows: "An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him." From this it appears that he who seeks to charge the principal with the act of an alleged ostensible agent must himself believe that the agent had authority as such from the alleged principal. Harris v. Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 25 Pac. 758. The fact that plaintiff, knowing the relations that existed between the Reeds and the bank, yet charged the goods to the Reeds, and not to the bank, is strong evidence tending to show that plaintiff did not believe that the Reeds were purchasing these goods as the agents of the bank. A business man usually charges the price of goods to the party buying, and not to the agent of such party. The evidence seems amply sufficient to support the conclusion adverse to plaintiff reached by the trial court on the question of agency. The plaintiff's claim of an ostensible agency in the Reeds is the strongest ground he could base his claim to recovery on. The theory of an actual agency would find no support in the evidence, and the plaintiff advances no such claim. The cases of Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 633, 27 Pac. 67, Buckley v. Silverberg, 113 Cal. 674, 45 Pac. 804, and the other cases cited by appellant, differ materially, as to their facts, from this case, and furnish no guide for the decision herein. The plaintiff cannot recover from defendant on any theory that his furnishing the goods to the Reeds enabled them to grow, mature, and harvest the crop that defendant was interested in as mortgagee.

and that thereby defendant received an incidental benefit from the goods furnished. To obtain judgment against defendant, it was necessary for plaintiff to show the existence of a contract and promise, either express or implied, made in person or through an agent, on the part of defendant to pay for the goods. The incidental benefit to defendant might have had some weight as evidence, in connection with other circumstances, to show the existence of such a contract, but was not sufficient, standing alone, to base a right of action on for goods sold and delivered. Clay v. Walton, 9 Cal. 328; Harris v. Flume Co., 87 Cal. 529, 25 Pac. 758. The findings of the court have ample support in the evidence produced at the trial.

We see no error prejudicial to plaintiff in the rulings of the court on the introduction of the evidence. We advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR—REVERSAL—AMENDMENT OF JUDGMENT.

The supreme court will not amend its judgment directing a demurrer to the complaint to be overruled, by adding thereto a direction that respondents be allowed to answer, as application for leave to answer can be made to the trial court.

Motion to amend the judgment of the supreme court. Motion denied.

For former opinion, see 56 Pac. 624.

PER CURIAM. Respondents move to amend the judgment hereinbefore rendered, which directs that the demurrer to the complaint be overruled, by adding thereto a direction that respondents be allowed to answer; but this direction is not necessary, because the court below, if a proper showing be made, will undoubtedly allow the respondents to answer.

VANCE v. SMITH. (S. F. 1,469.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1899.)

ASSIGNMENT—PLEADING—SURPLUSAGE—JUDGMENT AGAINST ESTATE—APPEAL.

1. Shortly before her death, a wife executed the following order, directed to a building association: "Please pay to my husband, S. L. V., the stock that is to my credit in your hands, after its maturity, and oblige E. M. V." Held, that this was an order for the payment of the stock to the husband for the benefit of the wife's estate, and not an assignment of it to him individually.

2. Where the court and counsel tried the case on the complaint and answer without regard to a cross complaint, and the allegations of the answer suffice to justify the findings, the cross complaint will be rejected as surplusage, and error in overruling a demurrer thereto will be disregarded.

3. Where, in an action to settle the account of a deceased administrator, the judgment rendered against his estate failed to provide that his administratrix should pay it in the due course of administration, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1504, the cause will be remanded, on appeal, with instruction to modify the judgment in accordance with the statute.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by Clara M. Vance, as administratrix of the estate of S. L. Vance, deceased, against Bertha A. Smith, as administratrix of the estate of Eliza M. Vance, deceased. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. Shepard and L. L. Cory, for appellant. Geo. B. Graham, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. Eliza M. Vance died intestate in Fresno county October 31, 1894, leaving S. L. Vance, her husband, surviving her. On February 9, 1895, said surviving husband was appointed administrator of her estate, and during the course of administration, before any accounting had been had, he died. His daughter by a former marriage, the plaintiff in the action, was thereupon duly appointed the administratrix of his estate, and has brought this suit against the defendant, Bertha A. Smith, the daughter of his deceased wife, Eliza M. Vance, by a former marriage, who has been duly appointed administratrix of her said mother's estate, for the purpose of having a court of equity settle the account of said S. L. Vance while acting as such administrator prior to his death. In settling the accounts, the court found that said S. L. Vance, deceased, in his lifetime, as administrator of the estate of Eliza M. Vance, deceased, had in his hands as such administrator, and belonging to said estate, a balance due, of money on hand, $1,093; personal property (watch and chain, $10; trinkets, $1.50), making $11.50,—in all, $1,104.50; and thereupon judgment was rendered "that the defendant, Bertha A. Smith, as administratrix of the said estate of Eliza M. Vance, deceased, have judgment against the plaintiff, Clara M. Vance, as administratrix of the estate of S. L. Vance, deceased, for the sum of $1,093," and also that the said defendant have judgment against the said plaintiff that said plaintiff deliver to the defendant said personal property and trinkets, or their value in the sum of $11.50.

The appellant makes the point that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court in finding the amount on hand by S. L. Vance at the time of his death, and especially as to $1,000 collected by him from the Tuscola Benefit & Building Association, in Illinois. That money was collected on the following order:

"Selma, Cal., Sept. 13, 1894. Tuscola Benefit & Building Association: Please pay my husband, S. L. Vance, the stock that is to my credit in your hands, after its maturity, and oblige. Yours, E. M. Vance."

It is claimed on the part of appellant that this is an assignment of that stock, and that it and the proceeds thereof belonged to the said S. L. Vance thereafter as his property. Said Eliza M. Vance, as already stated, died the following month, and before said order was presented said S. L. Vance was appointed her administrator. The officers of the bank, it appears, refused to treat the said Vance as the owner of said stock, and refused to pay over the said proceeds, to wit, $1,000, to him individually, and only paid it over when he presented a certified copy of his letters of administration on his wife's estate; and he received the money from the association, and gave a receipt, as such administrator of the estate of Eliza M. Vance, deceased. The court below evidently, as it should, treated the paper as not an assignment, but simply an order. Without considering the evidence in detail, it is enough to say that, as shown by the record, there is sufficient to support the findings of the court.

It is also objected by the appellant that the court erred in overruling plaintiff's demurrer to the so-called cross complaint of the defendant. The minute order of the court, as shown by the record, September 23, 1896, reads: "It is ordered that the demurrer of the plaintiff to the cross complaint of the defendant be, and it is hereby, sustained, and said defendant is hereby granted ten days in which to amend." Upon November 17, 1896, another minute order shows that the demurrer of the plaintiff to the amended cross complaint of defendant was overruled, but there nowhere appears in the record any amended cross complaint. It seems, however, that counsel and the court below tried the case upon the complaint and answer, without regard to the so-called cross complaint; and the denials in the answer, and the affirmative matters set up therein, are sufficient to justify and support the findings of the court in reference to the account; and therefore the said so-called cross complaint may be rejected as mere surplusage.

The appellant makes the further point that the judgment is erroneous in that it does not provide that it should be paid in due course of administration. As S. L. Vance, who in his lifetime was administrator of the estate of Eliza M. Vance, died without having made any accounting in the probate court, this action was brought to have his said account settled; and, as the result of settling said account, the court rendered judgment against the plaintiff, as his administratrix, for the amount ascertained to be due, but failed to direct how or by whom such judgment should be paid. By section 1504 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided: "A judgment rendered against an executor or administrator, upon any claim for money against the estate of his testator or intestate, only establishes the claim in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the executor or administrator and a judge; and the judgment must be that the executor or administrator pay in due course of administration the amount ascertained to be due." We think the point made by appellant in this respect is well taken.

In this case, it will not be necessary to order a new trial. The cause is remanded to the court below with instructions to modify the judgment by adding thereto the following: "And that said judgment be paid in due course of administration." And, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed; appellant to have costs on this appeal.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—OPTION TO PURCHASE—LIABILITY FOR RENT—DECREE—RES JUDICATA.

1. A 20-year lease, at a stipulated monthly rental, expiring in November, 1893, gave the lessee the option to purchase at a fixed price at its expiration. The last day of the lease, the lessee wrote to the son of the deceased lessor, and to the former agent of the deceased, that he elected to purchase and to pay for the property when the probate proceedings were fully completed, and the owners could give title. An administrator was appointed in December, 1893, but the lessee did nothing further until April, 1894, when he notified the administrator that he would take the property, but could not then pay for it. He made no tender until December, 1894. Meanwhile he paid rent for the time before the administrator was appointed, and for three months thereafter. In December, 1894, through proceedings in the probate court, the lessee was decreed the property pursuant to the lease provision, on the payment of the price, but such decree established only that when it was entered the heirs and the administrator consented to the purchase, but did not establish the fact—and there was nothing in the petition or decree calling for an adjudication thereof—that the lessee had become the equitable owner, or stood in the relation of a purchaser of the land at the termination of the lease. Held, that the lessee was liable for rent as a tenant from month to month up to December, 1894.

2. A petition in the probate court by the heirs at law and the administrator of the deceased to direct a conveyance of property leased by the deceased, pursuant to the terms of the lease, on the payment of the consideration, where so decreed, and where the question of back rent was not raised or considered therein, or necessarily involved, does not bar a subsequent action by the heirs against the purchaser to recover such rent, where it had been set over to them in the decree of distribution.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles Journe and others against David Hewes. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William B. Sharp, for appellant. G. W. McEnerney and Stanley, Hayes & Bradley, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for rents for certain premises situated in the city of San Francisco. The trial was by the court, a jury having been waived; and plaintiffs had judgment, from which, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. The pleadings are verified.

The facts appear from the findings to be as follows: Plaintiffs' intestate was the owner of the premises, and on November 1, 1873, by an agreement in writing, leased them to defendant for the period of 20 years (i. e. to November 1, 1893) at the monthly rental of $140, payable the 1st day of each month in advance. Defendant entered into possession under the lease, and continued in possession until December 22, 1894. Plaintiffs' intestate died February 16, 1893, and on December 27, 1893, A. C. Freese duly qualified and became administrator of the estate of deceased, and so continued until January 7, 1895, when all of the estate, including all claims against defendant, was distributed to plaintiffs. Defendant occupied the premises to November 1, 1893, under the lease; and thereafter, and until December 22, 1894, he occupied the premises "under an agreement made between these plaintiffs, the said A. C. Freese, as administrator as aforesaid, and the said defendant, under the terms whereof the said defendant agreed to hold said premises as a tenant from month to month, upon the same terms and conditions as those contained in said lease aforesaid." The agreement upon the part of plaintiffs covered the period from November 1, 1893, to December 22, 1894; "and on the part of Freese, from the issuance of letters to him and to December 22, 1894." Defendant became liable for 13.7 months rent, at $140 per month, "commencing November 1, 1893, and ending on the 1st day of January, 1895." (In a subsequent finding the expiration date is December 21, 1894, inclusive, and rent is computed to include that date, and no further.) The rent amounted to $1,918, "on account whereof, and of his occupation * * * during said period, defendant has paid the sum of seven hundred dollars, and no more." Said seven hundred dollars was for rent from November 1, 1893, to March 31, 1894, inclusive. At this point it should be stated that the lease contained an option to defendant to purchase. That part drawn in question reads: "At the expiration of the term of this lease the said party of the second part [defendant] shall have the privilege of purchasing, if he desires so to do, the premises above described, for the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars; * * * and upon the payment or tender thereof the said party of the first part shall and will execute, acknowledge, and deliver a good and sufficient bargain and sale deed * * * to the said party of the second part." It is then provided that, if defendant "decline to purchase, * * * then the buildings which have been erected upon said premises by said party of the second part * * * shall be appraised

[the method is provided for], * * * and first party agrees to pay second party the appraised value thereof." The lease, by its terms, binds the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties. Bearing upon this option to purchase, the court finds as follows: Defendant became the owner of the premises December 22, 1894. He never held possession as owner prior to that date, but "was in possession thereof solely as tenant." No part of the $700 above mentioned was paid as compensation for defendant's delay in completing the purchase under his privilege to do so. Defendant was neither ready nor able to complete the purchase of the premises until December 22, 1894, "and neither paid nor tendered the purchase price, nor any part thereof, before that date." "Defendant did not become the owner of the premises November 1, 1893, but became the purchaser thereof as of and on the day of the delivery of the deed to him, and the payment by him of the purchase price, which was the 22d day of December, 1894."

1. Appellant's principal contention is that the court erred in finding that defendant was a tenant of Freese or the plaintiffs, after the expiration of the lease, under an agreement to pay rent.

On October 31, 1893 (the lease expired that day), defendant wrote two letters,—one to plaintiff Charles Journe, son of plaintiff's intestate, and one to the London, Paris & American Bank, agent of deceased in his lifetime,—in the first of which he said: "I write to express my desire and election to purchase the lot of land described in the lease now existing between your father, Jean Marie Journe, and myself, * * * and to pay for the same when the probate proceedings are fully completed, and the owners can give title to the same." In the other he expresses his desire in about the same terms, concluding: "I pay for the same when the owners can give title." The evidence shows that defendant remained in possession of the premises after the lease had expired, and until December 22, 1894, when he received a deed from Administrator Freese through proceedings instituted October 27, 1894, in the probate court, on petition of defendant, under section 1598 et seq., Code Civ. Proc. Defendant claims that on and after November 1, 1893, the relation of vendor and purchaser existed between the parties, and not that of landlord and tenant, because, as he claims, he exercised his privilege of purchasing under the agreement. Plaintiffs' contention is that there was no legal duty put upon the administrator to take any steps towards passing title to defendant until he had notified the administrator that he was ready, able, and willing to consummate the purchase, and that no valid tender was made by defendant until December 22, 1894, to which time he was tenant. There is but little oral evidence bearing upon the fact as to the actual relation of defendant to the property after the lease expired. The court found, and I think there was evidence to sustain the finding, that defendant paid as rents, at the leasehold rate, for five months, $140 per month, to April 1, 1894. Defendant testified, but he made no explanation of his payment of the sum of $700 to the administrator, which the court finds was for rents. His oral explanation of his verbal offer to take the property, stated to the administrator after the latter received his letters, shows that when he gave the notice it was coupled with the statement that he was not then prepared to make payment. In addition to the oral proofs, plaintiffs rely upon the presumption supplied by sections 1945 and 1946, Civ. Code. The only witness called by defendant was Administrator Freese. From his testimony it is plain enough that the delay on the part of defendant in completing the purchase arose from stringency in the money market, and defendant's inability to raise the amount required. He testified as follows: "I am the public administrator. I had charge of the Journe estate as public administrator. I collected the rents. Q. I am not asking you about that, but whether he [defendant] elected to purchase under that lease? A. Not immediately, when I took charge of the property. Q. Well, at any time? A. Yes, sir; many times I have had conversations with Mr. Hewes with regard to it. Q. And do you remember that I [Hewes' attorney] came to you, stating that I had come from Mr. Hewes, and at his request, in regard to the matter? A. I remember you coming there; yes, sir. Q. Do you remember my stating to you on or about the 1st day of April that he elected to purchase under that lease? A. I think somewhere thereabouts. I think you came there, and stated that you were willing to take the property, and wanted to take it, and would take it, but that you were retarded on account of finances, and had to make arrangements to get the money to pay for it; and, of course, the money was not turned over until a long time afterwards." He was asked if anything was said as to taking steps to apply to the probate court for authorization to convey, to which he answered: "No, sir; I do not think so, because Mr. Hewes repeatedly spoke to me, and was negotiating for a loan, and was trying to get the money." Witness was asked: "Q. Was there anything said at that time, at that conversation, about Mr. Hewes becoming a tenant of the estate of Mr. Journe? A. Oh, I do not think so. I think the whole conversation was that Mr. Hewes would take the property, and, as soon as it would be convenient for him to take it, that he would take it." He was asked if anything was said about the delay in completing the purchase, and answered: "Well, it seemed it was hardness of times, and one thing and another." There is no evidence of an express agreement to pay rent at the old rate pending the time when defendant would be able to pay for the property, and the court did not find that there was such an agreement. Defendant paid rent at the leasehold rate for five months, to March 1, 1894. The rent for February, 1894, was paid May 23, and the last payment of rent was made as late as July 19, 1894, for one month, to April 1, 1894. There is no explanation of the failure to pay rent after April 1st, and there is not the slightest evidence that payments were made other than for rent, and at the former rate. It seems to us that the evidence fully justifies the implied agreement found by the court.

Defendant contends that the presumption raised by the statute above referred to is not conclusive (citing Rogers v. Duhart, 97 Cal. 500, 32 Pac. 570), and that the presumption in the present case is overcome by the privilege of purchase given in the lease, which privilege defendant claims to have promptly exercised, and in doing so established the relation of vendor and purchaser. Furthermore, it is claimed that defendant filed his petition in the probate court for specific performance, in which proceeding plaintiffs and the administrator appeared; that the court decreed the performance of the contract, and "this decree was complied with by the execution of the conveyance, and the payment by defendant of the amount ordered to be paid by him." It is claimed that "this decree conclusively established the fact that subsequent to November 1, 1893, the relation between the parties was that of vendor and purchaser, and not that of landlord and tenant," and "that from these facts the law cannot imply an agreement on the part of defendant to pay rent,"—citing Wood, Landl. & Ten. § 16. The petition referred to was filed by defendant October 27, 1894, and is set forth in the transcript as part of plaintiffs' evidence, as is also the decree of the court, and it was admitted "that under said petition said deed was executed." The petition stated "that petitioner desires to purchase said property in said agreement [the lease] described, according to the terms of said agreement, and he hereby tenders and offers to pay therefor the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars; * * * and by reason of the premises petitioner is entitled to a specific performance, * * * to wit, a grant, bargain, and sale deed conveying the fee of the said premises * * * to petitioner upon the payment by him of the said sum of thirty-five thousand dollars." The decree directed conveyance to be made upon the payment of the sum above mentioned. These proceedings by no means established the fact that on November 1, 1893, defendant fully exercised his option, and put himself in the relation of a purchaser. Neither the petition nor the decree had any such retroactive effect. The decree established only the fact that at the time it was entered the heirs at law of deceased and the administrator consented that defendant might become the purchaser upon the payment of $35,000, but it did not establish the fact, and there was nothing in the petition nor in the decree calling for an adjudication of the fact, that defendant had on November 1, 1893, become the equitable owner, or stood in the relation of a purchaser, of the land. The owners of the property, by submitting to the proceedings, merely consented that the option to purchase might be treated as still available to defendant. It was clearly a condition of the option that it should be exercised at the expiration of the lease; for, aside from the express conditions of the option, it was provided that, should defendant decline to purchase, the buildings erected by him should belong to the lessor. But this condition might be, and was, waived by plaintiffs, when finally defendant became, not only willing, but able, to purchase, and so notified the administrator.

Defendant stoutly contends, however, that the written notices he served October 31, 1893, and the verbal notice to the administrator about April 1, 1894, in themselves established the relation of vendor and purchaser, and were conclusive of the fact. The point is pressed with much zeal and ability, and is contested with equal earnestness and force. We do not think it necessary to follow respective counsel throughout the argument. Among other cases, appellant relies upon Carpenter v. U. S., 17 Wall. 489. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Strong. I quote sufficiently to state appellant's position clearly: "Privity of contract is doubtless essential in all cases. But when the defendant has entered and occupied by permission of the plaintiff, without any express contract, the law implies a promise on his part to make compensation or pay a reasonable rent for his occupation. In such case the consent of the owner to defendant's entry, followed by such entry and by subsequent occupation, may be considered equivalent to a demise, or at least prima facie evidence of a demise. This is because a demise, with a corresponding agreement to pay rent or make compensation for the use of the property, is consistent with an unexplained entry by the owner's consent, and because it is a reasonable presumption that occupation thus taken was intended to be paid for." After thus lucidly stating the rule under which an implied promise will arise, the learned justice proceeds: "No reason, however, for such an implication exists when an express contract or an agreement between the parties shows that it was not intended by them to constitute the relation of landlord and tenant, but that the occupation was taken and held for another purpose. And this is shown when the entry has been made in pursuance of an agreement to purchase, whether that agreement is in writing or parol. Such an agreement sufficiently explains the allowed entry, without the necessity of resorting to any implication of a contract other than actually made." It was held in the case that, if the plaintiff was entitled to anything beyond what he received, it was interest on the purchase money from the time possession was taken until the price of the sale was paid. The facts were that on July, 1863, an army officer, on behalf of the United States, entered into a parol agreement with Carpenter for the purchase and sale of an island in Narragansett Bay. In August following, the government officers, with the consent of Carpenter, entered into possession of the island, and continued in possession until 1866, when the sale was consummated and the consideration paid. Carpenter afterwards brought suit in the court of claims for use and occupation of the island, and it was held that he could not recover, because the entry was as by a purchaser, and not as tenant. The present case differs widely from the Carpenter Case. Here the entry was under an agreement to pay rent, and the relation of the parties was unquestionably that of landlord and tenant for 20 years, up to the 31st day of October, 1893; and, unless the notice of defendant that he desired to avail himself of the option to purchase had the conclusive effect claimed for it, which we do not think it had, the relation of landlord and tenant is shown, by the evidence, aided by the statutory presumption, to have continued until he completed the purchase. If he had tendered the money, or had announced his ability and willingness to take the property so soon as title could be made, and nothing remained to be done but obtain the order of the court, I can see how it might be claimed with reason that he held over as purchaser pending such action. But no such state of facts existed. His notice fails to show a "payment or tender thereof" of the money which the agreement required should be made "at the expiration of the term of the lease." The offer was to purchase the property, "and to pay for the same when the probate proceedings are fully completed, and the owners can give title to the same." When this notice was given there was as yet no administrator, and no one authorized to act for the heirs at law of deceased; but an administrator was appointed two months later,—December 27, 1893. If it may be said that defendant did all that he could reasonably be asked to do before an administrator was appointed, it was incumbent upon him, as soon as that officer had qualified, to make "payment or tender thereof," and demand his deed. He, however, took no further action until about April 1, 1894, when he notified the administrator that he desired to avail himself of the option, but at the time, for reasons personal to himself, and in fact because he could not then pay for the property, took no steps to purchase; and not until December, 1894, did he make tender of payment, and put himself in readiness to pay. Meanwhile he paid rent for the time before the administrator was appointed, and for three months thereafter. Appellant asserts that it is immaterial what the relation of defendant was prior to April 1, 1894, and, seemingly inconsistent with his contention as to the conclusiveness of the written notice, is willing to concede that payment of rents was made to that date, but that thereafter the relation was that of purchaser, by virtue of the verbal notice to the administrator. An examination of the evidence, some of which is given above, will show that defendant only expressed a desire and intention to exercise his option, but at the same time said he was not yet prepared to make payment; i. e. to comply with the conditions of the option. The verbal notice to the administrator was even less conclusive than the written notice served upon persons unauthorized to deal finally with the matter.

Respondent claims that the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1598) does not give the administrator authority to file the petition, but that it expressly gives the right only to "any person claiming to be entitled to such conveyance from an executor or administrator"; and it is hence argued that it was defendant's duty to commence proceedings under that section. The language used might be construed to limit this right as claimed, but it is not necessary to so hold in the present case. The administrator certainly was not required to take any steps to make the conveyance until defendant had made demand and tender of payment, or at least shown ability and willingness to pay. He did not do this at any time until he filed his petition, and obtained the order of the court. We do not see that the doctrine as to when time is of the essence of the contract, and some other doctrines made the subject of discussion, need be particularly examined. Here there was no obligation on defendant to purchase. He reserved only the right to purchase, but the decision to do so rested wholly with him. This right was absolute, provided he complied with the conditions imposed. Whether he was in default or not was a question not raised against his right to purchase when he finally, after much delay, came forward with the money. But this complaisance in December, 1894, on the part of the owners and the administrator, in itself casts no light upon the relation defendant bore to the property during the preceding 12 months. We are constrained to hold that the evidence satisfactorily shows the relation to have been that of tenant.

2. Appellant claims that not only are plaintiffs barred by their appearance in the proceeding in the probate court, and its decree, but by the acceptance of the purchase price without claiming anything further; that the court had jurisdiction to afford complete relief, and to order payment of interest, or rent in lieu thereof, or neither. Whether, in this statutory proceeding, under section 1598, Code Civ. Proc., the court could go beyond the power expressly given by the statute we do not think it necessary to decide. It is sufficient answer to defendant's contention that the claim for rent presented in this action was not litigated in that proceeding, so far as the petition and decree disclose what was done, and the question of defendant's liability for rent was not necessarily involved. The probate court seems not to have considered this claim as then litigated; for it is alleged in plaintiffs' complaint, and not denied, that in its decree of distribution the court set over to plaintiffs the claims arising out of the matters set forth in the complaint. Nor was it necessary for the court to find the value of the use and occupation. Having found the implied contract to pay the rent stipulated in the lease, the value of the use of the premises became immaterial. No findings are required on immaterial issues.

3. Defendant made a motion to strike out certain parts of the complaint on the ground of the matter designated being irrelevant and redundant. There is also a demurrer to the complaint on general and special grounds. We have examined the alleged irrelevant and redundant matter, and, while we think some of it might, without harm to the complaint, have been dispensed with, we cannot see that defendant was injured by its retention. The demurrer is not urged further than by expressing the opinion of counsel that it should have been sustained. Indeed, the motion and demurrer depend principally for support upon the questions already considered, and need not be further noticed. Our conclusion on the whole case is that the judgment and order should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; PRINGLE, C.

RAMSBOTTOM v. BAILEY et al. (Sac. 471.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 12, 1898.)
PARTNERSHIP—MORTGAGE—MISJOINDER—ESTOPPEL —DECREE.

1. Where a surviving partner mortgages the partnership property to secure his individual debt, the mortgagee in foreclosure acquires whatever interest in the property the mortgagor had.

2. In foreclosure of a mortgage on partnership property given by the surviving partner to secure his individual debt, the right of precedence of a partnership judgment payable out of the partnership property cannot be litigated, this being a title adverse to the mortgagor.

3. The judgment creditor was not precluded, by setting up his claim to a lien on the partnership interest, from afterwards litigating the question.

4. A decree foreclosing a mortgage given by a surviving partner for his individual debt will be modified so as to show that it was without prejudice to the adverse claim of the judgment creditor of the firm.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Suit by R. Ramsbottom against C. K. Bailey and others. From a decree for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant L. W. Goodwin appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Middlecoff, for appellant. Elliott & Elliott, for respondent Ramsbottom. Jas. A. Louttit, for respondent Bailey.

PRINGLE, C. Action to foreclose a mortgage dated March 5, 1894, made by Bailey to Ramsbottom, to secure promissory notes of mortgagor to mortgagee. Goodwin is made a party defendant, as a subsequent incumbrancer. The complaint alleges that the mortgaged premises are the partnership property of the firm of Bailey & Carpenter; that Carpenter was dead at the time of the execution of note and mortgage; that Bailey contracted the indebtedness and made the notes and mortgage in his capacity of surviving member of the firm. The answer of Goodwin alleges that the notes and mortgage were executed by Bailey individually, and for his own use and benefit, and not as surviving partner. The answer then sets up a judgment recovered on the 23d day of May, 1895, in the superior court of San Joaquin county, in favor of Goodwin against Bailey, individually and as surviving partner, whereby it was adjudged that the amount of the judgment be paid out of the partnership assets, and in which action there was filed with the clerk a copy of an order made by the court requiring Oscar F. Atwood, previously appointed receiver of the partnership, to be made a party to the action, with proof of service upon the receiver of a copy of the order and of a copy of the complaint, and a memorandum showing that the default of the receiver for not answering was entered. The court finds that the notes made by Bailey to the mortgagee were made individually, and not for the benefit of the partnership; that judgment was entered in favor of Goodwin in an action on a promissory note made by Bailey to Goodwin; that the judgment was rendered against Bailey personally and against him as surviving partner of Bailey & Carpenter, and that it was ordered by the judgment that the same should be paid out of the funds of the partnership; that no summons was ever served on the receiver, nor did he ever appear in the action; that the court had no jurisdiction to render any judgment except the money judgment against Bailey; that the claim of Goodwin is subsequent and subordinate to the claim of plaintiff as mortgagee. Goodwin appeals from the judgment and from the order denying motion for new trial.

Upon this record several questions arise. First, what does the mortgagee get? Where a surviving partner makes a mortgage upon the partnership property to secure his individual debt, the extent of the interest covered by the mortgage is uncertain, but the mortgagee is entitled to foreclose the mortgage, and acquire under foreclosure all the interest of the mortgagor, whatever it may be, in the property mortgaged.

Two other questions were involved as presented at the trial in the court below: First. If a judgment creditor, who is made a party defendant, sets up, as against such a mortgage, a judgment adjudging that his debt is a partnership debt, and should be paid out of the partnership funds, is such a judgment evidence against the mortgagee of the character of the indebtedness, or only of the fact of the indebtedness? Second. Can the mortgagee attack the judgment collaterally? These questions were considered by the court below. The court held that the judgment was void as against the receiver, and that it determined nothing but the existence of the debt, and, as the money judgment was subsequent in time to the mortgage, it was held to be subordinate to it. We are invited in this appeal to review the action of the court below in declaring that in this judgment the court had not acquired jurisdiction to determine the character of the debt which it established. But that matter is immaterial, for it cannot be litigated in this action. To allege that the judgment debt is a partnership debt payable out of the partnership property, and therefore entitled to precedence over the mortgage given for the individual debt of the mortgagor, is to present a title adverse to the mortgage, and such title cannot be adjudicated in this action. The "mortgaged premises" means the interest of the mortgagor in these lands. The attempt of the defendant is not to contest or to claim priority over the mortgage made upon this interest of the mortgagor, but it is to assert a lien claimed to be superior to the lien of the mortgage, because it attaches to a title adverse to the mortgagor's. It does not deny that the mortgage is prior in point of time as a lien upon the interest of the mortgagor in these lands, but it avers that these lands belong, not to the mortgagor, but to the partnership, and that the judgment is a superior claim against the partnership. The position may be tested by supposing that the receiver, as representing the partnership, had been made a party defendant. He was not a proper party defendant, because the complaint admitted that the lands were partnership property, and the findings determined that the mortgagee's debt was not a partnership debt; hence there was no necessity for his presence. But, if he had been made a party defendant, he could have interposed no defense to the mortgage. The foreclosure would not have affected him. It would merely have the effect of transferring the interest of mortgagor to mortgagee,—a transfer with which he was not concerned. And the judgment creditor who claims a lien upon the partnership interest has manifestly no better position to resist the foreclosure than the partnership or its representative. As against the judgment creditor, the effect of the foreclosure will be simply to transfer the title of mortgagor to mortgagee, as of a date long prior to the rendering of the judgment. This is all that the court could properly determine in this action. This is no occasion to determine the extent of the mortgagor's interest in the partnership property. "All the title the mortgagee can obtain by a foreclosure is the title of the mortgagor." When he acquires that title, the judgment creditor may contest with him the extent of the title he has acquired. Then new questions must arise to which these are not the only necessary parties. A partnership accounting, in which the receiver and other creditors must be represented, will be necessary to establish the extent of the mortgagor's interest. It may be that the firm is indebted to one partner or the other to such a degree as to affect materially the apparent title of the mortgagor in the lands mortgaged. This is a possibility tending to show the reason of the rule that titles or claims adverse to the mortgagor cannot be litigated in a foreclosure suit. This case, from its double aspect, bears strong analogy to the case of San Francisco v. Lawton, 18 Cal. 465. In that case parties defendant held a title derived from the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage, which was held to be barred by the foreclosure, but they held also titles adverse to the mortgagor, which it was held could not be affected by the foreclosure. In the present case the judgment against Bailey, the mortgagor, bears date long subsequent to the mortgage, and, so far as it is a lien upon the interest of the mortgagor in the lands mortgaged, it is properly held to be subordinate to the rights of the plaintiff as mortgagee. But the right which the judgment creditor claims—the right to show that the partnership interest may, upon an accounting, absorb the interest covered by this mortgage, and that he has a lien upon such partnership interest—is a claim which cannot be litigated in this action. The fact that it was set up in the answer need not preclude the defendant from an adjudication hereafter. In San Francisco v. Lawton, supra, the case was reversed because the adverse rights of the defendants were not saved in the decree. But in the present case the decree may be modified, in accordance with the practice suggested in Ord v. Bartlett, 83 Cal. 428, 23 Pac. 705, by providing that the decree is without prejudice to the adverse claim of the defendant Goodwin. Under a correct interpretation of this decree, such a saving clause is perhaps not necessary; for by the decree the defendants are barred and foreclosed only of and from all equity of redemption of said "mortgaged premises," which means only the interest of the mortgagor in the property. But the practice suggested will prevent further controversy, and define accurately the right reserved.

I advise that the decree be modified by inserting the clause, "without prejudice to the right of the defendant Goodwin to assert, in some other action or proceeding, the claim that his judgment was rendered for a partnership debt of Bailey and Carpenter, and is, by reason thereof, a lien upon the lands described in plaintiff's mortgage superior to the lien of the said mortgage," and that as so modified the judgment be affirmed, and that the order denying motion for new trial be affirmed.

LIENS—DEATH OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR—ADMINISTRATION—ALLOWANCE OF JUDGMENT AS CLAIM—EFFECT.

1. The lien secured on the property of a judgment debtor in his life by docketing the judgment, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 671, is not affected by his death.

2. The presentation and allowance by an administrator of a judgment, which is a lien on the judgment debtor's property, as a claim against his estate, does not destroy the lien.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Cora A. Morton against W. J. Adams and others. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Van Ness & Redman, for respondents.

PRINGLE, C. Suit to quiet title. Plaintiff is owner of the land. Defendant London & Lancashire Insurance Company claims a lien by judgment upon it. The following are the facts: The said defendant recovered a judgment against Emeline Wallace on March 13, 1896. She was then the owner of the land, and the judgment was duly docketed, and became a lien upon it. Emeline Wallace conveyed the land to plaintiff, subject to the lien of the judgment, and died on May 26, 1896. Administration was taken out, and the judgment was presented as a claim against her estate, and the claim allowed on September 24, 1896. The defendant, in its answer, sets up the lien of the judgment, and in a cross complaint prays a foreclosure of the lien. The court finds that the lien is a valid and existing lien upon the property, but grants no other relief to the defendant. Thus no question of procedure is involved, only the existence of the lien. The plaintiff appeals, and contends: First, that the judgment ceased to be a lien on the death of Emeline Wallace, the judgment debtor; second, that the presentation of the claim against her estate destroyed the lien, if any existed.

1. Is the lien released by the death of the judgment debtor? The burden is on the appellant to overcome the express provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 671: "The lien continues for five years, unless the enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by the execution of a sufficient undertaking as provided in this Code, in which case the lien of the judgment and any lien by virtue of an attachment that has been issued and levied in the action ceases." But other sections of the Code confirm, rather than negative, the continuance of the lien after the death of the debtor. Id. § 669, in making provision for the entry of a judgment, says: "If a party die after a verdict or decision upon any issue of fact, and before judgment, the court may nevertheless render judgment thereon. Such judgment is not a lien upon the real property of the deceased party, but is payable in the course of administration on his estate." And in the title devoted to estates of deceased persons the same provision is re-enacted. Id. § 1506. It is impossible to resist the effect of this express provision as implying that the judgment in other cases is a lien. If every judgment ceased to be a lien upon the death of a debtor, why make special provision that this judgment, rendered upon a decision made before the death, should not be a lien? There is also an apparent recognition of the continuing lien of judgments in section 1643, Id. In that section, in making provision for the payment of debts, there is given to "judgments rendered against the decedent in his lifetime" the same preference against the general assets which is given to mortgages against the particular property covered by the lien of the mortgage. The payment of judgments "in the order of their dates" is the enforcement of their liens. And, what is more persuasive still, to the same end is the following provision of section 1505: "A judgment creditor, having a judgment which was rendered against the testator or intestate in his lifetime, may redeem any real estate of the decedent from any sale under foreclosure or execution in like manner and with like effect as if the judgment debtor were still living." This provision, read in connection with the definition of a redemptioner (Id. § 701, subd. 2), is a recognition of the existence of the posthumous judgment lien. It might be argued that such a provision is unnecessary if the continuance of the judgment lien were an admitted and recognized fact. But the provision is a part of the section which provides that no execution shall issue upon the ordinary money judgment, but that the judgment must be presented as a claim against the estate; and then, as if to give assurance that the judgment loses no other attribute, comes this provision that the right to make redemption (to which the existence of a lien is essential) remains unimpaired. The concurrent provisions of the general practice and of the probate procedure seem to leave no doubt of the intention of the Code not to extinguish the lien upon the death of the debtor. The only apparent uncertainty arises from the fact that the judgment is required to be paid by the executor or administrator in the course of administration, and is not enforceable by execution. But this provision is not inconsistent with the continuance of the lien; and within the provision itself lies, as we have seen, a quasi recognition of the lien in ranking it with the recognized lien of the mortgage. To look at the consequences of any other conclusion than the above is to find additional confirmation for that conclusion. If the judgment debtor could transfer his property, and then die, leaving to his creditor the barren remedy of a claim against a depleted estate, judgment liens, which have been so much favored by the enactment of 1895, would lose nearly all their value. A judgment lien has always been regarded as the highest form of security to a creditor. But if its vitality is to depend upon the life of the debtor, whose death could thus be turned to profit, the judgment security must be remodeled. As an argument against the existence of a lien, the appellant invokes the alleged absence of any provision for its enforcement, insisting that it is not embraced within the intent of section 1500. The construction of that section is not involved in this appeal, nor is the method of enforcement. But the continuance of the lien is too clearly within the intent of the other sections reviewed to be affected, in any aspect of this question, by this negative argument of the appellant.

2. Do the presentation and allowance of the judgment as a claim against the estate destroy its lien? This question is substantially answered by the above, especially by the strong implication of section 1506. Every judgment must be presented as a claim. If the presentation and allowance destroy the lien of the judgment, why does section 1506 make provision that judgments rendered after the death shall not be liens? The necessity of presentation applies to judgments rendered before as well as after the death. If the presentation is to destroy all liens, why say industriously in either case that there is no lien? The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the judgment is merged in the allowance of the claim, and therefore its lien destroyed. He cites the familiar cases which have held that for some purposes—such as bearing interest—the allowance of a claim is equivalent to a judgment, and from that contends that one judgment is merged in the other. The argument is not technically correct, for the allowance of a claim is not in any true sense a judgment. The first case cited by appellant is In re Glenn's Estate, 74 Cal. 568, 16 Pac. 396. That case refers to and cites "numerous decisions which hold that for some purposes the allowance of a claim is a judgment," admits that "the allowance is not conclusive upon the heirs," and cites Magraw v. McGlynn, 26 Cal. 420, to the effect that "claims so allowed and approved pass into judgments of a qualified character only." In the next case cited by appellant—Walkerly v. Bacon, 85 Cal. 140, 24 Pac. 638—a claim was allowed for only half of the amount for which it was presented. The court below held that the acceptance by the plaintiff of the partial allowance of the claim prevented his recovery of the balance. This might have given countenance to appellant's theory that the allowance had the effect of a judgment in which the claim was merged. But on appeal the ruling of the court was reversed. In no sound or reasonable sense could it be held that under our probate procedure there is such a merger of the judgment in the allowed claim as would destroy the lien of the judgment. That would make the creditor's security retrograde, rather than advance, by the merger. The essential idea of the merger is a benefit to the creditor, to give him a stronger and better position. The usual examples of merger are the absorption of a lesser estate in a larger one, and, as applied to demands, the absorption of the lower security in the higher,—a promissory note, for instance, in a judgment. This original idea of the merger was at first rigidly adhered to, and many courts refused to recognize the merger between securities of equal degree. On that account one judgment was held not to be merged in another judgment based upon it. But many later cases have held that, where one judgment is the cause of action on which another judgment is based, the first judgment is merged in the second, upon the ground that it would harass the defendant unnecessarily to allow two judgments to stand against him with the same remedies; that is, as has been said, would be to injure the defendant without benefit to the plaintiff. It has been held, however, that this merger would not be allowed to have the effect of extinguishing the lien of the first judgment when it is necessary to preserve priorities. Hay v. Railroad Co., 20 Fed. 15. It is plain that none of the grounds upon which one judgment has been held to be merged in another apply to the case of the allowance of a claim under our probate procedure. A case in very close analogy to the present one is Hardin v. Melton, 28 S. C. 38, 4 S. E. 805, and 9 S. E. 423. In that case Mrs. Wright, a judgment creditor, had presented her judgment to the administrator of the estate of the debtor upon a call made by him for the creditors to establish their demands. Other junior judgments, sufficient, with the judgment of Mrs. Wright, to exhaust the assets of the estate, were presented to the administrator. After this presentation, Mrs. Wright caused execution to be levied upon property which had been owned by the judgment debtor at the time of the entry of the judgment, but which, as in this case, had been afterwards sold by him subject to the lien of the judgment. The court says: "The respondent contends, secondly, that if the judgment ever had lien it was lost when it was established against the estate of the deceased debtor under the call for creditors by the doctrine of merger. It may be true, when a judgment creditor comes in under such a call, that his lien on the assets being administered, the proceeds of property over which he may have a lien or otherwise, may be regarded as abandoned, but he is compensated by being entitled to be paid according to the date of his judgment, and therefore is no way injured. But to say that his lien over all of the property of the debtor, real and personal, whether the subject of administration or not, is also lost, is a startling proposition, and one which we think is without support in the decided cases." An injunction at the suit of the purchaser to restrain the sale by Mrs.

Wright under her judgment was dissolved. The circumstances of the present case are the reductio ad absurdum of the appellant's argument of her contention that the presentation of a judgment to the estate of the judgment debtor, who has conveyed the property in his lifetime, and whose estate is not shown to have any other asset, destroys, under the guise of the equitable doctrine of merger, the only security which the creditor had for his debt. I advise that the judgment be affirmed.

BUTLER et al. v. ESTRELLA RAISIN VINEYARD CO. et al. (S. F. 830.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 12, 1899.)

VERDICT—JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS—REPLEVIN—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. Where there were two defendants, and they sought no affirmative relief, a verdict for "the defendant" supports a judgment that plaintiffs take nothing, and that defendants (naming them) recover of plaintiffs their costs.

2. The issue being whether goods were sold to A. on B.'s credit, or sold to B., and by his order delivered to A., the seller's books showing they were shipped to A., and charged to B., were not competent; the bookkeeper who made the entry having no knowledge of the facts, and the one directing the form of the entry being accessible.

3. Requested instructions substantially covered by the court's charge were properly refused.

4. In replevin, where the right to recover is predicated on plaintiff's purchase of the goods and delivery to defendant, a charge is erroneous which places on defendant the burden of showing that he purchased the goods.

5. Where an answer in replevin denied that plaintiff ever owned the property, and alleged that defendant bought it at a certain date, the evidence of the seller is not "newly-discovered evidence" for plaintiff, warranting a new trial, on the ground that plaintiff was "unadvised as to what contention defendant would make," he knowing who the seller was.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Action by A. B. Butler and William Forsyth, co-partners under the name and style of the Raisin Growers' Packing Association, against the Estrella Raisin Vineyard Company and G. W. Taft. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. L. Cory, for appellants. H. H. Welsh and Geo. E. Church, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. Action in claim and delivery to recover possession of 14,979 raisin trays, or their value, alleged to be $1,500. A jury trial was had, and a verdict returned for defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal from the judgment entered thereon, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The business of the plaintiffs is indicated by the name or style of the co-partnership.

The Estrella Raisin Vineyard Company is a corporation engaged in the cultivation of raisin grapes, and defendant Taft is its superintendent and manager. In 1894 the plaintiffs advanced money to the vineyard company on its crop, to be reimbursed out of the proceeds when sold by the plaintiffs. The vineyard company had 10,000 trays, and it was estimated that it would require 15,000 more to handle the crop. The claim on the part of the defendants was, in effect, that they applied to the Sanger Lumber Company for the purchase of the material for 15,000 trays, that a price was agreed upon, but the lumber company refused to sell unless defendants would give security for the purchase price, payable December 1st; that plaintiffs consented to stand as sureties for the payment of the material, and the lumber company shipped the material to defendants, at the vineyard, where they manufactured the trays.

Plaintiffs claimed that they purchased the trays from the lumber company; that they were to be used by the vineyard company, but to remain the property of the plaintiffs until paid for out of the proceeds of the crop. Appellants rely, for reversal, upon four points, which will be considered in their order.

1. That the verdict was uncertain and informal, and could not form a basis for the judgment. There were two defendants,—the vineyard company and G. W. Taft. The verdict was: "We, the jury, find for the defendant." The questions at issue were whether the plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of the trays. No affirmative relief was sought by the defendants. The judgment was that plaintiffs take nothing, and that said defendants (naming them) recover from the plaintiffs their costs. The precise question here made was decided adversely to appellants' contention in Willard v. Archer, 63 Cal. 33. See, also, Daft v. Drew, 40 Ill. App. 266; Exploring Co. v. Painter, 1 Ind. App. 587, 28 N. E. 113; Fries v. Mack, 33 Ohio St. 52.

2. It is contended that the court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiffs to introduce in evidence the trade books of the Sanger Lumber Company, showing the account of the sale of the trays. The entries offered in evidence show that the trays were charged to the plaintiffs and shipped to the defendants. The witness by whom the entries were made testified that he made the entries by direction of the shipping clerk, and in accordance with instructions from Mr. Smith, the manager of the lumber company. These entries were properly excluded. Upon their face they showed only that the trays had been shipped to one party and charged to another. This, upon its face, was consistent with a sale to defendants, to be paid for by plaintiffs out of the proceeds of defendants' crop of raisins. The witness who made the entries had no knowledge of the facts. True, he was instructed by the manager to keep the account in that way. But why? He could not be permitted to testify that the manager said he sold the trays to plaintiffs. That would be hearsay; and, if so, any inference that might be drawn from the instruction to keep the account in a particular way must also be inadmissible. Smith, the manager, who made the sale, would be competent to testify to the facts of the transaction; and the court could then instruct the jury whether those facts constituted a sale to the one party or the other. Our conclusion upon this point is directly sustained by the case of Watrous v. Cunningham, 65 Cal. 410, 4 Pac. 408. In Greenleaf on Evidence it is said books of account are admissible when the nature of the subject is such as not to render better evidence attainable. In Kerns v. McKean, 76 Cal. 89, 18 Pac. 124, it was said: "The offer of the book was an attempt to establish a negative, favorable to the cause of the plaintiff, by affirmative declarations of a third person, when it appears such third person was within the jurisdiction and actually present at the trial."

3. It is claimed the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions requested on behalf of the plaintiffs. Three of these instructions were refused. All that was material in the fourteenth and sixteenth was covered by the second and third instructions given at plaintiffs' request. The fifteenth was properly refused because it placed upon the defendants the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that the trays were purchased by them.

4. It is further contended by appellants that the court erred in not granting their motion for a new trial "on the ground of newly-discovered evidence." The witness by whom the alleged newly-discovered evidence could be given is Mr. Smith, the manager of the lumber company that furnished the trays, and by whom the sale was made, as shown by the testimony of the plaintiffs. If, as they testified, they purchased the trays from Mr. Smith, as the manager of the lumber company, they certainly knew that he had personal knowledge of the transaction. The real question presented, however, is somewhat different. Mr. Smith was not subpoenaed as a witness, nor even notified that his presence at the trial was desired. At the conclusion of the defendants' evidence, plaintiffs informed the court that they desired to secure the testimony of Mr. Smith, who was then in San Francisco, but was expected to return that night, and asked a continuance until the next day; and that request was granted. He did not return, and the trial proceeded. Upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial, the affidavit of Mr. Smith was read, together with an affidavit made by one of the plaintiffs to the effect that plaintiffs knew of their own knowledge that the purchase had been made of the trays from the lumber company through Smith as its general manager, but that, until the opening of defendants' case, plaintiffs were "unadvised as to what contention defendants would make as to their title or right to the possession of the trays, or what their evidence would be." The answer of defendants was full notice of their claim. It denied that plaintiffs were or ever had been the owners of the trays; and, for a separate defense, alleged that the vineyard company "bought the trays" in September, 1894. It was not newly-discovered evidence, nor was any diligence shown to procure it. It is not necessary to comment upon the contents of the affidavit of Mr. Smith, nor upon the counter affidavits filed by defendants as to contradictory statements made by the proposed witness. Even if the court had not considered those affidavits, its refusal to grant a new trial upon the ground last considered was right.

LABOURDETTE v. LABOURDETTE. (S. F. 1,424.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 13, 1899.)

APPEAL—FINDINGS—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the findings were that the allegations of the complaint were "not true, and they were not corroborated by plaintiff," they cannot be set aside on appeal by a showing that they were corroborated; the evidence being conflicting, and sufficient to sustain the findings that they were untrue.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Theresa Labourdette against Joseph Labourdette. There was a decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. J. Herrin, for appellant. P. A. Bergerot, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action for divorce. The grounds alleged are cruelty and failure to provide the common necessities of life. The court found the facts in defendant's favor, and rendered judgment denying a divorce. The findings respond to the charges of the complaint in the manner following: "It is not true, and the allegation of such fact has not been corroborated by the plaintiff, or by any competent evidence adduced by the plaintiff, that defendant stated in the presence of third parties, or at all, that plaintiff was a 'street walker,'" and so forth; negativating in like manner each material averment of wrong contained in the complaint. The argument for appellant is directed mainly to showing that there was some corroboration of her own testimony by other witnesses at the trial. While this is one question, it is not the sole or the most serious question which confronts the plaintiff on appeal. The court found not only that plaintiff's allegations failed of corroboration, but that they are untrue; and it is unnecessary to inquire how far her testimony was corroborated, for the evidence upon all the material issues was conflicting, and quite enough appears in the record to sustain the findings.

The judgment should be affirmed.

WOLFE v. TITUS et al. (S. F. 1,047.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 13, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—INJUNCTION—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

A complaint to cancel a note, and restrain foreclosure of a mortgage securing it, stated that the note was given to defendant in consideration of his purchasing for complainant the mortgaged premises under foreclosure of former mortgages, but that defendant, to defraud complainant and acquire the title free from his claim, purchased the mortgages before sale, foreclosed them, bought the property, and took a sheriff's deed thereto, and thereafter proceeded to foreclose the mortgage sought to be restrained. Held not to state a cause of action, since it showed that defendant still recognized the property as belonging to complainant, and did not show that complainant had been damaged; and that any relief to which complainant was entitled could be secured in the foreclosure proceedings.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by George H. Wolfe against F. F. Titus, substituted for Daniel Titus, deceased, and others, to restrain foreclosure of a mortgage. There was a decree for defendants, and complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Sears, for appellant. Daniel Titus, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. The court below sustained the demurrers of the defendants, without leave to amend the complaint, and thereupon entered judgment dismissing the action, with costs to the defendants. From this judgment, the appeal is taken. Appellant's counsel states the object of the action as follows: "This action was commenced for the cancellation of an alleged promissory note in the principal sum of six thousand ($6,000) dollars, and mortgages to secure the same upon certain real estate, described in the complaint; and for an injunction against an action pending for the foreclosure of the note and mortgage at the commencement of the action; also to restrain the enforcement of certain deficiency judgments docketed in favor of respondents and against appellant in a prior action of foreclosure of the premises, pending at the time of the making of the note and mortgage for six thousand dollars, to wit, October 1, 1891, and commenced by the Mutual Savings Fund & Building Association against this appellant and others; and to enjoin all further proceedings upon the sheriff's deed in the last-named action; for a reconveyance of the premises; and general equitable relief." The complaint alleges: That, on or about the 1st day of October, 1891, plaintiff made and delivered to said defendant, Samuel Sussman, his certain promissory note, in the words and figures following, to wit: "$6,000. San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 1, 1891. On or before October 1, 1892, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of Samuel Sussman, in San Francisco, six thousand ($6,000) dollars, in gold coin of the United States, with interest from date at the rate of one per cent. per month until paid, payable monthly, in like gold coin. George H. Wolfe." That at that time plaintiff and said defendant Daniel Titus made and executed to the said defendant Samuel Sussman a deed of conveyance, in due form, of a certain lot and parcel of land in the city and county of San Francisco (describing the same). "That, on or about said first day of October, 1891, said defendant, Samuel Sussman, made and delivered to plaintiff his certain memorandum of agreement in writing; and it was then and thereby understood and agreed by and between plaintiff and said defendant Sussman that said deed of conveyance, though absolute in form, was made as security for the payment of said promissory note, and interest thereon, according to the tenor thereof. That no part of said sum of six thousand dollars, named in said promissory note, was ever paid over or received by plaintiff; but, by the terms and conditions of said agreement, said sum of six thousand dollars was retained in trust for plaintiff by defendant herein, Samuel Sussman, and was to be used and applied by said Sussman in the purchase of the above-described premises at a foreclosure sale thereof, to be had in an action then pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, California, wherein the Mutual Savings Fund & Building Association, a corporation, was plaintiff, and this plaintiff and other persons therein named were defendants; and said Sussman was to buy in said premises at the foreclosure sale thereof, at the expense of and for plaintiff, and the amount paid therefor was to be paid out of said fund of six thousand ($6,000) dollars. That the costs of said foreclosure and sale, attorney's fees therein, street assessments, taxes, and insurance, and any and all other expenses incurred in the premises, at the time of said purchase, were likewise to be paid out of said trust fund of six thousand ($6,000) dollars. That said action was brought to foreclose a certain mortgage on the premises above described, and to obtain judgment for the debt thereby secured and owing by plaintiff herein to said Mutual Savings Fund & Building Association, and to subject to the lien of said mortgage certain other mortgage liens subsequently executed by plaintiff herein to certain persons named and made defendants in said action, to wit" (giving the names of said parties, including the defendant Daniel Titus, but without giving the amounts of their said mortgage liens). The complaint then proceeds to state: That the defendants Titus and Sussman, for the purpose of acquiring title to the premises clear of all claims or interest of the plaintiff, and thereby to defraud him, gained control and purchased all the mortgages held by both plaintiff and defendants in said action, and the debts thereby secured, and thereafter obtained judgment and procured a decree of foreclosure and order of sale to be made, foreclosing all of said mortgages and directing the sale of said premises. Thereafter said premises were sold by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, on said foreclosure, to said defendant Samuel Sussman; and, there being no redemption therefrom, a sheriff's deed was issued to him, and recorded on the 8th day of July, 1892, in the office of the county recorder of the city and county of San Francisco. That said Sussman paid nothing in consideration of his pretended purchase of said property at said sheriff's sale, but that a portion of said fund of $6,000 was used to purchase all the said mortgages and debts thereby secured, set up in said suit, and to pay the expenses and costs of said proceedings. And it is alleged, upon information and belief, that the remaining portion of said fund of $6,000 has been kept and retained by said defendants for their own use and benefit, and that the amount thereof so retained exceeds the sum of $1,000. And it is charged that there was a conspiracy between the defendants Sussman and Titus, and fraud on their part in the transactions stated, and that the said defendant Sussman, by virtue of the purchase and foreclosure referred to, claims title to the premises, as against the plaintiff. It is also alleged that, "on or about the 9th day of July, 1896, Samuel Sussman, the defendant herein, commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to foreclose the said mortgage of October 1, 1891, and to recover the amount of said note, of even date, with accrued interest and alleged expenditures; that said action is now pending and at issue." Simmered down, the substance of the complaint is that, instead of using the trust fund mentioned in the note and mortgage to Sussman of October 1, 1891, to buy in the property at sheriff's sale under the foreclosure proceeding then pending, the defendants Sussman and Titus bought up those claims before the same were reduced to judgment; and that, instead of using the whole $6,000, plaintiff avers that not quite $5,000 was used.

On well-established principles of law, the appellant must fail. It is elementary that no one may go into court without having some right to enforce or wrong to redress; and that facts must be stated showing such right or wrong to exist; and that mere epithets, however profusely used or vehemently expressed, will not supply the place of facts in a pleading. It is not averred in the complaint that the plaintiff has been damaged in the least, nor are there facts stated from which such a conclusion could be drawn. According to the plaintiff's own admission, the defendant Sussman has paid out about $5,000 in removing mortgages and incumbrances upon the property; and the very fact that he brings the suit now pending to foreclose his mortgage or trust deed of October 1, 1891, shows that he treats the property as still belonging to the plaintiff, subject to his claim for moneys advanced under the agreement set out in the complaint. In the face of these facts shown by the complaint, the plaintiff, without paying or offering to pay any of the money advanced for his benefit by defendant Sussman, asks that the promissory note and mortgage made and executed October 1, 1891, be delivered up and canceled, and that the defendant execute a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of said premises. As stated in Vineyard Co. v. Tuohy, 107 Cal. 243, 40 Pac. 386: "The first suggestion which presents itself to the mind, upon a perusal of the complaint, is that the plaintiff is seeking equity without doing equity." In that case, the plaintiff had received a conveyance of property of the value of about $36,000, on account of which it had paid $10,000, and given its note and mortgage as security for the balance of the purchase price, and brought an action to have the notes and mortgage canceled, without paying or offering to pay the balance of the purchase price of the property which it had received. See, also, Civ. Code, §§ 1691, 3407; Maddock v. Russell, 109 Cal. 417, 42 Pac. 139. If the plaintiff should be entitled to any relief growing out of the transactions mentioned in the complaint, there is no reason why it could not be amply afforded in the action now pending by defendant Sussman to foreclose the mortgage. The action of Waymire v. Railway Co., 112 Cal. 646, 44 Pac. 1086, is similar to this, and in the opinion of the court there it is observed: "It seems unaccountable that plaintiffs were advised that facts which would entitle them to a judgment nullifying the sale and transfer of the bonds, and perpetually enjoining the further prosecution of the action to foreclose the deed of trust, could not be made available as a defense to the foreclosure action. * * * The corporation was not at liberty to institute an action in another court, nor in the same court, to enjoin further proceedings in the foreclosure action, but was bound to plead the facts alleged in plaintiff's complaint herein by answer, or, if necessary to aid the defense, by cross complaint in the foreclosure action,"—citing Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1371, 1372; High, Inj. § 52; Railway Co. v. Ramsey, 45 N. Y. 637; Graham v. Railroad Co., 118 U. S. 161, 6 Sup. Ct. 1009; Crowley v. Davis, 37 Cal. 268; Judson v. Porter, 51 Cal. 562; Wilson v. Baker, 64 Cal. 475, 2 Pac. 253; Spell. Priv. Corp. § 612. Judgment affirmed.

Penfield and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying a motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Edward M. Selby, for appellant. Richards & Carrier, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to have a trust declared in favor of plaintiff as to certain lots situated in Santa Barbara, and that defendants E. H. and W. H. Penfield convey said lots to plaintiff. They denied the alleged trust, and averred that defendant E. H. Penfield took a conveyance from plaintiff of the lots in question and holds the title in trust, as he alleges it to be. Defendant W. H. Penfield filed a cross complaint asking foreclosure of a deed held by him, as a mortgage, to one of the lots, the subject of the alleged trust. J. C. Gilbert is husband of plaintiff, and is made defendant in the cross complaint. The court, as conclusions of law, found plaintiff not entitled to the relief asked by her; that the legal title to the lots in question is vested in defendant E. H. Penfield, subject to certain trusts set forth in the findings; that defendant W. H. Penfield has a valid, subsisting mortgage on certain of the property, and is entitled to foreclosure thereof; and that the rights of plaintiff and said J. C. Gilbert are subordinate to the lien of said W. H. Penfield. Plaintiff appeals from an order denying her motion for a new trial, but does not appeal from the judgment. The only question presented by counsel for appellant is, does the evidence support the findings?

Plaintiff and defendants, the Penfields, are cousins. Plaintiff came to California in August, 1887, and was then unmarried, and made her home with defendant E. H. Penfield, at Santa Barbara. Upon the recommendation of her cousin, E. H., she purchased certain Santa Barbara city lots in block 80 and in block 147, and a certain other lot she purchased contrary to his advice. E. H. testified, and the court found, that before she made any purchases he verbally promised, as to those made upon his approval, "that he would stand between her and loss, but * * * he received no consideration for or by reason of, and reaped no benefit from, said purchases, or any of them, and had no interest in them." The purchases in block 80 and block 147, recommended by E. H., were made in December, 1887; the lots in block 80 being subject to two mortgages held by one Hassinger, and the lot in block 147 being under mortgage to one Pilcher. On March 27, 1888, plaintiff borrowed $600 on her note, signed also by E. H., to raise money for her own uses, and which was used by her. This note E. H. afterwards paid, and "plaintiff has never repaid him the whole or any part of the sum so paid by him on said note." In 1889 plaintiff paid the Pilcher mortgage, and the spring of 1890 found her the owner of the lots in blocks 80 and 147, subject to the Hassinger mortgages. Payment was pressed by Hassinger, "and, plain-

GILBERT v. PENFIELD et al. (L. A. 447.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 12, 1899.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—TRUSTS—POWER OF TRUSTEE—MORTGAGES.

1. A finding on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

2. Where the grantee in a trust deed was authorized to take up two mortgages, foreclosure of which was threatened, and to hold the property until a favorable time for its sale, and an advantageous sale was not possible, he had implied power to mortgage the property to pay the two mortgages.

3. Where the grantee in a trust deed is authorized to mortgage the premises for the purpose of taking up two overdue mortgages and holding the property until a favorable time for its sale, the giving of a mortgage will not prevent the execution of the trust.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Action by Adah H. Gilbert against E. H.

tiff being unable to meet the indebtedness, the defendant E. H. Penfield offered to take the property from plaintiff for the purpose of handling the indebtedness for her and carrying the property until an advantageous sale could be effected. Accordingly plaintiff conveyed to him all the property described in the complaint upon the following trusts, and no others: To provide for taking up the two Hassinger mortgages, and to hold the property until a favorable time to sell the same should come, at which time he should sell the same, and apply the proceeds of sale first to the payment of the sum due upon the indebtedness represented by the Hassinger mortgages, and to reimburse himself for the payment of the six hundred dollar note, and then to apply the surplus to repaying plaintiff her outlay on said lots, and then to divide any excess between plaintiff and himself." Plaintiff conveyed to E. H., upon the trusts above stated, April 30, 1890; and on the same day E. H. procured his brother, defendant W. H., to purchase the two Hassinger mortgages for the sum of $999, the amount then due thereon. On November 12, 1891, E. H. mortgaged the lots in block 80 to W. H. for the amount of principal and accrued interest of the Hassinger mortgages, and these latter mortgages were satisfied of record. On August 30, 1895, E. H. delivered to W. H. a deed conveying these lots to W. H., which bore date May 1, and was acknowledged May 2, 1895. This deed was intended as a mortgage, and upon its delivery W. H. canceled and surrendered to E. H. the mortgage of November 12, 1891, and the note secured by it. The indebtedness represented by both the mortgage and the deed "is the same indebtedness secured by the two said Hassinger mortgages." There is no finding and no evidence explaining the reason for substituting first the mortgage and next the deed for the Hassinger mortgages held by W. H. But the court finds that E. H. executed these instruments without any intention to defraud plaintiff, and that when he received the deed he (W. H.) had no notice of any rights of plaintiff, except that E. H. held the title upon the trusts as found by the court above stated.

While claiming that the evidence does not support the findings, appellant makes the case really to turn upon the question, had E. H., as trustee, the power to mortgage? The evidence is conflicting in many particulars,—especially as to the trust alleged in the complaint, and the trust as found. There is evidence tending to show that the trust as found by the trial court correctly states the understanding of the parties; and, as the evidence is conflicting, the finding is conclusive upon this court. Turning to the language of the trust, and interpreting it in the light of the then existing circumstances, and the purpose for making the conveyance, we think the trust carried with it the power to remortgage the property to take up the Hassinger mortgages, foreclosure of which was threatened. The court found, on sufficient evidence, that market values had greatly fallen, and sale could not be made to any advantage. The only practical way out of the danger which lay in foreclosure by Hassinger was to find some one who would carry the Hassinger mortgages. It was not of any importance to plaintiff whether the one who came to her relief should do so by taking an assignment of those mortgages, and holding them, or whether he should require a new mortgage to take their place. The Hassinger mortgages were past due, and would in course of time be barred by limitation. The statute had run against the Hassinger notes before this action was brought; and in point of fact W. H. did not ask foreclosure until five years after he took his mortgage, and not then, as he testified, until plaintiff had forced him to it, for his own protection, by this action. The power given by the trust was "to provide for taking up the two Hassinger mortgages, and to hold the property until a favorable time for the sale of the same should come." The evidence was that a sale could at no time, after plaintiff conveyed to E. H., have been made for enough to pay the indebtedness secured to be first paid by it. That this contingency of remortgaging must have been contemplated is, it seems to me, obvious from the clause authorizing E. H. "to provide for taking up the two Hassinger mortgages," followed by the clause, "and to hold the property until a favorable time for the sale," etc. How else could he provide for taking up these mortgages, if the sale of the property was to be postponed indefinitely? It is true, as claimed by appellant, that every act of the trustee not authorized by, or which is in contravention of, the trust, is void; but a trustee has "authority to adopt measures and to do acts which, though not specified in the instrument, are implied in its general directions, and are reasonable and proper means for making it effectual." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1062. I think the power to mortgage is not only clearly implied in the directions given, but that the natural reading of the trust gives the authority. It is not necessary, therefore, to fall back upon the alternative proposition of defendants in support of the decree of foreclosure, to wit, that W. H. was subrogated to the rights of Hassinger, and that the lien of the latter was preserved, although the evidence of the debt was extinguished, and that, even if the new mortgage made by E. H. to W. H. was void, the original or Hassinger mortgages were revived for the protection of W. H., who advanced the money. These are well-recognized and just principles of equity jurisprudence; and, if the exigencies of the case demanded, it might be applied here, but we find no occasion for doing so.

Appellant points out several alleged contradictions in the findings. For example, the court finds that the execution of the trust has not become impossible on account of the conveyance alleged (i. e. the mortgage to W. H.). Another example: The court finds that this conveyance (mortgage) was not fraudulent.

The contention is that, because the conveyance was unauthorized and void, it must be treated as a fraud upon plaintiff's rights, and that, if allowed to be foreclosed, it would make the trust impossible; hence the findings are contradictory of, and inconsistent with, each other. These alleged consequences flow from the erroneous assumption that the mortgage to W. H. was unauthorized. And so of the other assignments of error. They all find their origin in the same unwarranted assumption.

The foregoing disposes of the points made by appellant's brief; and, as we discover no error in the conclusions of the court, it is advised that the order denying the motion for a new trial be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACT—FORECLOSURE OF RIGHTS—DECREE
—ATTORNEYS—RATIFICATION.

1. Assignees of a purchaser, who were made parties to a suit to foreclose all rights under the contract, cannot complain that the privilege given the purchaser, of time in which to perform the contract, did not, in terms, include them, where they did not seek to perform as his assignees.

2. In a suit to foreclose all rights under a land contract, the decree need not order the property to be sold in case the purchaser should not perform the contract within the additional time given him by the decree.

3. Where a purchaser has received the rents and profits, and has defaulted in payment of taxes and rent due from him to the vendor to a greater amount than payments made on the price, he cannot, on a decree foreclosing his rights, recover back the payments on the price.

4. Where a co-defendant in a suit to foreclose a purchaser's rights under a land contract appeared as attorney for all the defendants, the trial judge had a right to presume authority in him to acknowledge, on behalf of all, service of demand of payment, and tender of a deed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county.

Action by the Odd Fellows' Savings Bank against George L. Brander and others. From a decree for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry Thompson, for appellants. Charles L. Tilden, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to foreclose the rights of a vendee under a contract for the purchase and sale of land. Plaintiff had the decree, from which, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

Findings of fact were waived, and the cause was heard upon a "stipulated statement of facts," from which the following appear: "On June 10, 1892, plaintiff and defendant Brander entered into an agreement by which plaintiff agreed to sell, and Brander agreed to purchase, certain twenty-nine thousand acres of land, situated in the county of Sutter, for the sum of fifty thousand dollars, as follows: Five hundred dollars on executing the agreement, twenty-five hundred dollars thirty days from its date, three thousand dollars one year from its date, and the balance (forty-four thousand dollars) two years from date." Brander was given possession, with the right to rents and profits, and was to pay the taxes on the property, and $500 a year as rental, but no interest on the deferred payments of the purchase price. The contract of sale also included certain levee district warrants, to go with the land. Brander made the cash payment of $500, and the 30-day payment of $2,500, and $500 on account of rent, but no more. "Said agreement has not been performed by said Geo. L. Brander, or by any one else in his behalf." "Plaintiff has complied with and performed all the terms and conditions of said contract on its part to be performed, and plaintiff is ready and willing to, and has offered to, perform all the terms of said contract on its part to be performed; and the plaintiff has duly demanded of the defendants that they carry out the terms of said agreement on their part to be performed, and that they pay the balance due under said agreement, but defendants have not made such payments, and have made no payments under said agreement, other than those set forth in the complaint." Plaintiff paid all taxes after the first installment for 1893-94. Brander assigned his interest in the contract to the other defendants. On July 2, 1894, "C. L. Tilden, as attorney for the plaintiff, and in its behalf, served on said defendant Henry Thompson a written demand," directed to each of the defendants, requiring them to comply with the terms of said agreement; "and the said Henry Thompson on said 2d day of July, 1894, as the attorney for said parties [defendants], did admit service of said demand on behalf of all the parties to whom it was addressed, by written indorsement thereon as follows: 'Service of the within demand and notice is hereby admitted on behalf of all the parties to whom it is addressed. [Signed] Henry Thompson, Attorney at Law.'" On February 21, 1895, said Tilden, as attorney for plaintiff, made a tender of deed to the defendants, through said Thompson, in manner similar to the service of notice last above mentioned. As conclusion of law the court found that "Brander should perform his contract within sixty days, or be foreclosed of his rights under the same. The plaintiff's title should be quieted against the other defendants." Decree was entered accordingly.

1. Appellants claim that, as the contract had passed to the defendants other than Brander, the 60-day limitation in which to make payment ought to have run to them, and not to Brander. The promise to pay was by Brander alone. The other defendants assumed no liability to plaintiff, and none was enforceable against them by plaintiff. They were made parties, and, as assignees of Brander, could have fully protected themselves by asking that they be permitted, as Brander's assignees, to bring the money into court, and make payment within the time fixed by the court. They made no such request, and no cause appears, either from the answer or the stipulated facts, entitling them to be treated as principal debtors or vendees. Brander's obligations to plaintiff remained undischarged after his assignment to the other defendants. Civ. Code, § 1457. These latter defendants have no cause for complaint that the 60-day privilege to pay for the property and take a deed did not, in terms, include them. Truebody v. Jacobson, 2 Cal. 269.

2. Appellants contend that the decree should have ordered the property sold in the event of failure to redeem within 60 days, as in the case of a mortgage. Appellants misconceive the purpose of the remedy. The course pursued in this case was in harmony with the well-settled practice in this state in like cases. Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186; Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113, 56 Cal. 466; Fairchild v. Mullan, 90 Cal. 190, 27 Pac. 201; Railroad Co. v. Allen, 112 Cal. 455, 44 Pac. 796; Rayfield v. Van Meter, 120 Cal. 416, 52 Pac. 666.

3. It is objected that the decree gives plaintiff the land, and allows it to retain the money paid on account of the price. This was not error. It is well settled that "a party who has advanced money or done an act in part performance of the agreement, and then stops short and refuses to proceed to its ultimate conclusion, the other party being ready and willing to proceed and fulfill all his stipulations according to the contract, will not be permitted to recover back what has thus been advanced or done." Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497; Ketchum v. Everston, 13 Johns. 358; Keller v. Lewis, supra. This is true, whether or not the contract provides for a forfeiture of payments made in case of the vendee's failure to complete the purchase. Glock v. Colony Co. (Cal.) 55 Pac. 713. The present case is a striking illustration of the wisdom and justice lying at the root of this rule. Brander and his assigns have been in possession of this land since the purchase, presumably receiving its rents and profits, and have not only failed to make the payments due on the principal debt, but have defaulted in payment of rent and taxes to an amount greater than the payments made on the price. The contention of defendants has no merit. The law will not permit defendants to profit peculiarly by their own default.

4. Finally, it is urged that there was no tender of deed and demand of payment made by plaintiff. The stipulated facts clearly show both tender and demand. Mr. Thompson, who acknowledged service of these notices, and entered into the stipulation of facts on behalf of defendants, is the same Mr. Thompson who appeared in the action as a co-defendant, and as attorney for all of them. We think the trial judge had the right to presume authority in Mr. Thompson to acknowledge service, and, furthermore, to hold that his stipulation as to the facts was a ratification of his previous acts. It is true that the answer denies a tender and demand, but the stipulation was entered into long after the answer was filed, and admits that in this particular the allegations of the complaint are true, and that the allegations of the answer are untrue. We discover no error, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; PRINGLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

MEHERIN v. SAUNDERS, Constable, et al.
(S. F. 1,073.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 13, 1899.)

INSOLVENCY—CONSTABLE'S SALE—ENFORCEMENT OF BID—SET-OFF—ESTOPPEL.

1. In an action by an assignee in insolvency to enforce the payment of an amount bid for property of the insolvent at a constable's sale, defendant may set off his claim for money borrowed from him by the insolvent, which had been filed and proved against the insolvent's estate.

2. The fact that a creditor of an insolvent had filed and proved his claim against the estate, and accepted a dividend based on the entire amount, does not estop him from setting off such claim, in an action by the assignee to enforce payment of a bid for property of the insolvent sold at constable's sale.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Mark Meherin, assignee in insolvency of the California Steamship Company, against J. N. Saunders, constable, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Thomas Ambrose appeals. Reversed.

A. Morganthal, for appellant. Grant Jackson and Mullany, Grant & Cushing, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant Ambrose bid $10,000 for a piece of realty at an execution sale held by a constable. He paid the constable $855 in money, and gave his check for the balance of the purchase price. The money paid covered the judgment and costs, and the execution was returned satisfied. Thereafter payment of the check was stopped by Ambrose, and no more money was ever received under the sale. Upon this state of facts the judgment debtor's assignee in insolvency, the plaintiff herein, brought an action against the constable and his bondsmen, and recovered damages to the amount of the balance of the purchase price against the constable, and to the amount of $1,000 against his bondsmen. Upon appeal that judgment was affirmed by this court. Meherin v. Saunders, 110 Cal. 463, 42 Pac. 966. Subsequent to the foregoing proceedings the assignee in insolvency brought this action against the constable and the defendant Ambrose, purchaser at the sale, for the balance of the purchase price. The constable defaulted, and Ambrose now appeals from the judgment rendered against him, and also from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

There are a great number of interesting questions raised by the appeal in this case, but we refrain from discussing them, in view of another proposition urged, the disposition of which seems to finally end this litigation. By the answer of defendant Ambrose, he alleged that the insolvent debtor, represented by the plaintiff in this action, was, at the time of the constable's sale, and also at the time this action was brought, indebted to him in the sum of $80,000, and the evidence at the trial admits the existence of a large indebtedness. In substance, the trial court found that plaintiff's insolvent was indebted to defendant at the time of the constable's sale, to wit, October 24, 1891, in the sum of $28,604, and that upon January 5, 1892, defendant proved, presented, and filed his verified claim as a creditor of the insolvent's estate for said indebtedness. The court also found that subsequently defendant claimed and received a dividend based upon the amount of such indebtedness from the plaintiff as assignee in insolvency of the judgment debtor. The court then made the following finding: "That the said sum for and on which the said California Steamship Company was on the said 24th day of October, 1891, indebted to the defendant Thomas Ambrose, and the said balance of said purchase price of and for said real property, so bid in and purchased by said defendant Thomas Ambrose at said constable's sale, on said 24th day of October, 1891, was not and are not mutual debts and credits or mutual debts or credits, and defendant Thomas Ambrose did not become, or intend to become, a debtor of said California Steamship Company by reason of such purchase by him of said property, or for any part of the purchase price at which he purchased the same; that the said defendant Thomas Ambrose, when he presented, proved, and filed his said claim against said insolvent corporation, said California Steamship Company, on or about the 6th day of January, 1892, did not claim that the balance of his said bid, to wit, said sum of nine thousand one hundred and forty-five dollars, for and on account of which this action was brought, or any part thereof, was a credit upon the said sum of $28,604.47, so owing by said California Steamship Company to him, and he did not allow or give or permit any credit for said purchase price so bid by him for said property, or for any part thereof." As to that portion of this finding bearing upon defendant's intention to become a debtor of the judgment debtor, we do not see its materiality. We are unable to see how it affects this case, even if it be conceded that Ambrose did not intend to become a debtor of the judgment debtor when he made the purchase at the constable's sale. Again, it is difficult to see how any assistance to support the judgment in this case is given by a finding which declares as a fact that Ambrose did not become, nor intend to become, the debtor of the judgment debtor when he made the purchase. If he did not become a debtor of the plaintiff's insolvent by his failure to pay the purchase price, we are at a loss to see how the plaintiff can support the action.

By the findings quoted, the court declares that these cross demands are not mutual debts and credits or mutual debts or credits. As to the nature of the plaintiff's cause of action, his counsel stated, during the progress of the trial, to the following effect: Counsel for plaintiff: "You are mistaken in that. We do not claim it is a debt. It is money that he owes, in the sense of having purchased property, and owes the purchase price. We have to allege that money is owing from him, but it is not in the sense of a debt. He got something for a given sum of money. He did not pay that money. That is no debt. There was no credit given." Counsel for Ambrose: "You admit, then, that Ambrose does not owe anything to the California Steamship Company?" Counsel for plaintiff: "He owes us the purchase price for certain land." We are at a loss to understand the fine distinction here attempted to be drawn by plaintiff's counsel as between a debt and an amount due from defendant as the balance of the purchase price of a tract of land; yet there is nothing in a name, and, whatever name may be given to this claim by plaintiff, upon his own statement his action is one arising upon contract, and we see no reason in law why defendant's claim, which, as disclosed by the evidence, was for borrowed money, could not be offset against it. In his brief plaintiff's counsel says but little upon this question, but intimates that defendant is estopped by his conduct to rely upon a counterclaim. We see nothing in defendant's conduct in any way creating an estoppel against him. The fact that he proved his claim against the insolvent's estate for the entire indebtedness, and that he accepted a dividend based upon the entire amount of that indebtedness, does not create an estoppel. Indeed, appellant by his answer denied that he owed this money, denied that he even purchased the property, and denied that he agreed to pay $10,000 for it. But the court decided against him, and it knew best. He was mistaken as to the fact in this regard, and, that fact being established contrary to his views, he then had the right to defend himself behind his second line of intrenchments, and claim an offset against the balance of the purchase price. By his answer and his evidence, he had the right, under the law, to defend himself behind as many different lines of intrenchments as he saw fit. As to the legal status of a case in which the constable was suing this defendant for a balance of the purchase price, we are not concerned. Here the plaintiff stands in the shoes of the judgment debtor. His position is no better and no worse. And as to the judgment debtor seeking to recover $9,000 as balance due from defendant upon the purchase price of a tract of land, when at the same time that debtor owes the defendant $28,000 for borrowed money, the law will not sanction such a result. The findings are not sufficiently full to justify an order that judgment be entered for defendant in the trial court, but for the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

McKAY v. NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO.
(S. F. 949.)<sup>1</sup>

(Supreme Court of California. April 13, 1899.)

LIFE INSURANCE—FRAUD OF AGENT—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—RECOVERY OF PREMIUM.

1. A complaint alleged that the local agent of defendant insurance company represented to plaintiff that on the payment of a specified annual premium the company would issue to him a life policy which would pay $5,000 in case he survived for 10 years, and that in reliance thereon plaintiff made a written application, which was prepared by the agent, and read to plaintiff, with the assurance that it was properly drawn, and "all right," which induced plaintiff to sign it; that the agent then knew his representations to be false and fraudulent; that plaintiff paid the first premium, and in due time received a policy which called for $2,520 on the expiration of the 10 years, whereupon he repudiated the contract, and sues to recover the first premium paid. The application was involved in its terms, and could not be readily understood by a person like plaintiff, who was not expert in such matters. Held, that the complaint is not subject to a general demurrer on the ground that it is insufficient to show fraud on the part of the agent.

2. An averment that a person knew his promises to be false and fraudulent necessarily implies that they were in fact false and fraudulent, and that he had no intention to perform them.

3. A policy provided that statements or promises by the agent should not affect the rights of the company unless reduced to writing, and presented in the application. The agent falsely and fraudulently represented to the applicant for insurance that the payment of a specified annual premium would entitle him to a $5,000 policy, payable in 10 years. The policy received called for $2,520 at the end of the 10 years, whereupon the insured repudiated the contract. Held, that the insured could recover from the company the first premium paid.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Alexander McKay against the New York Life Insurance Company. From a judgment entered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. J. Herrin, for appellant. Page, McCutchen & Eells, for respondent.

BRITT, C. In this cause the defendant demurred to plaintiff's amended complaint for alleged want of facts to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and judgment passed in defendant's favor. It is, in substance, alleged in said complaint, among other things, that one Mouser, an agent of the defendant insurance company, represented to plaintiff that, in consideration of the payment by the latter of a specified annual premium, the company would issue to him a policy of life insurance in such form as to entitle him (among other benefits) to receive from defendant the sum of $5,000 in case he survived a period of 10 years; that plaintiff believed such representations to be true, and in reliance thereon, and at the instance of said agent, made a written application to defendant for a policy; that the agent prepared such application, and read it to plaintiff, and assured him that it was properly drawn, and "all right"; that plaintiff, induced by said statements and conduct of said agent, signed such application without reading it; that the agent then knew his said representations to be false and fraudulent; that plaintiff paid the first annual premium, and in due time received a policy from defendant, which, upon examination, he discovered would entitle him upon the expiration of the 10-year period to receive the sum of $2,520 only; that thereupon he returned the policy to defendant, "and repudiated and rescinded the contract of insurance therein set forth." He prays judgment for the amount of the first premium paid as aforesaid.

Among the stipulations contained in said application for a policy (a copy of which is annexed to the complaint as an exhibit) was the following: "Inasmuch as only the officers at the home office of the company in the city of New York have authority to determine whether or not a policy shall issue on any application, and as they act on the written answers referred to, no statements, promises, or information made or given by or to the person soliciting or taking this application for a policy * * * shall be binding on the company, or in any manner affect its rights, unless such statements, promises, or information be reduced to writing, and be presented to the officers of the company, at the home office, in this application." Plaintiff does not claim that the policy issued to him was not such a policy as was required by the terms of said written application.

Defendant contends, first, that the averments of the complaint are insufficient to make a case of fraud on the part of Mouser, the agent. We are disposed to concede that, as against a demurrer for uncertainty, the complaint could not stand; but the demurrer is general,—merely that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action,—and this objection, it has often been held, cannot prevail when the essential facts substantially appear, although some of them are stated defectively. See Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 108 Cal. 294, 41 Pac. 410. The particular of the complaint concerning which we have had most doubt is whether it shows that plaintiff did not, without his own fault, understand the terms and effect of the application signed by him. The paper, however, was itself such that its full import would not be understood readily by one not expert in matters of insurance. It is shown by the application that plaintiff's business is unconnected with such matters, and it seems probable that, if he had employed his entire time in perusing the document from the date of his signature thereto until the present, he could scarcely have ascertained from its terms alone whether it varied materially from the oral representations of Mouser. Considering the character of the document in connection with the averments of the complaint regarding Mouser's assurances that the application was properly drawn, and was "all right," etc.,—from which plaintiff would naturally suppose that it was so drawn as to procure the policy Mouser had promised,—we conclude that the complaint does show sufficiently that plaintiff signed the paper misconceiving its meaning, and without material fault on his own part. In this aspect, therefore, the case is within the rule of Maxson v. Llewelyn (Cal.) 54 Pac. 733. Similarly, the averment that Mouser knew his promises to be false and fraudulent carries necessarily the implication that they were in fact false and fraudulent, and also that he had no intention that they should be performed. These inferences, questioned by the general demurrer only, must be imputed to the complaint for verity in like manner as if they had been directly charged. See, besides cases cited above, Hays v. Glosster, 88 Cal. 560, 565, 26 Pac. 367; Langley v. Rodriguez (Cal.) 55 Pac. 406.

Secondly, it is contended that the fraud of Mouser, if sufficiently alleged, does yet not attach to the defendant. This is asserted on the strength of the provision of the application that statements and promises of the solicitor shall not affect the rights of the company unless reduced to writing, and presented in the application. We do not understand that this provision operates to confer upon the company the right to retain money received in consequence of fraud practiced by its agent, after it has knowledge of the fraud. How could it retain money under such circumstances without becoming party to the fraud? Upon the case stated there was never a free consent to the apparent contract. The agent practiced fraud on both insurer and insured, and justice requires that the contract be held voidable at the instance of either party, if injured thereby. And such we conceive to be the law deducible from the decisions of this court as well as others. Maxson v. Llewelyn (Cal.) 54 Pac. 733; Jurgens v. Insurance Co., 114 Cal. 161, 45 Pac. 1054, and 46 Pac. 386; Insurance Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 6 Sup. Ct. 837; Sawyer v. Insurance Co., 42 Fed. 33-35; Selby v. Insurance Co., 67 Fed. 490; Loehner v. Insurance Co., 17 Mo. 256; Fisher v. Insurance Co., 160 Mass. 386, 35 N. E. 849; Id., 162 Mass. 236, 38 N. E. 503. The judgment should be reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

KLOKKE v. ESCAILLER et al. (L. A. 589.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 14, 1899.)

MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE — ATTORNEY'S FEES — FINDINGS OF COURT—REVERSIBLE ERROR.

1. Under a mortgage stipulating that, on foreclosure, mortgagee may include counsel fees, together with all payments made by mortgagee for certain purposes, all of which payments shall be deemed to be secured by the mortgage, mortgagee cannot have such counsel fees included in the mortgage lien, since it is not specified that the mortgage shall secure them.

2. A failure to find on an issue presented by defendant's pleading is not reversible error, where it is not shown, by bill of exceptions or otherwise, that evidence was submitted on the issue.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Ernst F. C. Klokke against Catharine Escailier and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Escailier appeals. Modified.

Appel & Whitney, for appellant. H. O. Collins, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate. The complaint is verified. Plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant Catharine S. Escailier appeals on the judgment roll alone.

Appellant objects to the judgment upon two grounds: (1) That it was error to allow attorney's fees; and (2) that the court erred in failing to find upon the issues raised by her answer.

1. The mortgage was given to secure the payment of a promissory note. Upon the subject of attorney's fees it contained the following provision: Upon default "the mortgagee may foreclose this mortgage, and may include in said foreclosure a reasonable counsel fee, to be fixed by the court, together with all payments made by the mortgagee for insurance upon the buildings on said premises, and for any adverse claims to the mortgaged property, for searching title to the mortgaged premises, to the execution hereof, and for taxes on said premises, other than the taxes on this mortgage, or the money hereby secured, all of which payments the mortgagee is hereby authorized to make, and the same, with interest thereon at the same rate as provided in said promissory note, shall be deemed to be secured by this mortgage, and payable to the mortgagee or assigns in and out of the proceeds of the sale under said foreclosure." Unless the mortgage be given to secure the payment of attorney's fees, such fees may not be included as a part of the mortgage lien upon foreclosure. If the mortgagor contracts for the allowance of such attorney's fees, but does not secure the payment of them in the mortgage, these fees are in the nature of a special damage, which may be pleaded and recovered against the mortgagor, but for them the mortgagee may have only a personal judgment. Prescott v. Grady, 91 Cal. 518, 27 Pac. 755. The mortgage here under consideration declares that in the foreclosure may be included a reasonable counsel fee, together with all payments made by the mortgagee for specified purposes, all of which payments shall be deemed to be secured by the mortgage. A mortgage security is given, therefore, for the payment of the promissory note and for the repayment of such designated sums as may have been expended by the mortgagee; but, while much care is shown to bring these expenditures strictly within the mortgage, it is nowhere declared that the mortgage lien shall extend to and protect the attorney's fees. In this respect the case is identical in principle with that of Irvine v. Perry, 119 Cal. 352, 51 Pac. 544, 949, and with the cases there cited. It follows, therefore, that while plaintiff is entitled, upon proper showing, to recover attorney's fees in his action, he is not entitled to have those fees included in the amount of the mortgage lien. He must rely alone upon a personal judgment. The averment in the complaint "that the sum of two hundred dollars is a reasonable sum to be allowed plaintiff as his attorney and counsel fees for the foreclosure of this mortgage" is a sufficient averment upon this point.

2. The only answer to the complaint made by defendant, the mortgagor and appellant, related to an agreement alleged as follows: "That since the commencement of said action the said plaintiff and the said defendant agreed, one with the other, that the said defendant should pay the total amount of interest claimed by the said plaintiff to be due upon the notes and mortgages, * * * all costs and expenses incurred by said plaintiff in bringing said action, and the sum of one hundred dollars for plaintiff's attorney in compensation for his services in said action, as a full and complete satisfaction of the cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint"; payment of $100 on account of said settlement is averred; and that "by reason of said agreement the said plaintiff has waived his cause of action alleged in plaintiff's complaint." The answer is duly verified. It appears from the complaint that the promissory note secured by the mortgage was dated June 1, 1896, and was for the sum of $2,750, payable two years after date, with 12 per cent. interest, payable quarterly. The complaint was filed June 25, 1897, to which time but $50 interest had been paid. The mortgage gave the mortgagee the option of declaring the principal of the note to be due upon any default in payment of interest, and it is alleged that he gave defendant notice of having elected to regard the note as due. There is a finding that since the commencement of the action defendant (appellant) has paid plaintiff $100, of which $22.30 were on account of costs of this suit, and $77.70 were on account of attorney's fees "on behalf of plaintiff in this suit." It is also found that the principal sum of the note, together with interest (except $50 interest paid before suit was brought), is unpaid. The finding as to payments made after suit was commenced shows that the amount corresponds with the amount alleged to have been paid under the agreement pleaded, but there is nothing in the findings to show that this was the identical money so paid.

Appellant makes the point that the court erred in not finding upon the issues presented by the answer, to which the respondent replies that the answer presented no issues calling for findings. It is not necessary to pass upon the sufficiency of the answer to raise an issue of fact. In Wise v. Burton, 73 Cal. 175, 14 Pac. 684, it was said: "This court will not reverse for want of a finding on an issue with respect to which there is no evidence." Commenting upon this rule in Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098, it was said: "In the case at bar, which is brought here upon the judgment roll alone, we will not presume that there was evidence upon a point in respect to which there is no finding. This view of the case makes it unnecessary to consider the question whether or not the alleged special issues were material." See Giletti v. Saracco, 110 Cal. 428, 42 Pac. 918. Appellant, to present his point, should have shown, by bill of exceptions or otherwise, that evidence was submitted upon the issues made by his answer. The case now before us, we think, plainly falls within the rule above stated. The findings support the judgment.

The judgment is therefore ordered modified in the respect above indicated; that is to say, a personal judgment shall be given to plaintiff for the amount found due to him for counsel and attorney's fees in this foreclosure suit, but such amount shall not be included in the amount of the mortgage lien for the payment of which the property was ordered sold. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

SAMUELS et ux. v. CALIFORNIA ST. CABLE RY. CO. (S. F. 1,116).<sup>1</sup>(Supreme Court of California. April 14, 1899.)
STREET RAILROADS—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—EVIDENCE—PLEADING—DAMAGES.

1. Where a passenger was thrown from a street car while rounding a curve, and injured, his testimony that the car was going at an unusually rapid rate of speed is sufficient to sustain a verdict, where other passengers were thrown at the same time.

2. Under an allegation that the accident was caused by the high rate of speed, he may prove that the fall was occasioned by a sudden jerk, accompanied by the high rate of speed.

3. Evidence that uterine trouble was caused by an accident due to defendant's negligence is admissible under a general averment of bodily injury and resulting damage.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Stanley A. Samuels and wife against the California Street Cable Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henly & Costello, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an action brought to recover damages for bodily injuries sustained by Raquel Samuels in being thrown from a car of defendant. The car was a cable car. Mrs. Samuels was riding upon the "dummy,"—an outside seat at the front end of the car. In rounding a curve, passing from O'Farrell street into Jones street, Mrs. Samuels fell or was hurled from the car, striking the ground, and sustaining the injuries for which damages are sought. The complaint alleges that the car was "run with great, unusual, and terrific force and speed" around the corner, and that in consequence of this unusual speed she was thrown from her seat.

1. Appellant contends that the evidence fails to establish that the accident occurred by reason of its negligent management of the car, and that it does show that respondent was injured through her own carelessness. Upon this the evidence is unsatisfactory. Nevertheless, it appears that Mrs. Samuels was accustomed to ride upon the cars of this company, and that upon this occasion not she alone, but another woman sitting by her side, was thrown from her seat, and a child also was hurled to the ground. This showing, taken with the testimony of Mrs. Samuels that the car was at the time run at an unusually rapid rate of speed, and that it went around the corner with a jerk, is sufficient in support of the verdict.

2. The complaint charging that the accident was caused by the negligent operation of the car at a high rate of speed, defendant asked an instruction that the jury should disregard any or all evidence to the effect that the fall was occasioned by a sudden jerk or lunge of the car. The court declined to give the offered instruction. There was in this no error. If, as Mrs. Samuels testified, the swift motion of the car was accompanied by sudden jerks, such testimony was pertinent under her pleading, and was proper for the consideration of the jury. It would be impossible in the case of an accident of this kind to say whether it was occasioned alone by the rapid motion of the car in rounding the curve, or whether it was occasioned by that motion and the accompanying jerks. The swaying, jerking, or jumping of a slow-moving car might be of little danger to its passengers, while they might be elements of considerable danger if the car were moving at a high rate of speed. Within the averment of the complaint, testimony as to the jerky motion of the car was admissible, and, being admissible, the court was clearly right in refusing to exclude this evidence from the consideration of the jury.

3. The complaint averred that Mrs. Samuels, by reason of the accident, "was rendered unconscious for a long period of time, and received great bodily injury, and was made sick, sore, lame, and disabled for a long period of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, during all of which time she thereby suffered great pain, and was thereby then and there hindered and prevented from attending to her business and domestic affairs, and has ever since remained and continued sick, sore, lame, and disabled, and has suffered, and still continues to suffer, great pain of body and anguish of mind, and is informed and believes that said injuries are of a permanent nature." Under this averment, evidence was admitted of a uterine trouble brought upon Mrs. Samuels by the accident. Such evidence was admissible under the general averment of bodily injury and resulting damage. Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266; Montgomery v. Railroad Co., 103 Mich. 46, 61 N. W. 543; Denver Ry. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 7 Sup. Ct. 1286. The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

MOTT et al. v. CLARKE. (S. F. 784.) (Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1899.) Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. Action by C. W. Mott and others against Alfred Clarke. From an order of commitment for contempt, defendant appeals. Dismissed. Alfred Clarke, in pro. per. Warren Olney, for respondents.

PRINGLE, C. This is an attempted appeal made from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco made on December 11, 1895, in the following words: "Ordered, that insolvent be confined in the county jail until he complies with the order of court." This order is apparently a commitment for contempt, and it is so designated by the appellant in his certificate to the transcript. The case is substantially the same as S. F. 783 (56 Pac. 545). I advise that the appeal be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the appeal is dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

PEOPLE v. DAVIS et al. (Cr. No. 446.) (Supreme Court of California. March 16, 1899.) Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county. A. E. Davis and others were convicted of forgery, and they appeal. Reversed. Byron L. Oliver, for appellants. Atty. Gen. Fitzgerald, for the People.

GRAY, C. The defendant appeals from a judgment convicting him of the crime of forgery. Compton, a co-defendant of Davis in the information in this case, was tried and convicted in the superior court in Los Angeles county, and from such conviction he appealed; and this court reversed the judgment, holding four of the instructions of the court to the jury to be erroneous. See People v. Compton (Cal.) 56 Pac. 44. These same instructions were repeated on the trial of the defendant Davis. On the authority of that case (People v. Compton, supra), and for the reasons therein stated, I advise that the judgment herein be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.
